

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

VOL. I.] SUTCLIFFE v. SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS OF SOWERBY.—HEALING v. CATHELL. [Q. B.]

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, T. W. SANDERS, and C. J. B. HENKELT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, Nov. 9.

SUTCLIFFE (appellant) v. SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS OF SOWERBY.

Footway—Brook—Stepping-stones—Alteration.

Up to 1855 a footway across a brook had been by means of fourteen stepping-stones. In that year the highway surveyors reduced the number of stones, increased their height, and placed flagstones on the top of them, forming thereby a kind of bridge:

Held, that the surveyors were not justified in so doing, and that the owner of the land adjoining the brook having removed the flagstones, could not be convicted of obstructing the way under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72.

Appeal against a conviction under the Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72), for wilfully obstructing a highway.

It appeared that there was a footway across a brook by means of fourteen stepping-stones and through the appellant's estate, which adjoined the brook. In 1855 the surveyors of the highways of the parish (Sowerby, Yorkshire, W.R.) reduced the number of stepping-stones to eight, increased their height, and placed flags on the top of them, forming a kind of bridge, for the public convenience, whereby the traffic on the footway was increased, to the annoyance of the appellant. The appellant thereupon resisted the right of the surveyors to alter the means of crossing the brook, and caused the flagstones to be removed. For such removal the justices convicted the appellant upon an information by the surveyors.

Made for the respondents.—The conviction was right. The substantial thing is the right of footway over the brook. It is clear the surveyors might renew the stones, or repair or replace them. If they thought proper, they might reduce the number; and it is submitted that, for the safety and convenience of the public, they had a right to put flagstones on the stepping-stones.

Namely, contra, was not called upon.

By the COURT.—It is an act of trespass putting down flags upon higher stepping-stones, and it is [MAG. C.]

enlarging the public right. It could not be contended that a permanent bridge could be erected over the brook, and yet the placing of flagstones on the stepping-stones is of that nature. The overseers must repair the way across the brook with stepping-stones. Down to the year 1855 the passage across the brook had been by means of fourteen stepping-stones, and the owners had been content to allow the public to cross it in that way. The conviction must therefore be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Pawnbroker—Loss of pledge by neglect—39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 24.

A pawnbroker placed a gold watch pledged, with other valuable property in a strong room on premises left at night without any guard or person to sleep on them. The premises were broken into and the watch stolen:

Held, a loss by default or neglect in the pawnbroker within 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 24.

Appeal against a conviction by the magistrate of Liverpool under the Pawnbrokers Act, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, for improperly refusing to restore a pledge on the money being tendered, whereby the appellant was adjudged to pay to the pawnor the full value of the pledge (a gold watch).

The pledge in question was deposited by the pawnbroker in a strong room, in a house, of which at night there was no one to take care, and no person slept on the premises. The house was entered at night, the room broken open, and the pledge stolen among other property.

The magistrate was of opinion that it was not safe to keep such property in such a building without leaving a person to guard it at night, and that it was a case of loss by default and neglect in the pawnee within the meaning of sect. 24 of the Act.

Aspmall for the appellant.—There was no such default or neglect as authorised the magistrate to convict the pawnbroker under sect. 24.

COCKBURN, C.J.—A pawnbroker has a large amount of valuable property belonging to other people, and it is his duty to take such care of it as a prudent person would of his own property. In this case the pawn-broker leaves it in a room on premises unguarded at night, except by the ordinary means of bolts and locks. Can any one doubt that this is an act of default and neglect on the part of the pawnbroker of the property entrusted to his care?

Poor—Settlement—Minor—Emancipation.

A minor entered into the metropolitan police force as a constable, and remained till his marriage, at which period he was still a minor:

Held, that he did not become emancipated from parental control by entering into the police force.

Case granted by the Middlesex court of quarter sessions on confirming an order of removal of a pauper by justices.

The simple point was, whether a minor, by entering into the metropolitan police force as a constable, where he remained until his marriage, at which period he was still a minor, became emancipated from parental control.

Smart.—The son became emancipated by entering the police force. That is a position inconsistent with parental control, as thereby the son entered into the service of the state. Cases referred to:—R. v. Rutherford, 1 B. & C. 345; R. v. Lytchet Ma'raverse, 7 B. & C. 226.

Metcalfe, contra, referred to R. v. Scammonden, 8 Q. B. 349.

By the COURT.—The distinction is obvious between a soldier and a police constable. By becoming a police constable a minor is not emancipated. Indeed, by giving a month's notice, he may quit the police force, and the case expressly finds that the son had contracted no engagement which excluded him from returning to his home. From R. v. Woburn, 8 T. R. 479, where it was held that service in the militia did not emancipate a son, R. v. Higgate, 2 B. & Al. 582, where apprenticeship to a certificated man, the son not returning to his father's house till after he was twenty-one, was held not to emancipate the son, and other cases down to R. v. Scammonden, the authorities are clear to show that the minor in this case was not emancipated.

ARCHER v. JAMES.

The Truck Act—1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37—Deduction from wages.

Deductions from wages are not within the operation of the Truck Act. Where, therefore, certain deductions or stoppages in respect of frame-rent, machine-rent, standing, winding, steam, gas, firing, and waiting-room, were made from the earnings of the plaintiff, who was a frame-work knitter, working in the factory of the defendant:

Held, that such deductions or stoppages were not illegal within the operation of the above statute.

This was an action tried at Nottingham, when the plaintiff was nonsuited, with leave to move to enter a verdict in respect of certain items.

The question turned upon the proper construction of the Truck Act (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37), the 3rd section of which enacts, "That the entire amount of the wages earned by or payable to any artificer in any of the trades hereinafter enumerated, in respect of any labour by him done in any such trade, shall be actually paid to such artificer in the current coin of this realm, and not otherwise; and every payment made to such artificer by his employer, of or in respect of any such wages, by the delivering to him of goods, or otherwise than in the current coin aforesaid, except as hereinafter mentioned, shall be and is hereby declared illegal, null and void."

The plaintiff was a frame-work knitter, working in the factory of the defendant, and he was paid by the piece at the rate of 7d. a dozen. But from this payment there were certain stoppages deducted, under the several heads of frame-rent, machine-rent, standing, winding, steam, gas, firing and waiting-room.

Hayes, Serjt. now moved accordingly, and contended that these stoppages were illegal, and amounted in fact to a payment of wages other than in the coin of the realm. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Is not this a mode of measuring the wages? Is it not a deduction from wages which the master has a right to make in consideration of the accommodation he affords his workmen? The 5th section gives the clue to the whole statute.] That section is only an amplification of the others. [COCKBURN, C.J.—You can't say to the workmen, "You shall take such and such home in lieu of wages;" but can't you say, "Instead of working at home, you shall work here in the factory at less wages?" The case of Chowner v. Cummings, 8 Q. B. 311, shows that such deductions are not within the Act.] These deductions are in the nature of wages.

COCKBURN, C.J.—It seems to me that this case is clearly within the decision of Chowner v. Cummings, and that this is merely a mode of ascertaining the amount of wages the artificer is to receive.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Whatever doubt I may have entertained if this case had now come before us for the first time, I think myself bound by the decision in Chowner v. Cummings.

HILL, J. concurred.

Rule refused.

SHACKELL v. WEST.

Pawnbrokers' Act—39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99—ss. 14, 24.

A. summoned a pawnbroker under the 14th section of the above Act, for neglecting or refusing, without reasonable cause, to deliver back a watch pawned for a sum under 10l., which had been stolen in consequence of the pawnbroker's negligence. The justices made an order that, the goods being lost by the negligence of the pawnbroker, and he having failed to show reasonable cause why he should not return the watch, he should forthwith restore it, or pay the value and costs:

Held, that the order was bad, as being made under the 14th section, although a valid order might have been made under the 24th section; and as any amendment would prejudice the pawnbroker, by depriving him of his appeal under the 35th section of the Pawnbrokers' Act, the court refused to amend, and remitted the case back to the justices.

This was a case stated by the magistrates of Weston-super-Mare for the opinion of the court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The appellant is a pawnbroker at Bristol, but with another establishment at Weston-super-Mare. In March of last year a silver hunting-watch had been deposited with him by the respondent, on an advance of 2l. On the night of Saturday the 1st May and Sunday the 2nd, the appellant slept at his residence at Weston-super-Mare, and in the mean while his premises at Bristol were left unguarded, no one sleeping there on either night. In that interval the house was broken into by burglars, and, amongst other property—which, it was alleged, had been locked up in an iron safe—the respondent's watch was taken away. West shortly afterwards tendered to the appellant the sum of 2l. 1s. 4d., being the sum advanced with interest, and demanded the restoration of his watch, when the appellant expressed his inability to restore it by reason of the robbery; and thereupon he was summoned by the respondent before the magistrates at Weston-super-Mare, under the 14th section of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, when the magistrates

SHACKELL v. WEST.—REG. v. JOHN BROWN.

having heard the case, adjudged that, by reason of the defendant having absented himself from his premises during two nights and leaving them totally unguarded, he must be considered guilty of negligence as a bailee, and that, therefore, having failed to show reasonable cause why he did not return the watch, he must be ordered forthwith to restore it, or otherwise to pay 5*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.*, less the 2*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*, the sum advanced, with interest, together with 3*l.* 7*s.* for costs—the magistrates at the same time intimating that the fact of a robbery having occurred at all was not fully established.

Coleridge for the appellant.—After the decision of this court on Wednesday last in the case of Healing v. Catbrell, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 7, the question of negligence in the pawnbroker was abandoned. This appeal, therefore, now rests on the ground that the magistrates, in ordering the appellant to deliver the watch, or in failing to do so to pay over the full value with costs, had exceeded their jurisdiction. The information was laid under the 14th section of the Act, and the order of the magistrates purported to be made under that section. The 14th section enacts that if any pawnbroker, without showing reasonable cause for so doing, neglect or refuse to deliver back the goods or chattels pawned for any sum or sums of money not exceeding 10*l.* to the person or persons who borrowed the money thereon, any justice or justices of the peace, on the application of the borrower, is required to cause such person or persons who took such pawn to come before such justice or justices, and if tender of the principal money due and all profit thereon shall be proved, such justice or justices shall thereupon by order direct the goods or chattels so pawned forthwith to be delivered up to the pawnor or pawners thereof, his, her, or their executors, administrators, or assigns, and on neglect or refusal, then any such justice or justices shall commit the party or parties so refusing until he, she, or they shall deliver up the goods or chattels so pawned, or make such satisfaction or compensation as such justice or justices shall adjudge reasonable for the value thereof; but that section says nothing about the pawnbroker, in default of delivering the article, being ordered to make compensation. The 14th section is simply applicable and directed against such pawnbrokers as withhold from the person pawning; it only applies to cases of continuous nondelivery when an article is in the possession of the pawnbroker, and he withholds it, having the power to deliver it. On the other hand, the 24th section deals with negligent bailees, or with those through whose negligence or want of sufficient care, property not exceeding in value 10*l.* is lost or stolen, and in such case the magistrates are empowered to order compensation not exceeding 10*l.*, and then, if there is a failure in complying with the order of the magistrate, the remedy is against the goods of the defendant. It was plain, therefore, the magistrates had proceeded upon the wrong section, and that the order, if made at all, could only have been made under the 24th section. The proceeding was misconceived: (Ex parte Cording, 4 B. & Ad. 198; Reg. v. Ryan, 4 Ad. & Ell. 39. [COCKBURN, C.J.—But have we not a power to amend the determination of the magistrates, or to remit the case for a hearing?]) Not in such a case as this, for the whole proceeding of the magistrates was misconceived. The 24th section of the Pawnbrokers Act says, "that if in the course of the proceedings before the magistrate it should appear that the chattel had been lost through neglect," &c. Now here, in the course of the proceedings it did become evident that the goods had been lost through neglect—nevertheless the magistrates persisted and made their order. There is an error in the 24th section of the Act; it refers to the neglect of the person "by" whom the goods were pawned; this should evidently be "with." The mistake was noticed by Campbell, C.J. in Syred v. Carruthers, 4 Jur. N. S. 949, and he said, "We are bound to read 'with' instead of 'by'; the cause of loss there was by fire. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The Act is badly drawn, and is certainly obscure.]

Kinglake Serjt. contra.—In the case of an information under the 14th section of the Act, if the pawnbroker gave evidence that the goods had been lost through a burglary, the magistrates must be held to have power to decide the question of negligence. In such cases the magistrates were of opinion it was the intention of the Legislature to supersede the common law rights of the parties and to give a more speedy remedy. The question is, whether, on an information under the 14th section, the magistrates had jurisdiction, assuming that on the evidence produced there was enough to show that a robbery had been committed. [BLACKBURN, J.—Then if they have erroneously made an order under the 14th section, instead of the 24th section, cannot we amend it?] On the part of the respondent it is not admitted that any amendment is necessary.

Coleridge in reply.—The 14th section alone warrants this order, and to make an amendment would be putting the court in the position of justices, and making, under another section, such an order as they should have made. [WIGHTMAN, J.—The difficulty of making an amendment is this: if the justices had decided under the 24th section, the pawnbroker might have appealed to the quarter sessions under the 35th section, and he has now lost that power.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—The order as made cannot stand. It is made under the 14th section of the Pawnbrokers Act, and it professes to be applicable to a case in which the pawnbroker was no longer able to deliver up the thing in specie in consequence of his own negligence, and to such a case I think that section does not apply; but I think the justices might have made a valid order under the 24th section. It is not necessary to say whether it was satisfactorily established that the goods were securely locked up, but it is clear that the premises were left unguarded, and under these circumstances I think the justices were justified in coming to the conclusion that the pawnbroker was guilty of negligence, and that they could have given relief to the complainant under the 24th section; but having proceeded under the 14th section, and there being a substantial difference between the two, I think the order cannot stand. Then there is the question, ought we to amend if the appellant would in no way be prejudiced? I think we ought; but in this case there is the difficulty which I think cannot be got over, that the appellant would have been entitled to his appeal under the 35th section, and that in such appeal he might have adduced evidence to clear himself of the alleged negligence, and of that he ought not to be deprived.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The 14th section applies to refusal to restore, and not to a case like this, and therefore the present order cannot be supported, although a valid order might have been made under the 24th section of the Act. And as we cannot amend without prejudice to the appellant, I think the case ought to go back for reconsideration.

BLACKBURN, J. concurred.

REG. v. JOHN BROWN.

Bastardy order—Service of summons—Jurisdiction
—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3.

An affidavit summons was served by leaving it at the place of abode of the putative father of the bastard child, from which he was absent temporarily, without any notice of the proceeding, and his address was not known. The justices declined to adjourn the hearing and made an order:

Q. B.]

REG. v. JOHN BROWN.—RIDER v. WOOD AND OTHERS.

[Q. B.]

Held that this court could not interfere, the justices having jurisdiction.

Price moved to quash a bastardy order on the ground of irregularity.

The order was made under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, and was regular on the face of it. The following facts were relied on:—It appeared that a summons was taken out against the defendant, a farmer's son, as the putative father of the child, and left for him at his father's residence, which was his home, during his absence. It was stated in the affidavits that he left home on the 3rd July (that was before the summons was taken out), without any notice or intimation that such a proceeding was about being taken; that he was in the habit every year of taking a month's trip, and that on the occasion in question he left home for that purpose, not leaving any address, as he was going on a tour and did not know where he might be during the time. The summons was for the defendant to appear at the petty sessions on the 18th July, and on that day the defendant's mother attended at the sessions, and stated these facts to the justices, and that her son for that reason had not had notice of the summons, and asked for an adjournment. The justices, however, refused to adjourn the hearing and made the order in question. There was an affidavit of the defendant denying that he was the father of the child.

Price contended that the moment the justices were told by the mother that the son was absent, under the above circumstances, they ought not to have gone on with the hearing and made the order. It is true the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, "on proof that the summons was duly served on such person, or left at his last place of abode, six days before the petty sessions," gives the justices jurisdiction to act; but, nevertheless, the circumstances here are such that it amounts to a case of an ex parte proceeding: (R. v. Davis, 22 L.J. 143, M.C.; R. v. Toines, 7 Q.B. 690.) In R. v. Evans, 19 L.J. 181, M.C., there was no affidavit on the part of the defendant denying that he was the father of the child.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The order is regular on the face of it, and the requirements of the statute have been complied with. The justices might have exercised a discretion which we may regret that they did not exercise. But there is no irregularity, and the court cannot interfere.

HILL, J.—Everything appears to be regular according to the statute. The summons was left at the defendant's last place of abode, but he was temporarily absent, and the justices may have treated this excuse of the mother as an idle one. The principle on which the court proceeds in quashing orders on certiorari is, that there must be some defect of jurisdiction in the tribunal making the order. Here there is none.

BLACKBURN, J.—If the justices thought it right not to adjourn the hearing, can we say that they acted without jurisdiction? Rule refused.

RIDER (appellant) v. WOOD AND OTHERS
(respondents).

Master and servant—Leaving employment without lawful excuse—Guilty intent.

Under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 8 (Masters' and Workmen's Act), a workman who leaves his master's employment upon a bona fide belief that his employment is regularly terminated, though it has not been so terminated in fact, is not liable to be convicted; and the bona fides of his conduct is a question to be determined by the justices.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction of the appellant by certain justices of Flintshire, under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 3, for absenting himself from his service.

By the above section it is enacted, that if any artificer, &c. shall contract with any person to serve him for any time whatsoever, and having entered into such service shall absent himself from his service before the term of his contract shall be completed, then it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace upon complaint to issue his warrant for apprehending such person, and to examine into the nature of the complaint, and if it shall appear that such artificer, &c., hath not fulfilled his contract, or has been guilty of any other misconduct or misdemeanor, it shall be lawful for such justice to commit any such person to the house of correction, there to remain and be held to hard labour for a reasonable time not exceeding three months, and to abate a proportionate part of his wages for and during such period as he shall be so confined.

It appeared that the appellant entered into the service of the respondents as an anchormsmith on the 4th Jan. 1859, for an indefinite period, at certain specified prices, determinable on either of the parties giving to the other fourteen days' notice of his intention to determine, the contract, certain rules and regulations to be observed by the workmen.

The appellant entered into and remained in the respondents' employment for many months.

Amongst other rules of the factory was the following:—

"Contractors, firemen and daymen, to give fourteen days' notice into the office before leaving their employment, and to receive the same."

On the 23rd July he gave the manager of the respondents' works the following notice:—

"July 23, 1859.

"Mr. Wood, Brothers.

"In the beginning of January last you reduced our prices, with a promise that as soon as trade was a little bricker you would give us our price back again; we now earnestly hope and trust that you will fulfil your promise, as we consider that our price is very small indeed, and we hope that you will take it into your serious consideration—if you will not fulfil your promise, we all (the anchormsmiths in your employ) do hereby give to Mr. Wood, Brothers, fourteen days' notice.

"Dated this, the 23rd of July, 1859.

"THE ANCHORMSMITHS OF SALTFLEY."

On the following 6th Aug. the appellant left the employment of the respondents—the request contained in the notice not having been complied with. Thereupon proceedings were taken before justices against the appellant, and he was convicted, and sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment, with hard labour, with an abatement of 4l. from his wages.

WELBY, for the respondents, contended that the notice given on the 23rd July was not valid, and was a nullity, and that the appellant therefore had left without lawful excuse.

J. BROWN, for the appellant, argued that this being a criminal charge it could not be adjudged that the appellant had been guilty merely because he may have given an informal notice. [COCKBURN, C.J.—It certainly appears to me that the leaving the employment must be with a guilty purpose.] It is not suggested that he acted viciously. The appellant ought not to be punished criminally for a matter which turns upon the legal sufficiency of notice. To constitute an offence under the statute, there must be a guilty intention: (Fowler v. Padget, 7 T. R. 509; the maxim of actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea applies; Horne v. Garton, 28 L. J. 216, M.C.)

WELBY was here called upon, and argued that every absenting of himself without a lawful excuse is an offence under the statute. [HILL, J.—Suppose such a case as this—a man who has occasion to be absent sends a fellow-workman to ask for leave, and he tells

THE OVERSEERS OF BISHOPWEARMOUTH v. THE EARL OF DURHAM.

him that he has obtained it when he has not, would this be an absenting of himself within the statute? COCKBURN, C.J.—Must not two things concur—a wrongful absence, and a knowledge that it is a wrongful absence? I think not; it is merely necessary that the absence should be without lawful excuse in fact. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The Act treats the absence as a misdemeanor and offence, and if so, the well-known principle applies that there must be a wrongful intention. HILL, J.—The Act must not be taken in its naked words, for if so a man would be liable if he were laid upon a bed of sickness.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—If a man absents himself with a knowledge that his employment is not at an end, he is guilty under the statute; but if he believes that his contract is at an end, and so leaves, he is not guilty. The committing justices do not appear to have considered the subject in this point of view. The case therefore ought to go back to them under the 6th section of the statute, with our opinion upon this point, and then they will decide whether the appellant left the employment in the bond fide belief that he had properly put an end to it, for if he did he would not be guilty under this statute. Rule accordingly.

REG. on the prosecution of THE OVERSEERS OF THE TOWNSHIP OF BISHOPWEARMOUTH v. THE EARL OF DURHAM.

Poor-rate—Tolls—Anchorage—Beaconage.

The port of Sunderland extends from the bar of the mouth of the river Wear, and low-water mark of the sea up the river about eight miles, including so much of the river as is within such limits, and is in the several adjoining parishes. Any ship entering the river might have to cast anchor. Beacons had been set up and mooring buoys, posts, &c., placed within the port by the officers of the Bishop of Durham, who was the owner of the soil and freehold of the port below low-water mark, and these were maintained by them for the use of the ships using the port. A payment of 1s. 2d. had been immemorially made to the Bishop called "anchorage or beaconage tolls," by every ship entering the port. These tolls having been assessed to the poor rate:

Held, that they were not tolls in gross, but were connected with the occupation and use of the soil, and were rateable to the poor-rate in all the parishes in which the port was situated, and to which ships paying the toll came, in the proportion of the number of ships coming into each of the parishes respectively.

Atherton, Q.C. and Lidell appeared for the appellant, and Welby and Davison for the respondents.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear in the following judgment:—

WRIGHTMAN, J.—In answering the first question, whether the tolls are rateable, we have to consider whether they are tolls in gross or tolls connected with the occupation of the soil; and this must be determined in the same manner as if the nature of the soil had been discussed when they were received by the Bishop of Durham or his lessees before the 3 Geo. 3, the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 19, and the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45—none of these statutes having severed the tolls from the soil if they ever were connected together. According to the statement in the case, these tolls have always been taken in respect of ships entering into the port of Sunderland. This port begins on crossing the bar at the mouth of the river Wear, extends to a bridge near Finley Park, and comprehends the whole space of the river from low-water mark on the north side to low-water mark on the south side, and is in several contiguous parishes or townships on both sides, usque ad medium filum aquæ. The bishop was the owner of the whole soil and freehold of the said port between low-water mark on the one side and low water-mark on the other side; every ship entering the port may have to cast anchor there, or to be moored to some moorings fixed in the river and taken in the river, or on the quays or shores adjacent. The bishop and his lessee maintain the beacons and moorings in the river Wear. Previously to the appointment of the commissioners, the port and the affairs and business thereof were managed and conducted by the Bishops of Durham or their lessees under leases similar to those granted to the appellants by officers or others in that behalf appointed or employed by such bishops or their lessees; and by such bishops' lessees or officers beacons were set up, moorings, buoys, posts and rings were placed and fixed within the port for the use and benefit of the ships entering the port, and other works were done for the maintenance of the port and the use and benefit of ships resorting to it. The tolls rated have been paid immemorially to the bishop or his lessee, and they have been called anchorage and beaconage tolls, being 1s. 2d. for and in respect of every British ship which enters the port. Formerly double that sum was paid, and now by Act of Parliament, in consequence of reciprocity treaties, the same sum is paid on every foreign ship which enters the port. The tolls are supposed formerly to have been collected by the water-bailiff appointed by the bishop or his lessee, but are now received by the collector of all the sound dues in the port of Sunderland, at his office in the Custom-house there. The tolls appear to have been rated to the relief of the poor of the parish of Sunderland since 1719, but they were not rated in any of the townships into which the port of Sunderland extends till 1857. In that year the ancestor of the appellant, who was then lessee of the tolls, appealed against the rate for the parish of Sunderland, but abandoned that appeal and agreed with the overseers of Sunderland to be rated on 150l. Immediately afterwards the five townships named in the above case were rated, those tolls making an aggregate of 403l. 3s. 4d., which, if they are rateable, is admitted to be a fair amount. Taking all these facts into consideration, we are of opinion that these tolls are not tolls in gross, but are tolls connected with the occupation and use of the soil. They seem to us to be much more in the nature of dock dues. The bishop was the owner of the soil of parts of the port, and by the outlay of money on various works, he rendered the port safe and commodious for shipping, in consideration whereof, by the exercise of the highest prerogative of the Crown, he appears to have been authorised to receive a fixed sum as a reasonable amount for every ship which entered the port. Customedines, or tolls, are almost incident to every ownership of a port, and we think are to be considered as payable rationi soli for a benefit conferred, not as a matter of extortion under the colour of law. The toll here is called anchorage and beaconage, but must be considered as covering all the accommodation afforded by the user of the port to the ships which frequent it, as no other payment is made to them. There was as strong objection offered to beaconage; but the owner of this port does not appear to have erected beacons within the port, and the anchorage and mileage show a direct use of the soil within the parish and township comprised in the rate; but if the use of the soil is in part consideration for the payment of the toll, we think this is enough to connect them with the occupation and use of the soil, and to render them rateable. We lately held, in the Runcorn case, the tolls called anchorage, which probably were for the use of the soil, were not rateable, but that was because it was agreed that the corporation of Liverpool, the appellants, were not owners and occupiers of any land within the township, the place where the ships anchored being extra-parochial. Here the soil where the ships anchored and the mooring chains were fixed was within the parish or township of the respondents. If there be a payment to the owner of the soil by the party who uses the soil, and no other consideration can be suggested for the payment, must not the use of the soil be regarded as the consideration for the payment? The tolls originally connected with the soil may be severed from the soil and become tolls in gross. Here there is nothing to show such a severance, for the tolls and the soil have remained united in the same owner. Counsel for the appellant chiefly relied upon the Swansea case, 5 E. & B. There all the tolls, whosoever collected within the port, were considered to be of the same uniform nature, and part of them being clearly not for the use of the soil and not rateable, this was supposed to give the same character to the whole. Rez v. Cook, 5 B. & C. 797, and the other lighthouse cases, were likewise referred to, but they merely decided that the owner of a lighthouse cannot be rated for passing tolls collected out of the parish, as they do not constitute part of the annual profits of house or land where the light is placed. The tolls in question, on the contrary, constitute part of the annual profits of the land occupied by the appellant within the township, and, therefore, are rateable. An objection was made that the fore shore, between high and low water mark, did not belong to the defendant: payments were sometimes made to private owners of the fore shore by ships for the use of it. How can these conventional payments made to others for the use of their soil at all affect the nature or the incidents of payments made to the bishop for the use of his soil? We are likewise asked by the first question whether the tolls are rateable in one, or which, of the townships or parishes? We answer, all or any part of them in which the port of Sunderland is situated to which ships paying the toll come; these seem to be the parish of Sunderland and the five townships in which the tolls are now rated. There are other parishes and townships into which the port extends, but it is not stated that ships which have paid the toll come into those parishes and townships. We do not think, that in respect to the tolls there is any profitable occupation of the soil of the port within those parishes or townships. In answer to the second question, we are of opinion that in the parish and five townships in which the tolls are rateable, they ought to be rated upon a calculation of the number of ships paying toll and coming into those parts of the port which were within the parish of Sunderland and the five townships respectively, and that they ought not to be rated according to the frontage or population, neither of which would afford any criterion for the profits of the soil of the port made within the parish or the township.

Judgment for the respondents.

THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY (apps.) v. WOOD (resp.)

Railway—Engine not consuming its own smoke—Conviction—8 Vict. c. 20, s. 124.

The 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 124 (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act) imposes a penalty upon railway companies using any locomotive steam-engine (in which coal is used) not constructed on the principle of consuming, and so as to consume, its own smoke:

Held, that the fact that a locomotive steam-engine emits smoke is not conclusive against the company, but that it should be ascertained whether or not such emission of smoke is caused by the neglect of the party in charge of the engine, or from the engine not being so constructed as required.

This was an appeal against a conviction of the above company for using an engine not constructed so as to consume its own smoke.

By sect. 114 of the 8 Vict. c. 20 (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act), it is enacted that "Every locomotive steam-engine to be used on the railway shall, if it use coal or other similar fuel emitting smoke, be constructed on the principle of consuming, and so as to consume, its own smoke; and if any engine be not so constructed, the company or party using such engine shall forfeit five pounds for every day during which such engine shall be used on the railway."

It appeared that the appellants had been found using an engine burning coal, which at certain times was emitting smoke. At the hearing of an information for this under the above section the justices considered the fact of the emission of smoke as conclusive against the appellants, and they were accordingly convicted.

Quariz, in support of the conviction, contended that the justices were right, for that an engine which was actually emitting smoke must be deemed as against the appellants to be one not constructed so as to consume its own smoke.

Mellish, for the appellants, argued that the fact that smoke issued from the engine was not conclusive, for that it might be constructed on the principle of consuming its own smoke, and so as to consume its own smoke, and yet it might emit smoke by the wilful neglect of the engine-driver or stoker, and that the justices ought to have entered into the question of whether or not the smoke was by the default of the driver.

Quariz, in reply, argued that, even if it were by default of the stoker, the company would be equally liable.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The words of the Act are, "constructed on the principle of consuming, and so as to consume, its own smoke." Now, it may be that it is not the fault of the engine, but of the person who uses it. I think, therefore, we should send this case back to the justices, with our opinion that they ought to inquire whether the emission of the smoke was the fault of the engine or of the person who had the management of it.

HILL, J.—The penalty is imposed only in case the company use engines not constructed on the principle of consuming their own smoke. The justices do not appear to have ascertained this fact.

BLACKBURN, J.—The justices have found that in consequence of the engine smoking on the occasions mentioned, that is conclusive evidence of its not being constructed on the principle of consuming its own smoke. In this they were wrong.

Case to go back with the opinion of the court.

Re MIREHOUSE.

Church-rate—Refusal to pay—Order of justices—53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7.

The collector called for the rate and produced the receipt book as his authority to collect; the son of the ratepayer, by the authority of his father, refused to pay the rate, handing to the collector a written statement of his refusal:

Held, a sufficient refusal to ground an order of justices for payment under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7.

Rule nisi for a certiorari to quash an order of justices under the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7, for the payment by Mr. Mirehouse of 1*l.* 4*s.* 0*d.* for arrears of church-rates, and 10*s.* costs.

The validity of the church-rate was not disputed, but it was said that the order was made without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the refusal to pay on which the order was made happened more than six months before the complaint was made to the justices: (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11.) It was admitted that if there was a sufficient refusal on the 8th Sept. 1858, the order was without jurisdiction.

The facts were, that on that day the parish clerk called at Mirehouse's mill, and saw his son (the father

POLLON AND WIFE v. BREWER.—GREEN v. MACNAMARA AND OTHERS.

not being at home), and asked the son for the church-rate; the son asked him if he had got the rate; he replied, "No, here is my authority," showing the receipt-book which had been handed to him by the churchwarden for the purpose of collecting the rate. The son thereupon refused to pay, handing him a written paper stating the grounds of his refusal, and it was proved before the justices that the son refused to pay by the authority of his father.

Prideaux showed cause.—There was no sufficient refusal within the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7, which gives the justices jurisdiction to make the order "if any one duly rated shall refuse or neglect to pay the same." The demand should have been made on the ratepayer. Again, no amount was demanded: (Reg. v. Justices of Shrewsbury, 31 L. T. Rep. 114; Hurrell v. Wink, 8 Taunt. 369.) If the demand was insufficient, the refusal was insufficient.

A. Wills, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

By the COURT.—There is no authority for saying that the demand should be made personally on the ratepayer. Here the refusal was by the authority of the father, and it was such as prevented the clerk from making any further demand. Rule absolute.

POLLON AND WIFE v. BREWER.

Landlord and tenant—Tenancy at will—Determination of—Newton v. Harland, 1 M. & Gr. 644, questioned.

A tenancy at will may be determined by the landlord sending for the keys, or demanding possession.

And (per Erle, C.J.) a landlord going to a house to take possession eo instanti determines a tenancy at will.

This was an action tried before Williams, J., and brought against the defendant for an assault upon the plaintiffs, and for illegally expelling them from a house. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, damages 3*l.* upon the assault counts, and 20*l.* on the other counts. It appeared that there had been negotiations between the plaintiff Pollon and the defendant for the assignment to the former of the lease of a house; and the keys had been delivered to the former for the purpose, as the defendant thought, of his looking over the premises, but, as the plaintiff contended, so as to establish a tenancy between them. The defendant refused to assign the lease, and called upon the plaintiff to give up possession, and sent for the keys. He afterwards went with two men and removed the goods and turned the plaintiffs out. The jury found that a tenancy at will was created. T. Jones last term obtained a rule nisi to reduce the damages to 3*l.*, on a point reserved at the trial, viz., that the tenancy had been determined previous to the expulsion.

Macnamara now showed cause.—It is intended to question the authority of Newton v. Harland, 1 M. & Gr. 644. The majority of this court there held that, if a person hold over after a notice to quit, the landlord cannot expel him by force, manu forti. [WILLIAMS, J.—I don't think the point in Newton v. Harland was raised at the trial. I was expecting it would be raised, and alluded to the case myself, because I know that a great part of the profession thought that Coltman, J., who differed from the majority of the court, was right. I did not reserve the point; but, if you say that in consequence of what fell from me you considered the point to be taken, and were prevented from yourself taking it, I should be sorry to shut you out from it.] I cannot say that.

ERLE, C.J.—Then we must dispose of the case as it is, and I think the rule must be made absolute. The plaintiff at the utmost had a tenancy at will; while it existed the landlord sent to ask for the keys, and called upon him to give up possession. I think either of those things sufficient to determine a tenancy at will. And I also think that the landlord coming to take possession eo instanti determines the tenancy at will. I think therefore there is abundant evidence of the determination of the tenancy.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is said that the sending for the keys would not do, because accompanied by a denial that there was any tenancy at all. I think the true construction of that is, "I deny that there is any tenancy at all; but if there is a tenancy at will I determine it."

CROWDER and BYLES, JJ. concurred.

*Rule absolute to reduce the damages to 3*l.

GREEN v. MACNAMARA AND OTHERS.

Master and servant—Wilful act of the latter.

A master is not liable for the wilful act of his servant done contrary to his orders.

The declaration in this case charged the defendants with combining together by a variety of acts to injure the plaintiff's trade as an omnibus proprietor: verdict against Price one of the defendants, and for the other defendants. At the trial Price was shown to have actively interfered and to have done many acts within the terms of the declaration. It was not shown that the other defendants interfered, and at the trial they denied that they knew of the acts complained of, and they said also that they gave orders that such acts should not be done. It appeared that whenever an omnibus of the plaintiff started, two or more omnibuses of the defendants immediately started, and, as far as they could, surrounded the omnibus of the plaintiff and prevented passengers from entering it; one of the methods of doing which was for the omnibus of the defendants to drive up with the pole close to the door of the plaintiff's omnibus. It was urged at the trial that the other defendants as well as Price were liable for the acts of their servants. Erle, C.J., who tried the case, directed the jury that, upon the facts proved, the defendants, who knew nothing of the acts done, and gave orders that they should not be done, were not liable.

Knowles, Q.C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. In this case the act done is the result of the employment, and was done for the benefit of the employers. There is some difference between the case of a private person and a public body such as the company represented by the defendants. My telling my servant not to drive on the wrong side of the road will not exempt me from liability if he does it. [ERLE, C.J.—I think I put the distinction between the case where a servant so commanded drives negligently, and where he wilfully, out of spite, drives against another person's carriage. The acts proved at the trial were the wilful acts of the servants of the defendants, contrary to their express orders.] "Polling" an omnibus is a wilful act no doubt, but it is also a negligent act. It is a negligent mode of doing the work, and is done for the benefit of the masters. [WILLIAMS, J.—How far will you carry this? Suppose a coachman, zealous for his master, strikes another coachman with his whip, would the master be liable?] That is clearly an illegal act.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that there should be no rule. I can find no fault with the direction of my Lord. The law is laid down exactly as it has been laid down over and over again.

CROWDER, J.—I am of the same opinion. These acts were clearly wilful acts done by the men contrary to the orders of their masters. I cannot see how the summing up could have been different.

BYLES, J. concurred.

Rule refused.

STEVENS v. GOURLEY.

Metropolitan Building Act—What is a building within that Act.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, schedule 1, "Every building shall be inclosed with walls constructed of brick, stone, or other hard and incombustible substance."

Held, that the words of the above schedule amount to a prohibition against building the walls of wood or other combustible substance.

A wooden structure intended to be used as a shop, of a considerable size, and likely to last a considerable time, resting on joists, but having no footings or foundations in masonry, and capable of being lifted bodily off the ground by the application of sufficient mechanical power, is a building within the above statute, and a contract to erect such a structure within the limits of the Act is illegal.

Declaration—For money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for work done, and materials provided by the plaintiff for the defendant at his request, and for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on accounts stated between them.

Third plea—That the said work was done, and the said materials were provided by the plaintiff, under an illegal contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, made after the Metropolitan Building Act 1855 came into operation, (to wit) on the 5th Dec. 1858, for the erection of a certain building within the limits of the metropolis so defined by the Act passed in the session of Parliament held in the eighteenth and nineteenth years of her Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for the better local management of the Metropolis," which building was a new building within the meaning of the said Building Act, and was not within any of the exemptions in the said Act mentioned, which building was agreed by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, should be inclosed with walls constructed of wood, and not of brick, stone, or any other hard or incombustible substance, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made. And the defendant further says, that the plaintiff, before and at the time of making the said contract, was a builder, and that the said contract was entered into by the defendant at the suggestion of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff, before and at the time of making the said contract, represented to the defendant that the said building might be lawfully erected, and was not contrary to the law. And that the defendant, when he entered into the said contract, believed the said representation, and did not know to the contrary thereof, and entered into the said contract and allowed the said work to be done, and the said materials to be provided, and stated the said accounts, believing the said representation to be true. And that the said work was illegally done, and materials were illegally provided by the plaintiff in and about constructing the said building, within the limits of the metropolis as aforesaid, with such walls as aforesaid, contrary to the said statute. And the said accounts were stated concerning the money claimed by the plaintiff to be due to him from the defendant under the said illegal contract, and for the said work and materials so illegally done and provided, and the money which the plaintiff alleges was found to be due upon the said accounts was the money so claimed; and that after the said work had been so done, and the said materials had been so provided, and the said accounts had been so stated, the district surveyor gave the plaintiff's sub-contractor, then being the builder engaged in erecting the said building, due notice to remove the said work within forty-eight hours, (that is to say) to pull down the said building. And the plaintiff and his said sub-contractor having failed to comply with the said notice, the said district surveyor caused complaint to be made before a magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis, duly authorized in that behalf; and the said sub-contractor was thereupon duly summoned to appear before the said magistrate, according to the said Act; and the said magistrate thereupon duly ordered and commanded the said sub-contractor to comply with the requisitions of the said notice; and the plaintiff or the said sub-contractor, or the said district surveyor, pulled down the said building, the same being necessary for enforcing the requisitions of the said notice, and for bringing the said building and work into conformity with the rules of the said Act. And all conditions precedent, necessary matters and things, were done in that behalf to justify and render necessary the pulling down of the said building, and by reason of the premises and of the said work and materials being so done and provided by the plaintiff illegally and contrary to the said statute, the defendant never derived any benefit or advantage whatever from the said work or materials, or any part thereof.

The plaintiff was a builder residing at Castle-terrace, Kentish-town. The defendant was a surgeon residing at Wilton-house, Regent's-park. The action was brought to recover the sum of 58*l.* balance of account for work done and materials provided for the defendant at his request. The circumstances under which the claim originated were as follows:—

The defendant, Dr. Gourley, being the lessee of a house, No. 1, Bentinck-terrace, Regent's-park, desired to have a shop erected in the forecourt or garden attached to that house; and consulted the plaintiff about it. Several interviews took place, and the defendant at first wished the building to be a brick one, but the plaintiff intimated that a brick building would require a previous application to the Metropolitan Board of Works, and occasion considerable delay, and the cost would be upwards of 100*l.*; whereas he would put up a wooden one, which would look as well and last as long, and only cost 58*l.*, and not require a notice to or permission from either the Metropolitan Board of Works or the district surveyor. During the negotiation the following letters were written by the plaintiff to Dr. Gourley:—

"21, Western-terrace, Westbourne-grove west.

"To Dr. Gourley.

"Dear Sir,—I have just considered and found out a new plan for us to work on in reference to the shop, Bentinck-terrace, which is to build it all in wood; it will be less expensive and answer your purpose just as well, and it will look as well, and then we shall evade the Metropolitan Board of Works, and the district surveyor also. It will last quite long enough for you, and, answer all you require; if you consider it over, and, write me this evening, I will put it in hand at once.—Yours obediently,

JOHN STEVENS.

"Nov. 6, 1858.

"P.S.—I think 50*l.* will pay that.—J. S."

"Dear Sir,—The plan of building the shop will be a facsimile of what you have; the elevation will be just as I show you on the plan. The only difference will be wood instead of brick-work; you would not know the difference in any other way, and the cost of erection will be 55*l.* I have thoroughly gone into the matter, and therefore assure you it cannot be erected for less.—Yours obediently,

"JOHN STEVENS.

"Nov. 10, 1858."

Previous to these letters an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and defendant for the erection of a wooden house according to a specification. Although agreed to before the letters were written, it was dated on the 5th Dec., some time after the date of the letters. It was as follows:—

"Specification of works required to be done at No. 1, Bentinck-terrace, Regent's-park, for D. D. Gourley, Esq., M. R. C. S. E. Excavator: To dig out and remove clay to level of pavement, 16 feet back and 14 feet wide, to receive house. Bricklayer: To build three course of footings and sleeper walls, bed all quartering in mortar. Carpenter: To erect in wood a house, the dimensions to be 16 feet from front to back, at 13 feet 8 inches frontage; the height to be 13 feet frontage and 9 feet from floor to floor. To be built of quartering 3 x 2, and weather-boarded on outside, also to be match-boarded all over the inside. Ground-floor joists to be 4½ by 2 on sleepers 2 x 3 with ¾-inch yellow deal flooring, properly laid; also to put ceiling joists 3 x 2, rough boarded on top and match-boarded under, with one skylight in roof, the whole of the roof to be covered with zinc, with proper fall for water, the front to be made with two sashes, with door in centre, with all pilasters, mouldings, &c., as shown on plan, with 1½-inch bead and butt shutters, stall-boards, &c., complete, on cross partition, to be framed in 1½-inch yellow deal, with glass in upper part, with 1½-inch framed door in centre, and leave all perfect. Zinc work: To cover the whole of the roof with No. 9 zinc, properly solder all joints, eaves, &c. Smith: To provide all cocks, bars, nails, screws, &c. necessary for the completion of the aforesaid works. Painter: To paint the whole of the works in three oils outside and inside, and leave all perfect.

"I hereby undertake to complete the whole of the aforesaid works to the satisfaction of Mr. Gourley or his surveyor, as per specification, for the sum of 58*l*. To be completed on the 18th Dec. 1858.

"JOHN STEVENS,

"21, Western-terrace, Westbourne-grove west, builder.

"Dated Dec. 5, 1858."

The plaintiff employed a sub-contractor of the name of Way to execute the contract. No brick foundations were made, but joists were laid on the ground, and the wooden structure built upon them. Way was summoned before a magistrate by the district surveyor. The plaintiff attended on that occasion, and contended that the building was not within the Act, but Way, without the concurrence of the plaintiff, consented to the building being taken down, no penalty being inflicted upon him. The building was finally removed, and the man who took it away said he drew no nail, but lifted it right off the ground. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for 58*l*. A rule was obtained by M. Chambers, Q.C. calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant, on the ground that the contract was an illegal contract, being contrary to the provisions of the Metropolitan Building Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, and that upon that question the decision of the magistrate was conclusive; or why a new trial should not be granted on the ground of misdirection, it having been left to the jury to say whether the defendant, knowing there were no footings, took to the building.

Barnard now showed cause.—The question is, whether a structure entirely of wood, which can be carried about, is a building within the Act. It is contended that a building within the Act must be on foundations. The test, according to sect. 8, whether a building is to be deemed a new building or not is, whether it is a certain height above the foundations. Where the Act speaks of old buildings it also refers to foundations: a building, therefore, must have foundations. This structure could be, and was, lifted bodily off the ground, and was no more a building than a box would be a building. Then the decision of the magistrate is not conclusive upon the plaintiff, who was not summoned. Lastly, the building was delivered to the defendant, and he cannot now say it was an illegal building.

Chambers, Q.C. and Joyce in support of the rule.—The building was of combustible materials, and therefore illegal. By the first schedule to the Act the walls of any building must be of some incombustible materials. There is no definition in the Act showing what is a building, and we must look at the whole Act to see what is meant by building. The Act, in saying the walls shall consist of stone or other incombustible material, by implication says they shall not consist of anything else. They cited The Gaslight Company v. Turner, 6 Bing. N.C.; and Beasley v. Bignold, 5 B. & Ald. 335.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute. It appears to me that the ultimate contract that was come to between these parties was a contract for a building, known to the plaintiff to be in violation of the Building Act; or, there was a contract which, whether known to him or not, was in violation of the provisions of the Building Act. The difficulty we have had is in defining the word "building," and we do not intend to attempt to lay down any definition of the word "building;" but we think that, to take the intermediate word, the structure in question here was a building within the Act. I look at the original contract between the parties, and there it is called indifferently, "a house" or "a shop." The original contract between the parties was for a structure upon a brick foundation, to be permanent, to have a permanent foundation, and to last probably for as long as the defendant's lease and all that he held should last; and the substitution of the contract came afterwards, in which, instead of a brick foundation, a wooden structure was to be raised on joists, and so a timber foundation was to be put there in lieu of a footing of brickwork; that was an entire structure composed of wooden joists laid on the ground, and wood added to it, until the shop was made. It appears to me, by the letters between the parties, it was clearly to have answered the purposes of what had been called originally either a house or a shop, and the letter expressly declared that it will answer all the purposes and look as high, and last as long, as the structure originally contemplated. Now the structure originally contemplated was, within the understanding of all the parties, a structure and building within the provisions of the Metropolitan Building Act, and a substitution of a wooden foundation in lieu of a foundation of masonry was, in the language of the letter, for the purpose of evading the Metropolitan Building Act, and to prevent the jurisdiction of the district surveyor of the Metropolitan Board of Works applying. I am of opinion that the plaintiff was wrong in his notion. I am of opinion that a building or house constructed of wood to have no masonry let into the ground as its foundation—a house constructed of wood—would have all the peril of being built of combustible material that it would have had in case it had a brick foundation. I consider that the 12th section of the Metropolitan Building Act does command that all walls shall be constructed of such substances, of such thickness and in such manner as mentioned in the schedule thereunto annexed, and the first schedule thereunto annexed says, that every building shall be inclosed in walls constructed of brick, stone or other hard and incombustible substances; the foundation shall rest on the solid ground, or concrete, or any other substance. It appears to me that is a command to build the wall of an incombustible substance, and a command to build it so is a prohibition against building it of wood or other combustible substance, and so the contract between the parties was a contract in violation of that express provision. I think the words of the clause and the schedule I have just read constitute an answer to a great part of the argument addressed to us on there being no foundation dug into the ground and composed of masonry, because there may be a foundation resting on the ground as well as a foundation that should be dug into the ground and so composed of masonry. A great deal of the argument raised on behalf of the plaintiff upon this occasion rested upon the fact that the structure was a structure that" was removed in its entirety. I think that was in evidence. And it was said, because it had been removed in its entirety, it was in the nature of a box or a small article, and could not, with any correct use of language, be considered to be a house. But I think the answer to that is, that the contract was for that which is called in one part of the case and in another a shop, and the construction of a structure big enough for the purposes of human habitation, 16 feet by 13, with sufficient strength for use; and though by the application of great mechanical power a large structure of those dimensions can be removed in its entirety without being taken to pieces, that remarkable application of mechanical power does not prevent it being a building within the meaning of the Act. On the whole consideration of the matter I think the statute applies, and that this whole contract was a violation of the statute. These grounds are entirely irrespective of the opinion formed by the magistrate. The parties are to go before a magistrate, whose powers are set out, but that is independent of the principle on which my opinion is founded.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion, though not without some doubt and hesitation. My doubt is founded on this: I entirely agree that a building of this sort is within the mischief contemplated by the Act, and therefore, if the Act of Parliament can be so construed as to include this case, we ought so to construe it. On the other hand, however great the benefit to the public may be in giving a large interpretation, we ought not to construe an Act in a beneficial way if on the face of it it is apparent that the Legislature did not mean to extend the Act, however useful that it should be extended. The doubt in my mind has arisen in this way: that, by the 7th section it is provided the Act shall apply to all new buildings. Then comes the question, what are new buildings? It says a building shall be deemed to be new whenever the inclosing walls and roof have not been carried higher than the footings previously to the 1st Jan. 1858. Suppose in a case like the present that, at the date of the 1st Jan. 1858, the building in question had been previously carried up a certain height, is that a new building within the meaning of the Act of Parliament? That is to be ascertained by applying the parliamentary test. Then the test is to see whether the walls have been carried higher than the footings. It is impossible to apply that test, because there are no footings. Therefore the argument founded on that, not with reference to the main question in this case, but only as an argument, is, by implication, that the intention of the Legislature was, that the Act should apply to cases where the building was a building that had footings. This had not footings. I have some doubt still whether this Act meant it to apply to any sort of building to which the test I have given to ascertain whether it is a new or old building cannot be applied; but that is not a sufficient doubt to induce me to differ from the rest of the court. On the whole I concur, assuming this to be a building within the meaning of the Act. It is clear the contract is a violation of the Act of Parliament, according to the principle laid down in Forster v. Taylor, 5 B. & Ad. 887, where it was held that the vendor of butter in firkins, under the provisions of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 88, could not recover the price of the butter, because the provisions of that Act had not been complied with. It is clear the plaintiff cannot avail himself of the contract entered into here, and therefore that part of the rule, about being misled and the thing becoming useless to him because the magistrate had the building removed, has become immaterial. It is sufficient to constitute a good bar to the action; and, in my judgment, the rule ought to be made absolute.

CROWDER, J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute, upon the ground that the plea has alleged that which has been established in proof that the building in question—or the contract rather for the building in question—was a contract made and carried out in violation of the Building Act. I agree with my brother Williams that the rest of the plea is immaterial. The main substance of the contract was in violation of the Metropolitan Building Act. Now it would have been much more satisfactory, no doubt, if, in giving definitions as this Act has done—particularly what a public building is—some definition had been given of what the meaning of building must be taken to be. That has not been done, nor has any authority been cited in which the definition of the term "building," as used in this Act, has been given; nor do I intend to do more than my Lord Chief Justice, or to attempt to define precisely the extent of the term "building" in the Metropolitan Building Act. The question is, so far as we can ascertain it, whether the contract in this case was a contract for a building, which building was within the meaning of this Act? And looking at the facts, it certainly appears perfectly clear that the original intention of the parties was the erection of a structure about which there could be no doubt, by setting brick-work into the ground and putting the structure upon it. No doubt could be entertained that this would have been a building. The intention appears to be shown by the two letters given in evidence, and the effect of those letters was to endeavour to evade (and the plaintiff thought he had succeeded in evading) the provisions of this Act. But in looking at these letters, and throughout the whole of the evidence, it appears to me it was still the intention of all the parties that this should be a permanent structure, and it is with reference to its permanency I desire to give my opinion that it falls within the terms of the Metropolitan Building Act, because I observe that in the first letter it is said that the shop is to be built all in wood: "I have found out a new plan for us to work in reference to this shop;" and it was to be placed there as a permanent thing. It is to be built all in wood; it would be less expensive and answer all the purposes and it would avoid the Metropolitan Building Act; "and it will last quite long enough for you." Now, what was intended originally by this specification. It appears it was to last a considerable time, according to the terms of the letter; the change in it was thought to effect an evasion of the Act. Does that alter its permanency? The other letter is to the same effect. Now a difficulty that occurred to me during the argument was upon the first schedule, which is referred to by the 12th section, that the walls shall be constructed of a particular substance. The language of the schedule is, "Every building shall be inclosed with walls constructed of brick, stone, or other hard and incombustible substances, and the foundations shall rest on the solid ground, or upon concrete or other solid substance;" assuming, therefore, whatever the structure should be it is to be a building that should have foundations that might rest upon the solid ground, or on concrete in the ordinary way. Then there was certainly raised a considerable doubt in my mind whether this thing that was to be put up had any foundations at all; but I think the Lord Chief Justice has stated that which I am inclined to agree to, that a foundation of some kind in fact must have been laid for it on which the rest of the superstructure was attached. It would probably be an answer to the objection there must be a foundation, that there was in this case a foundation. Then with respect to sect. 8, which has been referred to, I own I incline to think that the terms there, "that a building shall be deemed to be new whenever the inclosing walls thereof have not been carried higher than the footings previously to the said 1st day of Jan. 1856;

C. B.]

SEWELL v. TAYLOR.

any other building shall be deemed to be an old building," were intended to apply to one species that is deemed to be unlawful, namely, a building such as wooden buildings only; and I think up to the period when the Act passed it would be difficult to say that is the only definition of an unlawful construction. In this case the parties could hardly contend, if they had let the wood into the ground five feet deep without any footing and so erected it, that this would not have been a building within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. I am inclined therefore to say the 8th section only refers to one species of building, not making the definition to include any building, on the ground that this is a structure of some considerable magnitude for a shop—a large room—set up for a permanent purpose, and with the intention to be permanent. It does seem to me that it falls within the meaning of "building," as far as I can collect, within one of the meanings, at all events, intended by the statute; certainly it is within the mischief, and therefore being clearly within the mischief contemplated by the Act, I am bound so to construe it. It seems to me it is within the terms of the Act as well as within the spirit. Therefore this was a contract for an unlawful building, and was in violation of the Act of Parliament.

BYLES, J.—I also am of opinion that this rule must be made absolute. The respect I entertain for my brother Williams' opinion, who has expressed some doubts, has created the only difficulty I feel. I agree with my brother Crowder that, as far as sect. 8 applies to buildings of a particular class, a question might arise whether they were new buildings or old buildings, and the 8th section is directed solely to the solution of that difficulty, leaving it quite independent of other sections of the Act, which embody the schedule No. 1, enacting that every building shall be constructed of incombustible substances. That being so, the question is, whether this is a building; and that seems to me to be the only question, because it does not appear from this plea but that the defendant may have derived some benefit from the erection; therefore it is quite necessary for him to make out the first part of the plea, that is to say, that it is an illegal building. Then that brings the question to this: what is the meaning of the word "building?" It is to be observed the word "building," as often happens is used in a sense wider than the substantive building. It is suggested by my brother Williams, that we speak of the building a carriage, or building a ship—it is said that birds build nests; but neither of those three things would be called buildings. The meaning of the word building must be decided by that which is its ordinary acceptance, and it is a well-established rule, that words in a statute are to be construed according to their ordinary meaning. It is difficult, I may say impossible, to define the word building, but that is an impossibility which is not peculiar to the word building, and arises from the imperfection of human language. It is easy to say this thing is a building, and to say that is not a building; then, if it is not possible to define the line where the true description ends, common language must be our guidance, and we must follow the rule expressed in the maxim res ipsa loquitur. What is the ordinary meaning I do not pretend to say. It is usually understood to be a structure, an edifice, or an erection, or something of considerable size, intended to be permanent, and intended to last for a considerable time, whether let into the ground or not. A church built of iron, or an edifice built of wood, a house or a stable, or a night house for cattle, or a coach-house, are evidently buildings; but it is equally clear that a birdcage, with a handle for lifting it off the ground, is not a building; or, a wig box; the value of these things consisting of their portability. On the other hand, a dog kennel, though fixed to the ground, would not be a building, because it was not of any size as a coop for fowls.

It is not necessary to say whether they would or not; in this case this shop, many feet wide and many feet high and long, intended for the ordinary business of human life, is a building in the ordinary sense of the word. But then what is the object of the Act of Parliament? The object of the Act of Parliament is, that land should not be covered with combustible structures. To depart from the ordinary sense of the word building would, therefore, frustrate the object of the Act. On these grounds, looking at the ordinary signification of the word—the meaning—there cannot be a doubt of this, that it is a building within the Act: the plea is proved, and the rule should be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

SEWELL (appellant) v. TAYLOR (respondent).

Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4—Rogue and vagabond—"Place of public resort"—Sale by auction.

A sale by auction, called by public placards, and held in a house and garden in and adjoining a public street, to which sale the public had free access, and where a large number of persons were assembled, is a "place of public resort" within the meaning of the 4th section of the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83; therefore a "suspected person" apprehended in such a place was held rightly convicted as a rogue and vagabond.

Case for the opinion of the court under the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43:—

"On the 4th April 1859 Joseph Sewell was brought in the custody of Walter Taylor, a constable for the borough of Congleton, in the county of Chester, before us, Edward Harrison Solly (mayor), and Edward Lowndes Mallabar, two of the justices of the said borough, and charged,

"For that he, on the 30th day of March 1859, being a suspected person or reputed thief, did frequent a place of public resort in the said borough with intent to commit felony, contrary to the provisions of the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4.

"The prisoner was remanded twice, and the examination was concluded on the 13th April 1859.

"We found it proved that the prisoner was a suspected person, and that on the 30th day of March 1859 he was at a sale of household furniture, books, pictures, &c., held at a place called Moody Hall, in this borough; that such sale was called by public placards posted in the town and neighbourhood several days previously to its being held; that at least three hundred persons were there congregated; that the sale was by public auction, and that it was held on two consecutive days in a house and garden adjoining one of the public streets of this borough, and that the prisoner was there with intent to commit felony.

"On behalf of the prisoner it was contended that private premises on which a sale by public auction was being held did not come within the meaning of the term "place of public resort" in the fourth section of the Act; that a place of public resort meant a place to which the public were in the habit of resorting, and not a mere special assemblage or collection of persons for a purpose which might never occur there again.

"We decided that there was a difference between a place of public resort and a place of common resort; that the above-mentioned place of sale was a place of public resort to all intents and purposes, for the time being; for that the public had full and free access thereto, and passed and repassed at will to and from the said sale; and that as many persons did actually resort thereto, it was such a place as was intended to be protected by the section.

"We accordingly convicted the prisoner of being a rogue and vagabond, within the intent and meaning of the fourth section of the said statute, and ordered him to be committed to the house of correction at Nether

Knutsford, in the county of Chester, with hard labour, for two calendar months.

"The prisoner's attorney having applied to us to state a case on the above question for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, we granted the application, and we now state the grounds of our determination pursuant to the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

"Dated at Congleton aforesaid the eighteenth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine.

"EDW. H. SOLLY.
"E. L. MALLABAR."

M. Lloyd for the appellant.—The point here raised is, whether the house and garden on the occasion mentioned formed a "place of public resort" within the meaning of the 4th section of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, which enacts (inter alia), that "every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, &c., or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway, or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony, &c., shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of the Act, &c., and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender to the house of correction," &c. It is contended that a place of public resort, as contemplated by the statute, means a place where not only the public may resort, but which they are in the habit of resorting to. The house where the sale by auction was held was a private house, and the fact of a sale being held there on this particular occasion did not alter its nature as a private place: (Ex parte Elizabeth Jones, 27 L. J. 117, M. C.) The places of public resort mentioned in the statute mean places of a permanent nature for the resort of the public. Suppose, instead of occupying two days, the sale had only taken one day, then would arise, if the court should uphold the conviction, this palpable absurdity, that a house may be a place of public resort one day out of the 365 which constitute a year, and during the remaining 364 days a private house. In Davis (app.), Douglas (resp.), 28 L. J. 193, M. C., it was held that a booth used as a theatre by strolling players is not a house or place of public resort within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2. [ERLE, C.J.—You need not refer to that statute, for that is a case under the Licensing Act.] It assists the argument that a "place of public resort" must be permanent and not temporary in its nature. The house in question is to all intents and purposes a private house and garden; the public had only licence to come there on one occasion at a stated time and for a particular purpose; and as the place is not a place of resort of a permanent character, it is not a place of public resort within the meaning of the statute; furthermore it is not a place of public resort, because the public had only a licence to go there on this particular occasion of the sale by auction. For these reasons the judgment of the court should be for the appellant.

M'Intyre, for the respondent, was not called on.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that there is no ground whatever for the appeal, and that the conviction should be affirmed; for it seems to me that the magistrates were right in their decision, and that the place where the appellant was taken, the same being a public auction, was a place of public resort within the meaning of the Vagrant Act. I see no reason whatever why the place should be one of a permanent nature where the public were in the habit of resorting. The object of the statute is to protect large assemblies, and it extends to places where such may congregate. Permanence is not a material element in the question. Suppose a public assemblage of persons—such, for instance, as races—takes place in a meadow for one day, I think that would be "a place of public resort," under the circumstances, and "the street, highway or avenue leading thereto," within the meaning of the statute. Churches and theatres are places of public resort, where, at intervals, large numbers of persons assemble, yet they are not permanently open; but no one supposes that such places are not within the protection of the Act of Parliament. For these reasons I hold that this appeal must be dismissed.

CROWDER, J.—I am quite of the same opinion. The words of the statute are very large, comprehending a great number of places, and they must be taken, therefore, in a large and extended sense. A "place of public resort" may be construed to extend to a sale by auction under such circumstances as exist in this case. It need not be permanent in its nature—that is, a place where the public are in the habit of congregating or using.

BYLES, J.—I think that the true construction of the words in the 4th section of the Vagrant Act is that now put upon them by the court. The many places specified in the statute as within its protection fortifies me in this view, for they are not all necessarily places of permanent public resort. I need hardly observe that the place in question is within the mischief which it is the purpose of the Act to guard against; for we often see in London sales taking place in private houses, which, if unprotected, great opportunity would be afforded for the commission of robberies.

WILLIAMS, J. had left the court.

Judgment for the respondent.

ROGERS (appellant) v. LEWIS (respondent).

Registration appeal—2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 28.

In case of successive occupation of premises in a city or borough for which a person claims to vote, proof of payment of the rates, without proof of rating, is sufficient.

CASE.

At a court held before me, Henry Blencoe Churchill, barrister-at-law, duly appointed to revise the list of voters for the borough of Reading, Henry Pocock objected to the name of John Jones being retained on the list of voters for the parish of St. Giles. John Jones occupied a house in Crown-street till Dec. 1858, and was duly rated in the October rate, the only one made between July 1858 and the end of his occupation. He moved in December to a house in Boul's-walk. The claim is annexed. Another rate was made in April 1859, on which his name did not appear. He made no application to be rated; but the collector called on him, and he paid the rate, for which the collector gave the usual receipt. The house mentioned in the rate is that for which the claim is made; an exact copy of the rating in the book is annexed. It was contended that rating for the house to which the voter has removed was not necessary, and that, if it was, the payment of the rate to the collector under the circumstances stated was equivalent to a demand to be rated. I held that the rating to the second house was necessary, and that the payment to the collector was not equivalent to a demand to be rated; and I expunged the name of John Jones from the list.

MELBOURNE v. GREENFIELD.

[C. B.]

That section enacts "that the premises in respect of the occupation of which any person shall be entitled to be registered in any year, and to vote in the election for any city or borough as aforesaid, shall not be required to be the same premises, but may be different premises occupied in immediate succession by such person, during twelve calendar months next previous to the last day of July in such year; such person having paid, on or before the 20th day of July in such year, all the poor-rates and assessed taxes which shall, previously to the 6th day of April the then next preceding, have become payable from him in respect of all such premises so occupied by him in succession." Payment of the rate is all that is necessary: (Rogers on Election, 75.) By sect. 27, rating as well as payment is required in the case of the same occupation. The change of language in the 28th section shows the intention of the Legislature.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

ERLE, C. J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the appellant. It appears to me that the argument of Mr. Dowdeswell, in respect of the construction of the 28th section applying to premises occupied in succession is well founded. Where the qualification arises on one set of premises, the party must be rated and must have paid the rates; where the qualification is for premises occupied in succession, according to the words of the statute, the party must have paid the rates. Now it appears to me the difference of wording does warrant the conclusion which Mr. Dowdeswell wishes us to found upon it; and looking at the nature of property occupied in succession and the length of time for which rates are made, and during which the rates are in the course of being collected, and looking at the provisions which are made in several statutes, in case there should be a change of occupation, about the allowance to be made to the incoming tenant, and his liability, and that of the outgoing tenant, I think it was clearly under the consideration of the Legislature to make provision for the payment of rates where there has been a succession of occupation. There would be great inconvenience if the Legislature required a person to interfere and have his name put on the rate which might have been made two quarters before, or may be nearly expired, or may be in the process of formation. I think that the purpose of the change of language in the two sections was to say that in the case of successive occupation the qualification should be sufficient in respect of rates, provided the rates should have been paid, and it does not require that the party's name should be on every rate due in respect of each of the two premises. I am also of opinion, if it were necessary to go into it, that the appellant is entitled to succeed on the other point; but it is not necessary to resort to that.

WILLIAMS, J.—I agree with my Lord as to the construction of the 28th section, and it is unnecessary to give any opinion upon the other point.

CROWDER, J.—I am also agreed as to the construction of the 28th section, and I do not desire to give any separate opinion upon the other point. (a) Judgment for the appellant.

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

MELBOURNE (appellant) v. GREENFIELD (respondent.)

Election law—County vote—Notice of objection—6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, ss. 7 and 101—"Place of abode"

—Mistakes and misnomers.

As objector to the name of a voter being retained on the list must state his present "place of abode,"

(a) But it must be observed that this decision is applicable only to the case of a successive occupation. Where there is no change of occupation there must be an actual rating as well as a payment of rates, and payment will not supply the defect in the rating.

that is to say, the place where he resides at the time when the objection is made.

In a notice of objection the objector described himself as of "Cowhill, Belper," on the register of voters for the parish or township of Belper. In the register of voters his "place of abode" was described as of "Cowhill, Belper." It was proved in evidence before the revising barrister, that he had left Cowhill, Belper, for another residence nearly a year before the date of the notice of objection:

I held, that the description did not comply with the requirements of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 7, sched. A. No. 5, and was therefore insufficient.

Sect. 101 only "applies to cure mistakes or misnomers, not where the party has put down what he intended to put down, but acting on a misapprehension of the law."

The following case was stated by the revising barrister:—

At a court for the revision of voters, held before me at Derby, James Melbourne objected to the name of Richard William Greenfield being retained on the list of voters for the parish of All Saints, Derby, in the southern division of the county of Derby.

The following is a copy of the notice of objection:—

"To Mr. Richard William Greenfield.—Take notice, that I object to your name being retained in the All Saints, Derby, list of voters for the southern division of the county of Derby.

"JAMES MELBOURNE, of Cowhill, Belper,

"On the register of voters for the parish or township of Belper.

"Dated, August 15th, 1859."

The appellant's name appeared in the register of voters for the township of Belper, and was therein described as follows:—

Name of voter.	Place of abode.	Qualification.	Street.
Melbourne, James.	Cowhill, Belper.	Freehold houses & land	Gutter

It was proved in evidence before me that James Melbourne, the appellant, had removed from Cowhill, Belper, in Oct. 1858, to a place called Gutter, in the same township of Belper, and that he was not residing at Cowhill at the time he signed the objection, and described his place of abode, "Cowhill, Belper," and upon this it was contended that the notice of objection so signed was invalid, as not giving the true place of abode of the objector within the meaning of the Registration of Voters Act 1843.

On that ground I held the notice of objection insufficient, and retained the name of the respondent on the list of voters without requiring proof of his qualification. If I am right in so holding, the name of the respondent is to be retained; otherwise it is to be expunged.

HAYES, Serjt. for the appellant, contended that the description was sufficient. It is optional to give the present abode or that in the register. The court has generally upheld notices where they give substantially what is required by the Legislature.

MACNAMARA contra.—This notice of objection is bad: (Knowles v. Brooking, 1 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 461; Walker v. Payne, 1 Lutw. 324.) The place mentioned in the list of voters might give no information at all to the person objected to as to the whereabouts of the person making the objection. The objector might be travelling abroad: (Toms v. Cumming, 8 Scott N.R. 910; Woollett v. Davis, 4 C. B. 115.) There Wilde, C. J. said "that no notice can be deemed to be in the form or to the effect required by the statute, which does not in itself contain a sufficient statement of the place of abode. We think it is contrary to the intent and meaning of the Legislature, that the party receiving the notice should be compelled to take trouble, and to resort to other sources than the notice itself, in order to obtain the necessary information as to such place of abode." It is most essential that the person objected to should have on the face of the notice itself, and without further trouble, means of knowing the true residence of the objector, in order, first, that he may learn accurately from him the nature or ground of objection, and secondly, that he may be enabled to enforce costs if awarded against him. It is important that the description should be specific, and that the person objected to should not be liable to be misled, as here he is. [WILLIAMS, J.—At one time the requirement as to correctness of description was thought so strong that the name of Nickless was objected to, the name being Nicholas; but the court in that case held that the sufficiency of the notice was a question of fact, and not of law, and that as the name was so stated in the list of voters as to be commonly understood it did not signify.] Yes. That was the case of Hinton v. Hinton, 1 Lutu. 25. This, however, is not misdescription, which means erroneously describing what was intended to be described, but a false statement calculated to mislead: (Gadsby v. Warburton, 7 M. & G. 11.) The true rule on the subject is to be found in Knowles v. Brooking, ubi supra. There Tindal, C. J. says: "The giving the true place of abode of the objector must afford a better opportunity for inquiries and communications than the adding of the old place of abode, which it must be assumed from some cause or other is incorrect at the time of giving the notice."

MELBOURNE v. GREENFIELD.

Hayes, Serjt. in reply.—As to the objection, that the notice is bad because for anything it shows the objector may be travelling abroad, it is submitted that the notice would be sufficient if it described the objector as in the United States of America. It is a new question whether this notice is bad; it answers substantially all that is required by the Legislature, and is, therefore, sufficient. If the court should think it a misdescription, that is cured by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 101: (Feddon v. Sayer, 12 C. B. 693.)

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the revising barrister was right. The objector is bound, upon his notice of objection, by the Act of Parliament, to give his "place of abode," and the question has been argued, in consequence of the way in which those words "place of abode" appear in the Act of Parliament, whether "place of abode" there, when the abode has been changed since the last register is published, means place of abode mentioned upon the register—that which was his place of abode then, or his present place of abode. Now, I am of opinion that the words, taken in their ordinary acceptation, would mean his present place of abode; but I give that decision at the present moment with the more confidence, because I consider it was a decided question at the time when the case of Knowles v. Brooking was before this court. There the question was, whether the present place of abode, in case of the change I have mentioned, was a sufficient compliance with the Act of Parliament; and it was decided by the majority of the court, and so must be taken to have been then res judicata, that his present place of abode was a compliance with the Act. And I am at a loss to see how I can judicially say that in the words "place of abode" the Legislature intended to say "two places of abode," either his past or present, at the option of the objector. I think they meant one; and, it having been decided by the case of Knowles v. Brooking that his present place of abode was a compliance with the Act of Parliament, I consider I should be conflicting with that decision if I were to hold that his past place of abode, namely, that which he had when the register was published, was also a compliance with the Act of Parliament. I could not come to this decision without saying that place of abode was intended in two perfectly distinct and irreconcilable senses, as giving an option to use either of them. As that was decided on great deliberation, I adhere to it on account of its great importance, as many rights are affected, and we are to abide by what I consider to be a decision on the point. I observe in that decision the conveniences of one construction and the other construction with elaborate minuteness are gone into on the one side by Tindal, C. J., and on the other side by Maule, J., and I took part in the decision, and concurred in the opinion that the present place of abode would be sufficient. I do not say that if it was purely res nova I should not have strained, and used my utmost ability to put any construction on those documents to hold them to be valid, had the parties intended to exercise a right, and nobody had been misled by the document. If I did so now I should be running contrary to that which has been taken to be the law upon the construction of the 101st section,—I should have been running contrary to that which has been taken to be the law, assumed to be the law, known to be the law, and acted on as being the law in numerous decisions, if I were now to say that by virtue of the 101st section, containing the provision, that no misnomer, or inaccurate description of any person, place, or thing, shall abridge the operation of this Act. If I were to hold that the section could be applied where the party distinctly intended the place that he has put down, and made no mistake, no misnomer, no inaccurate description of that place, but mistook the requirement of the law, intending to put down the place which he did put down, and did intend to put down that place under a mistaken interpretation of the law, I take that to have been held, and assumed, if I may so say, through a great number of decisions, that the construction does not apply, and could not be used to support the notice. The party had named the place according to the intention, minutely and accurately, and intended that only, but mistook the requirement of the law. Under those circumstances I am of opinion that the revising barrister was right. I say nothing of a great deal of what has been argued as to the comparative advantages or disadvantages of either construction. I consider that it is impossible to add anything to the respective statements of the balance on either side, by the Lord Chief Justice on the one hand, and Maule, J. on the other.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The point arises on the construction of No. 5, schedule A of the 6th Vict. c. 58, the question of construction being on the meaning of the words "place of abode" in the form given in No. 5. It seems to me abundantly clear that it must either mean place of abode as described in the list, or it must mean the present place of abode. The Act of Parliament, by using the expression "place of abode," never could have meant either the place of abode mentioned on the register of voters or the present place of abode. If that be so, the question is to decide what it means. I certainly think, if this case was free from authority, I should have no hesitation about it, that the natural meaning of the expression in the form given by the statute is the present place of abode. If it was a question of authority the case of Knowles v. Brooking is clear and direct, that it is sufficient to state the present place of abode. If it is sufficient to do that, it can only be because the Act of Parliament means that; if it does not mean that, it does not mean the place of abode mentioned on the register. The decision of that case binds us to hold that it must be the present place of abode, and therefore the notice is not in conformity with the statute. But then it is said that the objection is cured by the 101st clause of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, by the enactment that no misnomer or inaccurate description of any person, place, or thing named shall in any way prevent or abridge the operation of the Act, provided that such person, place or thing shall be so denominated in such schedule, list, register or notice, as to be commonly understood. Now, for the purposes of this point it must be assumed that the law is that the objector ought to have described his present place of abode. I apprehend the meaning of the Act of Parliament is that, the rule being so, if he had intended to comply with the Act, and intended to describe his present place of abode, then, notwithstanding he had given an inaccurate or an inapt description of his present place of abode, that that inaccuracy and that inaptitude shall not vitiate if the description could be commonly understood. It does not appear to have any application to a case where he did not intend to describe his place of abode, but intended to describe something else. That is not found in this case, and it cannot be decided on that ground. I entirely agree with the Lord Chief Justice.

CROWDER, J.—I must own I have been unable, during the whole of the argument on the part of the appellant, to bring my mind to entertain any doubt whatever upon this question, either looking at the section and reading it without reference to authority, or looking at the authorities which have been decided upon it. Anybody taking up this schedule and finding that a man gives notice and puts a date—"dated this 10th day of Aug. 1859, A. B., place of abode"—would never entertain a doubt that the clear construction of that was, that the man who was writing the notice at the date at which he fixes it, meant that at that date, that is the place of abode in which he then is at the time he signs the notice. Great ingenuity, when one looks at the cases, certainly has been used to show that it means something different. Looking at the schedule A. No. 5, itself—"A. B. of — place of abode"—and then mentioning "on the register of voters," I should never myself have been able, without a great deal of argument, to entertain a doubt what that means. Then the authorities have been referred to. I agree with the Lord Chief Justice that Knowles v. Brooking contains every argument that can be urged on one side and the other by men of great learning, and who seem to have had sufficiently brought to their attention everything that could be urged, and nothing omitted, by the Lord Chief Justice on the one side, and Mr. Justice Maule on the other. I may say that which the present Lord Chief Justice could not say, that, in addition to the arguments urged by the Lord Chief Justice, there were the cogent arguments of Mr. Justice Erle in agreeing with the judgments of the other judges. There was a great deal of good sense and sound argument on that side. It is clear, looking at that case, the foundation of my brother Hayes' argument is at once destroyed—namely, that it may be optional to give the one or the other. I think it is clear that those who entertained different opinions in the case of Knowles v. Brooking, each entertained the opinion that there was only one place of abode to which the statute could refer. I cannot in the least comprehend how they can have intended that it may be one or the other. I think we must come to the conclusion that it is one: then the authority seems to me conclusive. I do not desire to go into the question of the balance of convenience, though I must own in my own mind I am able to agree with the majority of the court in Knowles v. Brooking. The question has been decided in 1846; and I agree with the Lord Chief Justice in thinking that decision most clearly made, after great deliberation. As to the 101st section, the authorities clearly show that it was never intended to be applied to such a case as this, for the inaccuracy or misdescription referred to is different. No case has been shown in which such an inaccuracy has been brought within the section. It might be somewhat inferential—I do not say it is at all conclusive—when a great case like that of Knowles v. Brooking was before the court, the majority on one side and that learned person, Maule, J. on the other, they both and each conclude for the abode being the present one; nor was it at all adverted to by the counsel that it could possibly come within the 101st clause. Then can it be said that there is an inaccuracy of description? A man intends to describe himself particularly; he does not put down Cowhill instead of Gutter by mistake. If he clearly intended to give his present place of abode, and put in Cowhill somehow or other, there might be something in it. It is clear he put in one instead of the other, intending to put it there. I am at a loss to understand how that can be within the 101st section. The case is perfectly clear, and our judgment ought to be for the respondent.

BYLES, J.—I agree with the conclusion at which the rest of the court have arrived, and I agree with that judgment entirely on the weight of authority. It seems to me that the case referred to has decided the question, and I rather think that that case, though not expressly, yet impliedly, has decided the other point, namely, that the 101st section is not applicable to a case of this description. On the ground that this is res judicata, I concur in the judgment of the rest of the court. Judgment for respondent, with costs.

PADWICK (appellant) v. KING (respondent).

Game—Information under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30
—Right of tenant to authorise servant to kill rabbits.

By a lease the landlord reserved to himself liberty to hawk, hunt, course, shoot, fish and jowl upon the demised lands; and by agreement with H. (a subsequent tenant, who held in all other particulars except the game on the same terms as the lessee his predecessor) the right to sport on the land was reserved to H. H. directed his servant to go on the land and shoot a rabbit, whereupon an information was laid against him by the landlord, which the justices, acting on the authority of Spicer v. Barnard, 28 L. J. 177, M. C., dismissed:

Held, that the justices were right; that the case came within the authority of Spicer v. Barnard, and, therefore, the information was properly dismissed.

Case stated by the justices of the Havant petty sessions to the Court of Common Pleas under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, on the application of William Frederick Padwick.

William King was charged under the 30th section of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, at the Havant petty sessions, held on the 10th May 1859, with having on the 30th April 1859, at the parish of Hayling South, in the county of Southampton, committed a certain trespass, by entering in the daytime upon certain land there situate, the property of William Padwick, in pursuit of coney, contrary to the statute, to which he pleaded not guilty.

It appeared in evidence that at 7.35 p.m. on the 30th April 1859, William King, the parish clerk of Hayling South, was in a field, the property of William Padwick, in the occupation of Henry John Hawkins, with a gun in his hand; that the gun was pointing towards a bank, beyond which was a hedgerow, beyond which was a road, and beyond which was a coppice. The hedgerow and coppice were the property and in the occupation of William Padwick. The road was an occupation road, and used by Padwick and Hawkins. The road was distant about fourteen yards from where King stood. William Frederick Padwick, who holds a deputation from William Padwick, the lord of the manor, jumped over the hedge into Hawkins' field, went up to King, and said, "What are you up to?" King replied, "I am come to shoot a rabbit; my master (Hawkins) told me I might come and kill a rabbit for my wife, who has been confined." Loddard, a witness who accompanied William Frederick Padwick, stated that King said that Hawkins had asked him if he knew anything about wiring; and that he had replied by saying that he knew nothing of wiring. William Frederick Padwick thereupon called Loddard, a servant of his, who took the gun from King and handed him over into the custody of the police, by whom he was taken to the Havant station, and locked up for the night upon a charge of night poaching, which the justices strongly reprobated.

King stated, in defence, that he went into his master's field with the leave of his master, to kill a rabbit for his wife, and he called Hawkins, his master, who proved that he was the occupier of the field as part of the manor farm; that he had succeeded James Christmas under agreement with William Padwick, as tenant, upon the terms generally of Christmas's lease, of which there had been no assignment, and that he had constantly killed rabbits on the land of his occupation; that the terms of the lease with regard to game had been varied by the agreement. The lease between William Padwick and James Christmas, dated the 10th Feb. 1846, was put in. It contained the following reservation and covenant:—

"Except and always reserved unto the said William Padwick, his heirs and assigns, and his and their friends, companions and gamekeepers, free liberty from time to time, and at all times during the term granted, to hawk, hunt, course, shoot, fish and fowl in and upon the said demised premises, or any part thereof.

"And also that the said James Christmas, his executors and administrators, shall and will use his and their utmost endeavours to preserve the partridges, pheasants, quails, hares, and other game; and also the fish in the ponds, and the spawn, and the eggs thereof, for the sole use and pleasure of the said William Padwick, his heirs and assigns, on the said demised premises, except, nevertheless, that the said James Christmas shall be at liberty to course hares on the said farm, in case the said William Padwick, or William Frederick Padwick, shall not keep hounds, or greyhounds, but not otherwise."

The agreement between William Padwick, of the one part, and Henry John Hawkins of the other part, dated Oct. 6, 1857, was put in, and showed that Hawkins had agreed to become the tenant of Padwick, under and subject, and upon the same conditions, covenants, clauses, and agreements in every respect (except as to the amount of rent) as in the lease of the said James Christmas severally specified, with an exception in reference to the game in the words following:—

"Excepting that the said Henry John Hawkins shall have permission to sport over the said farm and lands."

The justices, John Deverell, Esq., and Henry Spencer, Esq., considered that under the circumstances Hawkins was a quasi assign of Christmas; that it was doubtful, under the terms of the reservation, whether Christmas and his assigns had not a concurrent right of sporting with Padwick; that rabbits were not mentioned in the reservation; and that the agreement of the 6th Oct. 1857 conferred a right of sporting upon Hawkins which he might lawfully exercise to the extent of killing rabbits by his authorised servant.

On these grounds, therefore, and on the authority of Spicer and others v. Barnard, reported in the Justice of the Peace for the 14th May 1859, they dismissed the information.

Dated the 1st day of June 1859.

JOHN DEVERELL.
HENRY SPENCER.

Lush, Q.C. for the appellant.—The justices were wrong in dismissing the information in this case. [The learned counsel recapitulated the facts as stated above in the case.] Here the person charged with the offence was found in the daytime in the pursuit of coney; the landlord has the game reserved to him, limited permission being given to the tenant himself to sport over the farm and lands, and it was beyond his power to give authority to another to shoot upon the lands. The leave given to Hawkins, the occupier of the farm and lands, to shoot, is contained in these words: "The said Henry John Hawkins shall have permission to sport over the said farm and lands." Now this is clearly a limitation to himself alone. If we go further back to the reservation of the game in the lease to Christmas, it will be found as follows:—"Except and always reserved unto the said William Padwick, his heirs and assigns, and his and their friends and companions and gamekeepers, free liberty from time to time and at all times during the term hereby granted, to hawk, hunt, course, shoot, fish and fowl in and upon the said premises, or any part thereof." [BYLES, J.—Rabbits are not mentioned in the reservation in the lease.] No; but the tenant has covenanted to preserve the game, and rabbits are game. Though the question turns on the 30th section of the general Game Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, the 7th and 8th sections should be looked at. The 7th section enacts "that under existing leases the landlord shall have the game, and no person occupying any land under lease or agreement, either for life or years, made previously to the passing of the Act, shall have the right to the game, unless such right has been expressly granted by such lease or agreement, or except where on the original granting or renewal of such lease or agreement a fine shall have been taken, or except where, in the case of a term for years, such lease or agreement shall have been made for a term exceeding twenty-one years." The 8th section provides that nothing in the Act shall affect any existing or future agreements respecting game, nor any rights of manor, forest, chase or warren. The 30th section, which is the material one, enacts "that if any person shall trespass in the daytime in pursuit of game, or woodcock, snipes, quails, landrails, or coney, such person shall on conviction forfeit and pay such sum not exceeding 2*l.* as to the justices shall seem meet, together with costs of conviction," &c. "Provided always, that any person charged with such trespass shall be at liberty to prove, by way of defence, any matter which would have been a defence to an action at law for such trespass, save and except that the leave and licence of any occupiers of the land so trespassed upon shall not be a sufficient defence in any case where the landlord, lessor or other person shall have the right of killing the game by virtue of any reservation or otherwise; but such landlord, lessor, or other person, shall, for the purpose of prosecuting for each of the two offences last before mentioned, be deemed to be the legal occupier of such land, whenever the actual occupier thereof shall have given such leave or licence." It will be seen that, if the case stood upon the lease to Christmas, Hawkins could have no right himself to kill and take game, much less to authorise another to do so. Then again, the permission to him "to sport over the farm and lands" cannot confer a power on him to authorise King to do so. [BYLES, J.—The master having the right to take rabbits, may authorise his servant to do so for him: there are cases enough going that length.] Yes; but he can only empower the servant to shoot for his, the master's, benefit. The proviso to the 30th section is here material. It is submitted that the justices in this case should have convicted King, and the judgment of the court should therefore be for the appellant.

J. J. Powell for the respondent.—It is submitted, that both in fact and law, Hawkins, the tenant, had a right to go upon the land and kill rabbits, and that he could authorise the respondent, who was his servant, to do so. The respondent wanted a rabbit for his sick wife, and he asked his master for one, and it makes no difference that his master having no rabbit at hand to give, tells him to go and shoot a rabbit for his wife. It is just the same as if he said, "Go and shoot a rabbit and bring it to me, and I will give it you for your wife." It is found in the case that respondent acted by Hawkins' directions. This being so, the case comes within the authority of Spicer and others, apps., Barnard, resp., 28 L. J. 177, M.C., where it was held that the occupier of land may, by himself or servants, kill coney, notwithstanding that in his demise there is a reservation of game to the landlord, nothing being said about coney. [ERLE, C. J.—In that case the rabbits were regarded by the tenant as a nuisance, and he hired a man and paid him to kill rabbits, which is a different thing.] Though the case finds that respondent went into the field with his master's leave to kill a rabbit, the reasonable intendment is, that Hawkins directed him to do so; just as if, in fact, he had said, "I want a rabbit to give to you, I have not one at hand, go on the ground and kill one." In the 2nd section of the Act coney are not enumerated as game. That section says that throughout the Act the word "game" shall include hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath or moor game, black game and bustards." Rabbits are not there named; they are only specified in the 30th section. The 12th section enacts, that where the right of killing game is given to the landlord or lessor in exclusion of the right of the occupier of the land, or where such exclusive right has been specially reserved by or granted to the lessor, landlord, or any person other than the occupier, then, if the occupier shall kill or take any game on the land, or shall give permission to any other person to do so without the authority of the lessor, landlord, or other person having the right of the game, such occupier shall on conviction forfeit for such pursuit, and pay, &c., for every head of game so killed or taken, such sum, not exceeding one pound, as to the justices shall seem meet. [CROWDER, J.—The difficulty is, that the reservation to Hawkins of a right to sport over the farm does not authorise him to empower another to do so.] It is contended that Hawkins had power to employ his servant to kill a rabbit under the 12th and 30th sections, which have been already referred to. For these reasons the judgment of the court should be for the respondent.

PADWICK v. KING.

Leak in reply.—The distinction between the cases is this, whether the person who kills the rabbit does it for his master's benefit or for his own. In Spicer's case the man was employed and paid to kill the rabbits because they were a nuisance. The Game Act means to empower the occupier in certain cases to kill rabbits himself or by his servant, but it must be for the occupier's benefit, and not for that of another person.

ERLE, C. J.—I am of opinion that the order of the justices dismissing the information ought to be affirmed. I take it that this case is within the principle of the case in the Q. B. (Spicer v. Barnard, ubi supra), on the authority of which, as the case finds, the justices decided it. Hawkins, the tenant, had a clear right to sport and kill game upon the land, and I think he had power to employ others to kill rabbits; it makes no difference whether he employs the person to kill for presents or not. The case finds that the respondent went into the field to kill a rabbit for his sick wife, with the authority of Hawkins, which is much the same as if Hawkins killed it himself and gave it to the respondent; and it seems to me quite within the authority of the case in the Q. B. The justices thought that that case governed the present case. It is a very different thing authorising a stranger to come in upon the land to shoot a rabbit, and allowing or directing a servant to do so. Here the respondent is a labourer in the service of the tenant, who had, at all events, himself the right to sport over the farm and lands, and he had also the right to authorise his servant to shoot a rabbit under the circumstances of this case. The reservation of the game is in somewhat peculiar terms, but I do not go into the consideration of anything arising from that fact, but decide upon the other ground. The judgment of the court must be for the respondent.

WILLIAMS, J. was absent.

CROWDER, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the decision of the justices was right, and may be sustained under the authority of the case in the Q. B., which they had before them. As regards the question of sporting, that would perhaps require consideration; but there is no necessity of deciding upon that in the present instance.

BYLES, J.—I concur in opinion with the rest of the court. The justices, as it appears, had before them a case in which the legal distinction between leave and licence, and authority given by express directions, has been pointedly put and clearly stated. (a) Judgment for respondent, with costs.

(a) This case, taken in connection with that of Spicer v. Barnard, 28 L. J. 177, M.C., decides, first, that a tenant (when the game is reserved by the lease) may employ a paid person to kill rabbits for him, and may direct his servants to assist such person.

Secondly, that a tenant may permit or direct his servant to kill rabbits, either for the use of the tenant, or of any other person he, the tenant, may think fit.

Consequently, the question in all cases will be not as to the purpose for which the rabbits were killed, but what was the relation between the tenant and the defendant, and the character of the employment, direction or permission given by the tenant. Upon this some very useful hints are given by a correspondent of the LAW TIMES, vol. 31, p. 151, who says:—The question in future cases to be decided will be, whether the evidence shows a direction or employment by the tenant to the accused, falling within the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se, or a leave and licence independent of that principle. If the evidence brings the case within the former, the accused should be acquitted; if within the latter, he should be convicted. It is not necessary to constitute a servant or an agent, that he should be paid. Suppose, then, the following case:—A, tenant of land on which the game is reserved, has a few friends staying and resident with him. He says, "Take the gun and dog, and shoot a few rabbits, and we will have a rabbit-pie for dinner." As he could do this himself, he could, it would seem, authorise his guest to do it for him. But suppose one of these guests wrote from his own home to the tenant, and asked for a day's rabbiting;" then, the leave of the tenant would be no justification. Again, if the tenant, seeing a man with a gun, said, "Will you shoot me a few rabbits?" and he did so, the man would be justified, as the agent of the tenant pro hac vice; but if the stranger said to the tenant, "Will you let me have a few shots?" the tenant's leave would be no defence. This distinction is a fine one, but appears to be correct for Erle, C.J. says, "It is a very different thing authorising a stranger to come in upon the land to shoot a rabbit, and allowing or directing a servant to do so." It would seem still more difficult to decide between an authority to a stranger, and a direction to a servant. In future cases, the line of demarcation will probably be adopted, where the accused person occupies the position of a servant (properly so called) to the tenant, whether such servant be resident or not; or where the accused is residing with the occupier as a son, guest, or friend, and follows the directions of the tenant, as the master of the farm, there he will be considered as acting under and for the tenant, and he will be protected. But where the accused occupies the position of a stranger, sporting for his own pleasure and wholly independent of the tenant except his leave, there the leave of the tenant will be no justification. In short, the deciding point will be, Did the accused act as the agent or servant of the tenant, or as an independent person? In the former case he should be acquitted; in the latter convicted, notwithstanding the tenant's permission. While on this subject another question arises. In Spicer's case, Erle, J. says: "Although we put this construction upon the Act, the landlord is not without protection. His rights as to rabbits should be the subject of contract at the time of letting the land." Looking at the subject with reference to the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, and criminal proceedings thereunder, this may be doubted. Suppose the landlord to reserve the game and the rabbits as well. Can the tenant be convicted for killing them? It is submitted he could not. True, he might be liable in a civil action for breach of contract; but the killing rabbits by the occupier, or his giving permission to another person to do so, under the right of killing game or rabbits, is in the landlord by reservation or otherwise, is not within the 12th section, which relates only to "game," neither does such a case appear to be within the 30th section, that section applying only in terms to others than the occupier. Such an act by the tenant does not appear to assume the character of a criminal offence, though it may subject him

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

SHERLOCK (appellant) v. STEWARD (respondent)

40s. freehold—Necessary outgoing.

Where the revising barrister finds that a sum paid for collecting the rent is a necessary outgoing, that sum is to be deducted from the rent, in ascertaining whether the claimant had a freehold of the clear yearly value of 40s.:

But (per Williams, J.) such deduction is not generally to be made; it being difficult to conceive a case where such an expenditure is necessary.

CASE.

At a court held by me at Manchester, on the 20th day of Sept. 1859, John Steward objected to the name of Joseph Sherlock, junior, being retained in the Manchester list of voters for the southern division of the county of Lancaster. The said Joseph Sherlock was entitled to one undivided thirty-fifth share in property in Bloom-street and Richmond-street, Manchester, the gross rental of which is 110*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* The outgoing for the year ending on the 31st July 1859 amounted to 39*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, without including the sum of 5*l.* hereafter mentioned, leaving 70*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, or about 2*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* per share. The property was managed by one of the owners, who was allowed a commission of 5*l.* per annum for receiving the rents and transmitting to each owner his share, and which sum being deducted from 70*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.*, left less than 40*s.* per share. It was objected that the property did not produce a clear 40*s.* per share to the several owners. I found that the allowance of such commission was, from the nature of the property, necessary for the collection of the rents, and I thought that such allowance was a charge reducing the clear yearly value of the property to each of the owners to a sum below 40*s.*, and therefore struck out the name of the appellant, and twenty-one others, owners of shares in the property. And as the validity of a considerable number of objections determined by me at such court as aforesaid depended upon and was decided by me upon the same point of law, and several appeals depend upon the same decision, and ought to be consolidated, I named Joseph Sherlock, jun., to be the appellant, and John Steward to be the respondent in such consolidated appeal.

(Signed),

Welsby for the appellant.—The question turns upon the construction of 8 Hen. 6, c. 7; 10 Hen. 6, c. 2, and 18 Geo. 2, c. 18. The statutes of Hen. 6 require as a qualification for an elector, that he "shall have freehold to the value of 40*s.* by the year at the least, above all charges." He must have that "to expend." The 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, requires him to have a freehold estate "of the clear yearly value of 40*s.* over and above all rents and charges payable out of or in respect of the same." The 5*l.* paid for collecting the rent is not to be deducted from the sum divisible among the several landlords, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they have 40*s.* within these statutes, any more than the cost of a dinner given to a tenant, or the salary of a steward. The test is, what the tenant would give: (Hamilton v. Bass, 12 C. B. 631; Ashmore v. Lees, 2 C. B. 31.) The parties here are entitled to receive 2*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.*; and it makes no difference that they choose to give 5*l.* to one of their number to save them the trouble of collecting the rent themselves. Property which might be let for building land for 15*l.* a year, but has not been let, gives a vote: (Asbury v. Henderson, 15 C. B. 251.)

Mont, Q.C. for the respondent.—I do not propose to argue that this is a charge. I say this amount of 5*l.* paid for collecting the rent lessens the value just as repairs do. The necessity for such a payment is apparent. No one would occupy property to be divided in this way among a variety of landlords, unless there was one person appointed to collect and divide it. But the revising barrister has found that the payment was necessary, and it must, therefore, now be assumed to be so. (He cited Moorhouse, app., v. Gilbertson, 14 C. B. 207.)

Welsby in reply.—The necessity pointed to in the case only means the reasonable state of things.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the revising barrister was correct; that is to say, my judgment concurs with his by reason of the fact stated by him, that the allowance of this commission was, from the nature of the property, necessary for the collection of the rents. The qualification claimed by the voter upon this occasion is by the statutes which have been referred to, and he alleges that he has got a freehold tenement "of the value of 40*s.* by the year, above all charges," which the statutes 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, and 10 Hen. 6, c. 2, require. In those statutes more than once it is stated that the elector must have "a freehold of the value of 40*s.*" out of which he "may expend 40*s.* by the year." Now the clear yearly value of 40*s.* is what we are to look to; and it is found by the revising barrister that the owner of this property could not obtain 40*s.* required by the statute without the necessary expenditure of 5*l.* for the obtaining of the total rent, of which his aliquot part was 40*s.* If it was a necessary outgoing, he has not 40*s.* Mr. Welsby, in his argument, has dealt with the nature of this outgoing with an entire disregard of those words—of its being an outgoing necessary for the owner of the property. The illustration Mr. Welsby has put, of a landlord choosing at his option to give a dinner to his tenant, or of a landlord choosing at his option to employ a steward, to save himself the trouble, are both of them occasions where the expense would not be necessary for the obtaining the money, but would be an optional expenditure, and the landlord, in the case put by him, would not only have "to expend" 40*s.* by the year, but it would be at his option either to give a dinner to the tenant, or employ the steward or not, according to his pleasure. But the revising barrister having found here that the expenditure in question of 5*l.* was necessary for the collection of the rent, I consider the party who received the 40*s.* minus the aliquot part of 5*l.*, which the revising barrister has found reduced it below 40*s.*, not to have had a freehold of the value of 40*s.*, whereof he might expend 40*s.* by the year.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think we are bound by the finding of the revising barrister, which, I take it, amounts to this, that the property is not of the value of 40*s.* There may be cases where the actual rental represents the actual value, but it is not always so. Here is a case with the fact found that the rental does not represent the value, because you must necessarily, according to the statement here, deduct from the rental so much as to reduce it below 40*s.* I certainly have some difficulty in conceiving a case where that can be; but, as I cannot say it is impossible and cannot be so, we are bound by the statement as found by the revising barrister. I protest against its being supposed that in my opinion collection expenses, generally speaking, go in diminution of the rental. A man may collect the rent for himself if he pleases, and can do so. The rental represents the value, and that cannot vary because a man chooses to save himself the trouble of collecting it and pay for it; that will not diminish the value; that is an expense which is incurred to save trouble; it is an expense incurred to save the annoyance a man would have, and it would be no necessary expenditure.

to a civil action. Again, if in such a case the tenant directed his servant to kill rabbits, then, as his master would not, I take it, be criminally liable if he had killed them himself, would his servant be in a worse position, considering the principle of the above cases? The servant's defence would be, not by pleading the leave or licence of the tenant—for where the game is reserved that it will not do; but by saying, "I know nothing as to the reservation of the rabbits; what I did was by my master's express commands, and as his servant. If he had done the same, he would not have been criminally liable; and I, acting for him, cannot be in a worse position than he would have been. My master and myself may be liable to a civil action, but there is nothing in the Act to make the killing of rabbits by him, either directly per se, or through me as his instrument, a criminal offence."

CROWDER, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the revising barrister has come to the right conclusion upon the premises. The only way in which it is argued by Mr. Welsby that he is wrong, is by showing the facts as stated are wrong, because he has told us that it was quite voluntary on the part of the claimant to pay the commission. The revising barrister says it is absolutely necessary. Now, if he had said it was voluntary or a mere charge in the shape of a commission, I am clearly of opinion it would not go in reduction of the rental; but, as he has said it is absolutely necessary, I can understand there may be cases of the very nature of this where such a charge would be necessary. He says the nature of the property is such as to make it necessary, and, as he has not given us any other facts, I am bound to come to the conclusion that the fact is that it is necessary, and that it goes necessarily in reduction of the rental, and that the party could not obtain 40s. by the year for the purpose of the franchise.(a)

REG. v. CHARLOTTE ADAMS.

False pretences—Guilty knowledge—Note of bank which had stopped payment.

The prisoner tendered a five-pound note of a bank which had stopped payment, and obtained change to the full amount. At the close of the prosecution it was objected on the part of the prisoner that there was no proof of the allegation in the indictment that the note was not good, or of the value of 5l., or of any value. The chairman told the jury that he thought there was some evidence from which they might infer that the note was not of any value. The jury found the prisoner guilty:

Held, that the question was not properly left to the jury; that the question of value was an immaterial one, and that simply producing the note and leaving it to tell its own story did not constitute a false pretence, and that therefore the conviction could not be sustained.

Charlotte Evans was indicted at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions 1859 for the county of Glamorgan, for falsely pretending that a piece of paper was a bank note then current, good and of the value of five pounds, by which false pretence she did unlawfully obtain from one Mary Miles certain money with intent to defraud; whereas, in fact, the said piece of paper was not a bank-note then current, or good, or of the value of five pounds, or of any value whatever, as the said Charlotte Evans at that time well knew.

It appeared in evidence that the prisoner on the 20th July 1859 tendered to one Sarah Thomas a piece of paper purporting to be a five-pound note of the Newport Old Bank, and obtained change to the full amount of five pounds. There was no question as to the identity of the note or of the prisoner; but to prove the allegation in the indictment that the said note was of no value, Mr. John Parry Morgan was called, who stated that he was now cashier of the West of England Bank at Cardiff; that he remembered the Newport Old Bank; that that bank does not now exist; that he saw the doors of it shut; that it was a private bank, and paid a dividend of two shillings and fourpence in the pound in the year 1852 or 1853; that he knows Newport, which was the place where the bank named in this note transacted its business, and that there is no such bank to which it could be presented.

It was also proved by David Jones, who was one of the several parties to whom this note was transferred for value after it was changed for the prisoner, that he went to a bank in Merthyr Tydvil, and there tendered it, but did not get change for it.

It was objected on behalf of the prisoner that the above was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury in support of the allegation that the note was not good, or of the value of five pounds, or of any value whatever.

I overruled the objection, and told the jury that I thought there was some evidence from which they might infer, if they thought fit, that the note was not of any value, and read to them the evidence of the witnesses above referred to verbatim.

The prisoner was convicted, and sentenced to four months' imprisonment with hard labour, subject to a case for the opinion of the court above, as to whether there was sufficient evidence before the jury to sustain the allegations in the indictment as above stated.

JOHN COKE FOWLER, Vice-Chairman and Stipendiary Magistrate.

H. Giffard for the prisoner.—The conviction cannot be supported. The case of Reg. v. Williams, 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 351, is in point. There the prisoner was indicted for falsely pretending, that a certain promissory note of the Newport Old Bank was a good and valid note (he well knowing that the said bank had long before stopped payment); and the evidence was, that the prisoner was drinking in a public-house, and said that he would pay for a gallon of beer, if any one would change a 5l. note for him; that the prosecutor handed over 5l. in exchange for the note, which the prisoner assured him was a good one; that the prisoner, on being taken into custody, said that he had taken the note at Abergavenny, and had afterwards heard that the bank had stopped, and that the bank stopped payment in Oct. 1851. Upon this evidence Martin, B., after consulting Bramwell, B., ruled that the prisoner could not be convicted, observing that the estate might pay twenty shillings in the pound. So also in the present case, there was no evidence to show that the note was of no value.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that the conviction is bad. The question seems to have gone to the jury with the direction that there was evidence on which they might find that the note was of no value. Very likely the case might have been so put to the jury as to sustain a conviction; but, as the matter now comes before us, the conviction cannot be supported. As my brother Crowder, J. has suggested, if the prisoner had represented the note to be of the value of 5l., she might have been guilty of false pretences; but by simply producing the note and letting it tell its own story, she is not. The conviction must therefore be quashed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. As the case is submitted to us, I think that the conviction was not right. I wish to guard myself, however, from being supposed to intimate that there may not be an indictment for false pretences, which might be supported by proving, that the party charged had induced the prosecutor to believe that the note was the note of a bank open and solvent, when the bank had, in fact, stopped payment.

(a) This is a very inexplicable decision. The annual value of property is what a tenant will give for it, unless there are some special circumstances affecting the rent in the particular case. But the tenant does not give more or less accordingly as the landlord collects the rent personally or by an agent. If the landlord employs an agent to save himself trouble, the commission paid to that agent is not properly a deduction from the rent itself. It can never be a necessary expenditure, that is to say, an expenditure attaching to the property like repairs and taxes; it is simply a landlord's luxury, like a servant or a horse. Suppose the landlord to be lame, and it was necessary to hire a horse to ride to receive his rent—would the hire of the horse be a deduction from the value of the property? Wherefore should the cost of the employment of an agent to collect the rent be other than the cost of a horse to enable the owner to collect it for him—if?

CROWDER, J.—I also think that it does not appear from the case before us that the question was properly left to the jury. It was an immaterial question for the jury to determine whether the note was of any value, and to tell them that there was evidence from which they might infer that it was of no value. It is quite sufficient to sustain the charge of false pretences if a person presents the note of a bank which has stopped payment, as a current note, though there may be a dividend afterwards and a great portion of the value paid.

CHANNELL, B.—I also think that this conviction cannot be sustained. The evidence is not very clearly stated. I agree that another and different question might have been put to the jury, but upon the evidence as stated to us the conviction cannot be supported.

ASHMORE (appellant) v. HORTON (respondent).

Under the 4 Geo. 4. c. 34, s. 3, it is a lawful excuse for a servant not entering into the service of his master, that he was at the time in the service of another master whom he could not leave without being guilty of an offence under the Act.

A. in October contracted with B., in writing, to enter his service and serve him for five years. He was at that time in the service of C. under a written engagement entered into in the July previously for five years' service. Being convicted under the above enactment for not entering into the service of B. pursuant to his written contract:

Held, that his being at the time in such service of C. as aforesaid was an answer, and that the conviction was wrong.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction by justices of the appellant, under the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3, for not entering into his service according to his written agreement, whereupon he was sentenced to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for fourteen days.

It appeared that, on the 15th May 1858 the appellant entered into the following written agreement:—

"Sinethwick, 15th May 1858.

"I, the undersigned, hereby engage and agree to work for and serve Messieurs Joshua and William Horton, in the trade of boiler and gasholder making, in every branch or part they may think proper to employ me in, for the term of five years, at the weekly wages of thirty shillings for the first and second years, and thirty-two shillings for the third, fourth and fifth years. As witness my hand this 15th day of May 1858.

"WILLIAM ASHMORE,

"JOSHUA and WILLIAM HORTON."

This agreement not having been signed by Joshua and William Horton at the time, was not then acted upon, but on the 15th Oct. in the same year a second memorandum in writing was signed by all parties, being written on the face of the first agreement, and the appellant (Ashmore) thereupon received from Joshua Horton the sum of 9*l.* for the purpose of defraying his travelling expenses to Dundee, where his services were required by Joshua and William Horton. This money was on the following day repaid by the appellant, who then stated, as a reason for it, that one Thomas Pigott, by whom the appellant was then employed, insisted on his continuing in his service. The second agreement with the Hortons was in these words:—

"We the undersigned, Joshua and William Horton, agree with the undersigned William Ashmore to hire him from this day for five years on the terms and conditions of the written document. And I, William Ashmore, also agree to the same. Dated this 15th day of Oct. 1858.

"JOSHUA and WILLIAM HORTON,
"WILLIAM ASHMORE."

It further appeared, that the said appellant did not enter into the service pursuant to the last agreement, but continued in the service of the said Thomas Pigott, by whom he had been theretofore employed for many years, being at the time of entering into the agreement of the 15th Oct. 1858 in such employment, under a written agreement dated the 5th July 1858, for the term of five years.

Lush, Q.C. (O'Brien with him) now appeared for the respondent, and contended that the conviction was good. Here was a hiring for five years from the 15th Oct. under a valid agreement, and every incident exists to bring the appellant within the statute. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Your civil rights are no doubt untouched, but here he is charged with a criminal offence. He could not go into the employment, for he was under a binding engagement with another person. Had he left that person he would have been liable to have been proceeded against at his instance. BLACKBURN, J.—He could not have entered into Horton's service without violating his contract with Pigott.] This would be enabling a person to take advantage of his own wrong. [COCKBURN, C.J.—I think he has a lawful excuse when he says he cannot enter into the service without committing an offence. WIGHTMAN, J.—That is to say, I have a lawful excuse, inasmuch as I must commit an unlawful act if I go into the service.] Every word of the statute is satisfied. An action for the breach of contract would be no remedy in such a case; the statute intended a criminal proceeding in such a case as a substitute for a civil one. [BLACKBURN, J.—If the statute had said, "We impose a penalty upon a man for entering into a contract which he cannot fulfil," that would have been another thing; but that is not so. COCKBURN, C.J.—If he had left Pigott, and had entered into the service of Horton, then he would have been liable for leaving Pigott's employment.]

Willis, for the appellant, contended that the conviction was bad. In Re Turner, 9 Q. B. 80, it was held that it must appear that the act of the servant must be without lawful excuse. So also Re Greenwood, 2 Ell & Bl. 952. Here his excuse is, he cannot lawfully enter into the service—it is the same as though he were in prison. If he is liable under the Act, he will be liable to be imprisoned for the whole five years, since the contract will endure for that period, and so, were he to have entered the service, his master Pigott might proceed against him under this statute; so that, whichever service he should be in, he could never escape imprisonment under the Act. [BLACKBURN, J.—And, indeed, if Horton had taken him into his service, he might probably have been himself sued for harbouring Pigott's servant.] (Ex parte Baker, 2 Hur. & Nor. 219.)

Lush in reply.—The object of the statute is to punish by imprisonment persons who cannot pay damages—it makes it a criminal act to violate a civil contract.

COCKBURN, C.J.—This conviction must be reversed. It appears that this man having entered into a binding contract with a master which is still subsisting, he enters into another with another person. Now this second contract is a valid one upon its face, and it is for a breach in not entering into the service in pursuance of it that these proceedings are taken. But I think that he is not within the Act, and for this reason. The Act does not make it an offence to make a contract which he is not in a situation to perform. It seems to me that, when it is impossible for him to fulfil the contract, except by the breach of another contract, the penalty of the Act does not attach. The penalty is incurred where he omits to enter the service without lawful excuse. The question here is—is there a lawful excuse? I think that there is a lawful excuse when he says, "I cannot enter into the service without doing a criminal act." It may be that this is no excuse against a civil action. Suppose a man were to enter into a contract to do some work prohibited by the Legislature. That would be an answer under this statute. He might say, "My first duty is to obey the law." Here he could not enter into the second contract without breaking his first contract. I think, therefore, that the conviction cannot be sustained.

WALKER v. EVANS—WOODHOUSE v. WOOD.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I at first entertained some doubt, as the appellant is clearly within the words of the 4 Geo. 4. The words, taken as they stand, certainly bring the appellant within the Act. But it has from an early period after the statute been held that the mere act of not entering into the service is not sufficient—it must be not entering into the service without some lawful excuse; and indeed this must obviously be so, for he might be bodily disabled from entering into the service. Then, how stands the case with the appellant? Has he a lawful excuse? Now it seems he had proposed to enter into a contract in May, but before he entered into a valid one, in October, he had entered into a contract and served with Mr. Pigott. It seems to me that the statute did not contemplate such a case as this, for the consequence might be that he would be liable to each master. His excuse is, that he could not enter into the contract, as he would subject himself to penal consequences at the instance of Mr. Pigott. Is this a lawful excuse? I think it is. It is not the question whether Mr. Horton has any remedy, but whether the appellant is liable under this Act. I think he had lawful grounds for not entering into the service.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The appellant certainly comes within the literal meaning of the words of the statute; but then the statute means, not entering into the service without lawful excuse. The appellant says, "True, I have entered into the contract, but I had previously entered into another contract, and if I violate that, I shall be liable to criminal consequences." The Legislature has not made it an offence to enter into a contract which he is not in a situation to fulfil. (a) Judgment for the appellant.

WALKER (appellant) v. EVANS (respondent).

Steam-tug plying between London-bridge and the Nore—

(a) This case should be read with reference to that of Rider v. Wood (ante, p. 4), which determined that a servant leaving his employment under a bond sole belief that he had a right to do so, is not subject to the penalty, even although in point of fact he had no such right to quit his employer. That case also determines a point which it is of great importance that justices and their legal advisers should note, as its application is so wide that it may arise in all cases of summary conviction. It is this: that there must be the guilty knowledge and intent that is the essence of all criminal charges, of which nature are summary convictions. They are punishments for offences, and the rules recognised in the administration of the criminal law must be applied in the hearing of them. But justices should also observe that it is not necessary that the wrongful intent should be positively proved in all cases; it may be, and ought to be, presumed from the act itself; but it is open to the defendant to show by direct evidence, or by reasonable inference from the facts of the case, that in point of fact no such intent existed.

light not consuming its own smoke—Conviction—16 & 17 Vict. c. 128—19 & 20 Vict. c. 107.

A steam-tug which plies on the river Thames, and in towing vessels up and down the river between London-bridge and the Nore-light, is within the meaning of sect. 1 of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 107, which applies to "steam-vessels plying to and fro between London-bridge and any place on the river Thames to the westward of the Nore-light," and should therefore be constructed so as to consume its own smoke.

This was a case stated upon a conviction of the appellant for using a steam-tug on the river Thames between London-bridge and the Nore-light, which is not constructed so as to consume its own smoke.

By the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128, s. 2, it is enacted, that every steam-engine used in the working of any steam-vessel on the river Thames above London-bridge shall be constructed so as to consume the smoke arising from such engine and furnace, under a penalty of 5*l.* And by the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 107, s. 1, it is enacted that all steam-vessels plying to and fro between London-bridge and any place on the river Thames to the westward of the Nore-light, shall be subject to the provisions of the first-mentioned Act relating to steam-vessels above London-bridge.

It appeared that the vessel in question was a steam-tug called the Tam O'Shanter, and plied on the river Thames below London-bridge and the Nore-light, but not plying to any place in particular on the river, its engagement being to tow up or down the river such vessels as might require its services.

Hosack appeared in support of the conviction, but the Court called upon the appellants to support their appeal.

Sir F. Kelly, Q.C. (Sleigh with him) argued that the vessel in question was not within the terms of the Act, which applies only to vessels plying "to and fro" to certain places between London-bridge and the Nore-light, and not to a steam-tug, which plies between no places, but is engaged as it is wanted to tow vessels up and down the river.

COCKBURN, C.J.—We are all agreed that the case is within the statute. The statute makes a distinction between sea-going vessels and those which ply between London-bridge and any place on the river Thames to the westward of the Nore-light. The Legislature has not thought proper to impose the condition upon sea-going vessels. But the question is, whether or not this steam-vessel is within this enactment. It is said that it is not at present plying to and fro between London-bridge or any place on the river Thames to the westward of the Nore-light; but she is equally within the mischief and the provisions of the statute by plying, in fact, on the river within those limits. I think that, when she is employed between London-bridge and the Nore-light, she is within the meaning of the Act.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The Act is not limited to a vessel plying between two definite places.

HILL, J.—The case finds that the vessel, for the most part, is employed on the river Thames westward of the Nore-light. It cannot be successfully contended that the vessel must actually start from and go to some particular place on the river Thames; for, if so, if a vessel did not actually come to London-bridge, it would not be within the statute. The real construction of the statute is, every vessel plying between the limits of London-bridge and the Nore-light.

WOODHOUSE v. WOOD AND ANOTHER.

Appeal from decision of justices—20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2.

A. was convicted by certain justices on 23rd Aug., and gave notice to them of his intention to appeal, and called upon them to state and sign a case under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2. The clerk of the justices forwarded to respondents' attorneys the draft case, and it was returned by them on the 5th Sept. The appeal was set down for hearing, and the clerk of the justices forwarded the case, signed, to the attorney for the appellant on the 7th Sept. Respondents' attorneys had received no notice of the appeal from the appellant or his attorney until early in November:

Held, that the provision in the above section, that the appellant shall within three days after receiving the case, transmit the same to the court, first giving notice in writing of such appeal, with a copy of the case, to the other party, is a condition precedent to the right of appeal, and that where such provision is not complied with the court has no jurisdiction

Major Cooke showed cause against a rule calling on the appellant Joseph Woodhouse to show cause why this appeal should not be struck out of the Crown paper, on the ground that the provisions of the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2, had not been complied with. It appeared from the affidavits that on the 23rd Aug. last the appellant was convicted by certain justices for the county of Flint for absenting himself from the service of the respondents without leave, or without giving them notice, and the appellant gave notice to the said justices of his intention to appeal, and required them to state and sign a case pursuant to the above-named statute. That the clerk of the justices subsequently forwarded to respondents' attorneys the draft of the case, and that it was returned by them on the 5th Sept. The appeal was set down for hearing, and the clerk of the justices forwarded the case, signed by the justices, to the attorney for the appellant on the 7th Sept. Respondents' attorneys had received no notice of the appeal from appellant, or his attorney, until early in the present month. The 2nd section of the Act says, that either party dissatisfied may apply within three days to the justices to state a case, and such party "shall within three days after receiving such case, transmit the same to the court, first giving notice in writing, with a copy of the case, to the other party." The words are directory only, and this is only a question of practice, which may be altered by the court under the 11th section. In Syred v. Carruthers, 27 L. J. 273, M. C., Lord Campbell held service on an attorney instead of service on the party sufficient, but that notice served on respondent afterwards was not sufficient. If the Act had intended to have excluded an appeal in case notice and a copy of the case have not been delivered within three days, it would have been more clearly so expressed. He referred to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 10; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 4; 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 87; 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 81; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14, in support of this view. In Evans v. Malheux, 26 L. J. 166, Q. B., the notice and grounds of appeal had to be served within ten days; they were served on one defendant only within that time, and on the other on the eleventh day, and it was held a good service. The omission to give the notice is an irregularity only, and unless the parties are prejudiced they cannot complain; here they are not so, and their appearance is a waiver. [HILL, J.—In Peacock v. The Queen, 27 L. J. 224, C. P., the court said they had no jurisdiction unless the provisions of the 2nd section were complied with.] The case is settled as soon as it is signed by the magistrates, and that has been done here; therefore the present is distinguishable from that case. The notice may be a mere matter of irregularity; the court is possessed of the case as soon as it is signed, and if the notice be bad the court may impose terms on the party guilty of irregularity, but the irregularity does not take the case out of the jurisdiction of the court. Here the parties considered that the notice sent by the clerk was sufficient.

Welsby contra.—The Act is imperative. The party dissatisfied may apply, but if he do, it must be within three days; and then the section goes on to say that he shall, within three days after receiving the case, transmit the same to the court, first giving notice of such appeal, with a copy of the case, to the other party. Peacock v. The Queen shows there is no jurisdiction; it is a condition imposed on the appellant. [BLACKBURN, J.—If the Legislature meant to make it a condition precedent, I don't see what other words they could have used.] That is so, and this appeal is entirely a creature of the statute. (He was stopped by the court.)

CROMPTON, J.—I think this rule should be made absolute. No excuse is offered for the noncompliance with the terms of the Act. On the first branch of the section there is a distinct decision in Mr. Welsby's favour. The words show that it was intended that the transmitting the case, first giving notice, with a copy of the case so stated and signed, to the other party, should be a condition precedent, and it means that if the parties do not do as the Act requires, within the time named, they shall be deprived of their appeal.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is a very important statute; it says the appeal must be made in a certain specified way, and no other way will do: the language is distinct and clear. In Peacock v. The Queen the Court of C. P. held that Sunday is not to be excluded in computing the three days within which application must be made to the justices to state a case under this section; and the court said it had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal unless the provisions of the section were complied with. That is a decision in point. Notice must be given so as to reach the party. If the provision is complied with, that is all that is required; but if it be not, the court has no jurisdiction.

BLACKBURN, J., concurred. (a) Rule absolute.

Appeal—Entitling affidavits—20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

When a case is de facto in this court, all affidavits should be entitled in the names of the parties. Where, therefore, upon an appeal under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, a motion was made to strike out such appeal, on the ground that a requisite had not been complied with, and the affidavit upon which the motion was made was only entitled in the court, and not in the names of the parties:

Held, that the affidavit was irregular, and the rule was discharged.

This was a rule, calling upon the appellant to show cause why this appeal should not be struck out of the paper, the appellant not having entered into his recognisance within three days, as required by sect. 3 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. The affidavit upon which the present rule was moved was entitled, "In the Queen's Bench," but not in the name of the case.

LUSH, Q.C. now showed cause, and contended that the rule should be discharged, upon the ground that the affidavit was not properly entitled, inasmuch as it was not headed with the names of the parties in the appeal.

WIGHTMAN, J., having conferred with the Master of the Crown-office, said, the officer says the affidavits ought to be entitled in the names of the parties.

MAULE, in support of the rule, argued that, as this is not a case originating in this court, but is brought here by appeal, and is not actually dealt with by the court, it being as yet merely in the paper for argument, the usual rule as to entitling would not apply.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It is here de facto, and should be entitled in the names of the parties.

The other Judges concurred. Rule discharged.

(a) It appears from this case that great strictness will be necessary in the observance of all the requisites to an appeal, otherwise the court will have no jurisdiction to hear it. They cannot, it would seem, be departed from even by consent of the parties.

Conviction under 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3—Threatening workmen—Metropolitan Police Act.

Where a conviction under 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, stated that A. B. unlawfully and by threats endeavoured to force one C. D., who was then a trade workman, hired in his trade and business of a mason by E. F., to depart from his said hiring contrary to the Act: Held that, inasmuch as the offence was stated in the words of the statute declaring the offence, the conviction was good under the Metropolitan Police Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 48. And further, that, independently of that statute, the offence was sufficiently stated.

Edwin James, Q.C. (Wheeler and Gordon Allan with him) moved for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of William Pearham, who had been convicted by one of the Metropolitan police magistrates under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, with a view to quashing the conviction.

The arguments and authorities fully appear in the judgment. Civ. adv. vult.

Nov. 23.—HILL, J.—Mr. James moved yesterday for a rule to show cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue to bring up the body of William Pearham, on the ground that he was illegally detained in custody. It appears that Pearham was convicted by one of the Metropolitan magistrates within the Metropolitan police district, for an offence against the 3rd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 129. It was alleged by Mr. James that the conviction was insufficient. The statute in question enacts as follows: "That from and after the passing of this Act, if any person shall by violence to the person or property, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting or in any way obstructing another, force or endeavour to force any journeyman manufacturer, workman or other person hired or employed in any manufacture, to depart from his hiring and employment, or to return any work in an unfinished state," &c., then "imposing a penalty." The following are the grounds of this conviction. It convicts him that "unlawfully, and by threats, he endeavoured to force one William Jocelyn, who was then a trade workman, hired in his trade and business of a mason by Thomas Piper and Wilson Piper, to depart from his said hiring contrary to the Act." And Mr. James contended that, although the conviction followed the language of the statute on which it was founded, yet that it was insufficient, as it did not set out the threats that were used, nor did it allege to or against whom the threats were offered, and he referred to Paley on Convictions, last edit. p. 173; Turner's case, 9 Q. B. 23; and Re Greenwood, 2 Ell. & Bl. 952. Mr. James also directed the attention of the court to the Metropolitan Police Act, as relied upon by those who supported the conviction. By that statute, the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 48, it is enacted "that in every conviction for an offence contrary to any statute or statutes, it shall be sufficient if the offence shall be stated in the words of the statute declaring the offence, or attaching any penalty thereto." In our judgment this enactment is a complete answer to the application. The conviction complained of was one made by one of the magistrates of the police courts of the Metropolis, within the Metropolitan police district, and in the conviction the offence is stated in the very words of the statute declaring the offence. The Act of Parliament expressly declares that to be sufficient, and concludes the question; therefore on that ground there can be no rule. If, however, it were necessary to give an opinion on the validity of the conviction in point of form, irrespective of the conviction under the Metropolitan Act, we should be disposed to hold it valid. Generally speaking, it is sufficient that the conviction should follow the words of the statute on which the conviction is founded; but it would not be enough were the statute so worded as by its words to include acts manifestly within its intent. The cases referred to by Mr. James are apt illustrations, but it appears to us that the language of the statute in the present case brings it within the rule, and not within the exception. We therefore think that there should be no rule. Rule refused.

REG. v. PEARHAM.

Conviction—Statement of offence—9 Geo. 4, c. 129—Combination Acts.

A conviction under the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, stated that "T. P. was convicted of having unlawfully by threats endeavoured to force one W. J., who was then and there hired in his capacity and business of a mason by T. P. and W. P. to depart from his said hiring."

The information of C. R., on which the summons was granted, stated, "I live, &c. On Saturday night, the 1st Oct. inst., I was in the G. road, with W. J. and fifteen or sixteen other workmen, all engaged by Mr. P. as workmen. W. P. was there; he came in; he said to the men, 'If you there work, we shall consider you as blacks, and when we go in we shall strike against you, and strike against you all over London.'"

Held, that, under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 40, the conviction sufficiently stated the offence, as it followed the words of the statute creating it:

Secondly, that the information sufficiently stated facts which constituted an offence under the statute.

Semble, that, as the information need not be in writing, if all the parties had appeared before the magistrate without any previous information, and he had then heard the case, the conviction would be supported.

Edwin James, Q.C. (with him Wheeler and Gordon Allan) applied for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of William Pearham, then in custody on a conviction under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, with a view to quash the conviction. A similar application had been made to the Court of Queen's Bench, which had refused the writ. The section on which the conviction was founded states: "That from and after the passing of the Act, if any person shall, by violence to the person or property, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting or in any way obstructing another, force, or endeavour to force, any journeyman or workman to depart from his hiring, employment, or work, every person so offending, being convicted thereof as in manner hereinafter mentioned, shall be imprisoned," &c. The conviction in this case was as follows:—"Metropolitan Police District and Middlesex, to wit. "Be it remembered that on the 1st day of Nov. in the 23rd year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and in the year of our Lord 1859, William Pearham is convicted before one William Corrie, Esq., one of the magistrates of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at the Clerkenwell police-court, in the county of Middlesex, and within the metropolitan police district, of having, on the 1st day of October, in the year of our Lord 1859, and within six calendar months before the complaint on oath on which the conviction is founded was made, at the parish of St. Luke, in the said county of Middlesex, and within the said metropolitan police district, unlawfully, by threats, endeavoured to force one William Jocelyn, who was then and there a workman, hired in the trade and business of a mason by Thomas Piper and Wilson Piper, to depart from his said hiring, contrary to the Act made in the sixth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act to repeal the laws relating to the combination of workmen, and to make other provisions in lieu thereof.' And I, the said magistrate sitting at the police-court aforesaid, do hereby order and adjudge the said William Pearham for the said offence to be committed to and confined in the House of Correction at Coldbath-fields, in the said county, and within the said district, for the space of two calendar months. Given under my hand and seal the day and year first above written, at the police court aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, and within the said metropolitan police district. (Signed) WILLIAM CORRIE (L.S.) To this conviction it was objected before the Court of Q. B. that it did not, on the face of it, contain or set out any offence within the statute; that it did not set out what the threats were, and did not state that they were made, in point of fact, to anybody. To constitute a good conviction, it should set out on the face of it—first, what the threats were, that the nature of them might appear, and the court be able to judge of them; secondly, it should apply the threats to some person, and state that they were used to the party sought to be intimidated, or at least to some person, in order to affect him. Sufficient should appear on the face of the conviction to enable the court to judge whether it was in accordance with the Act: (Re W. Baker, 2 H. & N. 219.) On the hearing of the appeal against the conviction, counsel for the prisoner called for the production of the information which formed the foundation of the whole proceeding, contending that the offence should appear on the face of it. The information was not produced; but since the unsuccessful application for the writ to the Court of Q. B. a copy of it had been procured: it was as follows:—"The complaint, on oath, of Charles Robjohn, taken before William Corrie, Esq., one of the magistrates of the police-courts of the metropolis, sitting at the Clerkenwell police-court, within the metropolitan police district, on the 18th Oct. 1859. Charles Robjohn, on oath, says:—"I live at No. 37, Luard-street, Caledonian-road. I am in the employ of Messrs. Piper and Son, Bishopsgate-street. On Saturday night, the 1st Oct. inst., I was in the Goswell-road with William Jocelyn and fifteen or sixteen other workmen, all engaged by Messrs. Piper as workmen. William Pearham was there—he came in; he said to the men "If you there work we shall consider you as blacks, and when we go in we shall strike against you, and strike against you all over London." He followed us all the way to my house." This sets out no offence at all; it merely relates the idle gossip of a public-house—it ought to state an offence clearly: (Reg. v. Ben, 2 Car. & K. 157.) [BRAMWELL, B.—No particular form of information is required—it need not be in writing.] It need not be in writing, but if it is in writing it must be sufficient. There is nothing in the information or in the conviction as to whom the threats were addressed. [CHANNELL, B.—That is all matter of evidence for the magistrate.] The Act of last session, 22 Vict. c. 34, makes a combination by workmen legal. He also cited Paley on Convictions, 173.

Cur. ad. vult.

Nov. 25.—POLLOCK, C.B. delivered judgment.—In the case of William Pearham, convicted before a magistrate, and the conviction affirmed on appeal, Mr. Edwin James yesterday applied for a writ of habeas corpus to bring him up before this court on the ground that he was unlawfully detained, the conviction being illegal. The conviction was founded upon the 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, s. 3, which makes it an offence. It is better to state it, using the words of the Act of Parliament. The section of the Act makes it unlawful to "force or endeavour to force" any workman from his engagement, either by violence to the person or property, by threats or intimidation, or by other methods stated in the Act of Parliament; the offence being the endeavouring to force a man from performing his duty and contract, the means being either personal violence or violence to the property, threats or intimidation, and the other means mentioned in the Act of Parliament. On the present occasion the charge is that it was by threats and intimidation. It appears that an application had been made to the Court of Q.B., who gave judgment refusing the writ, on the ground that the objections made to the conviction were not well founded. The objections which were repeated by Mr. James yesterday on the application to us were these: first, he said that the nature of the threats was not set out; and, secondly, that it was not set out to whom the threats were made. And then Mr. James stated that the character and description of the threat ought to be set out, so that the court might judge whether it was that description of threat that would be within the intention of the Legislature; and, secondly, that it should be set out to whom the threat was made, that the court might see that the threat was made under circumstances so that the offence could be committed by the means charged in the conviction. The answer to these objections given by the Court of Q.B. is in substance this: The 48th section of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, commonly called the Metropolitan Police Act, provides that in all cases of conviction it shall be sufficient if the offence is set out in the conviction in the very language in which the offence is described in the Act of Parliament creating it. My brother Channell, yesterday, in the course of the argument, did in reality give a very distinct and clear answer to this objection, which was this: the offence is, "forcing, or endeavouring to force, a workman to leave his employment"—the means charged in the present instance, "by threats and intimidation." To whom the threats were addressed, and whether they were threats of a description that might have acted on his mind so as to produce the effect of working out the crime charged, that is all matter of evidence; and if the magistrate be satisfied that the evidence is of threats addressed to a person so as to create the offence, it is only necessary for him to set out in the conviction that he convicts the party of the offence in the very language of the Act, and the conviction in the present case complies with the requisites of the statute. We are of opinion, therefore, that the judgment given by the Court of Q.B. upon this precise point is perfectly correct. In reality, the grounds of objection taken by Mr. James reduce themselves to one, namely, that the offence is not so described as that the court can perceive that the offence has been committed. We think the Q. B. is perfectly right, and in conformity with what they have held, as far as that ground is concerned, we ought to refuse the writ. But Mr. James presented another matter to our attention. He brought before us by affidavit what professes to be a copy of the information that was filed, and upon which the magistrate granted the summons; the parties being before him, he then proceeded to inquire, and convicted the defendant. Now, the information which is brought before us is this: "The complaint of Charles Robjohn, made before William Corrie, Esq., one of the magistrates," and so on; then "the informant upon his oath says, 'I live, &c. &c.; and then he says this, 'On Saturday night, the 1st Oct. inst., I was in Goswell-road with William Jocelyn and fifteen or sixteen other workmen, all engaged by Messrs. Piper as workmen; William Pearham was there; he came in; he said to the men, 'If you there work we shall consider you as blacks, and when we go in we shall strike against you, and strike against you all over London.' He followed us all the way to my house.'" It appears to me and to all my learned brethren that this is a statement of the facts which constitute the offence, though it is not a statement of the offence as it is described in the conviction or in the statute. It is impossible, I think, to doubt what is the meaning of this, and what is the object of it. It is impossible to doubt that there is here evidence of a threat—"we shall consider you as blacks." It is not necessary that in the information those words should be explained. It appears to us, therefore, that this information does substantially contain a complaint of the offence, because it contains a statement of those facts which constitute the offence. It may, however, be very much doubted whether, as it is clear the information need not be in writing, if all the parties were before the magistrate, and complaint was made not in writing, and the magistrate then and there heard all the parties and came to the conclusion which he has recorded in the conviction—it may be very well doubted whether it would not be perfectly sufficient, and whether it was necessary that there should be any other information than what was given on the occasion. Apart from that, we think that this information does contain substantially a statement of a part of the offence upon which the justice was justified and entitled and empowered to act, and that it was his duty to do so. On the whole we think the conviction right. The additional objection presented has really no foundation when it comes to be examined. With respect to this ground also the application for the writ must be refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LEICESTERSHIRE.

Nuisances Removal Act—18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 40—Appeal—Recognisance—Computation of time—Sunday.

The Nuisances Removal Act, by sect. 40, provides that the appellant shall not be heard in support of the appeal unless, within fourteen days after the making of the order appealed against, he shall give notice of appeal, and shall, within two days of giving such notice, enter into a recognisance to try the appeal.

Certain justices made an order under the above Act on the 13th, which was served on the 24th. On the 26th notice of appeal was given, and on Saturday, the 27th, the appellant made unsuccessful efforts to find a justice to take the recognisance, and on his going on the following Monday, the justice refused to take it:

Held, that the justice was right; that Sunday was to be considered as one of the two days allowed for entering into the recognisance after notice of appeal.

Mr. Wether moved for a rule, calling on the justices of Leicestershire to show cause why they should not hear an appeal from an order made under the Nuisances Removal Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. It appeared that applicant (Simkins) was summoned by the inspector of nuisances before two justices for an infringement of the Nuisances Removal Act, and the order in question was made by the justices against the present applicant on the 13th of the month, and was served upon him at his residence, three-and-a-half miles from Leicester, on the 24th. On the 25th he consulted with his solicitor on the subject of the order, and on the following day, the 26th, a notice of appeal was regularly served. On Saturday, the 27th, he went with the intention of entering into the requisite recognisances, but he was unable to find a justice, and on his presenting himself on the following Monday, an objection was made that he was too late, as the statute required that the recognisances should be entered into within two days after the appeal, and Sunday intervening the Monday was the third day. By the 40th section of the statute in question, it is enacted that "the appellant shall not be heard in support of the appeal, unless within fourteen days after the making of the order appealed against he give to the local authority notice, in writing, stating his intention to bring such appeal, together with a statement in writing, of the grounds of appeal, and shall within two days of giving such notice enter into a recognisance before some justice of the peace, with sufficient securities conditioned to try such appeal," &c. In the present case the applicant had done all he could do to comply with the requirements of the statute. The statute must be read to mean that the recognisance shall be entered into within two clear days on which business is transacted, and cannot be held to include Sunday as one of them: (Morris v. Barrett, 1 L. T. Rep. N S. 38.) The case of Peacock v. The Queen, 2 C. B., N. S., is distinguishable; there the party had power to comply with the terms of the Act; here he has done everything in his power, but was unable to do so. [CROMPTON, J.—It was not necessary that he should wait until the order was drawn up; he might have given his notice of appeal earlier.]

CROMPTON, J.—I am of opinion that we should not grant a rule. The general rule of construction is well laid down in Peacock v. The Queen; there the court of C.P. held that, unless Sunday was specially excluded by the statute, it counts as one of the days specified in it. No doubt a different rule obtains in matters of procedure before the courts; but that is under an old rule of court. Here the appellant might have given notice of appeal at an earlier time within the fourteen days, and by so doing have avoided the chance of being thrown over the Sunday. As it is, we cannot put a different construction from that put upon the statute in the case of Peacock v. The Queen.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. When an Act of Parliament gives a particular time for doing a particular thing, without making any special mention of Sunday, it must be taken that Sunday is to be re-regarded in construing the Act as any other day.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF MONMOUTHSHIRE.

Public bridge—43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2—Mandamus to justices to widen.

The 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2, provides that where any bridge repaired at the expense of the county shall be narrow and inconvenient, it shall and may be lawful for the justices at their general quarter sessions to order and direct such bridge to be widened, &c., and that no money shall be applied to the alteration of any such bridge until presentment shall have been made according to one of the statutes relating to public bridges:

Held, that the power so given to the justices is discretionary, and the court therefore refused a mandamus to compel them to widen a bridge:

Held, further, that the finding of an indictment at common law was not such a presentment as required by the statute.

Dowdewell moved for a rule calling on the justices of Monmouthshire to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to take steps for widening and improving, &c., Newport bridge. The 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2, provides that "when any bridge, or bridges or roads at the end thereof, repaired at the expense of any county, shall be narrow and inconvenient, it shall and may be lawful to and for the said justices at any of their general quarter sessions to order and direct such bridge or bridges or roads to be widened, improved, and made commodious for the public;" and it goes on to provide "that no money shall be applied to the amendment or alteration of any such bridge or bridges, until presentment shall have been made of the insufficiency, inconvenience or want of reparation of such bridge or bridges in pursuance of some or one of the statutes made and now in force concerning public bridges." The bridge in question was built in 1810, the population of Newport at that time being 2000; the present population amounted to 28,000, and there were, further, 2000 living in Christchurch, on the other side of the bridge. The entire width of the bridge was twenty-one feet, and, allowing for footpaths, there was but fifteen feet left for the carriage-way, besides which there was a descent of one in twenty-one. In 1857 a discussion took place with reference to the bridge, and an indictment was found on the ground that it was too narrow; but it was afterwards discovered that the case of R. v. Dixon, 4 B. & C. 670, decided that no indictment would lie to widen a bridge; but for such a remedy it must be in a ruinous state. No other presentment had been made. The statute must be read as imperative, and a mandamus will lie.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of opinion that there should be no rule. We ought not to grant the prerogative writ of mandamus unless we see a clear right on which it should issue, and not to bring a party forward, that advantageous terms may be made. Then is this enactment discretionary or compulsory? and that depends principally upon the subject-matter of the enactment, unless there be something to the contrary. Prima facie these words are permissive; and so they should be held, unless it be clear that the Legislature intended otherwise. In the case of Reg. v. The Bishop of Chichester, 33 L. T. Rep. 301, Wightman, J. held that the issuing a commission under the Church Discipline Act was discretionary. Prima facie we should read "may" in its primary sense, but that will bear modification if it appears from the subject-matter to be dealt with, that it would be inconsistent or improper. Now I think it is clearly discretionary. The justices are to take all the matters into their consideration; and those are matters for their discretion; and in such cases no doubt the Legislature intended to give a discretion; and on that ground I think there should be no rule.

HILL, J.—Mr. Dowdeswell referred to the preamble of this statute, and to the 2nd section. The words "it shall be lawful" may undoubtedly be imperative or otherwise, and that depends on the subject-matter. Then looking at the subject-matter here, I do not think it is such as to be imperative. Great expenses might be incurred; who are to judge of them? It appears to me that they are left to the discretion of the justices; they have considered, and think the expenses ought not to be incurred. I think, therefore, the rule ought to be refused. I would add that I think the proviso at the end of the 2nd section is imperative, and Mr. Dowdeswell failed to persuade me that an indictment at common law is such a presentment as is there intended.

BLACKBURN, J.—The improvement made by the works and the expense must be proportionate, and it is not necessary that the justices should do works, however disproportionate the improvement and expense may be, and of this they are the proper judges; and therefore this enactment, to my mind, is clearly discretionary. And I further agree that the proviso at the end of the 2nd section has not been satisfied; therefore I think there should be no rule. Rule refused.

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

PROCTOR (appellant) v. ANNISON (respondent).

County case.—Copyhold house in tenements—2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 25.

The respondent is the owner of a copyhold house of two stories high, situated in a borough. Neither floor is, with the staircase and entrance passage, of the yearly value of 10l. The floors are let as distinct tenements, at a yearly rent of less than 10l., to a separate tenant, from year to year. Except as to the common use of the entrance passage, each tenant has always had the exclusive use and occupation of the tenement so let to him. The house is of more than the clear yearly value of 10l. over and above all rents and charges payable thereout, and would therefore confer a vote for the borough. The owner claimed to vote in respect thereof at the election of knights of the shire:

Held, that, the tenements being in a vertical line under one roof, he was disqualified by sect. 25 of (Reform Act) 2 Will. 4, c. 45, from voting at elections for the county.

CASE.

At the court for revision of the list of voters in the election of knights of the shire for the northern division of the county of Durham, holden at Sunderland, in the said northern division, on the 6th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1859, before me, Edward Thomas Chitty, the barrister appointed in this year to revise the list of voters in such election for the county of Durham, William Proctor the younger objected to the name of Ralph Annison being retained in the township of Bishopwearmouth list of voters in such election for the said division, and Ralph Annison appeared for the purpose of maintaining his right to be retained in the list.

Ralph Annison was entered in the list thus:—

Annison, Ralph.	13, Sanson-street..	Copyhold house in tenements, 11, Arcey-street.
-----------------	---------------------	--

Many years ago he became seised at law in his demesne as of fee at the will of the lord of the manor, according to the custom of the manor, of the copyhold house so described in the list, and has ever since continued so seised and been in the actual receipt for his own use of the rents and profits. The house is of more than the clear yearly value of 10l. over and above all rents and charges payable out of and in respect of the same. It is situate within the borough of Sunderland, which borough was for electoral purposes created by the Reform Act (2 Will. 4, c. 45). It is two stories or floors high; has only one entrance from the street, and a door at that entrance with a bolt, but no lock on it. The entrance passage and staircase and landing at the top of the staircase are the same as in ordinary dwelling-houses. All the doors of the rooms of the house have locks. Neither floor is with the staircase and entrance passage of the yearly value of so much as ten pounds. Each floor has been always let separate, and as a distinct tenement of Ralph Annison, at a yearly rent of less than ten pounds, to a separate tenant from year to year, the tenant of the upper floor having the staircase and the use in common with the other tenant of the entrance passage. Except as to such common use of the entrance passage, each tenant has always, and throughout the six months ending on the last day of July, had the exclusive use and occupation of the tenement so let to him. The entrance door has very rarely been bolted or fastened; the doors of the rooms have been locked by night, and but for such locking there would have been free access from the street into the rooms. The whole house might conveniently be the residence of one family.

The objection was, that upon the facts above stated, Ralph Annison was, by the 25th section of the Reform Act (2 Will. 4, c. 45), not entitled to have his name retained on the list.

I decided that the section did not affect his right,

C. B.]

PROCTOR v. ANNISON.

and that his name should be retained on the list. If I was wrong, his name should be erased from the list.

The same William Proctor the younger also objected to the retention on the said list of the names of the fifty-two other persons whose names are given in the list appended to this case. The facts material to the matter in question, and the objections, were in each case the same as in the above case of Ralph Annison. I overruled the objections and decided that each of the names ought to be retained on the said township list. If I was wrong, the names ought to be erased from the list.

The said William Proctor the younger appealed from my decision in each of the above cases, and I entertained the appeals. The several appeals depend on the same decision, and ought to be consolidated. I named the said William Proctor the younger to be the appellant, and Ralph Annison to be the respondent in the consolidated appeal.

Manisty for the appellant.—Here the voter seeks to be retained on the list of voters for the county of Durham in respect of a copyhold house in Sunderland, the rent of which is now 10*l.*, and the question arises whether, under the circumstances, he is entitled to vote as he claims to vote. That will depend upon the construction the court will put upon sect. 25 of the Reform Act (2 Will. 4, c. 45), which enacts "that no person shall be entitled to vote in the election of a knight or knights of the shire in respect of his estate or interest as a copyhold or customary tenant, or tenant in ancient demesne holding by copy of court-roll, or as such lessee or assignee, or as such tenant and occupier as aforesaid, in any house, warehouse, counting-house, shop or other building, such house, warehouse, &c. being either separately or jointly with the land so occupied therewith of such value as would, according to the provision hereinafter contained, confer on him or any other person the right of voting for any city or borough, whether he or any other person shall or shall not have actually acquired the right to vote for such city or borough in respect thereof." The 27th section enacts, "that in every city or borough, every male person of full age, &c., who shall occupy within such city or borough, as owner or tenant, any house, warehouse, &c., being either separately or jointly with any land within such city or borough or place occupied therewith by him as owner or as tenant, under the same lordship of the clear yearly value of not less than 10*l.*, shall, if duly registered accordingly, be entitled to vote in the election of a member or members to serve in Parliament," &c. Here the respondent does not himself occupy the house, but he lets it out to tenants—say to two tenants, at 5*l.* a-year rent each—and he seeks to vote for the county in respect of the whole house. No doubt, if he were himself in occupation, he would be entitled to vote for the borough. It may be that no one is entitled to vote in respect of the house for the borough, but that is not the question. The point is, can a person claim to vote for copyhold premises situate in a borough, when the same is let out to several tenants, neither of whom holds to an amount of rent which would entitle him to a vote for the borough? It is contended that the owner of such a copyhold house so let out is not entitled to a vote for the county in respect of it. It is value, and not occupation, that is the test; and it is to value, and that alone, the 25th section relates.

Davison for the respondent.—It is clear that a person occupying to the extent of 10*l.* can vote (within the provision of the 27th section) for a borough. It is also clear, that the same meaning should be attached to the same words in the 25th section. The words "house or building" may apply to a part of a house. By sect. 19 of the Reform Act, "every male person seised at law or in equity of any lands or tenements of copyhold or any other tenure whatsoever, except freehold, for his own life, &c. or for any larger estate, of the clear yearly value of not less than 10*l.* over and above all rents and charges payable thereon, shall be entitled to vote in the election of a knight or knights of the shire in which such lands or tenements shall be situated." But there is a case conclusive on the point (Webb v. The Overseers of Birmingham, 1 Lutw. 18), where it was held that "a lessee of houses situate within a borough, for the unexpired residue of a term originally created for not less than sixty years, is entitled to vote for the county in respect of such of the houses as are not individually of sufficient value to give a right of voting for the borough, but are collectively of the clear yearly value of not less than 10*l.* over and above all rents and charges payable out of or in respect of the same; although one of the houses comprised in the lease is of sufficient value to confer the borough franchise." In Welsby and Beavan's Chitty's Statutes, in a note to the 25th section of the Reform Act, the effect of the clause is said to be this; that by it "the party is excluded from the county franchise if the property be of such a description and value, and so occupied, that it might be made use of for the purpose of acquiring a vote for the city or borough either by the claimant himself or any other person."

Manisty in reply.—The respondent would have the court read the 25th section as if at the end of it the words "and so occupy" as to give the qualification were introduced. As is pointed out in the note to Chitty's Statutes, there is a marked distinction between the language of the 24th and 25th sections; in the former section it turns on occupation; in the latter, on value. [WILLIAMS, J.—The question is, whether one house split into tenements is to be considered as several copyhold houses.] The statute says in effect this: "If you are the owner of a house in a borough of such a value as you might, if you choose, get a borough vote for it, you shall not have a vote for the county in respect of it." [WILLIAMS, J.—If this is to be looked at as a single house, you are right; if it is to be regarded as houses, you are wrong. It has been held, in Webb v. The Overseers of Birmingham, that the vote may be in respect of several houses.] The case speaks of the tenement as "a house," not "as houses." As the claim stands, it is in respect of a copyhold house in "tenements." Value, and that alone, is the test, not occupation. Cur. adv. vult.

Davison, at request of the Court, gave references to the following cases:—Wright v. The Town Clerk of Stockport, 1 Lutw. 32; Scole v. Huggett, 1 Lutw. 198; Daniel v. Coulsting, 1 Lutw. 230; Toms v. Luckett, 2 Lutw. 19; Downing v. Luckett, 2 Lutw. 33.

Nov. 24.—ERLE, C.J.—In this case the claimant is the owner of a copyhold house of such value as would confer on him the right of voting for the borough, and cause him therefore to be disqualified, according to the express words of sect. 25, for the county; but he has contended that the letting of the house to separate tenants in such a manner as would give to them a qualification for the borough as separate tenements, and if they were of sufficient value, makes the single house equivalent to separate houses during the time it is so occupied; and it is true that if the two tenements, instead of being in a vertical line under the same roof, had been in a horizontal line under separate roofs, the separate value of each being insufficient for the borough, but the aggregate value being sufficient for the county, that would have qualified for the county, as in Webb v. The Overseers of Birmingham. But, in the case supposed, they would be separate houses. Here it is found to be one house, and being so, it gives no qualification for the county. The clause at the end of the section expressly provides that it is immaterial whether the owner or any other person shall have acquired the right to vote for the borough in respect of the same house or not. Therefore the judgment is for the appellant, and the decision of the revising barrister will be reversed.

WHITE v. LEESON.

Private roadway.—Local private Act authorising tenant for life to set out—Construction—Who to use such roadway.

A private local Act of Parliament, passed 21st June 1836, was intituled "An Act to enable the Rev. J. White, and those entitled to certain estates at Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, to grant building leases," and sect. 8 enacted, that it should be lawful for the persons for the time being empowered by that Act, "to grant leases to lay out and appropriate, &c., any part of the said land and hereditaments thereinbefore authorised to be laid out as, and for a way or ways, street or streets, avenue or avenues, square or squares, passage or passages, sewer or sewers, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof."

The plaintiff, tenant for life, had granted certain building leases of, and laid out, a certain roadway on part of the said estate, and granted the use of the said roadway to A. B. and C. D., their respective executors, administrators and assigns, servants, tenants or occupiers, for the time being, of certain lands specified and leased to the said A. B. and C. D., having a covenant from C. D. to repair the said roadway, &c. The defendant, being a tenant of another part of the estate authorised to be leased by the Act of Parliament, used the said roadway, having no right or authority from or under the plaintiff or A. B. or C. D., but claiming to use such roadway, he being a tenant of a part of the estate so leased under the Act of Parliament:

Held, by the Court, that he was not authorised to do so, as the way was not public. There was no grant of way over it, nor licence to use it, to him or any one under whom he claimed.

The declaration stated that the defendant heretofore, to wit, on the 20th Sept. 1858, with certain horses and carts broke and entered certain land of the plaintiff, to wit, a certain roadway of the plaintiff running through certain lands and premises called Horseshoe-bay, situate in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, which had theretofore been demised to one Jonathan Joliffe down to the sea, and forming the eastern extremity of a certain private road from the village of Bonchurch to the sea; and the plaintiff claimed 50*l*.

Plea 2.—That long before and until and at the time of committing the said alleged trespass, one Rosa White, the wife of the plaintiff, was entitled for life, and the plaintiff during all the time aforesaid was entitled in her right, as the husband of the said Rosa, to the said land in which the said supposed trespass is alleged to have been committed; and also to divers lands and hereditaments partly abutting upon and contiguous to and partly in the neighbourhood of the said land, to wit, the said roadway, and lying in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, and they so being entitled heretofore and before the committing of the said supposed trespass, to wit, in the session of Parliament holden in the 6th year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, a certain Act of Parliament was passed, intituled "An Act to enable the Rev. James White and the persons for the time being entitled to certain estates situate in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, devised by the will of Charles Fitzmaurice Hill, Esq., deceased, to grant building leases;" and the defendant says that under and by virtue of the said Act the plaintiff (being the said Rev. James White therein mentioned) and his wife were enabled and empowered to grant leases of the said estates, being the said land and hereditaments hereinbefore mentioned, including the said land in which the said supposed trespass is alleged to have been committed, upon such terms and at such rents as in the said Act mentioned; and that since the passing thereof the plaintiff and his wife have, by virtue and in exercise of the powers so given to them, duly granted a great number of leases of different portions of the said estates, land and hereditaments, upon such terms and at such rents as by the said Act required; and that a great number of houses and other buildings have been erected thereon by the tenants and occupiers of the said leases, and that he, the defendant, before and at the time of the committing of the said alleged trespass and from thence hitherto, was and still is a tenant of divers lands and houses at a high rent under subsisting leases thereof duly granted by the plaintiff and his said wife by virtue of the said Act, being parcel of the said estates, lands and hereditaments thereby authorised to be leased; and the defendant says that by the said Act it is amongst other things enacted that it should and might be lawful to and for the person or persons for the time being empowered by that Act to grant leases as aforesaid to lay out and appropriate, or to concur in laying out and appropriating, any part of the said land and hereditaments thereinbefore authorised to be leased as and for a way or ways, street or streets, avenue or avenues, square or squares, passage or passages, sewer or sewers, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof. And the defendant says that, after the passing of the said Act, and many years before the committing of the said supposed trespass, the plaintiff and his said wife did, by virtue and in exercise of the powers so given to them by the said Act, duly lay out and appropriate the said land in the declaration mentioned, to wit, the said roadway (being parcel of the said lands and hereditaments by the said Act authorised to be laid out and appropriated) as and for a way for passing freely and at pleasure, at all times, as well on foot as with horses, carriages and carts for the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers of the said estates, lands and hereditaments, that is to say, for a way from and out of a certain common and public highway, in the said parish of Bonchurch, unto the seashore at Horseshoe-bay, in the said parish; and the defendant says that the said way was a general improvement to the said estate, and was a great convenience and accommodation to the tenants and occupiers thereof, to wit, of the lands and hereditaments so leased as aforesaid, in many respects, and among other things in that it afforded a convenient access to the seashore from their respective houses, both for the purposes of pleasure, and also for the purpose of fetching from the seashore sand and other things required by them in and about their houses, buildings, gardens and lands, without which access many of the said houses would be greatly depreciated in value and eligibility, and also the probability of letting many parts of the said lands and hereditaments which are still unlet would be diminished; and the defendant says that the said tenants and occupiers have, and that he himself has for many years, to wit, since that way was so laid out and appropriated, used the said way accordingly; and that the said alleged trespass was a use of the said way by the defendant.

Replication to the plea of the defendant above pleaded, that the said Act of Parliament was and is an Act to enable the Rev. James White, and the persons for the time being entitled to certain estates situate in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, devised by the will of Charles Fitzmaurice Hill, Esq., deceased, to grant building leases; and that the said Act of Parliament, so far as it relates to the matters in dispute in this action, was and is in the words and figures following:—

[Here followed the recitals and other parts of the Act.] The 8th section provides "that it shall and may be lawful to and for the person or persons for the time being empowered by this Act to grant leases as aforesaid, to lay out and appropriate, or to concur in laying out and appropriating, any part of the said land and hereditaments hereinbefore authorised to be leased, as and for a way or ways, street or streets, avenue or avenues, square or squares, passage or passages, sewer or sewers, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof." And the plaintiff further saith, that after the making and passing of the said Act of Parliament, on the 1st of April 1840, by a certain indenture then made between the plaintiff and Rosa, his wife, of the one part, and John Lucena Kettle of the other part, in pursuance of the powers of the said Act, the plaintiff and Rosa his wife did thereby demise to the said John Lucena Kettle, his executors, administrators and assigns, certain lands in the said indenture described as all that piece or parcel of land called Orchard Leigh, situate in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, as the same was then staked or marked out, on which a dwelling-house was then being erected by the said John Lucena Kettle, and comprising a cottage, garden and premises, then in the occupation of James Joblin, and extending on the north side eighty-six feet, on the south side 225 feet, and bounded on the north side by the high road from Shanklin to Ventnor, and by certain hereditaments belonging to Charles Popham Hill, Esq., and on the east side by hereditaments belonging to the said Charles Popham Hill and the plaintiff, and on the west by a road then recently commenced, leading from the high road aforesaid, towards the seashore, and on the south by hereditaments belonging to the said plaintiff, the same containing by admeasurement two acres or thereabouts, were the same more or less, and described in the plan thereof drawn in the margin of the said indenture and being parcel of the estates in the said Act mentioned, with all and singular the rights, privileges, advantages and appurtenances whatsoever to the said piece of land and hereditaments appertaining, with full right and liberty for the said John Lucena Kettle, his executors, administrators and assigns, and his and their servants, or the tenants or occupiers for the time being of the hereditaments thereby demised, or any part thereof, or any person or persons duly authorised by him or them, to use and to pass and repass on foot or on horseback, or with carts, carriages or other vehicles, along a certain road leading to the seashore, being the private road in the said declaration and second plea mentioned. And the plaintiff further saith that, on the 19th Dec. 1842, by a certain indenture then made between the plaintiff and Rosa his wife of the one part, and Jonathan Joliffe, of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, of the other part, in pursuance of the powers of the said Act of Parliament, the plaintiff and Rosa his wife did demise to the said Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators and assigns, a certain piece of land, in the said indenture described as all that piece or parcel of land situate in the parish of Bonchurch, in the Isle of Wight, as the same was then staked or marked out for building, containing by estimation one acre and a half, and described in the plan thereof drawn in the margin of the said last-mentioned indenture, the same being parcel of the land and hereditaments comprised in the schedule annexed to the said Act of Parliament, which said piece or parcel of land is known by the name of Horseshoe-bay, together with all and singular the rights, members and appurtenances whatsoever to the said piece or parcel of land appertaining, except the said road in the said declaration and second plea mentioned, with a right for the said Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators and assigns, and for his servants and others, by his permission from time to time, and at all times during the said demise, to pass and repass, with or without horses and loaded or empty carts or carriages, on and along the said road, for the purpose of going to and from the said demised premises and seashore at Horseshoe-bay aforesaid, and which right was reserved to him in consideration of a certain covenant on his part contained to repair and keep the said road in repair, and of the width of sixteen feet at the least; and, inasmuch as it was intended to give to the said Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators and assigns, the exclusive benefit and advantage of any purposes of trade to be derived from the said piece of land called Horseshoe-bay, it was further agreed and declared that the said Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators and assigns, should have full and absolute power from time to time, and at all times during the continuance of the said demise, of preventing and stopping any person or persons whomsoever, except the plaintiff and Rosa his wife, and the person or persons for the time being entitled in reversion as therein mentioned, and his and their servants and others authorised by them, and also John Lucena Kettle, Esq., his executors, administrators and assigns, his and their servants, or the tenants or occupiers for the time being of the messuage and premises called Orchard Leigh, from passing or repassing upon or along the said road so excepted from this demise as aforesaid, with carts, waggons, horses or other beasts of burden, trucks, barrows or otherwise, for the purpose of landing and conveying from the seashore any goods, coal, corn or other articles of merchandise or sale whatsoever. And it was provided that nothing therein contained shall extend to prevent any of the owners or occupiers for the time being of such of the messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, parcel of the estates in the said Act mentioned, as were situate on the north side of a certain road leading from Shanklin to Ventnor, in the parish of Bonchurch, held under the plaintiff and Rosa his wife, to use and enjoy at all times, at their own free will and pleasure, an uninterrupted right of carriage, bridle and foot way, on the road in the declaration and second plea mentioned, for all pleasure and private purposes, it being understood that the power thereby granted to Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators and assigns, of restricting the free use of the said road, was expressly limited to such use as might be made thereof for the carriage of goods and merchandise thereon for the purpose of trade and business, and not further or otherwise. And the plaintiff further saith that the said road was not, except as aforesaid, appropriated as in the said plea is mentioned, for the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers of the said estates, lands or hereditaments, or of any of them, or of any part thereof, and that the defendant was not at the time of the committing of the said trespass in the declaration mentioned the tenant, owner or occupier of the lands, or of any of them, or of any part thereof, to the owners and occupiers of which any right of way was granted by the plaintiff and Rosa his wife in pursuance of the said Act, or otherwise howsoever; and that the defendant did not commit the said trespass by the licence or permission of the said John Lucena Kettle, his executors, administrators or assigns, or of the said Jonathan Joliffe, his executors, administrators or assigns, or of the plaintiff.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE MAYOR, &c., OF SOUTHAMPTON.

[V.C. S.]

Rejoinder 2.—And for a second rejoinder to the said second replication to the said second plea the defendant says that, before the making of the indentures in the said replication mentioned, and when the said way in the said plea mentioned was first laid out and made, neither the said way nor the right to use the same was granted by any deed or instrument under seal to any person or persons whatsoever; but the said way was then so laid out and made by the plaintiff and his said wife in exercise of the powers conferred on them by the said Act; and they then duly laid out and appropriated the same for the general improvement of the estate and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof, and to the intent and purpose that the said tenants and occupiers might enjoy such appropriation and accommodation; and the defendant says that he, as one of such tenants and occupiers, and the said other tenants and occupiers, thereupon and thence hitherto have (without any grant thereof by deed), always used and enjoyed the same as in the said second plea particularly set forth and alleged.

Demurrer to the above rejoinder.

M. Smith, Q.C. (Norman with him) in support of the demurrer, argued that the intent of the plaintiff and his wife, in laying out the said road and the laying out and appropriation of the said road as a private road for the general improvement of the estate and the accommodation of the tenants, was without any grant of a right of way thereon to the defendant, and did not confer on the defendant any right of way over the said land, and that it appeared from the replication that the licence, if any ever existed, or was to be implied, was determined; that the Act of Parliament was in the nature of a conveyance to the tenant for life of the estate; that the general under-tenants were no parties to it: (Ward v. Scott, 3 Camp. 284, and Lodford v. Barber, 1 T. R. 93, were referred to.)

Chas. Pollock for defendant.—The rejoinder and plea are good. If any dedication could have been made, from the state of the record it would appear to have been made. The tenants for life have the power to dedicate by the terms of the 8th section of this local Act: not a dedication to each person having a house there, but generally to those using the roads. [BRANWELL, B.—If the way is a public way, the parish must repair it]. Not always so. The words of the Act of Parliament are "for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof;" which would imply that the roads so made should be used by those who were tenants of the estate, and the defendant being a tenant of the estate would have the right to use the road for his accommodation: (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 53; Poole v. Huskisson, 11 M. & W. 827; and Owen v. Saunders, 1 Ld. Raym. 158, were cited.)

Smith, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 7.—WATSON, B. delivered judgment.—We are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. In right of his wife, tenant for life, he is possessed of the land in question. A private Act of Parliament enabled them to grant building leases, and contained a clause (as usual) that they might lay out and appropriate, or concur in laying out and appropriating, any part of the land authorised to be leased as and for a way or ways, street or streets, avenue or avenues, square or squares, passage or passages, sewer or sewers, or other conveniences for the general improvement of the estate, and the accommodation of the tenants and occupiers thereof. Land has been appropriated for a way, and a way has been laid out, which upon the pleadings must be taken to be not a public way, and not a way over which, at the time of its creation, a right of way was granted to any one by an instrument under seal; but, as alleged in the rejoinder, as a way laid out and made in exercise of the powers of the Act, and laid out and appropriated for the general improvement of the estate, and to the intent the tenants might enjoy it, whatever that may mean. Two private rights of way have since been granted to tenants over this road. This being so, the defendant, being a tenant of the estate under a lease in pursuance of the powers in the Act, contends that though the way is not public, and though there is no grant of way over it, nor licence to use it, he is nevertheless entitled, under the provisions of the statute, to use it. Whether he is was the question in the case, and it must be answered in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant's contention is based on the words "for the general improvement of the estate," and it is supposed that under this expression every road laid out must be a public road, or, at all events, a road for all the tenants of the estate. For this we think there is no foundation. The general improvement of the estate may be promoted by private roads. The statute must have intended that there might be private rights of way granted; even if not, the defendant would have no right, though the reversioner might avoid the Act as not within the power. It is clear land may be appropriated for the purpose and one or more private ways afterwards granted over it. The argument of the defendant would go to show that, if a square of large houses was set out with an inclosure, all the tenants of the estate must have a right to walk in it, though they live in cottages at a distance. It would also go to show that no sewers could be made unless they drained all the houses. The plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

V. C. STUART'S COURT

Reported by JAMES B. DAVIDSON, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Dec. 6 and 7.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF SOUTHAMPTON.

Local Act of Parliament—Construction—Holding a cattle-fair on a piece of land dedicated to purposes of recreation, and theretofore used as a cricket-ground.

By a local Act of Parliament, passed for improving the marsh and other common lands, and extending rights of common and recreation within the town of S., reciting that a certain portion of the marsh lands consisting of four acres was better adapted for the purposes of recreation than the other portions of the marsh; it was enacted that rights of common and recreation should not be extinguished, and that the said four acres should for ever thereafter be subject to such rights of common and of recreation, and other public rights "as had theretofore been exercised and enjoyed thereon." By the same Act it was provided that, "except as therein otherwise provided," all the waste lands which were then vested in the corporation should remain subject to the existing rights of common and recreation, and such powers were given to the corporation to fence, drain and manage the said lands as they should think proper for the public advantage of the inhabitants. The corporation were also empowered to remove a fair to such parts of the waste lands as they should think fit. In the exercise of their discretion the corporation removed the fair to the four acres above mentioned, which were called "the Cricket-ground," and had theretofore been used for the purpose of playing cricket:

Held, on the construction of the Act, that the corporation by so doing, had contravened the powers of the Act; and perpetual injunction to restrain them from holding the fair on the cricket-ground granted, with costs.

This was an information for the purpose of restrain-ing the defendants, the corporation of Southampton, from removing a fair, called Above Bar Fair, at Southampton, to, or holding, or permitting the same to be holden upon a piece of ground now called or known as the Cricket-ground, or any part thereof, or upon a road called the Itchen Bridge-road, near the same town.

It appeared that before the passing of the Act below mentioned, the "Above Bar Fair" had, from time immemorial, been accustomed to be held on the 6th and 7th of May every year, on a piece of land in the parish of All Saints, Southampton, called "the Fair Field." At the time of passing the Act (4th July 1844) the "Fair Field" was in the tenure of John Watkins Drew, Esq., as lessee, and by the Act the corporation were empowered to purchase Mr. Drew's interest in the same for a sum of 740*l*.

The Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. liv.), which was for the purpose of "improving the marsh and other common lands, and extending rights of common and of recreation within the town of Southampton," recited that the inhabitants of the town claimed to be entitled to certain rights of common and other rights over the marsh at all times in the year, and that the marsh was completely detached from the other waste lands in Southampton.

By the 17th section of the Act, after reciting that the north-western portion of the marsh, containing 4*a*. 1*r*. 7*p*., or thereabouts (being, in fact, the cricket-ground), was better adapted and might be made more available for the purposes of recreation than the other portions of the marsh, it was enacted "that no notice (as in the Act mentioned) should be given by the mayor, aldermen, &c., to extinguish any right of command or of recreation or other public rights, over the said north-western portion of the marsh."

By the 18th section it was enacted as follows:—"The mayor, aldermen, &c., shall with all convenient speed after the passing of this Act cause the said north-western portion of the marsh to be drained and levelled, and to be put and kept in a proper condition for purposes of public recreation, and the same portion shall for ever thereafter be subject to such rights of common and of recreation, and other public rights as have heretofore been exercised and enjoyed thereon."

By the 28th section it was enacted that it should not be lawful for the mayor, &c., to make any demise or lease of or including any part of the said portion of the Itchen Bridge-road, or to alter the course thereof, or to reduce the width thereof to a less width than sixty feet, or otherwise to render the same less commodious for public traffic than it now is.

By the 116th section it was provided that "except as therein otherwise provided, all the waste lands in Southampton, which are now vested in the mayor, aldermen, &c., and over which at all times of the year rights of common and of recreation and other public rights are now claimed, exercised and enjoyed, shall at all times for ever hereafter remain subject to the same or like rights."

By the 117th section the mayor, &c., were empowered to fence, drain and manage such of the said lands as for the time being should be vested in them, subject to rights of common or of recreation or other public rights, and to preserve and improve the sward thereon, and to make, fence, light and maintain public roads and walks, &c., and to appropriate and preserve such lands or such portions thereof as the mayor, &c., should from time to time think proper, exclusively for the recreation of the inhabitants of Southampton, or otherwise, as open spaces for the public advantage of the inhabitants of Southampton, as to the mayor, &c., should seem meet.

By sect. 118, after reciting that, by reason that the several powers and authorities thereby granted to the mayor, aldermen and burgesses had been so granted, and that the several sums thereby authorised to be offered and paid and accepted as the compensation for the purchase of lands had been so authorised to be offered and paid and accepted for the sole purpose and in consideration and on the condition of the lands purchased and taken under the authority of that Act being devoted for ever thereafter, subject to the provisions of that Act exclusively, as open spaces for the general and public advantage of the inhabitants of Southampton, and of all other persons interested in the same being so devoted; and by reason also that the parties interested in resisting the passing of that Act had assented to the several provisions therein contained, in the full faith and confidence that such purpose should for ever be strictly observed, it was enacted, "that such parts of the said common fields, as for the time being should have been by the mayor, aldermen and burgesses purchased, taken or acquired for the purposes of that Act, should for ever after the same had been so purchased, taken or acquired, be devoted and kept, subject to the provisions of that Act exclusively, as open spaces for the general and public advantage of the inhabitants of Southampton, and of all other persons for the time being interested in the same being so devoted and kept."

The 139th section was as follows:—"And be it enacted that after the mayor, aldermen and burgesses shall, in pursuance of this Act, have purchased or taken for the purposes of this Act the leasehold or other interest of the said John Watkins Drew, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in the said Fair Field, it shall be lawful for the mayor, aldermen and burgesses, at such time as they shall think proper, to cause a notice to be affixed on the outer doors of the Guildhall of Southampton, and on or near the doors of all the churches and chapels in Southampton, and to be made public in such other way as the mayor, aldermen and burgesses shall think proper, declaring that the annual fair holden on or about the 6th and 7th days of May, in certain places in the parish of All Saints, in Southampton, shall from the time of affixing such notice cease to be holden in such places, and shall thenceforth be removed to, and for ever thereafter yearly, on the second Wednesday in May, and following day, be holden on such parts of the waste lands in Southampton for the time being vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, as they shall think fit; and the said fair shall for ever after the affixing of such notice be removed and holden according to the terms of such notice, and at no other place than shall be expressed in such notice, and on no other days than the second Wednesday in May and the day following."

After the passing of the Act the piece of ground in question was drained and levelled, and put into a proper condition for purposes of public recreation. It was called "the Cricket-ground," and the bill alleged that the inhabitants and the public generally had used it for purposes of public recreation.

The corporation purchased Mr. Drew's interest in the Fair Field, and in May last removed the fair to the four acres, called "the Cricket-ground," much to the annoyance, as the bill alleged, of the inhabitants.

In May last the present information was filed, praying for a declaration that, according to the true construction of the Act, the four acres, called "the Cricket-ground," ought to be used for the purposes of public recreation only, and that it was a breach of trust in the defendants to remove the fair to, or permit the same to be held upon, the said piece of ground, or upon the Itchen Bridge-road; and for an injunction in the terms above stated.

On the 10th May a motion was made for an injunction, but it was on that occasion arranged that the motion should stand over, the corporation undertaking to repair the damage, if any. The fair was held on the Cricket-ground, and the cause now came on upon the hearing.

Malins, Q.C. and Crackwill appeared for the plaintiffs, and contended that, by the 17th and 18th sections of the Act, the land was dedicated to such purposes of recreation as it had hitherto been used for, and that the corporation had no power to devote it to any other purpose.

Bacon, Q.C. and Shebbeare, for the defendants, argued, first, that the corporation had absolute discretion in dealing with the waste lands, and that the court could not interfere with that discretion. They contended, secondly, that, even supposing the land to have been dedicated to the purpose of recreation, it was no departure from that purpose to hold a fair upon it. Dugdale's Warwickshire, p. 514, was cited to show that a "fair" was originally a feast or festival:—"Touching the original occasion of which meetings called Faires, let us hear what the learned Spelman hath observed: 'Cum autem Christiani ad insignes aliquas celebritates, præsertim enœcniæ et dedicationes Ecclesiarum festa annua peragenda convenirent; adesse tunc mercatores solebant, sua mercimonia sub ipsis Ecclesiis atque in cœmeteriis distracturi.' And a little below he thus goes on: 'Pariter verò convenisse tunc ad merces vendendas tum ad emendas mercatores quamplurimos, atque ita festum cum nundinis, nundinas cum festo miscuisse;' and definitions of the word were taken from Johnson's Dictionary, citing Dryden, and from Richardson's Dictionary, with quotations from the works of Chaucer and Gower. Passages were also read in support of the same view from Gay's Poems, and from the prologue to Tennyson's "Princess," descriptive of country sports:—

. . . a herd of boys with clamour bowl'd
And stump'd the wicket; babies roll'd about
Like tumbled fruit in grass; and men and maids
Arranged a country dance, and flew thro' light
And shadow; while the twangling violin
Struck up with "Soldier-laudie," and overhead
The broad ambrosial ales of lofty lime
Made noise with bees and breeze from end to end.

It was urged that it was a fallacy to suppose that land devoted to the purposes of recreation was to be exclusively used for cricket; and that the corporation had the power to remove the fair to any part of the waste land they deemed most eligible for the purpose.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without calling for a reply).—This information is filed to protect a piece of land, which covers about four acres, and which in the bill is called "the Cricket-ground," from being used by the corporation of Southampton for the purpose of holding a fair. The corporation have very large powers, and the 139th section of their Act has express reference to the removal of the fair. Before this information was filed the fair had been held upon a piece of ground which seems to have been leased to a person of the name of Drew. The 49th section authorises the corporation to purchase Drew's interest, and the 139th section empowers them to remove the fair to "such parts of the waste lands in Southampton as they shall think fit." In this section the language is very wide, but it must be construed so as to make it consistent with the other provisions of the Act. The piece of ground which is now in question is the subject of two express clauses of the Act, which speak of it in very definite terms. The 17th section describes these four acres or thereabouts as "better adapted and more available for the purposes of recreation than the other portions of the marsh," and the 18th section directs that this same portion of the marsh shall be "put and kept in a proper condition for purposes of public recreation, and shall for ever thereafter be subject to such rights of common and of recreation and other public rights as have heretofore been exercised and enjoyed thereon." This language is so plain as to admit of no doubt. According to the plain meaning of the language, if Mr. Bacon be right in the difficult argument he has had to maintain, that a cattle-market is a sort of recreation, he must show that it is such a recreation and such a right as has "heretofore" been exercised and enjoyed on this piece of land. It is quite plain that a cattle-fair cannot be brought within this view; and here the 117th section has a very important application. By the 117th section power is given to the corporation to appropriate such particular portions of the waste lands as they shall think proper "exclusively for the recreation of the inhabitants of Southampton, or otherwise, as open spaces for the public advantage of the inhabitants of Southampton, as to the corporation shall seem meet;" and by the 116th clause all the waste lands are to be subject to existing public rights, "except as herein otherwise provided." But it is quite plain that the Legislature did not intend to entrust the corporation with a discretion as to these four acres; and it is no longer in the power of the corporation to say that these four acres have been exclusively dedicated to the same rights of recreation as have "heretofore" been exercised and enjoyed thereon if they have been devoted to the purpose of holding a fair. Taking the 18th clause, and construing the 139th clause by the light of it, it is quite plain that the corporation must look for some other pieces of waste land than that included in the 17th and 18th sections for the purpose of holding this fair. The general words in sect. 139, which allow them to fix upon such parts of the waste lands as they may think fit, on which to hold the fair, must be read as controlled by the particular words of the 18th section. Therefore I think it is perfectly clear that, in fixing upon these lands as a place in which the fair is to be held, the corporation have contravened the Act of Parliament. Another provision is as to the Itchen Bridge-road. The Act says, with reference to the Itchen Bridge-road, that it shall not be lawful for the corporation so to deal with this road as to render the same "less commodious for public traffic than it now is." Now it is said by the relators that, for at least two days in the year, the road has been rendered much less commodious for public traffic by having the fair held on this piece of ground, and the evidence seems to justify that view. However, upon the construction of this clause there is this observation, that the main purpose of the clause is to prevent the narrowing of the road; and therefore it does not interfere with the construction of the clause to say that it was not in order to prevent any alteration in the adjoining waste lands which might interfere with the commodiousness of the road for public traffic that it was inserted. But what the Act says is, that it shall not be lawful "to alter the course of the road, or to reduce the width thereof to a less width than sixty feet, or otherwise to render the same less commodious for public traffic than it now is." Now, it can hardly be said that the road has not been rendered less commodious than it now is for at least two days in the year by holding this fair upon a portion of it; and these words are perfectly general. But I do not decide the case upon that ground. It seems to me that it must be governed by the construction of the 18th clause. I regret that this dispute has arisen. Something is due to the inhabitants of every town, so as to conciliate the peace and goodwill of all. The corporation have said, that by this decision they will be fettered in the exercise of their powers by a small section of the inhabitants. I certainly do not think that the powers of the corporation should be fettered by any small section of the town, because the powers of the corporation are given to them for the benefit of all; but in this case they are not fettered by any small portion of the town. They are fettered by the Act of Parliament, and I hope it will not be supposed that this restriction has been imposed by any small portion of the inhabitants. I must make the injunction perpetual in the terms of the prayer of the bill; but at the same time I cannot refrain from expressing a hope that this dispute will be brought to a close by some arrangement.

Bacon, Q.C. asked for the costs, on the ground that the allegations of the bill were not borne out by the evidence; but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he did not think so; and that he could not depart from the usual rule, that the successful party should have their costs.

Injunction made perpetual.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

Justices—Summary Proceedings Act—Case.

Justices cannot be called on to grant a case on summary proceedings before them to enforce payment of a rate, where an appeal against the rate lies to the quarter sessions, and the only objection raised is as to the validity of the rate, on the ground that the party derives no benefit from the works for which it was made.

Rule nisi, calling on certain justices of Gloucestershire to state a case under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 (Summary Proceedings (Justices) Act.)

A party had been summoned by the commissioners, under the Cheltenham Improvement Act, before justices, to show cause why a distress warrant should not be issued to compel payment of 1s. 10d. rate, under the Act, in respect of certain sewerage works. Before the justices the party summoned contended that he was not liable, because he was not benefited by the works. The justices decided against him, and refused to grant a case, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and gave a certificate that the application was a frivolous one: (sect. 4.)

Phipson showed cause.—The justices had no power to inquire into the validity of the rate: (Birmingham v. Shaw, 10 Q.B. 868; R. v. Kingston, 1 E. B. & E. 256; 27 L. J. 199, M.C. The party might have appealed against the rate, but he has allowed the time for appealing to elapse. If this rule were granted it would constitute the two justices a court of appeal against the validity of the rate: (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, ss. 129, 135.)

Powell, in support of the rule, contended that, although there was an appeal to the quarter sessions given by the Act, still the validity of the rate could be contested before the justices in a proceeding of this kind.

By the COURT.—It is clear that there might have been an appeal against the validity of the rate, according to the statute. That being so, this case cannot be granted, as the only question is as to the validity of the rate, which should have been the subject of appeal.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. FOX.

Indictment—Clerk to borough justices—Partner with clerk of the peace of the county—Interest in prosecutions—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102.

A. and B. were in partnership as attorneys. A. was clerk to the borough magistrates of N., and B. was clerk of the peace for the county of M., to the [Mag. C.]

quarter sessions of which the borough justices of N. committed their prisoners for trial. A. and B. shared as partners the fees and emoluments of their respective offices; B., as clerk of the peace, was entitled to certain fees upon the arraignment and trial of prisoners. Certain persons were committed by the borough justices of N. to the quarter sessions of M.; and on their arraignment and trial B. received the said fees, in which A. participated as his partner. Upon an indictment against A. for an offence under sect. 102 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, in being interested in the prosecution of offenders committed for trial by the justices for whom he was clerk:

Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Q.B.), that A. had committed an offence within the section.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, provides that it shall not be lawful for the clerk to the justices of a borough to act in the prosecution of any offender committed for trial by the justices to whom he is clerk; "and any person being an alderman, or councillor, or clerk of the peace of any borough who shall act as clerk to such justices, or shall otherwise offend in the premises, shall forfeit 100l.:

Held (affirming Coe v. Lawrence, 1 E. & B. 531), that the penalty of 100l. did not attach to a clerk to the borough justices (not being an alderman, councillor, or clerk of the peace of the borough) who acted in the prosecution of the offenders committed for trial by the borough justices:

Held, nevertheless, that he was subject to an indictment for so acting contrary to the first proviso of the section.

Error upon the judgment of the Court of Q.B. affirming a conviction upon the following indictment:—

Monmouthshire, to wit.—The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present, that the borough of Newport, in the county of Monmouth, is one of the boroughs named in the schedule (A) to the Act passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intitled "An Act to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales." And that heretofore, to wit, on the 17th day of Feb. in the year of our Lord 1836, a separate commission of the peace was granted to the said borough by his said late Majesty King William the Fourth pursuant to the said Act, and that no separate court of quarter sessions has at any time been granted to the said borough pursuant to the said Act. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present, that heretofore, to wit, on the 30th day of June 1845, and thenceforth continually until the time of exhibiting this bill of indictment, Charles Burton Fox was, and still is, the clerk to the justices of the said borough of Newport (he the said Charles B. Fox having been theretofore appointed such clerk by the justices of the said borough for the time being pursuant to the said Act). And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present, that during all the time aforesaid the said Charles B. Fox was, and still is, an attorney-at-law and a solicitor, and during all the time aforesaid was, and still is, the partner of one Charles Prothero in the business and profession of attorneys and solicitors, and that during all the time aforesaid, he the said Charles Prothero was, and still is, the clerk of the peace of the county of Monmouth, and by reason thereof during all the time aforesaid was, and still is, interested and employed in the prosecution of divers offenders, who during the time aforesaid were committed by the justices of the said borough of Newport for trial at the court of general quarter sessions of the peace for the said county of Monmouth, and who during the time aforesaid, were tried at the said court, that is to say, by receiving as such clerk of the peace divers fees on the arraignment and trial of the said offenders at the said court. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that during the time aforesaid, to wit, on the 1st day of July 1856, and on divers other days and times between that day and the time of exhibiting this bill of indictment, certain offenders were committed by the said justices of the said borough for trial at the said court of quarter sessions of the peace, and were tried at the said court, to wit, one Thomas Hunter, &c., &c. (naming them). And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present, that the said Charles Prothero, as such clerk of the peace as aforesaid, did receive and take certain fees on the arraignment and trial of the said several last-mentioned offenders respectively; and the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid further present, that the said Charles B. Fox, as such partner of the said Charles Prothero as aforesaid, unlawfully was, while he was such clerk of the said justices as aforesaid, interested by his said partner the said Charles Prothero in the prosecution of the said several last-mentioned offenders, that is to say, by then being, as such partner of the said Charles Prothero, entitled to share and sharing in the said fees so received and taken by him the said Charles Prothero as aforesaid, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, &c.

Upon the trial of the indictment, a verdict was taken by consent for the Crown, subject to the opinion of the court upon the following case:—

The borough of Newport, in the county of Monmouth, is a corporate borough, having a separate commission of the peace, granted to it under the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, but having no grant of a separate quarter sessions. Parties charged with offences before the borough justices are committed for trial at the assizes held at Monmouth, or at the general quarter sessions held in and for the said county at Usk.

The defendant Mr. Fox is an attorney and solicitor, and has since the year 1845 carried on that profession at Newport in partnership with Mr. Charles Prothero. In June 1845 Mr. Fox was appointed clerk to the justices of the said borough of Newport, and has held and performed the duties of that office from that time to the present. In March 1848 Mr. Prothero was appointed clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, and he has held and performed the duties of that office from that time to the present. From the year 1851 Messrs. Prothero and Fox have shared between them the profits of the partnership business and the emoluments of the offices of clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, and clerk to the justices of the borough of Newport. Mr. Prothero, in the first instance, receiving the fees incident to the former, and Mr. Fox, in the first instance, receiving the fees incident to the latter office.

The fees payable to Mr. Prothero as clerk of the peace for the county are fixed by the justices under the provisions of the 57 Geo. 3, c. 91, and include, amongst others, a fee upon the arraignment and another fee upon the trial of each prisoner tried at the quarter sessions of the peace for the said county.

On the 14th Aug. 1855 the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, passed, and is intitled, "An Act for diminishing expense and delay in the administration of criminal justice." The 1st section of this Act empowers justices at petty sessions to punish summarily persons charged with certain offences, and the 3rd section authorises such justices to sentence forthwith persons charged at such petty sessions with certain offences, and pleading guilty to such charge.

The fees and emoluments of the said C. Prothero, as clerk of the peace for the said county of Monmouth, were seriously diminished by the operation and effect of the last-mentioned Act, immediately after the passing thereof, and have not since that time amounted during any year to the annual amount thereof computed upon an average of five years immediately preceding the passing of that Act. In May 1857 Mr. Prothero, as clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, made under the provisions of the said Act, and upon the requisition of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, a return to the said commissioners (verified on oath) of the fees and emoluments in criminal prosecutions received by him as such clerk of the peace for each of the five years immediately preceding the said 14th Aug. 1855, the day of the passing of the said last-mentioned Act, and the annual amount of such fees, computed upon an average of the said five years, was 540*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* At the same time Mr. Prothero, under the provisions of the said Act, and at the requisition of the said Lords Commissioners, made a return (similarly verified) of the fees and emoluments in criminal prosecutions received by him as such clerk of the peace as aforesaid during the year ending the 14th Aug. 1856, and these amounted to 357*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*

In June 1857 the Commissioners of the Treasury paid to Mr. Prothero the sum of 182*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, the difference between the 357*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* and the said annual average amount received by him during the five years next before the passing of the said last-mentioned Act.

In Nov. 1857 Mr. Prothero made a return in the same manner of the fees and emoluments in criminal prosecutions received by him as such clerk of the peace as aforesaid for the year ending the 14th Aug. 1857, which amounted to 446*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*; and in Jan. 1858 the Commissioners of the Treasury paid to Mr. Prothero 93*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, the difference between 446*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* and the said annual average amount received by him during the five years next before the passing of the said Act of Parliament.

At the trial of the above indictment it was proved that between Michaelmas 1856 and the Epiphany sessions held at Usk, in the county of Monmouth, in Jan. 1857, persons, five in number, respectively charged with larceny, were committed by the borough justices of Newport for trial at the last-mentioned sessions upon four separate and distinct charges, and that upon the arraignment and trial of each of those persons at the said sessions certain fees were payable and were paid to the said C. Prothero as clerk of the peace of the county of Monmouth. The fees were the ordinary fees payable to the clerk of the peace according to the table of fees fixed by the justices as thereinbefore mentioned, and amounted in all the cases to the sum of 7*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*

It was further proved that between January and March 1857 a certain other person, charged with larceny, was committed by the borough justices of Newport for trial at the Easter sessions of the peace, held at Usk aforesaid, in 1857; and that on the arraignment and trial of such last-mentioned person at those sessions, similar fees were payable and paid to the said C. Prothero, as clerk of the peace for the said county, amounting to the sum of 1*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* The whole of the above fees were included in the return made by the said C. Prothero to the Commissioners of the Treasury in Nov. 1857, as above mentioned. It did not appear that the said Charles Prothero, or the said defendant Charles Burton Fox, was ever concerned or employed, directly or indirectly, as an attorney in conducting any prosecution at any quarter sessions held for the county of Monmouth.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether in substance the facts above stated showed any offence under the 102nd section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.

If the court should be of opinion that they did not show such an offence, the verdict already entered was to stand. If the court should be of a contrary opinion, a verdict of not guilty was to be entered.

The Court of Queen's Bench held (Crompton, J. dissentiente), that the facts did show such an offence, and directed the verdict to stand, and inflicted a fine of 1*l.* upon Mr. Fox. (See the report, 33 L. T. 90; 28 L. J. 157, M.C.)

[EX. CH.]

Upon this judgment the defendant brought a writ of error.

Pigot, Serjt. (Sir Thomas Phillips with him) in support of the writ of error.—This is an indictment against Mr. Fox, for an offence against the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102. The 102nd section empowers the justices of a borough having a separate commission of the peace to appoint a clerk; and then it contains two provisos as to the persons who shall not be appointed such clerks: "And be it enacted that it shall be lawful for the justices of every borough to which a separate commission of the peace shall be granted as aforesaid, at their first or any other meeting, and they are hereby respectively required to appoint a fit person to be the clerk of the justices of such borough, to be removable at their pleasure, and so often as there shall be a vacancy in the said office of clerk to the justices, by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise." Now come the provisos: "Provided it shall not be lawful for the said justices to appoint or continue as such clerk to the justices any alderman or councillor of such borough, or clerk of the peace of such borough, or the partner of such clerk of the peace, or any person or clerk in the employ of such clerk of the peace." Then comes another proviso: "Provided also, that it shall not be lawful for the said clerk to the justices, by himself or his partner, to be directly or indirectly interested or employed in the prosecution of any offenders committed for trial by the justices of whom he shall be such clerk as aforesaid, or any of them, at any court of gaol delivery, or general or quarter sessions." Those are the provisos; and then it goes on to affix the penalty in these terms: "That any person being an alderman, or councillor, or clerk of the peace of any borough, or the partner or clerk, or in the employ of such clerk of the peace, who shall act as clerk to the justices of such borough, or shall otherwise offend in the premises, shall, for every such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of 100*l.*, one moiety thereof to the treasurer of such borough, to be paid over to the credit and account of the borough fund," &c. This indictment is framed upon that section against Mr. Fox, and charges that he is the partner of Mr. Prothero, and that Prothero is the clerk of the peace for the county in which the borough of Newport is situate, and that Prothero is in fact interested in prosecutions coming from that borough, because he is entitled to a fee upon the arraignment of prisoners committed for trial for that borough; and that Mr. Fox being the partner of Prothero shared in such fees. The question is, whether this indictment is maintainable or not? In the Court of Q. B. the judges differed in opinion, Lord Campbell, C.J. and Erie, J. holding that it was maintainable, and Crompton, J. dissenting from that opinion. It is now submitted that Mr. Fox has committed no offence whatever against the Act of Parliament, and that he is not a person interested in the prosecutions within its meaning, merely because he happens to be the partner of Mr. Prothero, who is the clerk of the peace for the county, for there may be a state of things in which no fee is payable to the clerk of the peace, because he does not get a fee unless the prisoner is arraigned. Looking carefully at the language of the section, the justices are first empowered to appoint any fit person as their clerk; then the first proviso is, that they shall not appoint any alderman or councillor of the borough, nor the clerk of the peace of the borough, or the partner of such clerk of the peace. As far as that proviso is concerned, Mr. Fox is eligible to be clerk to the justices. The Legislature must have had in view the fact that, where there is no separate quarter sessions in a borough, prisoners committed from the borough are tried at the county quarter sessions; and therefore, if it had been intended to exclude the partner of the clerk of the peace for the county, the section would have named the clerk of the peace for the county, just as it names the clerk of the peace for the borough, and the partner and clerk of that clerk. The maxim, Expresio unius est exclusio alterius, applies therefore. [CROWDER, J.—You have to put a construction upon the word "interested." The other side say that the words "interested and employed" do not mean the same thing.] It is submitted that they are connected, and the substance of the offence is, interested in some way in carrying on the prosecution. There is no doubt as to what the statute was directed when it passed—viz. to prevent persons holding two offices in the borough, the duties of which might conflict; but it does not mention any officers of the county as being ineligible. When the Act passed it was the custom of the clerk of the peace for the county to take part in the prosecution of offenders committed by their justices—such clerks, in fact, advising the justices as to the committals; and the object of the Act was to prevent the clerks from carrying on the prosecutions in such cases. The second proviso is that under which it is said that this case comes; the proviso is a penal one, and should be construed with precision, and not be extended beyond its strict meaning. The words "interested or employed" must be construed together and according to the rule noscitur a sociis; and the words "in the prosecution of any offender," mean "shall not have to do with the prosecution of any offender." [POLLOCK, C.B.—Was the partner, Mr. Prothero, interested in the prosecution of offenders?] It is contended that he was not. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Before the judges were paid by salary, and when fees constituted a part of their emolument, was a judge interested in a cause because he had a fee at certain stages of it?] There is a material difference between a person being interested in a certain stage of the proceedings and his being interested in the prosecution of those proceedings. To test that, when was Mr. Fox's offence against this Act complete? Up to the time of the arraignment of offenders, he clearly is guilty of no violation of the Act of Parliament. The prisoner may never be arraigned, or he may die before the arraignment. Does Mr. Fox then become guilty of an offence because, if the prisoner be arraigned, his partner as clerk of the peace happens to be entitled to a fee on such arraignment? It is very difficult to determine the exact time when Mr. Fox's offence is complete. There is another mode of testing it, and it is this. Supposing that Mr. Prothero had obtained the clerkship of the peace of the county after Mr. Fox's appointment as clerk to the justices of the borough, and after they had entered into partnership, does the obtaining of that appointment by Mr. Prothero make Mr. Fox indictable upon this section as soon as any fee is payable to him upon the arraignment of any prisoner committed by the borough justices? If it does, he is an involuntary culprit, because his partnership may have been for a period of years, and he may have taken his office of clerk to the justices, not anticipating that his partner would ever receive the appointment of clerk of the peace of the county. [CROWDER, J.—There is in law no distinction between Prothero and Fox; they are the same. It is clear that they divide the fees in the ordinary way. It is, therefore, as if Prothero, being clerk of the peace for the county, was clerk to the justices of the borough. Then is he or is he not interested in the prosecutions? In one sense he is interested in all the prosecutions. POLLOCK, C.B.—He is interested in multiplying prosecutions. MARTIN, B.—It was the evil against which the Legislature intended to provide.] "Interested, said Mr. Justice Crompton in the court below, is a very large word, but I think it does not bear the meaning which they have put on it." "I think that it was not intended that the word 'interested' should extend the meaning of the word 'employed,' but that the intention was to prevent the clerk to the justices being employed by himself or other parties in the conduct of prosecutions." If the intention of the Legislature had been to bring the case within the proviso, the language it would have used would have been not "interested or employed in the prosecution," but "interested in any stage of a prosecution, to wit the arraignment," or "employed in a prosecution." Supposed Mr. Fox had been robbed, for instance, of a horse, and the thief brought before the borough justices to whom he was clerk, the conviction of the thief being a stage to entitle him to the return of the horse, could it be said, if he sat and advised the justices in the committal of the prisoner, that he became thereby interested or employed in the prosecution? The section goes on to say afterwards, "at any court of gaol delivery or general or quarter sessions," which looks like taking a part in a prosecution to be carried on in a court of general or quarter sessions. There is a second question in the case, that is, whether, supposing this to be an offence, an indictment is the proper form of proceeding. [POLLOCK, C.B.—Where an Act of Parliament says that if any person shall do so and so he shall be liable to a penalty, you cannot indict; but if the Act says it shall be unlawful to do so and so, and if any one does it he shall be liable to punishment, then he may be indicted. Welsby referred to Coe v. Lawrence, 1 E. & B. 531, where it was held that the penalty of 100*l.* in sect. 102 did not attach to a clerk to the borough justices acting in the prosecution of offenders committed for trial by the borough justices.] In that case it is submitted that the Court of Q.B. did not sufficiently regard the words "or otherwise offend in the premises." No one can doubt it was intended to make every one who offended against the section liable to the 100*l.* penalty, and the question is whether, in order to carry out the intention of the Legislature and to give a meaning to the whole enactment, the court will not construe the second proviso as if the officers mentioned in the first proviso were repeated in the second.

REG. v. FOX.

Welsby (Scotland with him), contra, was not called upon to argue.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We need not trouble Mr. Welsby on the other side. I believe we are all of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Q.B. ought to be affirmed. With respect to the object of the Legislature, I own I entertain no doubt that they intended not merely that the clerk to the justices should not be employed in the prosecution, but that he should have no interest in it, and that it should not be an object with him to multiply prosecutions, and to get arraignments, on account of the interest between himself and his partner in a particular fee, or to have any bias to advise the justices to commit a person to take his trial. That being the object of the Legislature, I do not think that we ought to adopt a strained construction of the statute. In reality, in all cases the object of the court should be to learn what is the true construction, and not what is a strict construction on the one hand, or a loose construction on the other; the object should be to get at what is the true construction; and for some time I have discarded any such notion as that there are two constructions of the same words, one to be adopted if it is a remedial statute, and the other if it is a penal one. I think you ought to get the true construction, and apply it to both cases. I think that the judgment of the Court of Q.B. is right. I think that the meaning of the word "interested" cannot be confined in the way in which my brother Pigott invites us to confine it, and therefore that the objection founded on the meaning of the word "interested" cannot be sustained. With respect to the other objection I quite agree with the rest of the court in thinking that the objection (which was not taken in the court below), that this is an indictment, and not a proceeding for the penalty, cannot be sustained, inasmuch as, when you come to look at the section, you find that the present defendant is not within that part of the clause which imposes a penalty of 100*l.* As to the obiter dictum of my brother Wightman, that the defendant's being interested would not disqualify him, but only subject him to a penalty, what he meant probably was, that it would make him liable to the provisions of the Act of Parliament. It turns out that it would not subject him to a penalty, but would make him liable to an indictment. I own I had thought that wherever an act was declared to be in itself unlawful, it was understood that, although the mere creating a penalty which imported that the Legislature did not approve of the act, would not subject a man to a prosecution; yet when the act was declared to be unlawful, and the liability to a penalty was something added to that, the party was liable to an indictment; and I had thought that that was the view taken by the courts. I do not, however, found my judgment on that view of the matter, but upon this—in reality the present defendant is not within the clause. For these reasons it appears to me and to the rest of the court, that the judgment of the Court of Q. B. must be affirmed.

MARTIN, B.—It seems to me that this case comes directly within the words of the Act of Parliament. I cannot conceive how any language could express more clearly than this does what was intended. If I were to speculate on what the Legislature had in view, I should not doubt that this was the very thing they intended to prevent. As to the second question, the answer is, that the defendant is not liable to the penalty, because he is not one of the persons enumerated, for he is neither an alderman, a councillor, a clerk of the peace of the borough, or the partner, or the clerk in the employment of such clerk of the peace.

CROWDER, J.—I am of the same opinion. These words are very large, and I think they are properly large, with a view to bring a case of this sort within the scope of what I think must have been the intention of the Legislature, that persons who are called on to advise magistrates should not have a pecuniary interest in prosecutions. It is said there is no individual prosecution in which he is interested and employed. The fact is, that Mr. Fox is interested in getting as many prosecutions as possible (I am speaking, of course, not against Mr. Fox personally, but a person so acting would have a pecuniary interest in increasing the number of prosecutions), in order that his partner the clerk of the peace may obtain fees which he would divide with him. Certainly, as far as pecuniary interest is concerned, this is one of the strongest cases that could be put. I do not at all agree with what has been suggested by my brother Pigott, that "interested" must mean interested in a particular prosecution. If the party derives any pecuniary interest, that is sufficient. Upon the other point I am also of the same opinion as that which has been expressed by the other members of the Court. I think that the case was rightly decided by the Court of Q. B., and that the judgment of that court ought to be affirmed.

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion.

WATSON, B.—I am of the same opinion.

CHANNELL, B.—I am of the same opinion.

WARD AND ANOTHER v. LOWNDES.

Pleading—Public Health Act—Mandamus to local

WARD AND ANOTHER v. LOWNDEN.

board to levy rate—17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 68, 71—11 & 12 Vict. 63, s. 89—"Charge incurred."

In an action against the clerk of a local board of health, the declaration alleged a contract out of which the claim accrued and the circumstances under which the liability of the defendant arose, and concluded by claiming 500l. The second count incorporated by reference the allegations in the first and following, the form required by the C.L.P.A. 1854, s. 69, and concluded by claiming a writ of mandamus, commanding the defendant to levy a rate "for the payment of the said debts and moneys so due and owing to the plaintiffs as aforesaid."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that after a verdict for the plaintiff, the omission in the second count of any specific sum as claimed was immaterial, and that the claim for the mandamus was insufficiently stated.

Commissioners under the Tunstall Improvement Act became indebted to plaintiffs for work, labour, &c., between 1848 and 1853. Whilst the debt was owing the General Board of Health published a provisional order, which was confirmed by the Public Health Supplemental Act 1855, by which order the Public Health Act 1848 was applied to Tunstall, the powers of the improvement commissioners ceased, and their property, &c., was transferred to the Tunstall Local Board of Health; and it was ordered that debts contracted by the commissioners should be satisfied by the local board out of such parts of the transferred property as would have been chargeable therewith if such order had not been made, and should be paid by the local board as by the commissioners, provided that if such property was insufficient, the deficiency should be charged upon the rates leviable under the Public Health Act 1848. Plaintiffs brought this action more than six years after the debt accrued, and claimed a writ of mandamus to levy a rate for the payment of the debt:

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that a plea of the Statute of Limitations was bad, as being no bar to the claim for a mandamus:

Held, also (affirming the judgment of the court below), that a plea, founded on the 89th section of the Public Health Act 1848, which stated that "the cause of claim for such writ did not accrue within six months before action brought, and that the said debts were not nor are a charge or expense incurred by the said local board within six months before writ, or within six months before demand of the said rate," was bad; that the 89th section does not apply to charges and expenses incurred by the commissioners and transferred by them to the local board of health, which were made a charge upon the rates, but that it was intended solely to prohibit retrospective rates for charges and expenses incurred by the local board more than six months before the rate.

Held further (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the amount of the debt might be ascertained by the verdict of a jury in an action in which the writ of mandamus was claimed.

Declaration.—Henry Ward and Henry Ward the younger sue Joseph Lowndes as, and who at the commencement of the suit was, the clerk to the Local Board of Health for the township of Tunstall, duly appointed under the provisions and for the purposes of the Public Health Act 1848, for that after the making and passing of the Tunstall Improvement Act 1847, and before the making the provisional order hereinafter mentioned, the Tunstall Improvement Commissioners in the last-mentioned Act mentioned, in pursuance of its provisions, published an advertisement, offering a premium of 20l. to the architect who should produce the best plan for a covered market-house and hotel, provided that the person furnishing the selected plans should not afterwards be employed as architect for the said buildings, and the plaintiffs say they being architects, produced a plan which was the best and most approved for the said covered market-house and hotel, and thereby became entitled to receive from the said commissioners the said premium of 20l., and the plaintiffs were not, nor was either of them, employed as architects for the said buildings, yet the commissioners did not pay the said premium, which at the time of the making the provisional order hereinafter mentioned was wholly due to the plaintiffs. And the plaintiffs further say that after the passing of the said Tunstall Improvement Act, and before and at the time of the making of the provisional order hereinafter mentioned, the said commissioners became and were indebted to the plaintiffs for work done and materials provided by the plaintiffs for the said commissioners, at their request, in preparing and altering certain plans and estimates for a new market place and buildings, then proposed to be erected by the said commissioners under and in pursuance of the powers and provisions of the last-mentioned Act. And the plaintiffs further say that afterwards, and whilst all the said moneys in the declaration mentioned were due and owing to the plaintiffs, the General Board of Health, in the Public Health Act 1848 mentioned, duly and in pursuance of the powers and provisions of the last-mentioned Act, made a certain provisional order under their hands and seal of office, and duly published and deposited the same as by the last-mentioned Act is directed, and that afterwards by the Public Health Supplemental Act 1855 it was enacted that the said provisional order should be, and the same was thereby confirmed and made absolute. And the plaintiffs further say that in and by the said order it was, and is amongst other things, ordered and directed that the Public Health Act 1848, should apply to and be in force within and throughout the entire area, places and parts of places comprised within the boundaries of the said township of Tunstall, and that the said township should be and constitute a district for the purpose of the said Public Health Act accordingly; that the local board of health to be elected for the said township should consist of twenty-four persons; that such parts of the said Tunstall Improvement Act 1847 as were specified in the schedule to the said order should be repealed, except as in the said order is excepted; that the powers, authorities and duties of the commissioners for the time being acting in the execution of the Tunstall Improvement Act 1847 should cease; that all the property and estate of the said commissioners acting in execution of the Tunstall Improvement Act 1847 should be transferred to the Tunstall board of health, and should, as near as circumstances would permit, be held by the said local board of health upon the same trusts and for the same purposes as by the said commissioners; that all debts, moneys and securities for money contracted or payable by the commissioners should be satisfied by the said local board out of such parts of the said transferred property and estate as would have been chargeable therewith if the said order had not been made, and should be paid and satisfied by the said local board as by the said commissioners, provided always that if such property and estate were insufficient for that purpose, the deficiency should be charged upon the rates leviable under the said Public Health Act 1848, in the parts only which would have been chargeable with such deficiency if the said order had not been made. And the plaintiffs further say that by the said order, so confirmed as aforesaid, certain property and estate of the said Tunstall Improvement Commissioners became and was before this suit transferred to the said local board of health, which last-mentioned property and estate would, if the said order had not been made, have been chargeable with the said debts and moneys so due and owing by the said commissioners to the plaintiffs as aforesaid, and which at the commencement of this suit were in the hands of the said local board of health, and sufficient to satisfy and applicable to the satisfaction and payment of the said debts and moneys so due and owing to the plaintiffs, and out of which the said local board of health ought to have paid and satisfied the same; and though everything has been done by the plaintiffs on their parts, and everything has happened necessary to entitle them to be satisfied their said debts and moneys out of the last-mentioned property and estate, yet the said local board of health have not paid or satisfied the same or any part thereof. And the plaintiffs further say, that after the making of the said order, and after the said property and estate of the said commissioners were so transferred as aforesaid, the said property and estate so transferred were insufficient for the purpose of satisfying certain of the debts and moneys theretofore contracted and payable by the said commissioners, and which said property and estate would have been chargeable therewith if the said order had not been made; and thereupon the said local board of health, in pursuance of the said order, levied certain rates under the said Public Health Act 1848, for the purpose of satisfying the said deficiency in the parts only which would have been chargeable with such deficiency if the said order had not been made, and thereupon the said sums so due and owing to the plaintiffs as aforesaid, and being and forming part of such last-mentioned debts and moneys, became and were, under and by virtue of the order, chargeable and charged upon the said rates so levied as aforesaid. And the plaintiffs further say that, although at the commencement of this suit there was in the hands of the local board of health sufficient of the rates so levied as last aforesaid to satisfy the said debts and moneys so due and owing to the plaintiffs as aforesaid; and though everything has been done by them on their parts, and everything has happened necessary to entitle them to be paid and satisfied their said debts and moneys out of the said rates so then in the hands of the said local board of health as aforesaid, yet the said local board have not paid or satisfied the same or any part thereof, and the plaintiffs claim 500*l*.

Second count.—And the plaintiffs further say that the Tunstall Improvement Commissioners, in the said declaration hereinbefore mentioned, and for the purpose therein mentioned, published the advertisement therein mentioned, and the plaintiffs became entitled to receive payment from the said commissioners of the said sum of 20*l*. as therein mentioned; and the said commissioners became and were indebted to the plaintiffs in manner and form as therein alleged; and that whilst the said moneys were due and owing to the plaintiffs from the said commissioners as therein alleged, the General Board of Health therein mentioned made, published and deposited the said provisional order as therein alleged, and the said order was confirmed and made absolute as therein alleged, and that in and by the said order it was, amongst other things, ordered and directed as hereinbefore alleged and set forth, and that the said property and estate of the said Tunstall Improvement Commissioners became and were transferred to the said local board of health as therein alleged, and that the said property and estate of the said Tunstall Improvement Commissioners so transferred were insufficient to satisfy the said debts and moneys so due and payable to the plaintiffs as aforesaid, and which would have been chargeable therewith if the said order had not been made; and the said debts and moneys became and were a deficiency chargeable and to be charged upon a rate leviable and to be levied by the local board of health under the Public Health Act, in pursuance of the said provisional order, and by reason of the said debts and moneys being still owing, and of there becoming and being such deficiency as aforesaid, the plaintiffs became and were and are personally interested in the levying a rate to be charged and chargeable with such last-mentioned deficiency, within the meaning of the last Common Law Procedure Act 1854, to wit, to the amount of all the said debts and moneys so aforesaid due and owing to them as aforesaid; and the plaintiffs being so interested, afterwards and at a reasonable time before the commencement of this suit, demanded of and required the said local board of health to levy, in pursuance of the said provisional order, a rate, under the said Public Health Act, for the payment of such debts and moneys, but the said local board of health wholly neglected and refused so to do; and the plaintiffs have thereby, and by reason of the non-performance by the said local board of health of their duty in that behalf, sustained damage to the amount of all the debts and moneys so due and owing to them as in the first count mentioned; and therefore the plaintiffs claim a writ of mandamus commanding the defendant to levy, in pursuance of the said provisional order, a rate, under the Public Health Act 1848, for the payment of the said debts and moneys so due and owing to the plaintiffs as aforesaid.

The defendant pleaded sixteen pleas, of which the fifteenth and sixteenth only were material to the present question.

Plea 15.—That the alleged causes of action did not accrue within six years from the commencement of the suit.

Plea 16.—The same, being to so much of the declaration as claims a writ of mandamus commanding the defendant to levy, in pursuance of the said provisional order, a rate under the Public Health Act, 1848, for payment of the debts and moneys so alleged to be due and owing to the plaintiffs. The defendant says that the alleged cause of claim for such writ, exclusive of the demand for a rate in the declaration mentioned, did not accrue within six calendar months before this suit, and that the said alleged debts and moneys, or any part thereof, were not, nor are, a charge or expense incurred by the local board of health, at any time within six calendar months before the suit, or within six calendar months before the said demand for the said rate, wherefore the said defendant, or the said local board of health, cannot therefore by law now make or levy a rate for the payment thereof, or any part thereof, or any such rate as the plaintiffs claim that the defendant should be commanded to make as aforesaid.

Issue was joined on all the pleas excepting the sixteenth. Demurrers to the fifteenth and sixteenth pleas, and joinder therein.

The plaintiffs entered a nolle prosequi as to the whole of their claim against the defendant, excepting as to their claim for a writ of mandamus.

The cause was tried before Channell, B. at the last spring assizes at Gloucester, when the defendant had a verdict on the fifteenth plea, as to the sum of 20*l*., and the plaintiffs on the other issues, with 35*l*. 10*s*. damages. A rule having been subsequently obtained in arrest of judgment, the Court of Q.B., after argument, gave judgment upon the demurrers, and upon the rule in favour of the plaintiff. Against this decision the defendant now brought his writ of error.

M. Smith, Q.C. (M. Mahon with him) for the defendant.—As to the demurrer to the sixteenth plea, that plea is good. That plea is founded on the 89th section of the Public Health Act 1848, which enacts "that the local board of health may make and levy the said special and general district rates, or any or either of them, prospectively, in order to raise money for the payment of future charges and expenses; or retrospectively, in order to raise money for the payment of charges and expenses which may have been incurred at any time within six months before the making of the rate." The debt claimed was due from the commissioners to the plaintiffs before the provisional order mentioned in the declaration was made; and by that provisional order, which has the force of an Act of Parliament, the commissioners were abolished, and their property transferred to the local board of health. The demand should have been made within six months from such transfer, but here there was no duty upon the defendant to make the rate, for the charge was not incurred within six months of the demand, and the six months began to run directly the deficiency in the chargeable property transferred by the commissioners was ascertained; after the six months the remedy is lost, and the effect of a mandamus would be to charge parties not legally liable. The debt of the plaintiff was an ordinary simple contract debt; 20*l.* is for the premium for the plan, and the larger part of the claim is for work and labour done. The debt was due at the time the powers of the commissioners were transferred to the local board; the order was made in 1855, and confirmed by Act of Parliament, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 125. This debt became a charge upon the rate as soon as the order was published and confirmed. [MARTIN, B.—Is not the six months confined to rates which they are willing to make? In the judgment of Erle, C. J., with reference to the case of Waddington v. The City of London Union, 28 L. J. 113, M. C., heard before him and the other judges of the Court of Q.B., when he sat there, and communicated by him to me, there is a distinction between rates made for the poor generally, and rates made under an Act of Parliament.] Lord Campbell, C.J. in his judgment in the court below says: "The 89th section applies only to rates to be made to defray expenses incurred by the board, and not to cases like the present, where the charge is cast upon the rates. When by Act of Parliament it is provided that a debt shall be a charge upon the rates, that impliedly gives a power to raise a rate to answer the charge." The six months began to run as soon as the claim became a charge, and it became a charge as soon as there was a deficiency. [WILLIAMS, J.—The insufficiency of the fund is a fact which exists, although it may not be ascertained.] Lord Campbell seems to have thought that a special rate might have been made to satisfy this demand; but that is not so. The order says that if the property and estate is insufficient, the insufficiency should be charged upon rates leviable under the Public Health Act; this was a charge incurred after and by reason of the transfer. [BYLES, J.—Do you maintain that if there had been no other demand and no other claim, a rate could have been made?] Yes; a general rate ought to have been made as soon as the debt accrued, and within six months after. [MARTIN, B.—Suppose they deny their liability and so postpone it for more than six months.] That supposition is explained away in Reg. v. Local Board of Rotherham, 8 E. & B. 906. The judgment would be a fresh charge, for which a rate might be made. Why should persons coming into the parish five or six years after be rated for these expenses? [MARTIN, B.—Because they had the misfortune to have had commissioners.] All the cases were fully considered by this court in the case of Waddington v. City of London, 28 L. J. 113, M. C.; and there it was held by this court, reversing the judgment of the Q. B., that the contribution order made by the guardians was wholly invalid, as being made in part to pay old debts; that the guardians had no power by law to make a retrospective order, nor overseers to make a retrospective poor-rate. The statute was intended to make a limitation, and the Legislature thought six months a reasonable time. The decision of the court below was wrong, for according to it there would be no limit.

Then, as to the fifteenth plea. That plea is a good answer to the mandamus. [WILLES, J.—The jury have found, as to the 20*l.*, for the defendant; the Statute of Limitations does not apply to such a proceeding as this.] Then I am entitled to arrest the judgment. You can only proceed by mandamus in cases where you could proceed by action against a private individual. This is an ordinary debt for work and labour. Kendall v. King, 17 C.B. 483, shows an action may be brought against the committee of a lunatic asylum on a contract entered into by them for plans, though the judgment could not be enforced. The writ of mandamus is a sort of statutable execution given by the C.L.P.A. 1854, but the Statute of Limitations is a good bar. This is neither a specialty debt nor a statutory debt, and the fifteenth plea is a good bar, and the judgment of the court on that plea ought to be for the defendant. The count in the declaration praying a mandamus is bad in arrest of judgment. The point taken in the court below was that you could not have a prayer for a mandamus for unliquidated damages. What is there that gives the jury the right to ascertain an amount? The first count was abandoned, but the second refers to the first, and for the purpose of ascertaining what are the allegations referred to we must look to it. The first count then alleges a contract out of which the claim had accrued and the circumstances under which the defendant's liability arose, and it concludes with claiming 500*l.*; then the second count incorporates by reference the allegations in the first, and following the form required by the C. L. P. A. 1854, concludes by claiming a writ of mandamus commanding the defendant to levy a rate for the payment of the said debts and moneys so due and owing to the plaintiffs; but the amount is unascertained, and the defect is not supplied by the claim for 500*l.* in the first count. There must be an action in which the amount may be ascertained, and the question of right be established. No new obligation was created by the C. L. P. A., but only a more convenient mode of procedure. [CHANNELL, B.—Must we not take it upon this record that there is a sufficient debt alleged?] There is no amount stated; the amount must be known and demanded, and payment refused. How can a jury assess and fix a proper amount? [CROWDER, J.—They have done so.] Yes; but they were not warranted in so doing by the record. [BYLES, J.—The record says that the commissioners owed the plaintiffs then a large sum of money for work and labour.] Yes; but the amount is not stated; no specific amount is claimed. [WILLES, J.—I believe in the old books it would not be difficult to find cases in which plaintiffs had failed in actions of debt for want of proof of the amount alleged to a farthing; then, to remedy that, the action of indebitatus assumpsit was introduced; and in course of time the judges became accustomed to that, and their minds being softened, they applied the same practice to actions of debt; and then the C. L. P. A. altered that, and said that it should not be necessary to state an amount in any case. Can we hold that in this case it was intended by the Legislature that the courts should act differently to what they do in other cases?]

Dowdeswell (Pigott, Serjt. with him) contra.—The limitation of six months for making retrospective rates points to debts incurred by the local boards themselves, and not to such as this, which is imposed by statute: (see 2 Chitt. Stats. 370, note C.) The subsequent Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 125, ss. 10, 11), confirming the provisional order, makes that clear. That order, when so confirmed, acquired the force of an Act of Parliament. Considerable property was vested in the board of health, and in consideration they took upon themselves the debts and liabilities of the commissioners, and they were to pay and satisfy them out of the property and estate, and if they were insufficient for that purpose, the deficiency was to be charged upon the rates leviable under the Public Health Act 1848. Not only were debts to be satisfied, but securities also; could it therefore be held that a man holding a bond must come and claim it within six months? Is it to be supposed that the Act should intend to impose on a person who had the security not only of the rates, but also of the property, a condition that if he did not come in within six months he should lose all right? Then it is said that an action should be brought and judgment recovered; but the Act is not to be so construed. [BYLES, J.—Would an action lie by the present plaintiffs against the local board under the words of the order?] Not unless they had funds; it would be necessary to aver that defendants had funds. How could the plaintiffs know anything of the affairs of the local board of health? It would be the greatest injustice to creditors, and it cannot be supposed that the statute intended to impose on creditors the necessity of immediately rushing into litigation. The words of the statute and order are clear; the one imposes a limit, the other none.

The Court intimated that they were all of opinion that the statute of James was no bar.

M. Smith, Q.C. in reply.—The current of the cases and of legislation has been to prevent those who do not incur liabilities from being saddled with them. The 89th section says that "the local board of health may make and levy the said special and general district rates, or any or either of them, prospectively, in order to raise money for the payment of future charges and expenses; or retrospectively, in order to raise money for the payment of charges and expenses which may have been incurred at any time within six months from the making of the rate." The local board are placed in the position of the commissioners. How is an amount of unliquidated damages to be ascertained? The work might be badly done, or there might be other circumstances constituting a good defence. The new body are placed in the position of the old, with all their rights and liabilities, and the right of action is transferred with other things. The maxim exigantibus et non dormientibus jura subveniunt applies; here the plaintiffs have slept upon their rights, which is not permitted; whereas in the present case the body upon whom the burden is to fall is a fluctuating one. In 1855 this claim became a charge upon the rates, and an action might then have been brought against the commissioners, and the judgment would have been a new charge. The expression "charges and expenses incurred" cannot mean voluntary charges. The case of bonds, put by the other side, is not applicable. This is an implied contract, but every instalment on a bond would become a fresh charge. The case does not come within the Act, and no rate can lawfully be made to pay this debt. Southampton Bridge Company v. Local Board of Southampton, 8 E. & B. 801, was cited.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the Q.B. must be affirmed. The first question is, whether the sixteenth plea is a good answer, and whether the provision contained in the 89th section of the Public Health Act 1848 applies to such a charge as this. I am of opinion that it does not. The 16th plea says that the alleged cause of claim of the writ of mandamus did not accrue within six calendar months before the suit, and that the alleged debts and moneys, or any part thereof, were not, nor are, a charge or expense incurred by the local board of health at any time within six calendar months before the suit, or within six calendar months before the demand for the rate; wherefore the defendant, or the local board, cannot lawfully make a rate for payment thereof. Looking at the language of the Act, I do not think that the present demand is such a charge incurred by them within the meaning of that section. The debt cannot be said to have been incurred by them; it was incurred by the commissioners, and was transferred to them; and it is not therefore within the language employed in the Act, namely, a charge incurred by them. To hold the contrary would be putting a harsh construction upon the words of the section, and lead to injustice to the plaintiffs. Are the six months, beyond which the defendant says the rate cannot be levied, to begin to run from the date of the order of transfer to the local board, or from the time of ascertaining the deficiency in the property? But in either way, to put the construction for which Mr. Smith contended would be to perpetrate an injustice that the Act could never have contemplated. Six months might not be sufficient time for ascertaining whether there were assets to meet the claim; then, inasmuch as it is plain that this proceeding cannot be sustained unless there is an ascertained deficiency, it would be driving the plaintiffs to proceed at their peril, and hard indeed to make them ascertain within six months and might be utterly impossible. On the whole, I think that plea is bad. Then as to the fifteenth plea, is the plea of the Statute of Limitations an answer to this demand? The plea is general; it says that the alleged causes of action did not accrue within six years from the commencement of the suit; but there is no statute which limits the time within which a party may seek his remedy by mandamus. Then as to the declaration, I think the plaintiff has averred everything necessary to enable him to obtain this remedy, and has shown sufficient to entitle him to a mandamus.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion, and I think that to yield to Mr. Smith's argument would be to give a strained construction, and unsettle the natural meaning of the words used; and as to the sixteenth plea, I think it is bad. With respect to the fifteenth plea, the Statute of Limitations, I am not aware that there is any limitation of six years to a claim for the writ of mandamus. I must not be understood to say that if the debt had been barred, and that had been properly pleaded, that it would not be a good plea; but here it is not so pleaded, but only to the claim for the mandamus. I think the judgment should be affirmed.

CROWDER, J.—I am of the same opinion. [His Lordship read the 89th section of the Act and the sixteenth plea.] The Court of Q.B. held that the plaintiffs' claim was not a charge incurred by the local board, and it seems to me that it would be difficult to say when it could be a charge incurred by them within the meaning of the 89th section. Here, beyond all doubt, the charge was incurred by the commissioners under the local Act, and that charge was transferred to the local board. But when was it incurred? It cannot be at the time of transfer, and can we say this is such a charge as is to be levied under the 89th section? No rate could be levied until a deficiency was ascertained. After the transfer of the debt to the local board, some period of time must elapse before the deficiency was ascertained. It must be either for the plaintiffs or for the defendant to ascertain it; but in either case the six months might elapse before it was ascertained. The contention that the statute could have intended such injustice cannot be supported. The sixteenth plea, therefore, is no answer. As to the fifteenth plea, looking at the pleadings, and that it is pleaded to the mandamus, I think it does not apply; and as to the point in arrest of judgment, I think that the declaration sets out all that is necessary to entitle the plaintiff to a mandamus, and that therefore the judgment of the court below ought to be affirmed.

WILLES, J. concurred.

CHANNELL, B.—I am of the same opinion. I adopt the arguments of the plaintiffs and the judgments of my learned brothers as to the sixteenth plea, and I think the construction put by Mr. Dowdswell upon the 89th

LADD v. GOULD.

section was the correct one, and I think the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

BYLES, J.—I think that this declaration is good, and that the fifteenth plea is no answer to the claim for the mandamus. The 68th section of the C.L.P.A. 1854 provides a mode for enforcing a duty by mandamus and applies to all cases where a man has a duty to discharge; but that is not a proceeding to which the statute of James is applicable. On the whole, I am inclined to agree with the rest of the court, that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

LADD (appellant) v. GOULD (respondent).

Summary Proceedings (Justices) Act—Case—Matter of fact—Medical Practitioners Act.

The Medical Practitioners Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 40) enacts that any person who shall wilfully and falsely pretend to be or take or use the name or title of (inter alia) surgeon, or any name, title, addition or description, implying that he is registered under the Act, or that he is recognised by law as (inter alia) a licentiate in medicine and surgery shall, upon a summary conviction, pay a sum not exceeding 20l. It is a question of fact for magistrates to decide, and not one of law to be reserved for the opinion of this court, whether, by the use of the word "surgeon," coupled with "dentist," or "mechanical dentist," or "chiroprodist," or such like titles, and the other facts in each case, the party proceeded against is guilty of the offence created by the above enactment.

Case stated by the magistrates at Kingston-upon-Thames for the opinion of this court.

On the 11th Oct. last an information was laid before the magistrates at Kingston-upon-Thames against Frederick Gould, under the 40th section of the Medical Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 90), for that he did, at his residence in Eden-street, Kingston, take and use the title of surgeon without legal qualification, he not being registered under the Medical Act; and that in that capacity he treated one Charlotte Tenniswood for a surgical complaint, and supplied her with medicine for the same, contrary to the form of the statute, for which said medicine he was paid, and for which said offence he had forfeited a sum not exceeding 20l.

When the information was heard the prosecution was conducted by Mr. Ladd, the secretary of the London Medical Registration Society; and it was proved by the informant Charlotte Tenniswood, that on the 5th Aug. last she went to Gould's shop, and told him she had knocked her elbow, and that it caused a great numbness in her arm and fingers. Gould examined her arm, and said she had undoubtedly jarred the marrow of the bone, and gave her a liniment, for which she paid him 1s. She said she noticed that he had "surgeon" on the side of his door, and she believed him to be a surgeon, or she would not have gone to him; but she afterwards said that the word "surgeon" was followed by the words "and mechanical dentist." It was also proved that Gould's name, with the words "chemist and druggist," was on his shop front, and that the woman went to his shop, which was also a chemist's and druggist's, because, she said, she thought he would supply her with something cheaper than by going to a doctor's. She also stated that she had made no complaint to the registration society, but that, on the day after she had got the liniment, she consulted a surgeon, Mr. Ellis, and that he gave her a lotion and told her not to use the liniment. Mr. Ellis afterwards called upon her with a gentleman, and asked her name, and said they should want her as a witness.

The magistrates were of opinion that Gould had used the word "surgeon" simply to show what branches of the business of a dentist he carried on, and not to represent himself as a surgeon within the meaning of the Act; and, at all events, there was not sufficient evidence that he wilfully (as well as falsely) pretended to, or took, or used the name of a surgeon or other title implying that he was recognised by law as a surgeon.

They thereupon dismissed the information, but, at the request of the appellant (Mr. Ladd), stated this case, and submitted three questions for the opinion of this court, which may be summed up in one—viz., whether, upon the evidence, Mr. Gould was guilty of the offence contemplated by the Act.

LUSH, Q.C. for the appellant.—This case raises the question whether the use of the word "surgeon" in connection with the words "and mechanical dentist," was a using of the title of a surgeon within the 40th section of the Medical Act. The question was whether on the evidence the party was guilty.

CROMPTON, J.—That is a question on which the magistrates were bound to draw their own conclusion from the facts.

COCKBURN, C. J.—I do not think there was any false pretence in using the name of a surgeon.

CROMPTON, J.—The respondent has called himself "surgeon and mechanical dentist," which he thought meant much the same as "surgeon-dentist."

COCKBURN, C. J.—The magistrates were of opinion that the case was not within the Act, and I should have come to the same conclusion.

CROMPTON, J.—I think there was evidence upon which the magistrates might have found either way, but the court will not find for them.

LUSH, Q.C.—The magistrates meant to leave to the court whether the evidence brought the party within the meaning of the Act.

COCKBURN, C. J.—I do not think it does, but this is a question of fact. It is like the case of persons who call themselves "surgeon-dentists," who are known generally not to be surgeons, though some of them are.

CROMPTON, J.—It is like the case of the "surgeon-chiroprodists." But it is a matter of fact for the magistrates. The statute gives power to put questions of law only to this court, not questions of fact.

COCKBURN, C. J.—I do not think there was any falsehood, or any intention to deceive, which was necessary in order to bring the case within the Act. That was also the opinion of the magistrates, though they might have come to a different opinion.

CROMPTON, J., said he thought there was evidence upon which the magistrates might have come to either conclusion, but he could not say they were bound to convict. (a)

Judgment for respondent.

Wednesday, Jan. 25.

THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF LLANLLECHID (respondents) and THE PARISH OFFICERS OF PISTYLL (appellant).

Poor-law—Order of removal—Suspension—When to be made.

The suspension of an order of removal must be made by the justices at the time they make the order of removal itself. Where, therefore, an order of removal was made on the 28th Sept., and the indorsement of suspension was not made until the 26th Oct. following: Held (Wightman, J. dissentiente) that the suspension was bad, and that the costs of maintenance could not be recovered.

(a) This case must be understood as not deciding the question whether the use of the title of surgeon, &c. is prohibited, but only that it was a question of fact for the justices, whether the title "surgeon" separated from the title "dentist," by the word "mechanical" was a using of the title "surgeon" or a distinct title constituted of the whole description together. It appears to me that the justices were wrong in their interpretation of the term, but it was clearly a question of fact and not of law, and therefore not the subject of appeal.

Q. B.] THE CHURCHWARDENS, & C. OF LLANLLECHID v. THE PARISH OFFICERS OF PISTILL. [Q. B.]

This was a case stated by the sessions for the opinion of this court upon an appeal. It appeared that on the 28th Sept. 1849 an order was made by justices for the removal of one Jane Jones. On the 26th Oct. following this order was suspended by reason of the pauper's sickness. On the 2nd Nov. 1858 an order was made for the payment of the expenses of the maintenance of the pauper under such suspended order. The appellants appealed against this order, and the sessions quashed it, subject to the present case.

By sect. 2 of the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, after reciting that, "whereas poor persons are often removed or passed to the place of their settlement during the time of their sickness, to the great danger of their lives," enacts, "that in case any poor person shall from henceforth be brought before any justice or justices of the peace for the purpose of being removed from the place where he or she is inhabiting or sojourning, by virtue of any order of removal, and it shall appear to the said justice or justices that such poor person is unable to travel by reason of sickness or other infirmity or that it would be dangerous for him or her so to do, the justice or justices making such order of removal are hereby authorised to suspend the execution of the same until they are satisfied that it may safely be executed without danger to any person who is the subject thereof, which suspension shall be indorsed on the said order of removal and signed by such justice or justices."

Beavan appeared in support of the order of sessions, and argued that the sessions were right, for that the suspension of the order of removal was bad inasmuch as it was not made at the same time as the order of removal, which the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 2, requires; for although it is not absolutely necessary that the pauper should be present at the time when the order of removal is made, the suspension of it must take place at the time when the order of removal itself is made: (R. v. Everdon, 9 East, 101; 49 Geo. 3, c. 124, s. 1.)

B. C. Robinson, contra, contended that the suspension of the order need not be made at the time of the making of the order of removal, and that the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 2, should have a liberal construction so as to meet such a case as the present, it being immaterial to the merits of the case whether the suspension takes place at the exact time of the making of the order of removal or some days after, and that it had already been held under this statute that the pauper need not be actually present when the order of removal is made, though the section in terms says, "in case any poor person shall from henceforth be brought before any justice," &c.: (Reg. v. Everdon, supra; Reg. v. Llanwinio, 4 T. R. 473.)

COCKBURN, C. J.—I am of opinion that the order of sessions quashing the order for costs of maintenance is good. I am very desirous, if possible, by giving a liberal construction to this statute, to remedy the mischief which has arisen; but upon looking to the statute I think the second section applies to cases only where sickness is brought to the attention of the justices at the time of the making of the order of removal. [His Lordship here read the words of the second section.] I think, if the meaning of the Legislature was that such an order of suspension might be made at a subsequent time, it would have spoken of the order of removal in the past, and not alone in the present tense, and would not merely have referred to sickness at the time of the making of the order, but of any subsequent sickness. The Legislature has not done so. I quite agree that the mischief in the one case may be quite as great as in the other, but we shall be straining the meaning of words, which acting judicially we ought not to do, it being for the Legislature alone to remedy the evil if it thinks fit.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that the court was at liberty to put a more liberal construction upon the section, and that, under the circumstances, the suspension of the order of removal was not illegal.

CHROMPTON, J.—I have looked anxiously to see if the Act could be so construed as to support this order of suspension; but, as I read the Act of Parliament, it seems to me that it only gives the justices the power of suspending the order if it appears to them, at the time of making the order of removal, that the party is too ill to be removed. I find no machinery giving the justices a new jurisdiction to make an order of suspension after the time of making the order of removal. Reg. v. Everdon shows that we have a judicial power under the section; and Lord Ellenborough put a judicial exposition upon such a case, and held that it was sufficient if the case of the pauper was brought judicially before the magistrates for the purpose of his removal, without his being actually present. I cannot see my way to say that the jurisdiction contended for is given by the statute. We must be careful not ourselves to legislate to remedy an evil.

HILL, J.—I agree with my Lord and my brother Crompton that this order was bad. It is impossible, I think, to escape from the words of the statute, that the suspension must be made whilst the case of the pauper is before the justices. If there is any inconvenience in this, it is not for the court to supply the remedy. (a)

Order of sessions confirmed.

REG. v. FITCH.

Metropolis Local Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120—Lighting rate—Scale of rate—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90. By the Metropolis Local Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, the district board are directed, in their orders to the overseers to levy rates, to distinguish in cases where the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90 (Lighting Act) has been in force, and under which land is rated in respect of lighting at a less amount than houses; and by sect. 165 it is enacted that in any parish in which at the time of the passing of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, the Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, is in force, "the owners and occupiers of houses, buildings and property other than land shall be rated by every lighting rate made under this Act at a rate in the pound three times greater than that at which the occupiers of land shall be rated in such lighting rate." Before the coming into operation of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, part only of the parish of Fulham was under the operation of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90. After the passing of the said 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, the whole of the parish of Fulham was (with another parish) formed in a district, and that part of the parish of Fulham not before under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, was assessed to a lighting-rate: Held, that such part was not entitled to have its land assessed at a lower rate than its houses; but that all the assessable property should be assessed at one rate, and that the higher rate.

This was a case stated by consent under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11, upon two appeals against a rate made under the Metropolis Local Management Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), for lighting the parish of Fulham, and another rate, being a general rate made by the same authority.

It appeared that, before the coming into operation of the above Act, a portion of the parish of Fulham had been under the operation of the Lighting and Watching Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90). Under that statute there is a power to levy and collect rates in the same manner as poor-rates, the 33rd section providing, "that the owners and occupiers of houses, buildings and property (other than land) rateable to the relief of the poor in any such parish, shall be rated at and pay a rate in the pound three times greater than that at which the owners and occupiers of land shall be rated at and pay for the purposes of this Act."

(a) This case is important, and should cause the justices to be very careful to make the suspended order of removal at the same time as they make the removal itself.

Q. B.] REG. v. FITCH—REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF AYLESFORD—CATES v. SOUTH. [Q. B.]

Under the Metropolis Local Management Act the parish of Fulham and the parish of St. Peter and St. Paul, Hammersmith, were formed into a district called the "Fulham District."

Under that statute the powers of the inspectors under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, ceased. And by sect. 158 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, powers are given to the district board to levy rates for the purposes of the Act. That section enacts, "that the district board shall from time to time require the overseers of the several parishes in their district to levy the sums which the board may require for defraying the expenses of the execution of the Act, and the board are to distinguish in their orders sums required for sewers, and also where the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, or any other Act by virtue whereof land is rated in respect of expenses of lighting at a less amount in proportion to the annual value thereof than houses, or is wholly exempted from being rated to such expenses, is in force in any parish or any part of any parish at the time of the passing of this Act, distinguish, as regards such parish or part, the sum required for defraying expenses of lighting their parish or district from sums required for defraying other expenses of executing this Act."

By the 165th section it is provided that in every parish or part of a parish in which at the time of the passing of this Act the Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, is in force, "the owners and occupiers of houses, buildings and property other than land shall be rated to every lighting-rate made under this Act at a rate in the pound three times greater than that at which the owners and occupiers of land shall be rated in such lighting-rate," &c.

It appeared that the board had duly rated the part of Fulham parish which had formerly been under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, but that now that they had assessed the remainder of the parish to the lighting-rate they were in doubt as to the principle to be adopted, and it appeared that in fact they had assessed the whole of such part upon the lower scale, irrespective of its consisting of houses or land. This was now admitted to be erroneous, and that the rate must be amended; but it was contended, on the part of the occupiers of land only in that part of the parish not before under the operation of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, that the occupiers of land only were entitled to be rated at one-third only the amount at which the occupiers of houses were rated, and that they were entitled to the advantage of this lower rating under the provisions of sect. 165 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, in the same way as though they had before been under the operation of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90.

Lush, Q.C. (Hunee with him) for the district board.—Whilst he admitted that the present rate was erroneous in being made upon the lower scale and must be amended, he contended that, as the part of Fulham parish now first assessed to a lighting-rate was not before the coming into operation of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, under the 3 & 4 Will. c. 90, it was not within the operation of sect. 165 of the former Act, and therefore that land had no exemption to be rated to the lighting-rate at a less rate than houses: (West Midlands Waterworks Company v. The Wandsworth District Board of Works, 31 L. T. Rep. 162.

Hawkins, Q.C. (Cleasby with him), contra, contended that the whole parish was now entitled to be rated to the lighting-rate upon the same principle, namely, that laid down in sect. 165 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, as though the whole parish had formerly been lighted under the 3 & 4 Will. c. 90, and that land should be rated at three times less than houses.

The Court, however, were clearly of opinion that the exemption in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, is kept alive only in those parts of the parish of Fulham to which it was formerly applied, and that the rest of the parish does not derive the same exemption under the provisions of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, and that the rate in respect of such other part of the parish should be uniform and upon the higher scale.

The lighting-rate to be amended accordingly.

Other points were argued which it is unnecessary to notice.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF AYLESFORD.

Police-rate—Lands held in ancient demesne.

Lands held by tenants in ancient demesne are not exempt from being assessed to the county and police-rates.

This was an appeal by the parish of Aylesford, Kent, against an assessment to the county police-rate. The sessions confirmed the rate, subject to a case.

It appeared that all the lands in the parish of Aylesford were, in the time of William the First, ancient demesne, and were so entered in Domesday, under the title of "Terra regia." They were afterwards granted by the Crown to private individuals, and have remained in such possession since the reign of Queen Mary. The possessors have always paid poor-rates, but by virtue of the tenure of the lands have enjoyed certain privileges, such as being exempt from serving upon juries at the assizes and sessions.

By the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 2, the justices are, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the county police, to make a fair and equal police-rate, assessable on all messuages, lands, &c., liable to the county rate; and by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 81, s. 2 (the County Rate Act), the justices are to appoint a committee for preparing a basis or standard for fair and equal county rates, such basis or standard to be founded and prepared rateably and equally according to the full and fair annual value of the property rateable to the relief of the poor in every parish, &c.

M. Smith, Q.C. (Deeds with him) appeared in support of the order of sessions, but the court called upon Pickering, Q.C. (Denman with him) who argued that tenants in ancient demesne were, amongst other privileges, free from all taxes and tallage imposed by Parliament except expressly exempt: (12 Geo. 2, c. 39; 4 Mau. & Sel. 437; Scriven, 2 vol. 582; Comyn's Dig. tit. "Ancient Demesne," let. K; 1 Salk. 57; Fitz. Nat. Bre. Bridgman, 277; 4 Inst.)

The Court were of opinion that the claim to the exemption was unsupported, and that tenants in ancient demesne were liable to be rated. Order affirmed.

Saturday, Nov. 12.

CATES (appellant) v. SOUTH (respondent).

Beerhouse—Saturday night—Sunday—11 & 12 Vict. c. 49.

On an information for opening a public-house for the sale of spirits before half-past twelve p.m. on Sunday, it appeared that the front door was open at twenty-two minutes past twelve on Sunday morning, and a policeman found in the commercial room four persons, one of whom was a traveller; there was a small quantity of spirits and water in a glass, from which one of the persons had been drinking. The landlady was sitting in the parlour. No spirits had been sold after twenty minutes before twelve o'clock on Saturday night:

Held, that the fact of the house being open at twenty-two minutes past twelve on Sunday morning was no proof that it was open for the sale of beer, &c., before half-past twelve on Sunday afternoon, within 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, and that the above stated facts did not warrant a conviction.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Essex, held at Great Dunmow in the said county, on the 4th July 1859, before us the Rev. Vicessimus Knox Child, clerk, and the Rev. Edward Francis Gepp, clerk.

An information by Daniel South, a police-constable, was heard against Francis Cates, an innkeeper and victualler at Great Dunmow aforesaid, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 1, charging that the said Francis Cates, being an innkeeper and victualler, on Sunday the 12th June 1859, at the Saracen's Head Inn, in the parish of Great Dunmow, in the said county of Essex, did unlawfully open his said house for the sale of spirits before half-past twelve o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, such spirits not being for the refreshment of travellers only.

From the evidence of Daniel South, John Langworthy and William Scott, three of the inhabitants of Dunmow, and of Susannah Polley, a servant of the appellant, it was proved that the front door of the appellant's inn was open at twenty-two minutes past twelve on Sunday morning, the 12th June last; that police-constable South went into the house and entered one of the rooms used for the reception of commercial travellers; that there were three persons in the room, namely, John Langworthy, William Scott and a traveller. There was a small quantity of whisky and water in one of the glasses, which the said John Langworthy had been drinking from. There was a mug and several other glasses on the table, which did not appear to have anything in them, but had been used that evening, and some of the persons were smoking. The landlady, the wife of the appellant, was in a parlour which adjoined and opened into the bar, when Daniel South, the policeman, entered.

It was proved that no spirits were brought into the room or paid for after twelve o'clock on Saturday night, and that the last spirits that were brought into the room were brought in and paid for at twenty minutes before twelve o'clock on Saturday night. The appellant proved that there were no other customers in the house except in the commercial room.

It was objected by the appellant's solicitor that there was no evidence of an actual sale of spirits after twelve o'clock on the Saturday night, and he contended the appellant was justified in keeping his house open for the accommodation of travellers and of his customers, if the liquor drunk by them was brought into the room and paid for before twelve o'clock on the Saturday night, whatever the quantity might be; and the fact of the street-door being open was not sufficient evidence that appellant opened his house for the sale of spirits.

We, the justices, considered the evidence supported the information, and the appellant was convicted and adjudged to pay a penalty of 20s. and costs.

The appellant being dissatisfied with such conviction, as being erroneous in point of law, demanded a case to be stated and signed for the opinion of her Majesty's judges of the Court of Q. B., which we hereby state and sign accordingly.

VICAR. KNOX CHILD.

E. F. GEPP.

The stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 1, enacts that no licensed victualler or person licensed, &c. shall open his house for the sale of wine, spirits, beer or other fermented or distilled liquors, or sell the same on Sundays before half-past twelve in the afternoon, &c. By sect. 2 it shall not be lawful for any licensed victualler, &c. to open his house for the sale of any other articles whatever within the respective times during which the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or other fermented or distilled liquor is thereinbefore prohibited, except as refreshment to travellers.

Lush, Q.C. for the appellant.—To support this conviction it must be held that if a man do not close his house before twelve o'clock on Saturday night, he opens it before half-past twelve on Sunday morning. There is nothing to show that the house was open for the sale of beer, &c.; customers were in the house, and the house was used by travellers; and a landlord is not bound to turn every customer out of his house at twelve o'clock; he is only bound to cease supplying them. [WIGHTMAN, J.—He must not supply them after that time; but the landlady may surely sit in her bar till they have gone.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is not found as a fact in the case that the house was kept open for the sale of beer and spirits; and I do not think we can draw that conclusion from the evidence. On the contrary, it is found that no liquor was supplied after twenty minutes to twelve on Saturday night. The conviction must therefore be quashed.

WIGHTMAN, HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.
— Conviction quashed.

OVERTON (appellant) v. HUNTER (respondent).

Alcouse—Innkeeper entertaining his guests with spirits—Prohibited hours—18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2. The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2, which prohibits licensed victuallers from opening or keeping open their houses for the sale of, or selling beer, wine, spirits, &c., after certain hours, does not apply to an innkeeper who, during the prohibited hours, is found gratuitously entertaining his guests with wine, beer, spirits, &c., though such guests are not travellers nor lodgers.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction of the appellant at the petty sessions for Chesterfield, for an offence under sect. 2 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, which enacts that "It shall not be lawful for any licensed victualler or person licensed to sell beer by retail to be drunk on the premises . . . to open or keep open his house for the sale of, or to sell beer, wine, spirits, or any other fermented or distilled liquor between the hours of three and five o'clock in the afternoon and after eleven o'clock in the afternoon on Sunday, or on Christmas-day or Good Friday, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving, or before four o'clock in the morning of the day following such Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or such days of public fast or thanksgiving, except to a traveller or to a lodger therein."

The information against the appellant was, for that he the said appellant, on the 14th Aug. 1859, at Hardwick, in the parish of Ault Hucknall, in the county of Derby, being then an alcouse-keeper, and duly licensed to sell exciseable liquors by retail in his house or premises there situate, and the said day being Sunday, did unlawfully open his said house for the sale of beer after eleven o'clock in the afternoon, otherwise than to a traveller or to a lodger in the said house or premises, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided. The facts as stated in the case were the following:—

The appellant is a licensed victualler and alcouse-keeper within the meaning and provisions of the several statutes relating to the sale of wine, spirits and beer by retail in inns or public-houses, and he is duly licensed to sell wine, spirits and beer by retail at his the appellant's inn or public-house, at Hardwick Inn, in Derbyshire. The annual local feast was held on Sunday, the 14th Aug. 1859, and the Hardwick Inn was frequented by more people than usual on that day; at ten minutes before eleven o'clock on the evening of the same day, the appellant caused all persons to leave his inn, except those hereinafter mentioned, and he closed the outer doors of his inn and did not afterwards open them for the admission of customers. As soon as the outer doors were closed, a party consisting of the appellant and his wife, the appellant's brother-in-law and a young lady, both on a visit to the appellant, two persons who had assisted the appellant as additional waiters during the day, the Duke of Devonshire's farm-bailiff and the Marquis of Hartington's groom (the two last persons having been in the inn from nine o'clock in the afternoon), sat down, on the appellant's invitation, to a supper provided for them by the appel-lunt at his expense in one of the rooms of the appellant's inn. During and after supper the party had spirits and water provided for them by the appellant at his expense. At ten minutes past eleven o'clock on the same evening a policeman entered the appellant's inn and found the same party in the room, and on the last occasion with a decanter of spirits and tumblers before them. On each occasion the appellant told the policeman that the party were his, the appellant's, guests, and he was entertaining them. The policeman on this caused the above information to be laid against the appellant. There was no proof that the appellant had sold any spirits, wine or beer, or allowed any customer to enter his inn after eleven o'clock on the evening in question. The only persons joining the supper party who were inmates of the appellant's house were the appellant, his wife, the appellant's brother-in-law, and the young lady visiting the appellant. None of the other persons forming the party were travellers, or inmates of, or lodgers in the appellant's house or premises.

The justices stated in the case that they decided against the appellant, and convicted him for the alleged offence in the penalty of 40s. and costs; and that the grounds of their decision were, that they considered, under the statute 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, s. 2, that the appellant was not entitled, even at his own expense, to suffer beer or spirituous liquors to be drunk or consumed in his house or premises by persons not being travellers, or inmates of or lodgers in his house or premises after the hour of eleven o'clock in the afternoon of any Sunday.

No one appeared in support of the conviction.

Raymond appeared for the appellant, and contended that, as the appellant was entertaining his friends at his own expense, he was not within the terms of the Act. (He was stopped by the court.)

COCKBURN, C. J.—It is quite unnecessary to argue this case further. The conviction cannot by any possibility be supported. Here is a publican who is found on a Sunday evening entertaining at supper a few of his friends who had been attending a feast in the neighbourhood, and at the supper those friends had some spirits and water. The justices have found, as a fact in the case, that there was no sale of spirits. The case then is really at an end; and I must say that it is a case in which there was not the slightest shadow of a pretence for such a conviction. The innkeeper was giving a private entertainment to his own guests, which he had a perfect right to do.

HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

Conviction quashed with costs.

REG. on the prosecution of THE GUARDIANS OF BIRMINGHAM v. ST. ANNE'S, WESTMINSTER.

Poor—Settlement by payment of rates—Rating of wife living apart from her husband.

The pauper P. married in 1825 at M., and he and his wife went to live in London, where they lived together till 1833, when the pauper refusing to support his wife, she went back to her mother's at M. and lived with her till her death in 1841. From that time down to the present she resided in the house she lived in with her mother (having an interest in it under her father's will), and was rated for it, and described in the rate-books as "Mrs. P.," or "Elish. P." About five months in 1842 the pauper lived with his wife at M., when he went away, and his wife never saw him down to the present time, nor did he return to M.:

Held, that the pauper did not acquire a settlement in M. by payment of rates.

Case stated upon appeal by St. Anne's, Westminster, to the Warwickshire quarter sessions, against an order of two justices of the borough of Birmingham under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 97, adjudging the settlement of Alfred John Potter, a pauper lunatic, and ordering the parish of St. Anne's, Westminster, to pay to the parish of Birmingham certain expenses of keeping and maintaining the said pauper in the lunatic asylum.

The pauper was about sixty years of age, and was settled in the appellant parish, and the order was properly made unless the pauper gained a settlement by rating in the parish of Merthyr Tydvil by reason of the following circumstances:—

He was married (26th April 1825) at the parish church of Merthyr Tydvil to Elizabeth, the daughter of Jno. and Jane Williams, both of that parish.

Jno. Williams died 16th July 1810, leaving his widow and two daughters him surviving. At the time of his death he was seised in fee of two houses and a close in the said parish. By his will he devised this estate to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife and two daughters, and their several assigns, to receive and take rents, issues and profits thereof respectively, as tenants in common during the life of the wife, and after the decease of the wife to the two daughters and their heirs, executors, &c., as tenants in common. Jane Williams, the widow, died in 1841.

Immediately after the pauper's marriage in 1825 he and his wife came to reside in London and lived there till 1833, when the pauper's wife left him in consequence of his refusing to support her. She then went to her mother at Merthyr Tydvil, where she has since resided, supporting herself by keeping a school, with the assistance she derived from her interest in her father's property. With the exception hereinafter stated the pauper has lived entirely away from his wife.

Jane Williams, the mother, resided in and was rated for one of the houses above mentioned until her death. From her death up to the present time the pauper's wife had resided in the same house, except from the year 1852 to the year 1855, during which period she let the house and resided herself in another house in Merthyr Tydvil. Since the mother's death the rest of the property devised as above by John Williams has been let to various tenants, and the rents paid to the pauper's wife.

The name of the pauper's wife first appeared in the rate-books of Merthyr Tydvil in the year 1842, where she is assessed for the house above mentioned, in which assessment she is described as "the party rated" and as "the owner," and she continued to be rated in a similar manner for the same property down to the month of Nov. 1851. There was then a break during the period for which the house was let as above mentioned. From the termination of the tenancy to the present time the pauper's wife has been rated as before.

In the above rates the pauper's wife was described invariably either as "Mrs. Potter" or as "Elizabeth Potter." She paid all the rates herself.

From the 22nd June 1842 to the 22nd Oct. in the same year, the pauper lived with his wife at Merthyr Tydvil, during which period he signed a warrant of distress and an agreement with a tenant, but never received any rent or at any time otherwise interfered with the above-mentioned property.

Since Oct. 1842 the pauper's wife has never seen him, nor has he ever returned to Merthyr Tydvil. The pauper was never dealt with or recognised by the parish officers of Merthyr Tydvil as a ratepayer.

The question for the court was, whether under the above circumstances the pauper gained a settlement by rating in the parish of Merthyr Tydvil as a ratepayer.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the order of sessions should be confirmed. From a very early period it has been uniformly held that in order to establish a settlement by rating to the relief of the poor, it is necessary to show that it was the intention of the parish officers to rate the pauper himself. That doctrine was founded on this, that the parish should have notice of the pauper's gaining a settlement in the parish. In this case there is no evidence of the parish officers ever having had any intention to rate the pauper himself. The only case in which the view of law I have referred to is not acquiesced in, is R. v. St. Marylebone, 15 Q. B. 399. That case, however, was a decision on a private Act of Parliament, which provides specially that an outgoing tenant shall be liable for the rates during the period which he occupies, and cannot be considered as overruling the previous cases.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. Upon the authorities we are bound to look at the intention of the parish officers in making the rate. And in R. v. Hulme 4 Q. B. 538, it was argued that the occupier as tenant gained a settlement where no person was named in the rate as occupier, if the parish had notice who was the party liable to be rated, by receiving the rates from the tenant; and so the court held, considering that the intention of the parish officers in making the rate was the real question. So in R. v. Huthwaite the court considered who was the person intended to be rated, and that being ascertained, that it was of no consequence leaving his name out of the rate or any thing of that kind. This view of the law is not shaken by what fell from my brother Erle, J. in R. v. St. Marylebone, which turned entirely on the words of the private Act of Parliament.

Order of sessions confirmed.

REG. v. YEOMANS.

Desertion of wife—Proof of marriage—Refusal by justices to state case.

A. was committed by the justices for deserting his wife and family. It appeared that they had been known as man and wife for twenty years, and their daughter, aged thirty-seven, said she had always looked upon them as married; he had compromised a previous charge of the same nature by agreeing to pay five shillings a week. In 1858 A. was married to another woman, was charged with bigamy and discharged. On the hearing of the charge of desertion, it was contended that there was no proof of the defendant's marriage; it was then proposed to call the woman, but he objected to this on the ground that her evidence was not admissible. The justices committed A., and refused to grant a case for the opinion of this court:

Held, that they had well determined.

Welsby showed cause, against a rule calling on the justices of Chester to show cause, why they should not state and sign a case. Yeomans was charged before the justices for deserting his wife and family, and was committed as a rogue and vagabond. Before the magistrates, the officer gave evidence that he had known the accused for more than twenty years, and that he always believed that he was the husband of the deserted woman; and the daughter, aged thirty-seven, deposed that she had always regarded her father and mother as married, and that she had never heard a whisper to the contrary. Yeomans and his wife lived together for twenty-seven years; he had left her for ten years. He had been summoned before, and the charge was compromised by his agreeing to pay 5s. a week for their support, which he did for some time. In Dec. 1858 he was married to another woman, and was accused of bigamy, from which charge he was discharged for want of proof. On the hearing of the present charge against the defendant, it was contended on his behalf, that there was no legal evidence of his marriage with his first wife, and the prosecutor then proposed to call her, but this was objected to by defendant, on the ground that her evidence was not admissible. It was now contended that there was sufficient evidence of the marriage. The charge of bigamy is the only case in which a strict proof of marriage is necessary. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Do I understand you to say that defendant first objects to the evidence of the woman being taken on the ground that she is his wife, and then makes this application on the ground that she is not?] Yes, that is so.

Wheeler contra.—The defendant was charged under a highly penal statute. The issue before the justices was marriage or no marriage, and this court will not presume that the defendant had committed bigamy. There was no sufficient proof of this marriage, and the daughter's evidence referred to her always looking upon these parties as her father and mother, not as husband and wife. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The severity of the punishment inflicted by the Legislature does not influence the question of what is evidence.] Reg. v. Symonetta, 1 Car. & Kir. 164; Reg. v. Newton, 2 Moo. & Rob. were cited. [CROMPTON, J.—Those were cases of bigamy.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think this rule should be discharged. When the objection was taken on the part of the defendant before the magistrates, that there was no proof of his marriage, it was proposed to produce the woman herself, but that was objected to, and the magistrates were left to deal with the case as best they might on the evidence already adduced. There was evidence that these parties had lived for many years as man and wife; and besides that, there was the evidence of their daughter. Then, on the other side, it was said that he had married another woman; and, on the whole, we must consider whether there was not evidence to justify the justices in acting as they did. I think there was.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the justices would have done wrong if they had stated a case; they are only to do so when there are disputed questions of law; here the question is one of fact.

HILL, J. concurred.

Rule discharged.

LEECH (appellant) v. THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY (respondents).

Railway company—Liability to repair bridges over turnpike-roads—8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 46; 10 & 11 Vict. c. cxviii, s. 61.

The 46th section of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20 (Railway Clauses Consolidation Act 1845), which regulates the crossing of or interference with turnpikes or other roads by railways, provides "that (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) such bridges with the immediate approaches, and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company."

The 10 & 11 Vict. c. cxviii, s. 61, authorising the defendants to carry their line across the turnpike-road leading from N. to L., provided they should erect a proper and sufficient bridge, and then so much of the said turnpike-road as should be broken up or damaged for the purposes of this Act should be reinstated and made good with the same materials as the road is now composed of, and the fences thereof, wherever necessary, reconstructed and put into complete order by the company and kept in repair for the space of twelve calendar months after the making, forming and completing thereof:

Held, first (approving the decision of the L. B. in Dale v. North Staffordshire Railway Company, 8 E. & B. 836), that the obligation imposed on the company by the general Act extended to the keeping in repair not only the structure of the bridge, but also the road over and under and approaches to it, and the metalling of these roads.

Secondly (per Pollock, C.B. and Watson, B., Martin, B. dissentiente), that this obligation was not limited by the special Act; that the twelve months' limitation contained in that extended only to the repair of those portions of the old road which were broken up and damaged at the points of junction with the new road.

This was an appeal under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, against an order of justices dismissing a summons on an information against the respondents for the non-repair of the approaches to and the road over a bridge in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, in the county of Stafford.

The case stated that under the provisions of their two special Acts, called the North Staffordshire Railway Acts 1846 and 1847, with which were incorporated the Railway Clauses and the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the North Staffordshire Railway Company (incorporated by the first special Act) formed several railways, which in the course of their line crossed several turnpike-roads, and some of such roads were carried under and some over the railway. One of such roads was the Newcastle-under-Lyne and Leek turnpike-road, which prior to the formation of the railway was wholly repairable and repaired by the trustees of the road. This road was carried over the railway by means of a bridge, which with its approaches was the subject of a special provision embodied in the 24th section of the Act of 1846, and the same provisions were repeated in the 61st section of the North Staffordshire Railway Act 1847.

The company erected the bridge and constructed the embankment which formed the approaches, together with the fences, as required by the special Acts above referred to, and properly formed and put the road over the bridge and slopes into a fit state for use, and it was duly restored to as good a condition as the same was in at the time when it was first interfered with by the company, or as near thereto as the circumstances admitted. The company also maintained the road across the bridge and slopes in a proper state of repair for the space of twelve calendar months from the completion thereof, but have not since repaired the same, although they have continued to maintain and still maintain the structure of the bridge and the earthwork and embankments forming the approaches to, also the fences both of the bridge itself and of such approaches, all of which (except the mere roadway) are in a proper and sufficient state.

Since the expiration of the said period of twelve calendar months from the completion of the bridge and works, the road over the bridge and its approaches have not been repaired, and such road, by reason of the ordinary wear and tear of the public traffic over and along the same, requires to be remetalled and repaired throughout the entire extent of the bridge and its approaches.

On the 26th Feb. last the trustees of the road caused a notice (set out in the case) to be served on the railway company, stating that the approaches to and the road over the bridge were out of repair, and that unless the same were put into complete repair in the mean time, an application would be made on the 14th March to two justices of the county of Stafford for an order directing them to put the same in complete repair.

The company having disregarded the notice, the solicitor of the trustees attended before the magistrates sitting at Hanley, and no one appearing for the company, an ex parte order (set out in the case) was made and served on them, under the hands and seals of the justices, which, after reciting the complaint and application and hearing, "adjudged and ordered the company, on or before the 11th day of April next, to put the said approaches to the road over the said bridge into complete repair," and also to pay the costs.

This order not having been complied with, a summons was issued, at the instance of the present appellant, the surveyor to the trustees, commanding the defendants to appear on the 20th June to answer the complaint for having unlawfully and wilfully neglected to obey the order of the 14th March.

On the hearing of this summons it was objected on the part of the railway company that the order of the 14th March was bad, inasmuch as the company were not liable to repair the road over the bridge or the slopes, and the justices adopting this view of the case, dismissed the summons, subject to the opinion of the court on a case.

The questions stated for the opinion of the court were—1st. Whether under the provisions of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the company would (without reference to the 61st section of the special Act 1847) be liable to repair the roadway over the before-mentioned bridge and slopes. 2nd. Whether, if they would have been so liable, their liability is restricted by the 61st section of the special Act 1847, to the period of twelve months from the construction of the bridge and works therein specified.

Bovill, Q.C. (with him Scotland) for the appellant.—As to the liability of the respondents under the general Act, it has already been decided by the Court of Q. B. in a former case against them (Dale v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 8 E. & B. 836), in reference to another bridge in this same road, that the general obligation to repair extended not only to the structure of the bridge and approaches, but to the metalling of the road in both. By the general principle of law, whoever is entitled or bound to make a bridge is bound to restore and maintain the approaches, if they are part of a public highway. By the Statute of Bridges, 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 9, whoever is bound to repair a bridge is bound to repair the approaches. The provision of the Highway Act 5 & 6 Will. 4, does not apply here. The only question that can be raised is as to the operation of the special Act. Sect. 4 incorporates the general Act, except so far as its provisions are modified by or inconsistent with those of the special Act. The 61st section provides for the erection of the bridge, which is the subject of this appeal: it provides, "That where the railway is proposed to cross the turnpike-road leading from Newcastle-under-Lyne to Leek, at a place in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, near to Etruria-bridge, the company shall erect a proper and sufficient bridge, constructed of brick, stone, iron or other material, so as to carry the said turnpike-road over and across the railway, such bridge also to be constructed with parapet walls of brick, stone, or other material of five feet in height, and of the clear and open width of thirty-three feet at the least between such parapet, and that the said turnpike-road shall be made and altered at the expense of the company on both sides of such bridge, so that the surface of the turnpike-road shall have, when completed, one uniform inclination on both sides, not exceeding one in thirty, and that so much of the said turnpike-road as shall be broken up and damaged for the purposes of this Act shall be reinstated and made good with the same materials as the road is now composed of, and the fences thereof, wherever necessary, reconstructed and put into complete order by the company, and kept in repair for the space of twelve calendar months after the making, forming and completing thereof; and the company shall also at their own expense make and at all times keep in repair good and sufficient drains or culverts for the purpose of such extra draining of the said road as shall be occasioned by such alteration as aforesaid: and further, that all the works aforesaid in reference to the said turnpike-road, and the bridge, walls and fences aforesaid, shall be done and executed to the satisfaction of the trustees of the said turnpike-road, or of the surveyors or other persons authorised by the said trustees to act in their behalf in the premises." The words "after the making, forming and completing thereof," do not apply to the new road, but only to that portion of the old which is "broken up and damaged," and afterwards reinstated; that is to say, the portion at the junction with the new, or any portion which may be broken in constructing a temporary passage while the bridge is being built. The liability to repair the new road, cast on the company by the general Act, as explained in Dale's case, is not at all interfered with. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The twelve months' limitation applies only to what is reinstated; the new road is not reinstated.]

LEECH v. THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Davis (with him Lush, Q.C.) for the respondents.—Considering the rights of the parties irrespective of the statutes, if the company restored the road as nearly as possible to its former state, they would do all that the equity between them and the trustees required. [MARTIN, B.—The only question is as to the operation of the 61st section of the special Act.] The 56th section of the general Act applies in cases where the railway interferes with any road: it provides, "If the road so interfered with can be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the same shall be restored to as good a condition as the same was in at the time it was interfered with by the company, or as near thereto as may be; and if such road cannot be restored compatibly with the formation and use of the railway, the company shall cause a new and substituted road, or some other sufficient substituted road, to be put into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient with the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow, and the former road shall be restored, or the substituted road put into such condition as aforesaid, as the case may be, within the following periods after the first operation on the former road shall have commenced," &c. It is clear the Legislature intended to distinguish between roads and bridges. Sect. 46 regulates the duty of the company as to the bridges; they must at all times be kept in repair: that section has no application to the road. The following sections apply to roads; and sect. 56 limits the obligation to restoring the road as near as may be to its former state; there is no obligation to maintain it. [MARTIN, B.—We must take the decision of the Q. B. in Dale v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company to be law, and it decides the 46th section of the general Act applies to the road over the bridge.] That is only a decision of a court of concurrent jurisdiction, and it was a case in which there could be no appeal. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The rule as to the decision of a court of concurrent jurisdiction is this: if there could be an appeal, we are bound by the decision so long as it is unappealed against; but if there be no appeal, we are not bound to uphold it, unless it is right in law, especially if it be res noviter in judicium vocata.] The case was decided by only two judges, and is contrary to the law as laid down in a well-considered judgment of the same court, in Reg. v. The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, where the court held that the limitation as to the width of the bridge to be constructed did not apply to the road up to it. By the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 25, all highways leading over new bridges shall be maintained by the parties who were liable to maintain the road before the bridge was built. No case can be found where either a private individual or a company were held bound to maintain more than the structure of the bridge, where a road had previously existed; all cases of indictment in the books are for the bridge itself. [WATSON, B. referred to Reg. v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, 20 L. J. 428, Q. B.] The Railway Clauses Act is divided into different heads: sect. 46 relates only to bridges; the subsequent sections provide for the case of roads, and it is by sect. 56 this case is regulated. In Dale v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, the attention of the court was not called to sect. 56. [WATSON, B.—Lord Campbell refers to it in his judgment. POLLOCK, C.B.—I am not sure that the two decisions in the Q. B. are at all inconsistent.] Even if the general Act applies to the road over the bridge, the liability of the company is limited by sect. 61 to the keeping the road in repair for twelve months.

Scotland in reply.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that the order dismissing the summons was wrong. We are to read the 46th section of the general Act with the special Act, and its provisions are to apply except so far as they are modified by or are inconsistent with the provisions of the special Act. We must therefore take the provisions of the 46th section and apply them to the 61st section of the special Act; except so far as they are modified by it. The 46th section contains a series of enactments. It says that, except where otherwise provided by the special Act, the railway shall be carried under or over the road by a bridge of the height and width and with the ascent and descent in that Act provided, and so on with a number of other provisions. Where any of these are consistent with the special Act, there we are to take the combined provisions; but where the special Act excludes the general Act, there the general Act does not apply—nor where the special Act makes a provision inconsistent with the general Act. Then sect. 61 contains a number of provisions. It provides that the company shall erect a proper and sufficient bridge to carry the road over the railway, thereby controlling the option given to the company by the general Act of carrying the road under or over the railway. It then makes a provision as to the parapet walls on the bridge, leaving the parapet walls on the ascent and descent to be constructed in accordance with the general Act. It then provides that the bridge is to be of the clear open width of thirty-three feet between the parapet walls, so far differing from the general Act, which provides for thirty-five feet; but it must be admitted this mere interference with the width does not control any other provisions of the 46th section of the general Act. It then provides that the turnpike-road shall be made and altered at the expense of the company on both sides of such bridge, so that the surface of the turnpike-road shall have when completed one uniform inclination on both sides not exceeding one in thirty; that is in accordance with the general Act, which provides that the approaches to a bridge taking a turnpike-road over the railway shall have that rate of ascent and descent. We now come to the only provision as to repair. It is to be observed that the 46th section of the general Act provides "such bridge, with the immediate approaches and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company." That is a distinct provision which binds the company, unless it is repealed by the 61st section of the special Act. The proviso there is, "so much of the said turnpike-road as shall be taken up or damaged for the purposes of this Act shall be reinstated and made good with the same materials as the road is now composed of, and the fences thereof, wherever necessary, reconstructed and put into complete order by the company, and kept in repair for the space of twelve calendar months after the making, forming and completing thereof." The section had already provided that the said turnpike-road should be made and altered at the expense of the company; what then is the meaning of these words, "so much as is taken up or damaged?" It appears to me, that to give effect to this provision, we must take it to mean some part of the actual existing turnpike-road which remains after the railway has been constructed, and which existed before it was commenced. The road on the bridge did not exist before, nor can it be said to have been broken up or damaged. The place where the railway actually crosses the old road is broken up and damaged, but that cannot be restored or reconstructed. Again, the clause provides that the fences are to be reconstructed; that can only mean fences which existed before, and which are to be reconstructed in the same place; and this provision seems to me to apply only to the place where the two roads meet, where the new one joins the old. Portions of the latter must be broken and damaged at each end for the purpose of forming the junction; and the proviso seems to me to say that so much of the old road as is disturbed or broken or damaged, where it is necessary to make a breach for the purpose of joining on the road made by the company to the old road, shall be reinstated and made good, and the fences reconstructed and put into complete order, and all this part kept in repair by the company for twelve months. The proviso then leaves untouched the obligation as to the road over the bridge and the approaches under the 46th section. I entirely concur in the meaning put on that clause by the Court of Q. B.; it is in entire accordance with the proper construction of the Act, and by that the company are bound at all times to keep that portion of the road in repair. I think, therefore, the first question should be answered in the affirmative, and the second in the negative, which will be a judgment for the appellant.

MARTIN, B.—I am of opinion that the two questions submitted to us should be answered in the affirmative. As to the first, it turns on the construction of the 46th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act. I think that the exception at the beginning of the clause, "except where otherwise provided by the special Act," overrides all the provisos in the clauses, and we must read the latter one as if saying, "such bridge and the immediate approaches, and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall (except it be otherwise provided by the special Act) be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company." We must therefore in every case look to the provisions of the special Act. The general proviso is an express enactment that the bridge and its approaches shall at all times be maintained by the company. If I had now to put a construction on the meaning of these words for the first time, my decision would be in entire conformity with that of the Q. B., and I entirely agree with them. Assuming, however, that construction of clause 46 of the general Act to be right, I still think the second question here ought also to be answered in the affirmative. The question is, whether that general liability is restricted by the 61st section of the special Act. I think it is; and if the matter rested with me I should decide it; and I think that by doing so I should put a most convenient construction on the Act. The trustees of the road have thought fit to get a long section inserted with regard to this bridge (I have no doubt the clauses theirs and not that of the company), regulating the mode of constructing it, and applying so much of the general Act as they thought ought to be applied to the case. It seems to me to be a most convenient construction, and a sensible and reasonable mode of dealing with such a case to hold, that if persons think fit to come to the Legislature and make some special demand, we ought to hold that they include in it all they think right to ask for, and we must not try and spell out these provisions by reference to other Acts. That seems a convenient course, especially when the Act to be carried out gives a clear sense and meaning, and there is no necessity for going out of it to find the meaning of the parties to the contract. If there was a special reference to the other Act, of course it would be different; but here there is nothing of the kind. The enactment deals with everything connected with this bridge that the trustees thought fit to deal with: it provides that the road shall be taken over the railway by a bridge; that the bridge shall be constructed of certain materials, of a certain width, and with the road of a certain inclination; then comes the proviso now in question, and I cannot think it was intended to bear the construction put on it by the court. I do not think that, on the fair and ordinary construction of it, the words "so much of the said turnpike-road as shall be broken up or damaged" can be confined to the mere points where the ascent or descent of the new joins the old road. The next provision is, that the company shall at all times keep in repair the culverts. On the whole, I think this clause was intended to express all the requirements of the trustees. When they wished to have the benefit of the provisions of the general Act, they re-enacted them expressly; they got this Act for their own purposes, and I do not think that they require any aid from the general Act. I therefore think the liability imposed on the company is limited by this section, and that the second question also ought to be answered in the affirmative.

WATSON, B.—I concur with the rest of the court as to the first question. As to the second I agree with my Lord Chief Baron, that the 61st section of the special Act does not extend to prevent the operation of the 46th section of the general Act. Looking to the 46th section I think the general exception, "except when otherwise provided by the special Act," does not mean to exclude that Act, when there is any special provision at all as to a bridge; but that that single provision in the general Act shall apply unless it be expressly excluded. The general Act says the bridge and the slopes are to be repaired by the company: is there anything in the special Act to restrict that obligation? The proviso refers to so much of the road as shall have been broken up: can it be said that the new road over the bridge was broken up? We must give some meaning to the words: this is a proviso imposing something on the company, plus the obligation under the general Act. As to that I entirely agree with the judgment of the Court of Q. B.

GOUGH v. HARDMAN.

Birkenhead Improvement Acts—Commissioner acting without qualification—Penalty—Two Acts to be construed together.

The 6th section of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. lxxvii. (the Birkenhead Improvement Act) provided that no person should be capable of acting as a commissioner for the purpose of that Act except qualified as therein provided. Sect. 10 imposed a penalty on any person who should act as commissioner without being qualified as aforesaid. The 1st section of Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. xxxviii., amending the former Act, repealed so much of the former Act as related to the appointment of commissioners, and to their number, mode of election and qualification. Sect. 2, after regulating the number of the new commissioners, and transferring to them the powers of the former commissioners, provided that "all provisions in the former Act contained in reference to the commissioners thereby appointed should be held to apply to the commissioners appointed under that Act and other Acts in the same manner as if the same were re-enacted and repeated in that Act, except so far as the same were repealed by or were inconsistent with its provisions, and the two Acts should be read as one Act." Sect. 7 provided for a new qualification, but there was no specific re-enactment of the penalty:

Held, that the 10th section of the former Act was still in force and that a person acting as commissioner without being duly qualified (as provided in the amending Act) was subject to the penalty of 50*l.* thereby imposed.

This was a demurrer to a declaration claiming a penalty of 50*l.*, in consequence of defendant having acted as a commissioner for the town of Birkenhead without being duly qualified under the statutes in that behalf.

The declaration, after stating that by the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. lxxviii. certain persons therein named were appointed commissioners to carry the Act into execution, and that by the 2nd section (which was set out) it was enacted that no person should be capable of acting as a commissioner in the execution of that Act unless qualified as therein stated, alleged that it was in and by the 10th section of the said Act, also enacted that if any person should act as a commissioner without being duly qualified as aforesaid, he should, for such offence, forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.*, to be recovered with full costs of suit in any of her Majesty's Courts of Record in Westminster by any person who should sue for the same by action of debt, or on the case, or by bill, suit or information wherein no essoin wherein, &c. . . . and every person so sued or prosecuted should prove that he was at the time of acting qualified as aforesaid, or otherwise should pay the penalty without any other proof or evidence being given on the part of the plaintiff or prosecutor other than that such person had acted as a commissioner in the execution of that Act; and whereas, by another Act passed in the first year of the reign of her present Majesty, being an Act to amend the before-mentioned Act so passed in the said third year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, after enacting that so much of the said hereinbefore-mentioned Act as related to the appointment of the commissioners therein named, and to the number and mode of election and qualification of commissioners to be thereafter appointed should be the same, was thereby repealed; and it was in and by the 2nd section of the said Act of the 1 Vict. enacted, that there should be twenty-four commissioners, for, &c., . . . "and all the powers, duties and authorities of the commissioners in the said therebefore recited Act mentioned should be vested in and exercised by the commissioners to be appointed under and by virtue of that Act, as fully and as effectually to all intents and purposes, and all provisions in the said therebefore-mentioned Act contained in reference to the commissioners thereby appointed should be held to apply to the commissioners to be appointed under that Act and the Acts of such last-mentioned commissioners, in the same manner as if the same were re-enacted and repeated in that Act (except so far as the same were repealed by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act or any general public Act) and the said hereinbefore-mentioned Act and that Act should be construed together as one Act." Sect. 7, establishing a new qualification, was then set out, as were also certain provisions of another amending Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. xxviii.

Averment, that after the passing of the said Acts, and before suit, the defendant acted as commissioner in execution of the Act 1 Vict., without being duly qualified, &c., whereby an action hath accrued to the plaintiff to have, &c., the said sum of 50*l.*, with full costs of suit; yet the defendant hath made default, &c.

Demurrer and joinder.

Mellish in support of the demurrer.—It is contended that the clause in the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. lxxviii, imposing the penalty, is virtually repealed, and therefore the action is not maintainable. The Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. xxxiii. repeals the former Act, so far as it relates to the election of the commissioner; the clause imposing a penalty is one which comes within these words; the other provisions are either re-enacted or a new one substituted, but there is no re-enactment of the clause imposing the penalty.

W. Loby, contra, was not called on.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The matter seems to me so clear as not to require any explanation. The meaning of the Legislature is plain to the meanest capacity. The Act 1 & 2 Vict. provides, that it and the former Act are to be read as one, which is the same as if the clause imposing the penalty was re-enacted in words in the second Act. The penalty is imposed on all persons acting without being duly qualified as aforesaid, that is, as provided for by the amending Act.

MARTIN and WATSON, BB. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

HUNT v. HIBBS.

Municipal Corporation Acts—Burgess-list—Return of by overseers on the precise day fixed—Penalty on neglect—Each overseer to sign and return the proper Burgess-list.

An overseer neglected to sign and deliver the proper alphabetical Burgess-list to the town-clerk until after the 1st Sept. 1859, contrary to the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50 (the Municipal Corporation Amendment Act), but he did deliver it on or before the 5th Sept. 1859, as required by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (the Municipal Corporation Act). In an action to recover the penalty imposed by sect. 48 for the overseer's neglect:

Held, that the above Acts of Parliament to be construed as one Act were not merely directory, but peremptory; and defendant, as such overseer, not having duly delivered the proper alphabetical list of burgesses, as required by these Acts, on or before the 1st Sept. 1859, was liable for the amount of the penalty imposed.

All the overseers must sign the Burgess-list.

This was an action against the defendant, he being an overseer of the poor of the parish of Weymouth, within the borough of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, for not properly delivering a duly signed alphabetical list of the burgesses of that borough in the parish to the town clerk there, on or before the 1st Sept. 1859, in pursuance of the Municipal Corporation Acts, whereby he had incurred the penalty of 50*l.* The defendant pleaded that he did, on or before the 5th Sept., duly comply in all respects with the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (the Municipal Corporation Act), by duly making out, signing and delivering such list as required by that statute. To this plea the plaintiff demurred on the ground, that the making out, signing and delivering of the list by the defendant after the 1st and on or before the 5th Sept. was no sufficient answer to the offence charged in the declaration; for that it should have been delivered on or before the 1st Sept., in compliance with the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50.

The declaration alleged that after the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (the Municipal Corporation Act) and the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, "An Act to amend the Acts concerning municipal corporations in England," and before and at the time of the neglect and refusal hereinafter mentioned, to wit, on or before the 1st Sept. 1859, the defendant was one of the overseers of the poor of the parish of Weymouth, within the borough of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, and before and on the said 1st Sept. 1859 there were divers and very many persons in the said parish duly qualified in that behalf who then were entitled to be enrolled on the Burgess-roll of the said borough of that year, according to the provision of the statutes, in respect of property within the said parish. Averment, that it was the duty of the defendant, as such overseer of the poor of the said parish, and of the overseers of the poor of the said parish, on or before the said 1st Sept. 1859, to make out an alphabetical list, according to the provisions of the said statutes, of the burgesses of the said borough in the said parish, that is to say, of all persons who should be entitled to be enrolled in the burgess-roll of the said borough of that year, according to the provisions of the statutes in such case made and provided, in respect of property within the said parish, and that the defendant as such overseer ought, on or before the day and year aforesaid, to have signed such burgess-list, and to have delivered the same so signed to the town-clerk of the borough aforesaid. Yet that the defendant, not regarding his duty in that behalf, and not respecting the statutes in such case made and provided, did not, on or before the said 1st Sept. 1859, make out or sign or deliver to the town-clerk of the said borough, such burgess list as aforesaid, but unlawfully neglected and refused so to do, contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, whereby and by force of the statutes in such case made and provided the defendant has forfeited for his said offence the sum of 50*l.*, and thereby and by force of the statutes in such case made and provided an action hath accrued to the plaintiff, who sues as aforesaid, to demand and have of and from the defendant the said sum of 50*l.* so forfeited as aforesaid. And the plaintiff who claims as aforesaid claims 50*l.* to be paid and apportioned in manner in the said first-mentioned Act in that behalf provided.

Pleas:—1. Not guilty. 2. That after the said 1st Sept., and before or on the 5th of the same month, he the said defendant, in all respects in compliance with the provisions of the said first-mentioned statute, duly made out and signed and delivered such list as in and by that statute is required.

Demurrer to the second plea, that the making out, signing and delivering of the list by the defendant after the 1st and on or before the 5th Sept. afforded no answer to the offence charged in the declaration.

M. Smith, Q.C. (Turner with him), in support of the demurrer, contended, first, that the 15th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, so far as regarded the day and time on which overseers of a parish in a borough were to make out, sign and deliver the burgess-lists were mentioned was virtually repealed by the 7th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50. Secondly, by the 7th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, the burgess-list, according to the provisions of the 13th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, was required to be made out, signed and delivered by the overseers on or before the 1st Sept. in each year, instead of on the 5th Sept., as required by the 15th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76; and that therefore the making out, signing and delivering the burgess-lists, as alleged in the second plea, on or before the 5th Sept., in compliance with the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, afforded no answer for not doing so on or before the 1st Sept., as required by the 7th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50. Thirdly, by the 8th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, that Act and the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, were to be construed as one Act; and therefore that the not making out and signing and delivering the burgess-list on or before the 1st Sept. rendered the defendant liable to the penalty of 50*l.* imposed by the 48th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and the words in that section, "list as aforesaid," must be construed to mean the burgess-list referred to in the 15th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, as altered by the 7th section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50. King v. Burrell, 12 A.L.J. & Ell. 460, was referred to, where the action was to recover the penalty like this. The declaration stated it to be the duty of the defendant, as overseer, with the other overseers, to make out and sign an alphabetical list of burgesses and overseers, that defendant unlawfully neglected and refused to make out or sign such list. It was held, on motion in arrest of judgment after verdict for plaintiff, that it was unnecessary to show that the others did not sign such list, and that if the signature of a majority was a signing by all, then, as the verdict found that the defendant had not signed, it must be presumed that the majority had not signed, and the court thought that all the overseers should sign the burgess-list, and that an overseer neglecting this duty incurred the penalty imposed by the Act, although his neglect was neither wilful nor corrupt.

Macnamara for the defendant.—The plea is good, or, if not, the declaration is bad. The court will not hold that the penalty under this Act attaches except where there has been a total omission on the part of the overseer to deliver the burgess-list to the town-clerk; the provisions of these statutes as to time are merely directory: (Reg. v. Mayor of Rochester, 27 L. J. 45, Q.B.; and in error, where a majority of the judges affirmed that judgment of the court below, p.434.)

[MARTIN, B.—There is nothing in that case to show that the officer there would not have been liable to a penalty. My idea is that the action was given to compel the parties to be precise and particular in delivering in these lists within proper time. POLLOCK, C.B.—What is the definition of a day laid down as being merely directory—not peremptory?] The penalty is not imposed in those direct terms by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 48; the words "as aforesaid" may be read to refer to the lists, not "penalty," and in some cases the courts have looked to see if the Act be directory or peremptory: (R. v. Mayor of Norwich, 1 B. & Ad. 310.) [POLLOCK, C.B.—No doubt the question is, whether the day is so essential as to render the overseer liable if the proper list be not duly delivered on the precise day.] As the clause requiring the list to be an alphabetical list is a penal clause, the court would not hold it to be a valid objection if the list delivered was not strictly an alphabetical list. It would be also consistent with the declaration if a majority of overseers had made out the list, although not signed by the defendant. The case of King v. Burrell was before the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79, s. 14, in 1853, which provides that what is done by the overseers may be lawfully done by the majority of them. [MARTIN, B.—How do we know there is more than one? POLLOCK, C.B.—Are not churchwardens also overseers?] Yes, that is so. Another point is, that there is no penalty given by the second Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, and as the wrong complained of is under the second Act, no penalty is attached to this. The penalty mentioned in the 48th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, for the omission to make out, sign and deliver the burgess-list attaches, if at all, where there has been a total omission, and not when, as in this case, the only default charged is an omission to do so by a given day. It is admitted by the demurrer that the list was in fact made out, signed, and delivered by the time required by the said first-mentioned statute, and that it would be a forced construction of the later statute to hold that a penalty had attached under the circumstances admitted by the demurrer. The only precedent of a declaration upon this branch of the statute alleges that the defendant did not at the given day, "or at any time before or since," comply with the statute. The penalty at all events attaches only in cases of wilful refusal or neglect to comply with the provisions of the statutes, whereas the declaration studiously avoids stating that the omission was the result of wilfulness, and is therefore bad in substance; consistently with this declaration the omission alleged might have arisen from impossibility, ignorance, inability or inadvertence. The action being for a penalty, the declaration ought to be construed strictly against the plaintiff, and ought to have negatived the existence of every circumstance exempting the defendant from the penalty, and at all events ought to have shown that the alleged default happened without any reasonable cause or excuse. Upon this declaration the plaintiff would succeed in merely proving that the defendant did not make out, or did not sign the list, and non constat but that he was physically incapable of doing one of these acts. The other overseers might, for aught that appears to the contrary, in consequence of incapability, have themselves performed all the requisites of the Act of Parliament. The late statute did not inflict any penalty for not complying with its provisions as to the time of making, signing and delivering the lists, and it is not pretended that the penalty under the former Act has been incurred, a penalty cannot be imposed except by express terms, and there are none such in the later statute.

Smith in reply.—Both Acts are to be read as one, and so construed, and each overseer is by this Act directed to do what is required by the words of the statutes. The judgment of Patteson, J. in King v. Burrell is applicable. The court have already answered all the other objections raised by the other side.

POLLOCK, C.B.—It seems that, although for certain purposes the acts may not have been done on the right day, and the courts hold the time specified to be directory, yet that does not prevent the penalty from attaching. The words “as aforesaid” have reference to the preceding terms used, and require the list of burgesses to be delivered to be alphabetical, and delivered on the precise day named. It may be a question of fact, supposing one or two very slight errors had been made, or mistake crept in, in some immaterial respects, whether the list was an alphabetical list within the meaning of the Act, and was not sufficient. But the objection made in this case to the declaration I think unfounded, and the plea is clearly bad; our judgment will therefore be for the plaintiff.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. The declaration should be construed as if on the 15th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76; and I do not think the provisions made requiring the lists of burgesses to be delivered to the town-clerk by the overseer is merely directory: it was by the first Act required to be done by the 5th Sept.; that was by the subsequent Act of Vict. required to be done on or before the 1st Sept.; and the object was to require those things to be done regularly and promptly, and in case of neglect in complying with the provisions of the Acts of Parliament, a penalty is imposed [the learned Baron here read the Act]. It is quite impossible, in my opinion, for the Legislature to have used more distinct terms, and it is of the utmost importance in all these cases that the requirements of these Acts of Parliament should be complied with. [He also referred to R. v. Mayor of Rochester, and stated that case.] It seems to me that case has no bearing on this; it only shows how strictly we ought to adhere to the requirements of the Act of Parliament. The 48th section of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, refers to “such lists as aforesaid,” and says, unless it be delivered on the 5th Sept., the overseer shall incur the penalty, that, by the subsequent Act of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 51, is altered to the 1st Sept. It is not if all the overseers do not, but if any do not, and each is therefore liable. I think the declaration is good and the plea bad.

CHANNELL, B.—I also think the plea is bad and declaration good. We must read the sections of the Acts of Parliament together, and take the time to be the 1st Sept. on which the lists were to be delivered, and I think the precise time mentioned in the Acts is to be strictly regarded. It has been argued on behalf of the defendant as if the time should be considered as directory only; but it seems to me that this should not be. I think the time should be peremptory, and that the overseers should sign and deliver the correct and proper alphabetical list of burgesses on or before the precise day named. Great stress has been laid on R. v. Mayor of Rochester, but that case does not affect the material question we have to decide here. The case of King v. Burrell answers the point as to the majority of overseers signing the list, and I concur with that decision in thinking each one of them should sign it. It has been suggested that the declaration is bad, as it uses the term “alphabetical list.” It would be going a great way, perhaps, to hold that if a mere technical error was made, and one name was put in the wrong place by a mistake, the list would be bad. At the same time I do not think the objection to the declaration on that account is valid. All the points raised here have been very ingeniously argued by Mr. Macnamara, but they have all been sufficiently answered, and I think our judgment should be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for plaintiff.

REG. v. CHARLES HUNTLEY.

Larceny and receiving — Indictment — “Stolen as aforesaid” — Surplusage.

The prisoner was indicted in the first count for larceny of certain goods; and in the second count for that he “the goods aforesaid, so as aforesaid feloniously stolen,” feloniously did receive, &c. The prisoner was acquitted on the first count, but found guilty upon the second:

Held, that the conviction was valid, and that the second count might be construed to mean stolen goods generally; and the part of the first count charging them to have been stolen by him, be treated as irrelevant.

The prisoner was tried before me, as Recorder of Winchester, at the Epiphany sessions 1860.

The indictment was as follows:—

City of Winchester to wit.—The jurors for our lady the Queen, upon their oath present, that Chas. Huntley, late of the parish of St. Maurice, in the city of Winchester, on the 6th day of December, in the 23rd year of the reign of our Sovereign lady Victoria, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, with force and arms, at the parish of St. Thomas, in the city aforesaid, twenty yards of tweed of the value of 3*l.*, of the good and chattels of John Gadd, then and there being found, feloniously did steal, take and carry away, against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath do further present, that Chas. Huntley, late of the parish aforesaid, in the city aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the 6th day of December, in the year last aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the city aforesaid, the goods and chattels aforesaid, of the value aforesaid, so as aforesaid feloniously stolen, taken and carried away, feloniously did receive and have, the said Chas. Huntley then and there well knowing the said goods and chattels last aforesaid to have been feloniously stolen, taken and carried away, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Before the prisoner pleaded, his counsel moved to quash the second count, on the ground that by reference to the first count it must be read as charging a felonious receiving by the prisoner of goods then stolen by him the said prisoner, the words “so as aforesaid stolen" being referable to the first count, which states the goods to have been stolen by the said prisoner, and it was contended that the count being so read was bad, as a prisoner cannot be said to have feloniously received goods stolen by himself; and Reg. v. Perkins, 5 Cox Crim. Cas. 554, 21 L. J. 152, M. C., was referred to, in which it was held that where the evidence is sufficient to convict the accused of stealing, there is no option to treat him either as a thief or a receiver.

MORDEN v. PORTER.

The objection was renewed pro forma at the close of the prosecutor's case, when it was objected that there was no evidence to support the second count on the same ground as above stated, viz., that the prisoner could not be found to have received goods stolen by himself.

The prisoner was acquitted on the first count of the indictment, but found guilty upon the second count.

I reserved the objection for the consideration of the judges.

Judgment stands postponed on this indictment, and the prisoner remains in gaol, having been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment on another indictment.

A. J. STEPHENS.

No counsel appeared either for the prosecution or the prisoner.

ERLE, C.J.—We are of opinion that the conviction of the prisoner for receiving ought to be affirmed. It was urged on the prisoner's behalf that, inasmuch as, if he stole the goods, he could not be convicted of receiving them, knowing them to have been stolen; so, where the first count of the indictment charged him with having stolen the goods, of which offence he was acquitted, and the second count charged him with receiving the goods "as so aforesaid stolen," he could not be convicted on that count. But we are of opinion that the words "as so aforesaid stolen" in the second count may be construed to mean "generally stolen goods," and that the part of the first count charging them to have been stolen by the prisoner may be treated as irrelevant for the purpose of the second count.

Conviction affirmed.

SITTINGS AFTER HILARY TERM.

Saturday, Feb. 4.

MORDEN (appellant) v. PORTER (respondent).

Appeal from justices—Trespass in pursuit of game—Mens rea.

P. went by the permission of B. over land of E. in pursuit of game. B. had no right so to license P. to go upon the land. The justices stated that they were of opinion that P. acted under the impression of an implied licence from the owner and occupier of the land given to him through B. E. after the trespass said that, if his permission had been asked, he would have given it:

Held, first, that this was a trespass within 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30:

Secondly, that there was no such ratification by E. of the leave given by B. as to make it effectual:

Thirdly (per Williams, J.) that, in order to constitute a trespass within the above section, it is not necessary that the person trespassing should be conscious at the time that he was a trespasser.

But Kenting, J. said, if the question of mens rea had been raised on the case, he should have desired further time to consider.

This was an information before justices in petty sessions against Henry John Porter, for that he within three calendar months then last past, that is to say, on the first day of October then instant, at the parish of Wilburton, in the Isle of Ely, did unlawfully commit a certain trespass by entering in the daytime of the said day upon certain land in the possession and occupation of John Everett there, in search of game, without the licence or consent of the owner of the land so trespassed upon, or of any person having the right of killing the game upon such land, or of any other person having the right to authorise the said Henry John Porter to enter or be upon the said land for the purpose aforesaid, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided. The justices dismissed the information, and, upon the application of the appellant, stated the case as follows:—

At the hearing of the aforesaid information it appeared that it was laid by the appellant in his character of gamekeeper to Lady Pell, who is lady of the manor of Wilburton, and that the land on which the alleged trespass was committed, containing about nine acres, was situated in that parish, holden by copy of court-roll of that manor, and was the property and in the occupation of one John Everett, as stated in the information. The defendant admitted the fact of being on the land in search of game, but pleaded leave and licence from the owner and occupier, and denied the right of the appellant to prefer the information. It appeared that the defendant, the son of a farmer and brewer in the adjoining parish, is duly certificated, and went to Wilburton on the day in question, on the invitation of one Albert Bailey, for a day's shooting; and, knowing that Lady Pell would not allow any one over her land, he from time to time inquired of Bailey, who accompanied him, but without a gun, whether they were at liberty to go on to the land through which they passed, and was assured by Bailey that he had full liberty to go over the land in question. John Everett, in his examination, proved that he had not given specific permission to the defendant before the day in question; but it was proved that on the defendant's asking his permission on the night previous to the hearing to go over his land, he had said, "they might go over it and welcome, for he wished all the game in the parish was killed;" and that he also at the same time said that, "if the defendant had asked him permission before this happened, he should have given it him." It was also proved by Bailey that he (Bailey) went at all times over Everett's land, and Everett went over his land, by mutual consent, but there was no evidence of that permission being expressly stated to extend to shooting, and Bailey did not take out a game certificate. We being of opinion that the appellant had no such interest in the locus in quo as would support a prosecution for trespass, and that if he had, the defendant acted under the full impression of an implied licence from the owner and occupier of the land given to him through Bailey, gave our determination against the appellant in the manner above mentioned. The questions of law arising out of the above statement therefore are—first, has the appellant, as gamekeeper of the manor of Wilburton, such an interest in all the copyhold land within the manor in the ownership and occupation of the several tenants of the manor as will support the above information; secondly, was there in point of law evidence of such leave and licence as would be under sect. 30 of statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, a defence to an action at law for trespass, or to the said information; thirdly, would the ex post facto leave and licence form a condonation of the offence, and be held to revert back to the time of the alleged trespass? Whereupon the opinion of the Court of C. P. is asked upon the said questions of law, whether or not we the said justices were correct in our determination as aforesaid, and as to what further should be done or ordered by the said court in the premises.

The points intended to be relied upon for the appellant on the argument were:—

First, that it is not necessary that the information

C. B.]

MORDEN v. PORTER.

[C. B.]

should be laid by the owner or occupier of the land, or a person having an interest in it.

Secondly, that the acting under the impression of an implied licence, which is stated as the ground of the defence, is no answer to the information.

Thirdly, that there was no leave or licence which would have been a defence to an action of trespass.

Couch for the appellant.—First, Middleton v. Gale, 8 Ad. & E. 155, is an express decision in my favour on the first point. Secondly, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, provides that any person charged with any such trespass (in pursuit of game) shall be at liberty to prove by way of defence any matter which would have been a defence to an action at law for such trespass, save and except that the leave and licence of the occupier of the land so trespassed upon shall not be a sufficient defence in any case where the landlord, lessor, or other person shall have the right of killing the game upon such land by virtue of any reservation or otherwise as thereinbefore mentioned. The fact of the respondent acting under the impression that he had a licence to shoot over the land is no defence. In truth, there was no such licence. Bailey, the occupier, could not give him such licence. He had himself only licence to go over it in the ordinary way, not in the pursuit of game. But if he had been licensed himself to go over it in pursuit of game, he could not have licensed another to do so: (Duchess of Norfolk v. Wiseman, cited in Wickham v. Hawker, 7 M. & W. 77.) Thirdly, it is clear there was no confirmation by Everett.

Phear, contra.—Middleton v. Gale is not absolutely binding here. Lord Denman says it belongs to the jury to say whether the informer was interested in the land; and the jury found that he was, and the court puts it on that ground. That, therefore, is not the point. King v. Corder, 4 Burr. 2279, decides that, under the 5 Geo. 3, c. 14, the fishing must be shown to be without the consent of the owner. Secondly, the facts amount to this, that the respondent was on the ground of Everett with permission, except that it was not an express permission. To constitute a trespass there must be an invasion of the owner's proprietary right. Everett said there was none. He has ratified Bailey's permission. The respondent was continually asking whether he had permission to go where they were. This is a criminal proceeding; and R. v. Cridland, 2 Ell. & Bl. 859, shows that mens rea is of the essence of the offence. Erle, C. J. there says: "I think, in a criminal statute, trespass means an intended trespass." [WILLIAMS, J.—The statute seems to show he has the same defence as in trespass.] In trespass intention is nothing; in a criminal offence it is everything. Cutler v. Ireson, 4 Jur. N. S. 560, decides that this is a criminal proceeding.

Crouch, in reply.—[WILLIAMS, J. referred to Reg. v. Pratt, 24 L. J. 113, M. C., and said: Confine yourself to the question of mens rea.] He had not taken the trouble to inquire whether Bailey had a right to give permission to go over the land. The act was one which he did not know Bailey had a right to permit him to do. The finding is no answer to the information.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the appellants. Several questions have been raised in the course of the argument. The first question that has been brought before us by the convicting justices is directly decided by Middleton v. Gale, and we are bound by that decision. Not that I mean to throw any doubt on the propriety of that decision. Secondly, it is not in point of law true, nor under sect. 30 of the Game Act, that such a leave and licence as this would be a justification. The alleged ratification and confirmation of Everett cannot be referred back to the time of committing the trespass. That ratification consists in the person who might have given it having said, he would have given it if it had been asked of him. The third question is meant to raise, but does not in exact terms raise the point, whether there was such a ratification of the leave given by Bailey as would render it operative and effectual. Now doubts have been raised in the discussion whether any leave was given by Bailey, but we must not dwell upon the language too scrupulously. We must look to the meaning of the parties, and I take it that Bailey did give permission to shoot over the land, he assuming that he had permission to do so. Some time after the information Everett says that he should have given him leave if he had asked it; but he does not say a word of ratification of what took place, and that argument is well answered against the respondent. Another question raised was, that we ought to affirm the decision of the magistrates, because, although there was no satisfactory evidence that the defendant had the leave and licence of the proprietor, he was acting under the impression that he was doing what he was entitled to do. And it was said that the mens rea was absent, and though the point is not sent before us, yet I must express my opinion, that it is quite immaterial whether the party had or had not at the time the consciousness that he was committing a trespass. The statute enacts that every person who goes on land in circumstances such that a civil action can be brought against him shall be guilty, if going in pursuit of game, of a criminal trespass. The Act 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, after reciting that after the commencement of the Act game will become an article which may be legally bought and sold, and that it is therefore reasonable to provide some more summary means for protecting the same from trespassers, enacts that, if any person shall commit any trespass by entering or being in the daytime upon any land in search of, or in pursuit of, game, &c., such person shall, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum of money not exceeding 2*l.* as to the justice shall seem meet. It contemplates that, game having become an article of sale, there is more reason than before to protect the proprietors, inasmuch as there is more temptation; and that therefore this proceeding may be taken by a common informer. The sections afterwards provides [his Lordship read the proviso as set out in the argument]. I think the statute leaves the question of mens rea open. It leaves open the question whether, if a person having no right to give permission to another to go upon land, and that other does go upon land, and without any intention of violating the statute, does violate it, he is liable. Sect. 46 shows that the trespass of each sort is correlative. No civil action was, I believe, ever thought of after acquiescence. It remains to consider what are the authorities. Reg. v. Cridland only decides that where the proceedings are instituted under the statute, and the party is shown to have acted under a bona fide claim of right, the justices have no jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter. That is not binding on us in considering the meaning of the statute. In Reg. v. Pratt it was never suggested that the man was not guilty because he thought he had a right to shoot from the highway. I think a person who goes on land to shoot must take care that he is not a trespasser, and if he does not take such care, he must be liable for the consequences to the extent of 40*s.* A vast number of excuses would be set up if we were to say that a party, acting as this person has done, should not be liable. I consider the law to say, if you go on a person's land in pursuit of game, in a way to make yourself liable to a civil action, you will make yourself liable to this proceeding. We do not without feeling very great regret decide thus: and I think one farthing would have been quite a sufficient penalty.

WILLIAMS, J. concurred that the judgment should be for the appellant, but without costs.

KEATING, J. also concurred, but said that if the

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by GEORGE WHITLEY, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Dec. 2 and 3, and Jan. 16.

THE CORPORATION OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY v. SUTTON.

Charitable Societies—Charitable Trusts Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, ss. 62, 66—Conflicting clauses—Jurisdiction of Charity Commissioners—Alienation of property—Consent of Charity Commissioners, when requisite—Interpretation of the expressions "voluntary contribution" and "endowment" used therein.

Under the 62nd section of the Charitable Trusts Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, the word "endowment" must be considered as confined to any gift, made to a charitable society for some specific and particular object or purpose; and therefore the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners does not extend to voluntary subscription, or any donation or bequest concerning which no special application shall be directed or declared by the donor or testator, nor to any permanent investment of any such contributions, donations, or bequests above mentioned, although made for the purpose of being applied to some defined and specific object connected with such charity.

The clause in the interpretation section of the Act, sect. 66—"the expression 'endowment' shall mean and include all land and real estate whatsoever, and any investment and personal estate whatsoever which shall for the time being belong to or be held in trust for any charity, or for all or any of the objects or purposes thereof"—cannot be read literally, as the effect would be to expunge the 62nd section; and in order to reconcile the two sections, the word "endowment" in the interpretation clause must be interpreted in the restricted sense in which the word is held to be used in the 62nd section.

The consent of the Charity Commissioners is not required to a sale of property by a charitable society, unless it is an "endowment," or the investment of an "endowment."

This was a special case to obtain the opinion of the court on the question whether the corporation could make a good title to property contracted to be sold to the trustees of the Stock Exchange, without the approval of the Charity Commissioners.

The facts as stated by the case were, that the society was founded by letters patent of King Charles II., dated the 1st July 1678, by which, after reciting that his Majesty was informed by the humble petition of divers of his loving subjects, who were sons of clergymen, that several charitable and well-disposed persons, the children of clergymen and others, had appeared very free and forward in contributing to the relief and maintenance of such of the widows and children of loyal and orthodox clergymen as were poor and indigent, which had been to good effect in placing out many of the said poor children apprentices, and towards the maintenance of others at the University, and to the relief of many of the said poor widows; and reciting that his Majesty was informed and well assured that if he would be graciously pleased to erect and settle a corporation for the receiving, managing and disposing of the said charity, they should be encouraged to continue and enlarge such charity to the uses aforesaid; his Majesty willed, ordained, constituted, declared and granted that Francis, Earl of Longford, and certain other persons therein named, and their successors, to be elected in the manner therein mentioned, should be a corporation by the name of the Governors of the Charity for the Relief of the Poor Widows and Children of Clergymen; and that they and their successors by that name should for ever thereafter be able to purchase and hold real estate not exceeding the yearly value of 2000*l.*, and also to alien the same; and it was directed that there should be a president, vice-president, three treasurers, and forty-two members, to be called the Court of Assistants of the said corporation, who should have the whole government, management and direction of the affairs and business of the said corporation; and that it should be lawful for the Court of Assistants for the time being, or any five or more of them, whereof the president, vice-president, or one of the treasurers of the said corporation, should be one, as often as they should think needful or expedient, to assemble together and to ordain and make any constitutions, laws, ordinances and statutes whatsoever, which to them or the major part of them should from time to time seem reasonable or requisite, touching or concerning the good estate, rule, order and government of the said corporation; and lastly, that the now stating letters patent, or the enrolment thereof, should be good and effectual in law, notwithstanding the Statute of Mortmain or any other statute, matter, cause, or thing whatsoever.

Further licences to hold lands in mortmain were granted to the corporation on the 6th Dec. 1714, the 6th Feb. 1800, and the 20th Dec. 1810.

During the earlier part of its existence the funds of the corporation arose entirely from voluntary donations and subscriptions. The governors are now the owners of extensive estates in various parts of England, arising either from conveyances made to them for the general purposes of the charity, from devises made to them before the Act 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, for the general purposes of the charity, or from purchases from time to time made by them out of the general funds of the corporation in their hands. These general funds are the produce of voluntary subscriptions, donations, or bequests, or of collections, which used formerly to be from time to time made for the benefit of the charity, or represent accumulations of the income arising from the fixed property of the charity. The charity has frequently received, and still frequently receives, legacies, and has a subscription list for donations and subscriptions, and considerable sums arising from these sources have from time to time been, and still from time to time are, carried over to the general funds of the charity. The governors have also from time to time accepted gifts or grants for special charitable purposes distinct from the general purposes and objects of the corporation, but no question as to any property so situate arises in the present case.

In the year 1682 the corporation contracted for the purchase of an estate in Capel-court, Bartholomew-lane, in the city of London, for the sum of 2832*l.* 5*s.* It appears from the minutes preserved of the transactions of the corporation that the corporation had only 452*l.* in hand towards payment of the purchase-money, and that they borrowed the remainder, 2400*l.*, from various persons, and that the property was by indentures of March 1682 conveyed to trustees upon trust for such persons until they had been repaid their advances, and subject thereto in trust for the corporation.

Shortly afterwards some part of these claims were paid off, but there being no minute-book of the corporation for this period now in existence, there are no means of ascertaining out of what funds this was done; the other parties, by a deed dated in 1684, released their claims, and the property was conveyed to the corporation in fee discharged therefrom.

No special trust was declared in either of these deeds concerning the land so purchased.

In 1859 the corporation entered into a contract with the trustees of the Stock Exchange for the sale to them of part of the premises for the sum of 30,000*l*. The trustees are willing purchasers, but for their security they considered it necessary to take the opinion of the court on the question, whether the approval of the Charity Commissioners was necessary to enable the corporation to make a good title and a valid conveyance of the land contracted to be sold by them to the trustees.

The 62nd section of the Act, so far as it is material to be stated, enacts that this Act "shall not extend to any friendly or benefit society, or savings bank, or any institution, establishment or society for religious or other charitable purposes, or to the auxiliary or branch associations connected therewith wholly maintained by voluntary contributions, or any bookselling or publishing business carried on by or under the direction of any society wholly or partially exempted from this Act, so far as such business is or shall be carried on by means of voluntary contributions only, or the capital or stock of such business; and where any charity is maintained partly by voluntary subscriptions and partly by income arising from any endowment, the powers and provisions of the Act shall, with respect to such charity, extend and apply to the income from endowment only, to the exclusion of voluntary subscriptions and the application thereof; and no donation or bequest unto or in trust for any such charity as last aforesaid, of which no special application or appropriation shall be directed or declared by the donor or testator, and which may legally be applied by the governing or managing body of such charity or income in aid of the voluntary subscriptions, shall be subject to the jurisdiction or control of the said board or the powers or provisions of this Act, and no portion of any such donation or bequest as last aforesaid, or of any voluntary subscription which is now, or shall or may from time to time be set apart or appropriated and invested by the governing or managing body of the charity for the purpose of being held and applied or expended for or to some defined or specific object or purpose connected with such charity, in pursuance of any rule or resolution made or adopted by the governing or managing body of such charity, or of any donation or bequest in aid of any fund so set apart or appropriated for any such object or purposes as aforesaid, shall be subject to the jurisdiction or control of the said board, or the powers and provisions of this Act."

The 66th section (interpretation clause), so far as it refers to the question in this cause, is as follows:—"The expression 'endowment' shall mean and include all land and real estate whatever, of any tenure, and any charge thereon or interest therein, and all stocks, funds, moneys, securities, investments and personal estate whatsoever which shall for the time being belong to or be held in trust for any charity or for all or any of the objects or purposes thereof."

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, s. 29 (Charitable Trusts Amendment Act), enacts that "it shall not be lawful for the trustees or persons acting for the time being in the administration of any charity, to make or grant, otherwise than with the express authority of Parliament, under any Act already passed, or which may hereafter be passed, or of a court or a judge of competent jurisdiction, or according to a scheme legally established, or with the approval of the board, any sale, mortgage, or charge of the charity estate, or any lease thereof in reversion, after more than three years of any existing term, or for any term of life, or in consideration wholly or in part of any fine, or for any term of years exceeding twenty-one years."

R. Palmer, Q.C. and Wickens for the corporation.

Lloyd, Q.C. and Waley, for the trustees of the Stock Exchange, contended that the consent of the Charity Commissioners was necessary to confirm the sale made by the corporation; or that, if in the opinion of the court the question was doubtful, the court might abstain from expressing any opinion on it, which would be in accordance with the practice of the court in suits for specific performance, of not forcing a doubtful title on a purchaser.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—The question in this cause depends upon the construction of the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, whether under the provisions of that Act the consent of the Charity Commissioners is required to render valid the sale of certain property in Chapel-court, belonging to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy, and by them contracted to be sold to the trustees of the Stock Exchange. The charter of incorporation of the vendors bears date in July 1678, and by it the corporation is allowed to hold and alien lands in mortmain. The land in question forms part of some land bought in 1682 by the corporation. It was clearly bought for the purpose of investment, and because it was considered to be an eligible purchase for that purpose. The corporation, however, did not possess at that time funds sufficient to pay for it, and about six-sevenths of the purchase-money, amounting to 2400*l*, was borrowed on mortgage of the property bought. This mortgage was paid off in two years afterwards, in March 1684. It is a portion of the land so bought which is now contracted to be sold to the trustees of the Stock Exchange for 30,000*l*. These facts are only important for the purpose of showing that no special trust attached to this property. It was the property of the corporation, and no doubt all the property of the corporation is held in trust for the general objects for which it was founded; but apart from this no special trust attached to this deed. The question is, whether the Act of the Queen prevents the alienation of this land without the consent of the Charity Commissioners. This depends on the meaning of the 62nd section of the Act. Now, upon this clause alone, the question would seem to be whether the property, the origin of which I have stated, comes within the meaning of the word "endowment" as employed in this clause, in contradistinction to "voluntary contributions." That expression voluntary contribution must not, I think, be confined to annual subscription; it must clearly extend to donations (the words I have read in the Act show that, I think, very distinctly), and if it extends to donations, it cannot be confined to donations below any specified amount: it is equally applicable to 1000*l*. as it is to 1*l*. It is clear also, that the word "endowment" would extend to and include any sum given for a specific and peculiar trust or object in connection with the particular charity; but the difficulty is this, at what point, and under what condition, does a donation become an endowment within the meaning of this clause? It is obvious that the word "endowment" is not used here in its ordinary and popular sense. So used, it is to my mind impossible to distinguish between a donation and an endowment. In ordinary parlance, a man who grants an annuity of 100*l*. per annum out of his landed estates to the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy would be said to endow it. I think also that in like manner, a man who gave 2000*l*. at once to the corporation would be said to have endowed it. It is obvious, in this respect also, that the clause speaks of the income arising from endowment. If the word "endow" has reference to the production of an annual income only, then the fact that the corporation invested its contributions in any permanent investment would alter the character of the money bestowed, and convert it from a contribution into an endowment; but I think it impossible that the Legislature can have meant to make the control of the Charity Commissioners dependent upon the fact that the affluence or providence of the society had enabled or induced it to secure a portion of its funds by an investment or permanent security. It was suggested in argument that the cessation of voluntary contributions would at once, as a matter of course, put the whole of the property of the institution under the control of the Charity Commissioners. But I dissent from that argument; I think it impossible that such could have been the meaning of the Legislature. Occasional or accidental unpopularity might deprive an institution of the receipt of any contributions for a series of two or three or more years, which, after that lapse of time, might be renewed. I think it impossible to hold that such a circumstance would alter the character of the institution in the meaning of this clause so as to bring it within the scope of the Act, and exclude it from the exception contained in this clause during the period of the cessation of voluntary contributions, and then give it the benefit of the exception again, and take it out of the control of the Charity Commissioners on the renewal of the subscriptions; but yet, if this argument be well founded, the authority of the Charity Commissioners much attach after the contributions have ceased for a reasonable time without a prospect of any returning contributions, which, nevertheless, from altered circumstances, might be shortly afterwards renewed. My opinion is, that the cessation in the receipt of voluntary contributions cannot alter the character of the funds already received by the institution, and that, assuming them to have been originally voluntary contributions, they continue to retain that character as long as they remain in the possession of the corporation, although invested in any permanent security—provided always that they are not, by some competent authority, set apart for, or impressed with, any particular trust. Now my opinion on that point is derived from these words of the clause, which I will read: "Where any charity is maintained partially by voluntary subscriptions and partially by income arising from any endowment, the powers and provisions of the Act shall, with respect to such charity, extend and apply to the income from endowment only;" and then it specifies what is the meaning of, and what is to be done in the case of a donation or bequest: "And no donation or bequest unto or in trust for any such charity as last aforesaid, of which no special application or appropriation shall be directed or declared by the donor or testator, and which may legally be applied by the governing or managing body of such charity as income in aid of the voluntary subscriptions, shall be subject to the jurisdiction or control of the said board, or the powers or provisions of this Act, and no portion of any such donation or bequest as last aforesaid, or of any voluntary subscription which is now, or shall or may from time to time be set apart or appropriated and invested by the governing or managing body of the charity for the purpose of being held and applied or expended for or to some defined and specific object or purpose connected with such charity, in pursuance of any rule or resolution made or adopted by the governing or managing body of such charity, or of any donation or bequest in aid of any fund so set apart or appropriated for any such object or purpose as aforesaid, shall be subject to the direction of the commissioners." That is to say, nobody can deny that a donation or bequest would be an endowment, and, if invested, there would be an income from it; but it is especially exempted unless there be (to use the words of the Act) "special application or appropriation." That means something specific as distinct from the general purpose and object of the association. My opinion, therefore, (formed on the consideration of this clause, taken by itself alone) is, that the word "endowment" has reference to an endowment made for some specific purpose or trust. I use the word specific or particular purpose or trust advisedly, because it is obvious that a gift of a sum of money to the corporation simpliciter, or a gift in trust to the corporation, without more, or a gift in trust for the furtherance of the objects and purpose for which the corporation was established, would be one of many different ways of accomplishing the same end, namely, making a donation to the corporation itself. What words would amount to and constitute a particular and specific trust, so as to bring it within the meaning of the word endowment according to the sense in which it appears to me to have been used in this clause, taken alone, it is not necessary for the present purpose to consider, as no such question arises here and the land in question was paid for by and out of the general funds of the corporation, voluntarily contributed for its support. The length of time that the investments have lasted cannot, as I have already stated, alter the character of it. The land remains as much a voluntary contribution as if the money which purchased it had been given to the corporation only twelve months ago, and had been by its managers invested in the purchase of the land rather than in the purchase of stock, in consequence of their considering land to be the more eligible investment. The fact that it is land which was purchased cannot convert the money invested into an endowment, if the purchase of stock or of Exchequer-bills would not have produced that effect. The consequence is, that upon reading of this clause alone, my opinion is that the word "endowment," as used in it, does not apply to land purchased by the corporation simply for the purpose of investment of its funds or savings, and that any other construction would be repugnant to the scope and object of this clause. But the difficulty does not cease when this conclusion is arrived at; on the contrary, it is rather increased. The question on this clause arises on the meaning of the word "endowment" as employed in it. The court, therefore, naturally turns to the interpretation clause in this statute, to see if that sheds any light on the meaning of the word "endowment" as used in the Act; and accordingly we find the following passage in the interpretation clause, which is the 66th, and the words are these:—"The expression 'endowment' shall mean and include all lands and real estate whatsoever of any tenure, and any charge thereon or interest therein, and all stocks, funds, moneys, securities, investments, and personal estate whatsoever, which shall for the time belong to or be held in trust for any charity, or for all or any of the objects or purposes thereof." Now this, at first sight, would appear to be a very startling and extensive meaning to be given to the word "endowment," and, if construed literally, it would seem wholly to supersede the 62nd clause; for it is impossible for any institution to possess any property, or any right to any property whatever, that would not be included in this enumeration. Such a thing as a "voluntary contribution" as contradistinguished from an "endowment" could not, in this extended meaning, be said to exist. The instant that the annual subscription is paid to the treasurer, it is, to use the words of the interpretation clause, "money which for the time being belongs to or is held in trust for the charity." Even tables and chairs and other personal chattels would come within the enumeration of "personal estate whatsoever." It could not, I think, have been the object of the Legislature to enact a clause, introducing a careful, though obscurely worded, exception from the operation of the Act, and then four clauses later to introduce words in a general interpretation clause wholly negating the authority of that 62nd section, and in fact expunging it from the Act. It is the duty of the court, if possible, to reconcile and give effect to both clauses, and, in my opinion, the only way in which this can be done is to adhere to the interpretation I have already given of the word "endowment" in the 66th clause, namely, the devotion of property to a specific and particular trust, and to give it the same meaning in this 62nd or interpretation clause; that is, to hold that the meaning of this clause is, not to enact that the possession by any charity of any property of the various kinds here enumerated constitutes an "endowment," but that property of all the classes and characters here specified may be made the subject of endowment, in which case the word would properly apply to lands, to money, to every species of real and personal property whatsoever, including even personal chattels, provided any such were, either by the will of the donor or otherwise, impressed with a particular and specific trust in favour of the charity (which, no doubt, might apply to books, or plate, or the like), but which interpretation would not fetter the right of the charity, or the power of its managers, to dispose of the property not so devoted, or, to use the words of the statute, as construed by me, not so endowed, to any purposes which they might consider necessary for the purposes of the institution in the due discharge of the duties attached to them. This would make the distinction between endowed funds and funds voluntarily contributed, taken by the 62nd clause, plain and unambiguous; and this, although not altogether satisfactory, is the only way in which I am able to construe this very obscure statute, and give effect to both its provisions. I cannot adopt the suggestion of Mr. Lloyd, derived from the analogy of suits for the specific performance of contracts, where the court has held that it would not force a title on a purchaser in cases where the question on which the title depends is not considered clear by the court; first, because the principle of those cases—which is, that there exist persons not before the court, and therefore not bound by the decision, who may afterwards raise the same question—does not, as it appears to me, affect the present case, as the only persons who could hereafter raise this question would be the corporation itself, which is before me, and therefore is bound by my decision; and secondly, and principally, because this is a special case, where both parties have agreed to take the opinion of the court on the facts agreed to in that case, and where consequently the court is bound to answer the question put to it, by expressing its opinion. Neither is the court at liberty to evade the question by adopting any such formula as that which I have occasionally met with in opinions from counsel at the bar, namely, that the inclination of the court's opinion lies in one direction, or words equivalent thereto. The court is bound to form and to express its opinion. I have formed mine, and I declare it to be that the consent of the Charity Commissioners to this sale is not necessary, and I answer the case accordingly.

REG. v. THOMAS GOSS.

REG. v. JOSEPH RAGO.

False pretence—Sale by sample—False representation of quantity—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53.

A misrepresentation of a definite fact, cognisable by the senses—as where a seller represents the quantity of coals to be fourteen cwt., whereas it is in fact only eight cwt., but so packed as to look more; or where the seller, by manoeuvring, contrives to pass off tasters of cheese as if extracted from the cheese offered for sale, whereas it was not—is a false pretence, indictable under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53.

REG. v. THOMAS GOSS.

The prisoner, Thomas Goss, was tried before me at the last Michaelmas Sessions for the borough of Northampton, for obtaining money by false pretences.

The first count of the indictment stated that the prisoner, having in his possession divers pounds' weight of cheese of little value and inferior quality, and contriving and intending to cause it to be believed that the said cheese was of good flavour and excellent quality, and also having in his possession divers pieces of cheese called "tasters," of good flavour, taste and quality, and contriving and intending to cheat one Thomas Roddis out of his money, then and there unlawfully, knowingly and designedly did falsely pretend to Roddis that the said pieces of cheese called "tasters" which he Thomas Goss then and there delivered to Roddis were part of the said cheese the said Thomas Goss then offered for sale, and that the said cheese was of good and excellent quality, flavour and taste, and that every pound weight was of the value of fourpence halfpenny, by means of which said false pretence the said Thos. Goss did then and there unlawfully and fraudulently obtain of and from the said Roddis the sum of three pounds nineteen shillings and sixpence, with intent to cheat and defraud him of the same, whereas the said pieces of cheese which the said Thos. Goss delivered to Roddis were not part of the said cheese which the said Thos. Goss offered for sale, and whereas the said cheese which the said Thos. Goss offered for sale was not of good and excellent quality, flavour and taste, and whereas every pound weight of the said cheese was not of the value of 4½d., which the prisoner well knew.

The second count of the indictment was in the same form as the first, excepting that it did not charge that the prisoner designated the samples as "tasters," and that it contained and negated an additional false pretence, that the cheese offered for sale was of the same quality, flavour and taste as the samples.

The third count stated that the prisoner had in his possession divers pieces of cheese with intent to defraud, and delivered the same to Roddis, and unlawfully, &c., did falsely pretend to him that they were and had been taken from, and were and had formed part and portion of certain cheeses which the prisoner then and there offered for sale, by means of which, &c., the prisoner did unlawfully, &c., obtain, &c., with intent to defraud, &c., whereas, &c. (negating the pretence).

The fourth count stated that the prisoner unlawfully, &c., did falsely pretend to Thos. Roddis that certain pieces of cheese which he then and there delivered and exhibited to Roddis were and had been taken from, and were and had formed part and portion of certain cheeses which the prisoner then and there offered for sale to him, by means of which, &c., the prisoner did then and there obtain, &c., with intent, &c., whereas, &c. (negating the pretence).

It was proved at the trial that the prosecutor Thos. Roddis, on the 19th Sept. last, was attending the cheese fair, held within the borough of Northampton, and that the prisoner was in the fair, and sold to the prosecutor eight cheeses, weighing 1 cwt. 3 qrs. 1 lb., for which the prosecutor paid the prisoner the sum of 3l. 19s. 6d., being at the rate of 4½d. per pound. On the prosecutor going into the fair the prisoner offered to sell him the eight cheeses, and bored six of them with a cheese-scoop, and then produced and offered to the prosecutor several pieces of cheese, which are called "tasters," successively at the end of the scoop for the prosecutor to taste, and in order that he might taste them as being respectively samples and portions of the six cheeses which the prisoner had bored; and accordingly the prosecutor did taste them, and then offered the prisoner 4½d. per pound for the eight cheeses, which the prisoner accepted. The tasters, however, had not in fact been extracted from the cheeses offered for sale, for after the prisoner had bored the cheeses, and before he handed the tasters to the prosecutor, he took from his coat pocket pieces of cheese of better quality and description than those taken from the cheeses which he had bored, and privily and fraudulently put these pieces of cheese at and into the top of the scoop for the prosecutor to taste, and the cheese which the prosecutor did taste was not any portion of the six cheeses which the prisoner bored. The prosecutor, at the time he bought the eight cheeses, believed that he had been tasting a portion of those cheeses, and in that belief bought them, and paid the prisoner the 3*l*. 1*9s*. 6*d*. for them, which he would not have done unless he had believed that the tasters had been extracted from the cheeses which he so bought. The cheeses were delivered to the prosecutor, and he retained possession of them up to the trial.

The value of the eight cheeses would be about 3*d*. per lb.

The prisoner's counsel at the trial objected that there was no evidence to support the indictment, or of any facts which would constitute a false pretence within the statute.

I left the case to the jury, and the prisoner was convicted; but having some doubt as to whether the case of Reg. v. Abbott, 1 Den. C. C. 273, had not been shaken by subsequent decisions (see Reg. v. Brym, 26 L. J. 84, M.C.), I reserved the case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal. JOHN H. BREWER.

No counsel was instructed to argue on behalf of the prosecution.

Merewether for the prisoner.—This case was reserved in consequence of the remarks of some of the judges upon the case of Reg. v. Abbott, 1 Den. C. C. 273; S.C. 2 Cox Crim. Cas. 430, which was decided upon the authority of Reg. v. Kenrick, 5 Q. B. 49. The facts in the present case are precisely the same as in Reg. v. Abbott; and unless that case can be impeached, this conviction must, no doubt, be upheld. In Reg. v. Rutland, 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 126; S.C. 1 Dears. & B. C. C. 24, Lord Campbell, C.J. said: "If this were res integra, I should not agree with Reg. v. Abbott, because I think that there the intention of the prisoner was to obtain a better bargain, and not animo furandi; but that having been decided by ten judges, I do not wish on the present appeal to disturb it." So in Reg. v. Eagleton, 6 Cox Crim. Cas. 559; S.C. 1 Dears. & P. 515, the authority of Reg. v. Abbott and Reg. v. Kenrick was much disputed in the course of the argument; but the court said that it did not then become necessary to consider those cases. In Reg. v. Brym, 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 312, the defendant, in order to obtain a loan on a quantity of plated spoons, represented to a pawnbroker that they were of the best quality, and were equal to Elkington's A (meaning spoons and forks made by Elkington, and stamped with the letter A); that the foundation was of the best material, and that they had as much silver upon them as Elkington's A. The jury found that these representations were wilfully false, and that by means of them the loan was obtained. Held (Willes, J. and Bramwell, B. dissentientibus) that the conviction was wrong, and that the representation being a mere exaggeration or puffing of the quality of the goods in the course of a bargain, it was not a false pretence within the statute. In Reg. v. Sherwood, 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 270, the prisoner, after he had agreed with the prosecutor to sell and deliver a load of coals at a certain price per cwt., falsely and fraudulently pretended that the quantity which he had delivered was 18 cwt., and that it had been weighed at the colliery, and the weight put down by himself on a ticket which he produced, he knowing it to be 14 cwt. only, and thereby obtained an additional sum of money; and this was held to amount to a false pretence within the statute. In that case a difficulty was felt by the court in drawing the line between indictable and non-indictable false representations.

The COURT said that they had no doubt about Reg. v. Abbott being a decision that they would act upon and sound in principle, but they desired the case of Reg. v. Joseph Itagy (being on the same subject), to be called on before giving judgment.

REG. v. JOSEPH RAGG.

Joseph Ragg was tried before me at the General Quarter Sessions of the peace for the county of Leicester, held on the 3rd Jan. 1860, for obtaining money under false pretences from Henry Harris.

The indictment stated the pretence to be a false pretence as to the character and weight of a quantity of coals sold and delivered by the prisoner to the prosecutor.

It appeared in evidence as follows:—The prisoner was a coal dealer. On the 28th Nov. he called at the house of the prosecutor in Loughborough, with a load of coals in a cart, and inquired if he (the prosecutor) wanted to buy a load of "Forest" coal. The prosecutor replied that the coals did not look like Forest coal, because they looked so dull. The prisoner replied, "I assure you they are Forest coal, and the reason of their looking so dull is because they have been standing in the rain all night; there is 15 cwt. of them, for I paid for 14 cwt. at the coal-pits, and they gave me 1 cwt. in." On this the prosecutor bought the coal, and paid 7*s*. 6*d*. for the load. The prisoner unloaded the cart, and packed the coals in the prosecutor's coal-place. When the prosecutor saw the coals in the coal-place, they appeared to be much too small a quantity to weigh 15 cwt., and he had them weighed, when it was found that they weighed 8 cwt. only.

The prisoner had at this time received his money and gone away, but the prosecutor went after him, challenging him with the fraud, and asking for redress. The prisoner, however, refused to make any, stating "that he did not make childish bargains, and that the prosecutor could not do anything to him, because he had not sold the coal by weight but by the load."

The prosecutor stated that he had bought the coal on the representation of the prisoner that there were 15 cwt., and the size of the cart and the appearance of the coal therein warranted the belief that there were 15 cwt.; but it turned out that the coal was loaded in a particular manner, technically known as "tunnelling;" that is, the coal (which is in large lumps) is so built up in the cart that one lump rests on the edges of that below it, and large spaces are left between the lumps of coal, and thus there is an appearance of a greater quantity of coal than there actually is.

From further evidence, it appeared that the coal was not Forest coal at all, and had not been bought at the pits, but was Rutland coal, and bought that same morning at a wharf in the town of Loughborough; that the cart, when loaded at the wharf, had weighed 8 cwt. only, and although the prisoner stated that other coal had been added to it from another cart-load purchased at the same time from the wharf, there was no evidence of this produced at the trial.

It further appeared that on the same day, and a very short time after the coal was sold to the prosecutor, the prisoner had offered the same load to another person as containing 13 cwt., but on looking at the cart it was evident that the coal was "tunnelled," and the prisoner was then and there challenged with the fact, and told that there was not above 8 cwt. in the cart, or 10 cwt. at the most.

The prisoner was not defended by counsel, and the jury found him guilty.

With respect to the false pretence as to the "character" of the coal, it appeared to me, on inquiring of the witnesses, that there was not much real difference in value between the Forest coal and the Rutland coal, and that the preference of one over the other was rather according to the idea of the customer, than the actual value of the article; and I should not have considered it a case of false pretences under the statute had this been the only misrepresentation; but I considered that the evidence showed, not merely a false statement as to the quantity, but a preconceived intention to defraud, and a mode of packing the coal, resorted to for the purpose of fraud, and that therefore the jury properly found the prisoner guilty.

On referring, however, to the case of Reg. v. Sherwood, I found that some of the learned judges who gave judgment therein had apparently drawn a distinction between the case of a false representation made during the bargaining and that made after the sale was completed; and in the present case, "as the false pretence was made in the course of the progress of a sale," I did not feel justified in sentencing the prisoner until the subject had come under the consideration of the judges. I therefore postponed the sentence, and directed that the prisoner might be liberated on bail to appear and receive sentence at the next Easter sessions.

HY. J. HOSKINS, Deputy Chairman.

No counsel were instructed either for the prosecutor or prisoner.

ERLE, C.J.—We are of opinion that the conviction in each case was right. With reference to the case of Joseph Ragg, there was a false representation that the quantity of coals was 15 cwt., whereas only about 8 cwt. were delivered, and there was a pretence of a delivery of 7 cwt., no part of which had been delivered. This falls within the class of cases of false representations as to the quantity of goods delivered, the principle of which is a false pretence of a definite fact cognisable by the senses, which is an indictable offence within the statute. With regard to the case of Thomas Goss, there was also a false pretence of a definite fact within the cognisance of the senses; for by a sample of an entirely different cheese which he falsely represented as a sample of the cheese to be sold, he procured the purchaser to buy the inferior cheese, and part with his money. That was a false pretence as to the substance of the article for sale, whereby the prisoner was enabled to pass off a counterfeit article. In Reg. v. Roebuck, 1 Leas. & B. 24; S. C. 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 126, it was held that falsely representing to a pawnbroker that a chain is silver, the prisoner knowing it to be a base metal, is indictable. So here the drawing from the prisoner's pocket dishonestly samples from another cheese, and not the cheese intended for sale, which was a totally different substance, and falsely pretending to the purchaser that those samples were part of the substance which he was to buy, that is equally an indictable offence within the statute, and falls within the class of cases to which belong Reg. v. Abbott, where the substance of the purchase was a cheese of the identical character with the taster; and Reg. v. Dundas, 6 Cox Crim. Cas. 380, where the article sold was falsely pretended to be Everett's blacking, which was a known article in the neighbourhood, whereas in fact the article sold was a totally different thing. In the case of Reg. v. Bryan, the case of the plated spoons represented as equal to Elkington's A, having as much silver and foundations of the best material, the judges who constituted the majority decided that case on a very sound distinction, for there the representation was matter of undefined opinion, and not within the limit of indictable offences. A great deal of dissatisfaction has been expressed with that decision, as if it must operate as an encouragement to falsehood and fraud, and lead to a great deal of mischief; but it should be recollected what an extreme calamity it is to a respectable man to have to stand his trial at a criminal bar as a cheat upon an indictment at the instance of a dissatisfied purchaser, and this he might be liable to for merely using an imaginative style of address upon the sale of his goods. It is of great public importance to endeavour to draw the line distinctly between false representations which are indictable and those which are not. In the present case there was a false representation that an article was a genuine substance, and so passing off a counterfeit substance, and that was an indictable offence. My brother Willes, J., in Reg. v. Bryan, threw a great deal of light on the law as to false pretences, and though he differed from the majority of the judges in the decision, he did not differ from the principle of that decision, but only upon the application of that principle to the case. The majority of the judges thought the representation there to be a matter of opinion only; my brother Willes thought it a representation of the substance, as if the representation had been, there is as much silver in the spoons as in Elkington's A, and in his judgment it was the false representation of a definite fact. We are therefore of opinion that this conviction must be affirmed.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I would merely add, with reference to the cheese cases and Elkington's case, one observation. If the prisoner had said that the cheeses were equal to the tasters produced, that would have fallen within the Elkington's spoon case; but he said to the prosecutor, "These tasters are a part of the very cheeses I propose to sell to you;" and therefore it was a representation of a definite fact.

The rest of the Court concurring,

ORAM v. GAIT.

Turnpike toll—Agricultural produce—Milk—3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32.

Milk does not come within the meaning of the words "or other agricultural produce," in sect. 32 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126 (General Turnpike Act) so as to be exempt from toll.

This was a case stated under the 21 & 22 Vict.

(a) There is no part of the criminal law so difficult to determine as the precise point at which a false representation becomes criminal, and consequently indictable. Judges and authors have alike failed to frame a precise and clear definition of the offence. It is certain that all false representations made by the seller are not criminal, for if it were so, every puff would be indictable. No amount of mere exaggeration is criminal, as for instance, where a quack declares that his medicine will cure all diseases, or the tailor that his clothes are the best cloth and fit. But a false representation of a fact seems to be indictable, as where a chain is represented as gold, when it is not gold, or as in the above case, the cheese given to taste is represented to be part of the cheese sold, when it is not so. This definition, however, is not quite perfect, for in Reg. v. Bryan, 7 Cox Crim. Cas. 312, a false representation that silver was equal to Elkington's A was held not to be indictable, the assigned reason being that it was a mere misrepresentation of quality, and not of a fact, and it may be concluded that if the representation had been that the silver was Elkington's A, the indictment might have been sustained.

However, as the decisions now stand, the safest rule for magistrates to observe will be to treat as criminal only a false representation by a seller of goods as to some fact not touching their mere quality. And it is also very important for them to bear in mind that in all charges of false pretences there must be, not only an actual false pretence, but that it must have been known to the prisoner to be such, and that it must have been used with intent to defraud—that intent being of the essence of the crime. Consequently the proofs to be required in all such cases are of

First, the pretence itself, which may be either by words, or by acts equivalent to words.

Secondly, proof by the prosecution that the pretence was false in fact.

Thirdly, that it was by reason of that particular false pretence that the prisoner obtained the property.

Fourthly, that he resorted to it with intent to defraud, and this intent may be gleaned from all the circumstances of the case.

THE GOVERNOR, &C., OF THE NEW RIVER v. SARAH HANKIN JOHNSON.

c. 43, upon a conviction of a tollgate-keeper for taking illegal toll.

By sect. 32 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126 (the General Turnpike Act), it is enacted "that no toll shall be demanded or taken by virtue of this or any other Act of Parliament on any turnpike-road . . . for any horse, beast, or other cattle or carriage employed in carrying or conveying on the same day . . . any hay, straw, fodder for cattle and corn in the straw which has grown or arisen on land or ground in the occupation of the owner of any such hay, straw, fodder, or corn in the straw, potatoes, or other agricultural produce," &c.

The respondent in this case had passed through a turnpike-gate in the city of Wells, driving a horse and cart laden with cans of milk. The appellant, who was the gatekeeper, claimed and took a toll for such horse and cart, whereupon the respondent summoned him before the magistrates of Wells for taking an illegal toll, the milk being, as he contended, "agricultural produce" within the exemption above stated. The magistrates being of this opinion, convicted the appellant.

No one appeared for the respondent.

F. Edwards, for the appellant, contended that milk does not come within the exemption in sect. 32 of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, and that the gatekeeper was right in demanding the toll, and that the justices were wrong in convicting him. (He was stopped by the court.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—You need not further argue the case; we are all with you upon the question. The section enumerates certain things, as hay, straw, &c., followed by the general words of, "or other agricultural produce." These latter words must be confined to things ejusdem generis with those which have preceded them. The conviction cannot be sustained.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If the construction put upon this section by the magistrates could be upheld, it would exempt carts laden with meat.

CROMPTON and HILL, JJ. concurred.

Conviction quashed (a).

Wednesday, Jan. 18.

THE GOVERNOR AND COMPANY OF THE NEW RIVER (Appellants), AND SARAH HANKIN JOHNSON, (Respondent).

Waterworks Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 17)—
Compensation for damage.

The Waterworks Clauses Act 1847 enables the undertakers to make drains, &c., and provides that in the exercise of their powers they shall make full compensation to all parties interested for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers. This proviso, however, does not give a right to compensation in any case where but for the statute a right of action would not exist.

The respondent was possessed of a well, and the company by making a drain drew off the water which percolated into the well, and by the same means drew it off by percolation after it had found its way into the well:

Held that, as no action could be maintained for this injury, so no compensation could be claimed for it under the statute.

This was an appeal under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, against an order of the magistrates of the borough of Hertford, made upon the New River Company, for the payment by the appellants to the respondent of the sum of 2l. 16s. 7d. and costs.

It appeared that the company were, in and by their local Act, entitled "An Act to enable the New River Company to construct certain sewers, drains and other works in and near the town of Hertford, and for other purposes" (17 & 18 Vict.), and the Acts incorporated therein, empowered to construct certain sewers, drains and other works, in and near the town of Hertford, and that in doing so they drained the spring of a certain well, belonging to a messuage and premises of the respondent, in consequence of which she was obliged considerably to deepen her said well, and do other works attending the same to obtain a proper supply of water, and in so doing had incurred the expense of 2l. 16s. 7d. In the said local Act was incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847 (10 Vict. c. 17), the 12th section of which enables the company to make (inter alia) drains, cuts, &c., "provided always, that in the exercise of the said powers the undertakers shall do as little damage as can be, . . . and shall make full compensation to all parties interested, for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers." It appeared by the evidence that the company for the purposes of their Act opened the public road in front of the respondent's house, and that as soon as the ground was dug out to form the sewer the water in the respondent's well became less in quantity, and that the diminishing continued till the well became quite dry.

This case was part argued on the 16th Nov. last, by Woollett for the respondent and Bovill, Q.C. for the appellants, when its further argument was postponed till the present term; but the court being now differently constituted, it desired Woollett again to state his argument.

Woollett (Foster with him) now again argued for the respondent, that the order of justices was perfectly good, and that the company were liable under the 12th section of the Waterworks Act (incorporated in the local Act) to make compensation for the damage sustained by the respondent. He contended that the company were liable, first, for interrupting the water in its access to the well; and secondly, for drawing it from the well after it had found its way there. He endeavoured to distinguish this case from Chasemore v. Richards, 33 L. T. Rep. 350, and Acton v. Blundell, 18 L. J. 280, Ex. He also cited The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Bradley, 6 Rail. Cas. 151; Sturton v. Woolrych, 26 L. J. 303, Ch.

Bovill, Q.C. (Bushley with him) was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think this order must be quashed. The recent decisions fully establish what is the correct view we are to take of Acts of Parliament when they give compulsory powers to interfere with the rights of property and provide for compensation, namely, that a party shall not be damnified by having his right of action taken away, and that therefore, unless the company are doing something which but for the compulsory powers they could not do, they shall not be liable to make compensation. The question, therefore, here is, whether the company have interfered with the rights of the respondent in such a way as would give a right of action? Mr. Woollett says that they have interfered with the water in its coming to the well, and that they have drawn it away after it has got there. Now, as regards the first injury, Chasemore v. Richards is an authority to show that the abstraction of water percolating through the earth is not a cause of action, and so in this case the abstraction would not give a right of action, and therefore there should be no compensation under the statute. Then as to abstracting the water after it has got to the well, Acton v. Blundell is an authority to show that no action will lie for that. It would be a very great pity to throw any doubt upon the proper construction of such clauses under these Acts of Parliament. Where there could be no right of action, it would be very mischievous to hold that any right to compensation is given by statute, unless upon the clearest language.

(a) This case is important, as defining what agricultural produce is exempt from tolls. It must be ejusdem generis, with "hay, straw, fodder, corn, &c." in the way to be used by the farmer, not being carted away for sale.

Order quashed without costs. (a)

THE MAYOR, &C., OF STOCKPORT v. CHEETHAM.
SAME v. DAVENPORT.

Local Improvement Acts, 7 Geo. 4, c. cxxviii. ss. 71, 73—1 Vict. c. cxxix ss. 107, 108, 109, 115—Construction.

To an action by commissioners acting under a Local Improvement Act against the owners, &c., of buildings, to recover the expenses incurred in paving flagging, soughing, cleansing, and completing a certain street, the defendant pleaded that the said street was a public street and common highway, repairable and repaired by the inhabitants at large as a common highway:

Hold, on demurrer (with reference to the several local Acts), a bad plea.

These were actions brought by the mayor and corporation of Stockport, as commissioners under an Act for improving and regulating the borough. The declarations stated that, after the passing of the said Act, divers streets within the said borough, and amongst others a street called York-street, were respectively laid out, but were not paved, flagged, soughed, cleansed, completed, and put into good order and condition in such manner and with such materials and with such drains as were to the satisfaction of the said commissioners appointed for putting the said Act, and the several powers therein contained, into execution, and the same respectively for and during all the times hereinafter mentioned had buildings, tenements, yards and inclosed places other than such as were used only as arable, meadow, or pasture land at the respective sides thereof, to the extent of one-half part of the whole length of the said streets respectively, and exclusive of streets, squares, places, lanes, roads, paths, ways, courts, and other public passages and entries leading into, out of, or across the same; and the defendant was the owner of a house, building, ground, and land within the said street called York-street, and divers other persons were also owners of houses, buildings, ground, and land within and adjoining that street; and that street continuing not levelled, flagged, soughed, drained, completed, and put into good order and condition as aforesaid, the said commissioners deeming it just, necessary and proper to cause the same to be levelled, flagged, soughed, drained, cleansed, repaired, amended, completed, and put, inclusive of streets, squares, places, lanes, roads, paths, ways, courts, and other public passages and entries leading into, out of, over, or across the said street, into good order and condition, and having power and authority to do so under and by virtue of the said Act, did cause their clerk to give and leave notice in writing to and with the defendant and each and every other of the owners and occupiers of the buildings, lands, grounds, and hereditaments within and adjoining to the said street, called York-street, so to be levelled, paved, flagged, drained, soughed, cleansed, repaired, amended, completed, and put into good order and condition as aforesaid, requiring the defendant and other such owners, and each of them collectively, to level, pave, flag, drain, sough, cleanse, repair, amend, complete and put the said street, inclusive of all streets, squares, places, lanes, roads, paths, ways, courts and other public passages and entries leading into, out of, over, or across the same street, into good order and condition, in such manner and according to a certain plan produced and shown at the time of the service of the said notice, and with such materials, sewers, soughs, gutters, sinks, drains and watercourses, as the said commissioners in the said notice directed, and the said commissioners did by the said notice give the defendant and others, the said owners and occupiers, notice, that in case they neglected or refused, for the space of six calendar months after the said notice, to level, pave, flag, drain, sough, cleanse, repair, amend and otherwise complete and put the said street into good order and condition, and with such materials, sewers, soughs, gutters, sinks, drains and watercourses as aforesaid, pursuant to the said notice, that then and in such case the said commissioners would cause the same to be done, and recover the costs, charges and expenses thereof, in case of refusal to pay the same, in such manner as in the said Act is mentioned; and the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant and other the said owners neglected and refused, for the space of six calendar months next after the said notice, to pave the said street, and with such materials as aforesaid, pursuant to the said notice; and thereupon afterwards the said commissioners caused the levelling, paving, flagging, draining, soughing, repairing and amending of the same, to be done according to the said Act, and the charges and expenses of and attending their doing the same amounted in the whole to a large sum of money, and the proportions of such charges and expenses to be paid by the said owners respectively, according to the said Act, were afterwards ascertained by the said commissioners, and the defendant's equal share and proportion of the said charges and expenses to be paid by him and calculated according to the said Act, and ascertained as aforesaid, amounted in the whole to a large sum of money, to wit, 27*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*; and the defendant had notice of the premises. And the defendant, although required by the said commissioners to pay the same, has refused and still refuses so to do, and the said commissioners are still unpaid and not reimbursed the same. And the said commissioners have done all things, and all things have happened and exist, to entitle the said commissioners to have payment made to them of the said sum.

There were also counts for money payable and for money paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant's use.

Seventh plea.—That the said street, called York-street, was before and at the times of the giving or leaving of the said notices, and thence hitherto has been, and still is, a public street and common highway repairable and which theretofore had been repaired and kept in repair, and during all the times aforesaid ought to have been, and still ought, to be repaired and kept in repair, when and as often as necessary, by the inhabitants at large of a certain district or division within which the same was and is situate, and the inhabitants of which district or division, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, have been used and accustomed to repair and amend, and during all the times aforesaid ought to have repaired and amended, and still ought to repair and amend, when and as often as necessary, all common highways situate within the said district or division, and which otherwise would be repairable by the parish at large.

Demurrer and joinder in demurrer.

Collier, Q.C. (Welsby with him), for the plaintiff, contended, first, that the fact of York-street being a common highway repairable by the inhabitants at large of a certain district or division, does not exclude the jurisdiction of the commissioners or discharge the defendant from liability to pay the expenses sued for. Secondly, that York-street is a street within the meaning of the "Act for improving and regulating the borough of Stockport in the several counties of Chester and Lancaster:" (1 Vict. c. cxxix.) Thirdly, that the expenses sued for were incurred in respect of matters and works within the jurisdiction of the commissioners, and which the inhabitants at large of the said district or division were not liable to do or perform. Fourthly, that the persons liable to the said expenses are the owners of the houses, buildings, ground or land within or adjoining the said street.

(a) This is in accordance with a recent series of decisions that have determined that there is no property in water percolating through the earth to a well by no defined channel, and that it may be abstracted by digging elsewhere; so also that when water has entered the well it may be abstracted by percolation by another well.

Mellish, for the defendant, contended that, according to the true construction of the 107th, 108th, 109th and 115th sections (a) of the local Act, for improving and regulating the borough of Stockport, the plaintiffs have no power to compel the owners of premises adjoining streets to pay the expense of paving the streets where the streets are highways repairable by the parish or township.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jas. 26.—COCKBURN, C.J.—The question argued before us in this case was, whether the 108th section of the 1 Vict. c. cxxix (local) extended to highways, which were public and repairable by the inhabitants of the township. It was admitted by Mr. Mellish, who argued for the defendant, that the words of the enactment, in their plain and grammatical construction, were sufficient to include such public highways; but he contended that the language used would be satisfied by the limiting it to the highways not repairable by the inhabitants at large; and that many inconveniences would result from giving the section the wider application. On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs, that in order to carry out the intent and object of the statute, it was necessary to give to the provision in question its proper meaning; and reference

(e) The following is an abstract of the sections referred to:—1 Vict. c. cxxix (local) a. 107, provides that when any streets, squares, lanes, roads, paths, courts, ways or passages in the borough shall be well and sufficiently made, sewered, paved, flagged, repaired, amended, supported and put in order to the satisfaction of the commissioners, the said commissioners may, on the application of the owner or owners of the soil, or of the greater part in value of such owners, declare such streets, &c. to be highways, and order the surveyor of highways to repair and keep the same in good condition, and after such declaration and order the same shall be deemed to be public highways, and shall be kept in repair by the inhabitants of the township wherein the same shall be situate. Sect. 108 empowers the commissioners to cause all such of the present streets, &c. laid out but not paved, flagged, soughed, cleansed, completed and put into good order, or any portion thereof which shall have any buildings, tenements, yards, or inclosed places, except such as are used only as arable, meadow, or pasture land, whether the same shall be in a continuous line or not at the side or respective sides thereof, to the extent of one-half of the whole length of such streets, &c. to be freed from fences, posts and other obstruction, and to be paved, flagged, soughed, drained, cleansed, repaired, completed, amended and put into good order in such manner, with such materials, sewers, &c., and on such levels as to the said commissioners shall seem most necessary; and the charges and expenses attending or in any measure relating to such new pavements, flagging, levelling, draining, soughing, cleansing, sewers, &c., and completing and putting into good order and condition, shall be paid and reimbursed to the said commissioners by the owners of the houses, buildings, ground, or land within or adjoining the said streets, &c., so to be now paved, &c., each such owner paying an equal share or proportion thereof, according as such new pavement, &c. are or is or shall be, either before, behind, or at the side or corner of his or their house or houses, &c., except as before mentioned, and such portions of the said costs, charges and expenses as relate to such levelling, and the necessary drains, &c. for conveying the surface water into the main sewers, shall and may be charged to such owners without reference to the extent of their respective premises, in such proportions as the said commissioners shall consider fair and reasonable; and if such owners shall neglect or refuse to pay such charges and expenses, the same shall and may be levied by distress or by action at law. Sect. 109 provides that before the commissioners shall cause such streets, &c. to be levelled, paved, flagged, &c., they shall give notice in writing to the owners and occupiers of the buildings, land, ground and hereditaments within or adjoining the said streets, &c., requiring them collectively to level, pave, flag, &c. and put into good order and condition, and in case such owners shall neglect or refuse for six months after such notice to level, pave, &c., then the commissioners are required to cause the same to be done, and to recover the costs, charges and expenses thereof from such owner or occupier. Sect. 115 enacts that nothing therein contained shall extend to exempt the inhabitants of the several and respective townships from the repair of any highways.

was made to the preamble of the statute to enforce that view. The statute is for improving the borough of Stockport. It recites a former local Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. cxviii, and for the same object, the Parliamentary Reform Act, which created Stockport together with parts of four other adjoining townships, a parliamentary borough; and also the Municipal Corporation Act, by which the limits of Stockport as a corporate borough are made co-extensive with its limits as a parliamentary borough. It may be well here to observe, that when the 7 Geo. 4, c. cxviii, passed, the town of Stockport and the township of Stockport were coterminous, and that the 7 Geo. 4 was confined to that township. The 1 Vict. c. cxxix, then proceeds to recite as follows:—"And whereas those parts of the said borough of Stockport not comprised in the said first recited Act are very populous, and the several streets, lanes and passages therein are not sufficiently paved, lighted, repaired and cleansed, and the same are subject to various nuisances and annoyances, and the said township of Stockport since the passing of the said first recited Act hath greatly increased, and still is increasing, in building, and it is expedient that further and additional forces should be established for better paving, sewerage, cleansing, lighting, regulating and improving the said township of Stockport, and also for the paving, sewerage, cleansing, lighting, regulating and improving such parts of the said townships of Heaton Norris, Brinnington, Cheadle Bulkeley and Cheadle Moseley, as now form part of the said borough of Stockport, and for the opening and forming more convenient ways, approaches and streets within the said borough of Stockport." It is therefore plain that it was the intention of the Legislature that further powers should be established for better paving the whole town, and for paving the added parts of the new borough. This renders it important to ascertain what were the powers of the commissioners under the old Act of the 7 Geo. 4. For if the commissioners under that statute possessed a similar power with regard to the highways within the township of Stockport to that which the ordinary meaning of the language of the section now in dispute imports, with such a guide to the intention of the Legislature as that which the recital referred to affords, it would be doing violence to the construction of the enactment not to follow the ordinary meaning of the words because of the inconveniences which it is alleged would result from so doing. The 71st section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. cxviii, is very similar to the 107th section of the 1 Vict. c. cxxix; so much so as to afford ground for supposing that the latter was taken from the former; and in like manner the 73rd section of the former Act resembles the 108th section of the latter. The language of the 73rd section is as follows: "To cause all such parts of the public streets, lanes, highways and passages within the said township that now are in the estimation of the said commissioners fully built upon, but not finished, paved, flagged, or otherwise put into good order and condition, and all such public streets, lanes, ways and passages as are now making or may hereafter be made within the said township which now have or may hereafter have buildings erected at the respective sides thereof, to the extent of three-fourth parts thereof, to be made, paved and flagged." It is to be remembered that the statute 7 Geo. 4 refers to a time prior to the last Highway Act; that all public highways then dedicated to and accepted by the public were repairable by the inhabitants at large. It is therefore impossible to satisfy the 73rd section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. cxviii, by any construction which would exclude highways repairable by the inhabitants at large from its operation. The object of the enactment seems to be directed to the proper paving of such ways as had buildings erected on the sides thereof, to the extent of three-fourth parts thereof. A similar object seems to be aimed at by the 108th section of the 1 Vict. c. cxxix, except that the buildings are limited to one-half part of the length of the street to be paved. On the grounds, therefore, that a similar power was given to the commissioners under the first Stockport Improvement Act, and that the Legislature intended by the present Act not to abridge, but rather to enlarge, the powers given by the first Act, we think that the construction which the plain meaning of the enactment warrants should prevail, and our judgment must be for the plaintiffs. We desire to guard ourselves from being taken as expressing any opinion as to what would be the effect of such a provision as the one under consideration, where no previous statute served to show the meaning of the terms used. We have thought it unnecessary to determine the more general question, in consequence of the intent of the Legislature being here clearly indicated by the former enactment.

REG. v. JOHNSON.

Practice—New trial—Obstruction of highway. After a verdict of "not guilty" on an indictment for obstructing a highway, a rule for a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence.

Indictment for obstructing a highway.

At the trial the verdict was found for the defendant. A rule nisi having been obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence,

Hayes, Serjt. showed cause.—This being substantially a criminal proceeding, and the verdict having been found for the defendant, the court will not grant a new trial on the ground of the verdict being against the evidence, and so put the defendant upon his trial a second time. Cases cited:—R. v. Reynell, 6 East, 315; R. v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223; R. v. Mann, 4 M. & S. 337; R. v. Bury, 5 M. & S. 392; R. v. Wandsworth, 2 B. & Ald. 63; R. v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515; and R. v. Russell, 3 E. & B. 942.

Field in support of the rule.—In R. v. Russell it was held that the court would grant a new trial in the case of a prosecution substantially for the purpose of trying a civil right after an acquittal, where the ground of the rule is misdirection or the verdict is against evidence, and in the course of the argument Lord Campbell, C.J. observed that an indictment for non-repair of a highway was very much in the nature of a question as to a civil right.

WIGHTMAN, J.—When the case first came before us, I had great doubt whether it was a case in which the court would grant a rule for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. At the trial there was conflicting evidence, and the jury have found a verdict of acquittal, contrary to what we might think right. The question is, ought we now on that ground to grant a new trial? It is said that this proceeding, though in form a criminal one, is really instituted to try a civil right. But is that so? It does not bind the right; and besides, the defendant, on conviction, is liable to be treated as a criminal, and to be subjected to fine and imprisonment. On the whole, I think it better to abide by the rule, where so much of the criminal law is incidental to the case, not to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence after the defendant has been acquitted.

CROMPTON, J.—I also think that we ought not to interfere with a leading rule like this in criminal cases. I do not mean to say that there are not cases of prosecutions in which the court would interfere after a verdict of acquittal; but I adhere to what I said in Reg. v. Russell. This indictment assumes more of a criminal nature than one for the non-repair of a highway. I think it much better to put the prosecutors to a fresh indictment, than interfere on slight grounds with the rule as to not granting a new trial in such cases.

HILL, J.—This is an indictment for a nuisance; and there has been a verdict of not guilty, after a trial on the merits; and it is sought to set aside the verdict, and obtain a new trial, on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence. The verdict binds no right; and that is a strong fact to consider as to granting a new trial. It appears to me that it would be a violation of principle to grant a new trial in such a case.

SMERDON (appellant) v. TUCKER (respondent).

BICKLEY (appellant) v. TUCKER (respondent).

Election law—Borough vote—Qualification—Occupier of house with land under same landlord—Reversion, severance of, by secret deed—Reform Act, 2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 27.

A tenant held a house and land under the same landlord, sufficient, together, to give him the borough franchise. The landlord, in course of the year of occupation, and without notice to the tenant, sold the reversion of part of the premises to a third person, who thereupon objected to the tenant's name being retained upon the list of voters, on the ground that the reversion, being severed, he did not hold under "the same landlord" within the meaning of the 25th section of the Reform Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45, and the voter's name was expunged by the revising barrister:

Held, that the name must be restored to the list; that the taking of premises of sufficient value from the same landlord was the principal test relied on by the Legislature, and that here, the tenant having so taken them, and having continued to hold them on the same terms, the reversion, whether severed or not, was, as to his interest, the same reversion; therefore he was entitled to retain his vote.

At a court held before the revising barrister appointed to revise the list of voters for the borough of Ashburton, Robert Tucker duly objected to the name of John French being retained on the list of persons entitled to vote in the election of a member of Parliament for the borough of Ashburton.

The facts of the case were as follow:—

The voter, John French, occupied as tenant, from the 31st July 1858 to the 31st July 1859, a building and land within the borough of Ashburton, of the annual value of 11l. The only objection to the vote was, that the premises were not occupied under the same landlord. On the 31st July 1858 William Tucker, a son of the objector, was the landlord of all the premises.

The tenancy was a tenancy from year to year under a verbal agreement, at the annual rent of 11l. The estate of the said William Tucker was an estate for a long term of years, and he still retains that estate in part of the premises; but on the 12th July 1859 he sold to his father, the objector, Robert Tucker, an interest in part of the premises. By a deed of that date, duly executed, the said William Tucker, in consideration of the sum of 1l., demised to the objector Robert Tucker one of the fields occupied by the voter, to hold during the joint lives of the said William Tucker and Robert Tucker, subject to the payment of a rent-charge of 4l., issuing out of all the premises occupied by the voter.

The transaction was a bond fide sale for adequate value. The consideration was really paid, but no notice of the sale or conveyance was ever given to the voter, and he did not know of it until it was disclosed in the revising barrister's court. The voter had not since the execution of the conveyance paid any rent either to William Tucker or Robert Tucker. The premises retained by the said William Tucker and the premises demised by him to Robert Tucker were not, when separated, of sufficient value to confer a vote.

The objector admitted that the object of this arrangement was, by severance of the reversion, to destroy the vote.

On the part of the voter it was contended that inasmuch as there had been no attornment by the voter, nor any apportionment of rent agreed to by him, nor any recognition by him of any other landlord, he still continued (notwithstanding the execution of the deed) to occupy all the premises under William Tucker, the original landlord; and that even the statute 4 Anne, c. 16, which made rendered attornment unnecessary in certain cases, was inoperative in this case, inasmuch as no notice of the deed had been given to the voter before the 31st July 1859.

The revising barrister was of opinion that the statute 2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 27, required not only an original taking, but a continual occupation under one landlord; and that after the execution of the deed William Tucker ceased to be the landlord of the premises thereby demised to Robert Tucker, and the revising barrister therefore decided that the voter had not proved his qualification, and expunged his name from the list.

If the Court of C. B. should be of opinion that the decision was wrong, then the name of the voter John French was to be restored to the list of persons entitled to vote in respect of property occupied within the parish of Ashburton, thus:—

French, John	Ashburton	Building & land	Dobbeare-road.

Karslake for the appellant.—The question here arises under the 27th section of the Reform Act, by which a qualification to vote at an election for a city or borough is conferred upon any one "who shall occupy within, &c., as owner or tenant, any house, &c., being either separately or jointly, with any land within such city, borough, or place occupied therewith by him as owner, or occupied therewith by him as tenant under the same landlord, of the clear yearly value of not less than 10*l*." &c. If this endeavour to deprive the appellant of the franchise is to prevail, great hardship will be effected, and a tenant occupying for the purpose of the franchise may find, for the first time when before the revising barrister, that a secret deed severing the reversion has been made, and in that manner he has been disqualified. As to the word "landlord" in the 27th section, it can hardly be contended that it means one and the same person, or any change or assignment of the whole reversion would operate to deprive the tenant of the franchise. The apportionment made by the deed is not in any way binding on the tenant, who may dispute it. If a strict construction be put upon the transaction, it can hardly be said that the assignee has become landlord at all. The tenant did not hold under a lease by deed, therefore the case does not come within the stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, consequently the assignee could not sue on the contract between the assignor and the tenant: (Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q.B. 135; Bickford v. Parson, 5 C.B. 920.) It is clear that at common law the assignment of the reversion could have no effect whatever until the attornment of the tenant. [WILLIAMS, J.—There can be no doubt that the statute of Henry 8 does not apply to anything but deeds under seal: (Doe dem. Agar v. Brown, 2 E. & B. 331.)] A doubt has been raised whether, in the absence of express contract between the parties, an action will lie for use and occupation: (Churchward v. Ford, 2 Exch. 448.) There Bramwell, B. says, "the word 'landlord' does not mean the lord of the soil, but the person between whom and the tenant the relation of landlord and tenant exists:" (Bliss v. Collins, 5 B. & Al. 876.) [BYLES, J. referred to Co. Litt. 148 a, where it is said, "if the lessor granteth part of the reversion to a stranger, the rent shall be apportioned, for the rent is incident to the reversion."] It is submitted that the words in the Reform Act, "occupying under the same landlord," mean holding under the same title without reference to the same actual person, and a person holding under the same title is entitled to the franchise. There has here been no retaking from different persons; and it may be taken to be an occupation within the meaning of the statute, under the same landlord.

J. D. Coleridge for the respondents.—The words of the proviso to the 27th section are most material, and they provide that no person shall be registered in any year unless he shall have occupied such premises as aforesaid (that is, under one and the same landlord) for twelve calendar months next previous to the last day of July," &c. If tenants in common join in making a lease, the tenant has so many landlords, and not one and the same landlord, within the meaning of this Act of Parliament. If such taking would not have conferred a vote originally, it will not now. The reversion has been severed; there has been a bona fide sale of part of the tenant's holding to a bona fide purchaser, and he has no longer one and the same landlord. The right to recover for use and occupation is gone by this deed. [WILLIAMS, J.—Without saying your construction is wrong, I cannot help thinking that the Legislature never contemplated such a consequence as this. His Lordship referred to Morton v. Freedy.] Adding the value of the land to that of the building, is in itself insufficient to confer the borough franchise under the section: (Capel v. Overseers of Aston, 2 Lutw. 143; Burton v. Overseers of Aston, 1b.; Collins v. Thomas, 13 C.B. 639.) Maule, J. says, "the words 'therewith,' and 'under the same landlord,' require an identity of the person under whom the tenant holds as tenant" Rogers on Elections, 61, contains a note on this, wherein it is said, "this restriction may enable a landlord to deprive a tenant holding two tenements of him of his vote, for if he chose in the course of the year to dispose of one of the tenements held by the voter, the latter would not occupy as a tenant under the same landlord." That is the case here; it matters not what was the object for which the sale was effected, whether to deprive the tenant of his vote or not. It is submitted that the view of Maule, J. is correct, and the decision of the revising barrister should be affirmed.

Karslake in reply.—As to the opinion of Maule, J., on which reliance has been placed by the other side, it is remarkable that it appears in none of the reports except Lutwyche. The opinion of Mr. Rogers also comes for the first time before the court. Under the words "same landlord" you are not restricted to the same identical person, for if a person who is landlord dies, and his heir succeeds him, the heir is landlord, and the "same landlord" within the meaning of the statute. It may be remarked that the Attornment Act, 4 Anne, c. 16, s. 9, which does away with the necessity for attornments by tenants, provides against a tenant being prejudiced or damaged who has not had notice of the grant. Cur. adv. vult.

ERLE, C.J.—In these cases, which were consolidated, the question was, whether the voter was qualified under sect. 27 by the occupation of a house with land under the same landlord. The premises were demised to him by the same landlord, and so the qualification was inchoate; but in the course of the year of occupation the landlord sold the reversion of a part of the premises to a third person, so that in one sense the reversion was not in the same landlord during a whole year, and because the occupation was in this sense not under the same landlord during the whole year it was contended that the qualification was destroyed. But we are of a contrary opinion, thinking that the requisitions of the statute have been substantially fulfilled. It seems to us the taking of the same landlord of premises of sufficient value is the principal test relied on by the Legislature; if he so took the premises, and under the taking continues to hold them, or holds on the same terms, the reversion, whether severed or not, is as to his interest the same reversion. The statute does not express that the change of landlord during a year should destroy the qualification, and we do not gather from the context that the Legislature had any such intention. If the assignment of a part of the reversion would disqualify, it is obvious that the power might be used to prevent the free exercise of the right of voting, and would defeat in many cases the intention of the appellant in taking the premises. The appeal, therefore, will be allowed, and the decision of the revising barrister in these three cases reversed.

Decision reversed—Judgment for appellants.

HOUNSELL v. SMITH AND OTHERS.

Highway—Waste—Quarry—Duty to fence.

The owner of land adjoining a highway may excavate the soil, without fencing, so long as what he does is not a public nuisance.

S. and others were owners of uninclosed waste land between two highways, over which land persons wishing to pass from one road to the other were accustomed without interruption from, and with the leave of, the owners so to pass. The licencees of S. and others worked a quarry in the waste land, into which H., in passing by night from the one road to the other, accidentally fell and was injured:

Held, that H. had no cause of action against S. and others, what was done not being a public nuisance within the principle of Barnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 392.

Declaration.—That before the time of committing the grievance hereinafter mentioned, the defendants were seised in their demesne as of fee as tenants in common, and possessed of certain waste land, parcel of the manor of Henbury, in the county of Gloucester; and that long before the time of committing the said grievance a quarry had been and was opened upon and within the said land for the getting of stone, which quarry before and at the time aforesaid was being actually worked by a certain person with the licence and permission of the defendants, and upon the terms of payment to the defendants of certain rents and royalties for the licence and privilege of working the same and of getting and taking away the stone thereof; and the plaintiff says that the said waste land upon and within which the said quarry was and is situate has been and is wholly uninclosed and open to the public, and that all persons having occasion to cross and pass over the said waste land have been used and accustomed to go upon, along and across the same without interruption or hindrance from, and with the licence and permission of, the owners of such waste land, and that the said quarry was and is situated near to and between two public highways leading over the said waste land, and was and is precipitous, and of great depth and width, and dangerous to persons who might accidentally deviate or stray respectively, or who might have occasion to cross over the said waste land for the purpose of passing from one of such roads to the other of them beside or near the said quarry; and that the defendants, well knowing the premises, negligently and improperly, and contrary to their duty in that behalf, left the said quarry wholly unfenced and unguarded, and took no care and used no means whatever for guarding or protecting the public or any person so accidentally deviating from the said roads respectively, or passing over the said waste land, from falling into the said quarry, and being thereby killed or greatly hurt and disabled; and the plaintiff says that, on the night of the 9th Jan. 1859, having occasion to pass along one of the said roads, and having by reason of the darkness of the night accidentally taken and proceeded along the wrong road, he was crossing the said waste land so lying open and uninclosed towards and for the purpose of getting into the other of them which he had no occasion to use as aforesaid, and not being aware of the existence or locality of the said quarry, and being unable by reason of the darkness to perceive the same, or the edge or brink thereof, and the same being as aforesaid wholly unfenced and unguarded, he by reason thereof, and of the negligence of the defendants in that behalf, was precipitated down and into the quarry to a great depth, and thereby was seriously bruised, hurt, wounded and disabled, and his leg was broken, and he suffered great pain and anguish, and has sustained permanent injury, and incurred great expense in endeavouring to get cured of the said injuries, and has been and is otherwise greatly damaged, and the plaintiff claims 100*l*.

Pleas.—1. The defendants say they are not guilty. 2. And for a second plea, that they were not possessed of such waste land as therein mentioned in manner and form as in the declaration alleged. 3. And for a third plea, that the waste land on which the said quarry was and is situate was not and is not wholly uninclosed and open to the public as alleged. 4. And for a fourth plea, that all persons having occasion to cross or pass over the said waste land upon and within which the said quarry is situate, have not been used or accustomed to go upon, along, or across the same without interruption or hindrance from, and with the licence or permission of, the owners of the said waste land, in manner and form as alleged. 5. And for a fifth plea the defendants say, that the said quarry was not and is not near to and between two public highways leading over the said waste land, in manner and form as alleged. 6. That the said quarry was not dangerous to persons who might accidentally deviate or stray, or who might have occasion to cross the said waste land for the purpose of passing from one of the said roads to the other of them, in manner and form as alleged. 7. That the said quarry was not being worked by such person as in the declaration mentioned, with the licence and permission of the defendants, upon such terms as therein alleged. And the defendants further say that the declaration is bad in substance.

Replication and demurrer.—1. The plaintiff joins issue on the pleas of the defendants. 2. The plaintiff also says that the third plea is bad in substance. 3. The plaintiff also says that the fifth plea is bad in substance. 4. The plaintiff also says that the declaration is good in substance.

Joinder in demurrer.

Karslake for the defendants.—It does not appear here that the public were authorised to cross the waste, but merely that they were accustomed to do so. Where a private road is made up to a house and people are induced to use it, the owner placing obstructions in the road is liable for any accident that may arise: (Corby v. Hill, 4 C. B., N.S., 556.) But that is not the same case as this, nothing being done to induce the public to cross from the one road to the other. Where leave has been given to hunt or shoot, if the sportsman falls into an unfenced quarry of the licenser, no action will lie. The statement in the declaration is, that the quarry was unfenced; but I submit that the fact of the quarry being near two highways is insufficient to render a fence necessary: (Blyth v. Topham, Cro. James, 158.) It may be that if you induce an animal to come on your ground and then kill it, you will be liable: (Seymour v. Maddox, 16 Q.B. 326; Hardcastle v. South Yorkshire, &c.

4 H. & N. 67.) Or if you dig a hole abutting on a highway: (Burnes v. Ward, 9 C. B. 392; Southcote v. Stanley, 1 H. & N. 247.) [BYLES, J.—There is no allegation here that the defendants knew the state of the quarry. The occupier ought to fence, not the owner of the land.]

Kingslake, Serjt. contra.—The declaration states that the defendants were seised in their demesne as of fee of certain lands, &c. The quarry is worked by leave and licence of the defendants, the owners of the soil. The quarry does not pass so as to exclude the owner: (Muskell v. Hill, 5 Bing. N.C. 694.) There is an allegation that the defendants knew the state of the quarry, and the facts alleged in the declaration, by the words "well knowing the premises." It is alleged that to deviate from the road was dangerous, that the public have been accustomed to go over the same by the leave and licence of the defendants. Barnes v. Ward is the same in principle as this case; so also Jordan v. Crump, 8 M. & W. 782, and Blyth v. Topham. Although the cases show that no action will lie for mere holes in a waste, it is admitted that where an accident occurs from an excavation so near to a highway as to be dangerous, the rule is otherwise. Fi mstone and another v. Wheeley and another, 2 D. & L. 203, agrees with Barnes v. Ward. He also commented on Sarch v. Blackburn, 4 C. & P. 297; Brock v. Copeland, 1 Esp.; Hardcastle v. South-Western Railway Company; Seymour v. Maddox; Loberts v. Great Western Railway Company, 4 C. B. N.S. 506; and Southcote v. Stanley.

Karslake was not called upon to reply.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that the judgment should be for the defendants. I will first consider the declaration as if it did not contain the allegation of a right of passing over the waste, and I think on authority and reason that the declaration, so considered, is bad. The averments are, that before grievance the defendants were seised in fee of certain waste lands, and that a quarry was worked there by the licence of the defendants. The declaration states further that the waste is wholly uninclosed, and that the quarry therein is situated near two highways, and is dangerous to all persons who should accidentally deviate from the highways, or who should happen to cross from one road to the other. The complaint is not that the quarry is there, but that it is dangerous to those who should accidentally deviate or cross, &c. I am of opinion that no duty was cast upon the defendants in this case. The law has been long settled, and was lately confirmed by the decision in the case of Blyth v. Topham, which fully settles the principle that if a hole is made or continued near a highway, no action lies against owners of the land. Burns v. Ward no doubt qualified the general doctrine so far, that where a public nuisance is caused, there an action will lie against the person who created it. But in this case there is nothing beyond a hole some distance from the highway, not so near as to amount to a public nuisance, though it is so near that inadvertence would lead a person to fall into it. It has long been established that these circumstances give no right of action. The principle of Barnes v. Ward is, that if a road is dedicated to the public, a precept cannot be dug on each side so as to render the road useless. A party cannot do that without being guilty of a public nuisance. Now will the allegations vary this case? "All persons having occasion to cross and pass over the said land have been accustomed to go over," &c., "without interruption from, and with the licence and permission of, the owners," &c. There is no allegation of a right, but the mere statement of a fact, that persons were allowed to go over without any complaint being made. But it cannot be said that the owners of the soil are to be held accountable for accidents suffered by such persons. Permission having been given, it must be taken with the concomitant circumstances, and the public must take proper care. If permission is given to walk along a road near a cliff, no action will lie for falling over the cliff against the owner of the land. It is clear here that this is not the case of a person invited to use a road without knowledge on his part of any peril, as in the case of Corby v. Hill. What was decided in that case was, that nothing ought to be put on the road so allowed to be used, and which people were induced to use. This case is not within the exception of Barnes v. Ward, because there is no allegation that there is a public nuisance.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion.

JONES v. HOWELL.

Notice of action—False imprisonment—Malicious trespass—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30.

On a Sunday night a female who occupied a house, the property of the defendant, saw one of two men who were together throw a stone at the window; she sent for defendant, told him, and described the two men, saying it was the one with the stick did it. The defendant followed and arrested both. The plaintiff was the man who held the stick and who had actually thrown the stone:

Held, the defendant was entitled to notice of action under sect. 41 of the statute.

This was an action of trespass and false imprisonment. Plea, not guilty by statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, ss. 24, 28 and 41 (Malicious Trespass Act). The case was tried before Byles, J. at the last Monmouthshire assizes. It appeared that the plaintiff and another man knocked, at a late hour on a Sunday night, at the door of a public-house kept by a tenant of the defendant; the landlady answered them from a window, and refused to let them in or give them refreshments. Plaintiff commenced throwing stones at the window and broke some panes of glass. The landlady sent for defendant, described the men, and said it was the one with the stick did it. Defendant followed and overtook the men; he arrested both, and conveyed them to a public-house, where they were locked up for two hours, and next day taken before a magistrate. It appeared the plaintiff was the man with the stick, who actually threw the stone. No notice of action was given to defendant; on the trial it was submitted that he was entitled to it, and not having been given, plaintiff could not recover. For the plaintiff it was contended that, as defendant's tenant had directed the arrest of two men, one of whom she knew was innocent, she could not suppose she was acting legally, and therefore did not come within the statute or give the defendant the benefit of it; that the arrest was not justifiable, as the plaintiff was not "found committing the offence" by the party who arrested him. There was some suggestion of undue violence. The learned judge left three questions to the jury—first, did the plaintiff commit wilful and malicious damage; secondly, did the defendant bonâ fide intend to arrest the man who did the damage, and to act under the authority of the tenant; thirdly, did he use more violence than was necessary. The jury found all three in favour of the defendant. The learned judge thereupon directed a nonsuit, reserving leave to plaintiff to move to enter a verdict for 5*l*.

Smythies now moved for a rule to that effect, or for a new trial.—The plaintiff was not found committing the offence by the person who arrested. The defendant did not intend to act under the statute. [CHANNELL,

B.—That is not necessary to a justification: Read v. Cohen, 13 C. B. 850.] The arrest was on a Sunday for an offence not indictable, and therefore could not be justified, even under a warrant: (Egginton's case, 2 Ell. & Bl. 717; stat. 29 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 6; Rees v. Myers, 1 T. R. 265.) The question of bona fides ought not to have been left to the jury: (Horn v. Thornborough, 3 Ex. 846.) Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 24.—CHANNELL, B. delivered judgment.—In this case we are of opinion that there ought to be no rule. The action was for false imprisonment, the defendant justified under the stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30. [His Lordship then stated the facts.] The learned judge left to the jury the question whether the defendant had acted bona fide and under the belief that he had the authority of the female, his tenant, to arrest one or other of the parties, and they found for the defendant. The learned judge, as it appears to us, left the question to them properly, and in accordance with the authorities; and that being so, the finding disposes of that part of the application which goes to a new trial, and it disposes also of the rest of it, because the plaintiff could only be entitled to enter a verdict for himself, on the ground that every matter was found in his favour. The leave given by the learned judge was upon one point only, whether the plaintiff was "found committing" the offence within the statute. It was also objected that the arrest was on a Sunday. It is unnecessary for us to give an opinion on that point, or on the other points made on moving for the rule. It is enough to say we are of opinion that the defendant was entitled to notice of action, and as there is a plea on the record which raises the question, it is manifest the plaintiff cannot be entitled to set aside the nonsuit. There must therefore be no rule. Rule refused.

MEYERS AND ANOTHER v. RAWSON.

Industrial and friendly societies—Statutes 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25—Liability of members.

A scire facias lies against the member of an industrial and friendly society, constituted under the Act of 1852, to levy the amount of a judgment recovered against the registered trustees, there being no property of the society to answer the claim.

This was a declaration on a scire facias calling on defendant to show cause why plaintiffs should not be at liberty to issue execution against him as a member, to levy the amount of a judgment recovered by them against the registered trustees of a society called "The Bradford District Industrial Flour Mill Society," established under the provisions of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1852. The writ recited that no registered officer had been appointed to be sued on behalf of the society pursuant to the Act, and that there was no property or effects of the society whatever to pay the amount of the execution, and that the defendant was a member of the society at the time when the debt in respect of which the judgment had been recovered was contracted, and still continues to be so.

Demurrer and joinder.

Mellish (with him Cockle) for the defendant.—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25, s. 5, makes the property of the society liable, but there is nothing in the Act to authorise the issuing of execution against an individual member, and the court will not give it unless the Act expressly provides for it. In the Banking and Joint-stock Companies Acts the power is expressly given: (Harrison v. Timmins, 4 M. & W. 510.)

Field for the plaintiffs.—The 11th section of 15 & 16 Vict. expressly provides that the liability of members shall not be limited by the Act. Burton v. Tannahill, 5 E. & B. 800, is an express authority in our favour.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 18.—WATSON, B. delivered judgment.—This was a proceeding by scire facias against the defendant upon a judgment obtained against the trustees of the society called the Bradford District Industrial Flour Mill Society, established under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, to legalise the formation of industrial societies, of which the defendant was, and is alleged to be, a member; to which there was a demurrer. It was argued on the part of the defendant that there was no provision contained within the Act of Parliament to give any remedy against the individual members of the society, but that the only remedy on the judgment was against the funds of the society. By the statute of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 25, it is declared "that it is expedient to vary the provisions of such laws (that is to say, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115) in relation to these societies, so far as concerns the manner in which legal proceedings shall be carried on in any matter concerning any such society." By the 1st section it is enacted "that the society shall sue and be sued in the name of the registered officer, and if there be no registered officer, then in the names of the trustees of the society." There being here no registered officer, the action is brought against the trustees. And then it is provided by the 5th section that execution may go against the property of the society—which means the present property of the society, because it would cause inextricable confusion if you had to resort to, and find out, what property vested in the persons who were members at the time the contract was made. That is the object and purpose of the clause. It was argued that, according to the case of Horris v. Timmins, reported in the 4 M. & W. 510, they could not have execution against the members. That case only decides that against the nominal defendant, the registered officer, you cannot have execution, unless he is a member of that society. That was one of the classes of societies like joint-stock companies. It was argued that if he had been made a member of the society, then of course this nominal defendant would have been liable, like the others, to execution. The only question here is, what is the proper course to pursue as to members who are individually liable by scire facias. Now, it is quite clear, on looking at the 11th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 31, this is put beyond all question, because it says, "Nothing in this or the former Acts shall be construed to restrict in any way the liability of members of a society established under or by virtue or claiming the benefit thereof, to the lawful debts and engagements of the society." This case seems to have been, in fact, decided by the case of Burton v. Tannahill, 5 E. & B. 800, where it was held that no action could be maintained against the members of a society of this kind, the only remedy being by a proceeding against them under the 17 & 18 Vict., and in the course of the discussion Crompton, J. is reported to have said, "Why may there not be an action against the officer, and then a proceeding against the individuals to obtain the fruits of the judgment?" Wightman, J.: "Just as in the case of joint-stock companies." Crompton, J.: "That seems the very object of these enactments." That observation of my brother Crompton we perfectly agree in, and therefore we give judgment for the plaintiffs.

WYATT v. WHITE.

False imprisonment—Arrest—Search-warrant—Reasonable and probable cause.

The defendant, a miller, having seen some sacks with his mark made up in some packages of waste, the property of plaintiff, went and made an information before a magistrate, and obtained a search-warrant. The warrant, in the usual form, directed the constable, if he found any of the informant's property, to arrest the plaintiff. The plaintiff was accordingly taken into custody, but the case was afterwards dismissed, and plaintiff brought this action. At the trial the judge held there was reasonable and probable cause for obtaining the search-warrant, but not for the arrest, if it was not necessarily involved in the other:

WYATT v. WHITE.

Held, that the warrant to arrest was issued as a matter of course as a part of the search-warrant, and the defendant having reasonable and probable cause for laying the information in the first instance, was not responsible in damages for the subsequent arrest.

The declaration contained three counts. First, trover for bags, the property of plaintiff; secondly, false imprisonment; thirdly, malicious prosecution.

Plea:—Not guilty; not possessed; that certain bags, the property of the defendant, were mixed up with those of the plaintiff, and defendant committed the trespasses complained of in order to obtain possession of them.

On the trial at Gloucester, before Willes, J., at the last summer assizes, it appeared that the defendant is a miller at Blakeney, and the plaintiff a marine store dealer at Colesford, in the county of Gloucester. On the 7th Feb. 1859 the defendant happening to be on the quay at Lydney Basin, saw a large pile of junk or bags partially covered with tarpaulin; amongst them he saw one sack bearing his trade-mark filled with junk; he lifted the tarpaulin and saw several other of his sacks. He was informed the sacks had been sent to the basin by the plaintiff to be shipped to Bristol. The defendant then went to the police-station, and afterwards before a magistrate, when he laid the following information:

"Gloucestershire, to wit.—The information and complaint of Richard Watts White, taken upon oath this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1859, before the undersigned, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county of Gloucester, who says he has reason to suspect, and does suspect, that some sacks and pieces of sacks, his property, have been stolen, and are now lying at the Lydney Basin, in the parish of Lydney, in the county of Gloucester, and are in the possession of Thomas Wyatt, of Colesford.

"(Signed) RICHARD WATTS WHITE.

"Taken and sworn, &c."

The magistrate thereupon issued the following warrant:—

"Gloucestershire to wit.—To the constables of the county of Gloucester, and to all other peace officers in the said county of Gloucester. Whereas information hath this day been laid before the undersigned, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county of Gloucester, by Richard Watts White, miller, that he has reason to suspect, and does suspect, some sacks and pieces of sacks his property have been stolen, and are now lying at the Lydney Basin, in the parish of Lydney, in the county aforesaid. These are therefore to command you in her Majesty's name forthwith, with proper assistance, in the daytime to enter such premises, and there diligently search for the said goods, and if the same or any part thereof shall be found upon such search, that you bring the goods so found, and also the body of Thomas Wyatt, of Colesford, who claims the said property; and oath now being made before me substantiating the matter of such information, these are therefore to command you in her Majesty's name forthwith to apprehend the said Thomas Wyatt, and bring him before some or one of her Majesty's justices in and for the said county, to answer to the said information, and to be further dealt with according to law. Given under my hand and seal, this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1859, at Lydney, in the county aforesaid."

"(Signed) THOMAS ALLAWAY."

On the search being made in the heap of sacks at the basin, a number of sacks and parts of sacks with the mark of defendant were found and taken possession of by the police. In the course of the afternoon the plaintiff came down to the basin; he was taken into custody and conveyed before a magistrate, who admitted him to bail. The next day he appeared before the magistrates at petty sessions; the defendant was examined, and in support of his information, after identifying the sacks as his property, stated that he lost about 1000 sacks a-year from their not being returned by his customers, but some had been stolen from him; nor had he lost any by any other means than their non-return by his customers; he could not state when the sacks in question had been in his possession. The magistrates dismissed the charge, and the sacks were eventually given up to the plaintiff.

At the close of the plaintiff's case the learned judge intimated his opinion that there was reasonable and probable cause for the search-warrant, but not for the arrest. A verdict was eventually entered for the plaintiff, damages 20*l.*, thus divided: on the first count, 20*s.*; on the second count, 4*l.*; on the third, 15*l.* A rule was subsequently obtained to enter the verdict for defendant on the second and third counts.

Huddleston, Q.C. and Gray now showed cause.—There was an entire absence of reasonable and probable cause for the proceedings of defendant. The plaintiff was in the habit of dealing in old sacks and bags. There was no disguise about the transaction, the sacks were placed openly on the quay. The application for the search-warrant supposes that the party has possession of the property criminally. He would not grant the warrant unless it was stated that the party holding the goods had got possession of them by criminal means. What reason had defendant to suppose the sacks were stolen? Millers lose sacks every day, and there was no justification for his imputing a crime to the plaintiff. Even if there was reasonable and probable cause for the search-warrant, there was none for the arrest, and defendant is responsible for it. The amount of damages was settled by the judge, and the question of malice was not left to the jury, but is still open to the court. They cited Webb v. Rose, 4 H. & N. 111; 32 L. T. Rep. 282; Elsce v. Smith, 1 Dow. & Ry. 97; 2 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 150.

Pigott, Serjt. and Powell in support of the rule.—The learned judge was clearly of opinion there was no evidence of malice, and did not reserve that question. The evidence showed ample reason for the search-warrant, and the judge ruled there was reasonable and probable cause for it. The defendant was not responsible for anything else. The warrant for the arrest was the act of the magistrate. It is usual, when a search-warrant is granted, to order the arrest if the goods are found: (Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 150; Burn's Justice, tit. "Search, Warrant.")

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 14.—BRAMWELL, B. delivered judgment.—I have spoken to my brother Willes about this case, and he reports that the question of malice was not reserved. The learned judge ruled that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause for causing the plaintiff to be apprehended; but that there was no absence of reasonable and probable cause for causing the search-warrant to be issued. The truth is that he was under the same impression (which turns out to be erroneous) as I believe we were all here, and the counsel were also till the matter came to be looked into, that the application for the search-warrant does not (as it now turns out we all thought it did) involve the application for a warrant to arrest. It turns out that the application for the one involves the application for the other, and upon explaining this to my brother Willes, he said that he had only expressed an opinion enough for the decision of the case for the moment, and he would consider it as though he had expressed no opinion upon it at all. That being so, the question is reduced to this—Is there an absence of reasonable and probable cause shown for the information which the defendant swore before the magistrate? Because that is what he has done. All that follows from it is the consequence of that. But the question is, whether an absence of reasonable and probable cause for that is shown, and I am of opinion that an absence of reasonable and probable cause for laying that information is not shown. It is not necessary to go into minute details upon the matter, but I will say this—the defendant is a miller, and he swears that he loses a thousand sacks a year. He says, indeed, that he only loses them by his customers not returning them. Hence it was argued, very forcibly, how could he say they were stolen from him under those circumstances? He does not say they were stolen from him. It was also urged, if he cannot say they were stolen from him, how could he say they were stolen from anybody else? To which the answer is, he does not say they were stolen, but believes they were. The question is, whether it is a wholly unreasonable belief for a man who has a thousand sacks not returned to him from his customers to entertain—whether it is unreasonable for him to think, when he sees a quantity of sacks, some of which are new—not many, perhaps—cut up into waste, and being made away with for the purpose of being turned into paper, that they are his sacks. The new ones are of importance, undoubtedly, in this matter, because, if they had been old ones, and unfit for use, there would have been no ground for thinking that any of those had been stolen; but some of them being new, it seems impossible to say that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause. All the rest of the deposition is true—namely, that they were on the wharf, and that they were in the custody of the plaintiff. For these reasons, therefore, it appears to me that the plaintiff has not shown an absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information of the defendant, and that being so, the latter is entitled to make this rule absolute—the effect of which is, as I understand, that the verdict stands for 14.

CHANNELL, B.—I am entirely of the same opinion. Upon the point of malice I shall say nothing; first, because I understand from my brother Bramwell, after consultation with my brother Willes, that it was not reserved, and in the next place it is not necessary in the view I take of this case. I certainly was under the impression at first, during a part of the argument (and which appears to have prevailed with my brother Willes), that there was a distinction between this warrant, so far as it authorised them to search the premises where the sacks were, and so far as it authorised the apprehension of the party named in it. But it appears to me, upon looking into the authorities in Burn's Justice, and especially looking into Hale's Pleas of the Crown, that the magistrate was not only at liberty to issue, but would issue as of course, a warrant with this double aspect—if I may use such an expression. I do not understand it to be an application for a warrant to arrest a person on a charge of felony, and be brought before a magistrate to be dealt with according to law. A warrant in that form is warranted by the authorities. It seems to me that the question is, was there a want of reasonable and probable cause for the information which the defendant laid before the magistrate? Now I agree that all the circumstances are entirely explained by what afterwards occurred, and that the plaintiff is involved in no imputation whatever; but we are to look at what determined and justified the impression on the mind of the defendant the moment before he laid the information. He sees a tarpaulin; the use of it is well explained, but still he sees enough to be satisfied that under that tarpaulin would be found some of his property. He found one or two sacks, no doubt his property, bearing his trade-mark upon them; and in one sack, if not two, he finds strips of sacks, evidently strips of new sacks; and with marks upon them sufficient to enable him to distinguish those as his property. I think that there was no want of reasonable and probable cause such as would entitle the plaintiff to maintain the action upon the second count, either for the 4*l*. in respect of the search-warrant, or for the 15*l*. in respect of the apprehension that took place. The result, therefore, is, as my brother Bramwell has said, that the verdict will stand for the sum of 1*l*.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. WILLIAM HUGHES.

Felony—Accessory before the fact—Conviction after acquittal of the principal charged—11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1—General verdict on counts for larceny and receiving.

The first two counts of an indictment charged A. and B. with stealing, and the third charged B. with feloniously receiving. A. was acquitted, no evidence having been offered against him, that he might be a witness against B. Upon his and other evidence which proved that B. was an accessory before the fact of the stealing, the jury found a general verdict of guilty against B., which was so entered up: Held, that the conviction was good, the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, making an accessory before the fact a principal felon, and that therefore the conviction of the prisoner is not now a condition precedent to the conviction of an accessory before the fact, and that there was no inconsistency in an accessory before the fact being also a receiver.

Case reserved by the Recorder of Manchester.

At the Court of Quarter Sessions holden in and for the city of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, on the 2nd Jan. 1860:

John Hall and Henry Hughes were tried before me on the annexed indictment; both pleaded not guilty. After the jury were charged the learned counsel for the prosecution said he did not propose to offer any evidence against Hall, and applied to have him acquitted in order that he might be examined as a witness; and on his assuring me that in his judgment that course would serve the ends of justice, I acceded to it, and he was acquitted and called as the first witness.

He had been thirteen months in the service of the prosecutors, and according to his evidence Hughes first solicited him to rob his master on the 20th or 22nd of Nov., asking him if he could get him a few pounds of fents, and he would keep it dark, and to bring them to him at any time, and they would be right. That accordingly the next day he took eight pounds of patchwork, which he had stolen from his masters, to Hughes, who gave him half-a-crown for it, the selling price being 7*d*. per lb. This patchwork was afterwards found in Hughes's cellar (his place of business), and he stated that he had got it from Hall.

That on the Monday following he was passing Hughes' place, who called him in and asked if he could get him any more of those fents; he said he could, and it was arranged between them that a person of the name of Lowe, who was called into the cellar, should go next day to the warehouse of Hall's masters 100, Moseley-street, and bring the parcel he was there to get from Hall to Hughes.

Lowe, who did not appear to be aware of the nature of the transaction between Hall and Hughes, forgot his appointment.

Hall went the same afternoon to inquire why the man had not come; he was sent for to Hughes' place, and said he had got drunk and forgot it, and it was then arranged between Hughes and Hall and Lowe, that Lowe should go to the warehouse of the prosecutors, 100, Moseley-street, next morning, the 30th Nov., at half-past eight, and there receive a parcel to be given to him by Hall, and bring it to Hughes, and Hughes directed him to bring the parcel to his cellar (which was his place of business and was under a public-house), but if he was not in when he came with it, he was to take the parcel into that public-house and leave it there for him (Hughes) until he returned. On the morning of the 30th Nov., Hall opened the warehouse at a quarter past eight, and found Lowe there waiting for him, and about a quarter to nine Hall gave him a bundle of fents that belonged to his masters, and he went away with them.

A policeman on duty in the neighbourhood saw Lowe carrying this bundle on his shoulder, followed him and saw him take it into the public-house over Hughes' cellar, which was then shut, and on going into the kitchen of the public-house he saw the bundle lying on the kitchen-table there, and from the account given of it by Lowe he took it to the station. Another policeman took immediate possession of Hughes' cellar, and waited till he came in, and asked him if he had sent a man for any goods that morning; he replied, "I have sent a man for some prints to 100, Moseley-street." He was then taken into custody.

The patchwork or fents found in Hughes' cellar, and which he said he had got from Hall, and the bundle of prints brought by Lowe from 100, Moseley-street, to the said public-house, were identified by the prosecutors as their property.

Mr. Wheeler appeared as counsel for Hughes, and cross-examined the witness, and addressed the jury on behalf of Hughes, contending that they ought utterly to disregard everything that Hall had said, and acquit his client.

I summed up the evidence, and told the jury that they alone were to decide on the credit to be given to the witnesses, but that, if they believed Hall to the full extent of his evidence, Hughes was a guilty participant in both larcenies. That if they doubted about that, they would have to consider whether they were or were not satisfied that he received the property knowing it to have been stolen. And with reference to the fact of receipt of the second parcel of goods which Lowe was sent for by Hughes, with directions in case he should be out when he came to leave it for him at the said public-house, and Lowe having done so, I told them that was as much a receipt by him as if it had been brought to him in his cellar and left there.

The jury retired at seven o'clock to consider their verdict, and I left the court. They some time afterwards gave a general verdict of guilty, which was so entered. They strongly recommended the prisoner to mercy.

The question for the opinion of the court is—

Whether, as the facts showed that Hughes, if guilty at all of the larceny, was guilty only as an accessory before the fact, and Hall the principal having been acquitted, I ought not to have told the jury that Hughes was entitled to his acquittal on the counts for larceny, and that they were to confine their attention to the count for receiving only; and if I ought so to have directed them, whether, on this general verdict, judgment can now be pronounced on the count for receiving.

Hughes was admitted to bail to appear and receive judgment when called upon.

ROBT. B. ARMSTRONG, Recorder of Manchester.

COPY OF INDICTMENT.

City of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, to wit.—The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present, that William Hall and William Hughes, late of the city of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, on the 22nd day of November, in the year of our Lord 1859, at the city aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, and within the space of six calendar months from the first to the last of the several acts of stealing charged in this indictment, ten pounds weight of cotton fents, of the property of William Henry Smith and another, then and there being found, feloniously did steal, take and carry away, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Second count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said William Hall and William Hughes, on the 30th day of November in the year aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this court, and within the space of six calendar months from the first to the last of the several acts of stealing charged in this indictment, 18lbs. weight of cotton fents, of the property of the said William Henry Smith and another, then and there being found, feloniously did steal, take and carry away, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

Third count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said William Hughes afterwards, to wit on the same day and year aforesaid, at the city aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction aforesaid, the property aforesaid, before then feloniously stolen, taken and carried away, feloniously did receive and have, he the said William Hughes then and there well knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken and carried away, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity.

William Hughes, guilty.

Dr. Wheeler (Hopwood with him) for the prisoner. —First, the prisoner Hall having been acquitted of the larceny, and Hughes having been found guilty on evidence of being an accessory before the fact, it is contended that that conviction cannot be supported. The finding is inconsistent, for if Hall did not commit the larceny, how could Hughes be an accessory? and there was no evidence to support the charge against Hughes except as an accessory before the fact. If two persons are indicted for conspiracy, and one be acquitted, the other cannot be convicted. The accessory shall not be constrained to answer to his indictment till the principal be tried (9 E. 4, 48 a); but if he will waive that benefit, and put himself upon his trial before the principal be tried, he may, and his acquittal or conviction upon that trial is good: (Stamf. P. C. lib. 1, c. 49 f, 46 b.) But it seems necessary in such a case to respite judgment till the principal be convicted and attainted; for if the principal be after acquitted, that conviction of the accessory is annulled, and no judgment ought to be given against him, but if he be acquitted of the accessory that acquittal is good, and he shall be discharged: (1 Hale P. C. 623.) The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, which enacts "that if any person shall become an accessory before the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by statute, such person may be indicted, tried, convicted and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon," simply alters the form of pleading only. The old law stands as before: "If A. be arrested, or in prison for felony, and B. rescues him, or the gaoler suffers him voluntarily to escape, though this be a distinct felony in B. the rescuer, and in the gaoler, for which they may be presently indicted, yet they shall not be arraigned or put to answer till A. be convicted and attainted by judgment." (2 Hale P. C. 223.) And the same rule holds with regard to accessories generally.

HILL, J.—The preamble of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, is, "Whereas it is expedient that any accessory before the fact to felony should be liable to be indicted, tried, convicted and punished in all respects like the principal, as is now the case in treason and in all misdemeanors, be it enacted," &c. That to my mind is a strong indication that the Legislature intended to make the guilt of an accessory the same as that of a principal; and the enacting part seems to make them both principal felons.

Wheeler.—There is nothing in the statute, it is submitted, which makes the accessory liable, if the thief is acquitted of the charge. The words, "indicted, tried, convicted and punished," refer to the mode of procedure only.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If the accessory has been tried, convicted and sentenced before the principal tried and acquitted, could he bring a writ of error? It might be that the sentence had expired before the trial and acquittal of the principal, I therefore think the enactment intended to make the accessory a principal.

Wheeler.—It is contended that the statute intended to make no further change with regard to accessories before the fact than what the judges did of their own authority with regard to accessories after the fact. As to the second point—the general verdict. The recorder charged the jury, if they had any doubt as to Hughes being a participator in the larcenies, to consider the count for receiving, and to find their verdict as to one or other of the charges. The jury, however, returned a general verdict, which it is not possible to apply; for if Hall was not the thief, then Hughes could not be a receiver: (statutes cited, 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 15.)

Sowler, for the prosecution, was not called upon.

ERLE, C. J.—We are all of opinion that the conviction was right, notwithstanding the points relied upon by the prisoner's counsel. This was an indictment against Hall and Hughes, in the first and second counts for larceny, and in the third against Hughes only, for feloniously receiving, and no evidence being offered against Hall, the jury were directed to acquit him. Hall was then called as a witness against Hughes, and the jury found Hughes guilty, on evidence of being an accessory before the fact. The question is, is that an inconsistency, and does it entitle Hughes to be acquitted? Now, we think that the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, has made the crime of being an accessory before the fact a substantive felony, and that the old law making the conviction of the principal felon a condition precedent to the conviction of the accessory before the fact is taken away by that clause. The first question is, whether that enactment meant only that the indictment should be cleared of technical matters, or created it a substantial felony. Upon that we are of opinion that the statute made it a substantive absolute felony, the being an accessory before the fact. Then, where the accessory before the fact is first convicted and sentenced, is there any proceeding by error or otherwise to discharge him? We are of opinion that there is not. It is said that it might be that his sentence would expire before the trial of the principal, who might be acquitted; but we are of opinion that in that case no wrong would be done. Whether the principal be tried before or at some time after the accessory before the fact, still there may be guilt in the accessory. We must look beyond technical considerations, and see whether there was a larceny. There are many cases in which an acquittal takes place, and yet the actual guilt is clear. Therefore we are of opinion that the statute did intend to create the responsibility of an accessory before the fact a substantive felony. With respect to the second point, as to the general verdict, the learned recorder having charged the jury, left the court, and the jury some time afterwards returned a general verdict of guilty, which was entered upon both charges. It is said that that is an inconsistency. Looking at the evidence, there can be no doubt of the substantial guilt of the prisoner, and the court will make every intendment to support the conviction consistently with the evidence. In our judgments there is no inconsistency in being an accessory before the fact and a receiver afterwards, and we think that the jury might reasonably and logically convict the prisoner of both offences.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Conviction affirmed.

REG. v. RACHEL WARDROPER.

Husband and wife—Charge of joint receiving—Presumption of marital coercion.

A., B. and B.'s wife were indicted jointly for burglary and receiving; the jury found A. guilty of burglary, and B. and his wife of receiving. Part of the property was found in B.'s house, and from that fact, and others, the jury were warranted in finding B. guilty of receiving. To connect the wife with the matter, it was proved that some time after the burglary the wife was seen dealing with part of the stolen things, when she made a statement importing a knowledge that the things had been stolen, and that they were to be made away with. The judge at the trial declined to leave it to the jury to find whether B.'s wife received things from her husband or in his absence, and the jury found B.'s wife guilty of receiving: Held, that the conviction could not be supported.

The prisoner was indicted at the last Newcastle Assizes, together with her husband and a man named Prishous, for burglary and receiving.

The jury found Prishous guilty of housebreaking, and the prisoner and her husband of receiving.

The housebreaking was the breaking into a jeweller's shop at Newcastle, and committing a very extensive robbery of the stock.

The property stolen consisted, amongst a great variety of other things, of rings, watch-keys, brooches, stones for being set in brooches, and foreign coins.

There was evidence of part of the stolen property being found in the house where the prisoner and her husband lived together, and of other circumstances which I think warranted the jury in finding the husband guilty of receiving, but except what follows there was no evidence which peculiarly affected the prisoner.

A young woman deposed that some time after the burglary the prisoner, in the absence of her husband, produced to her a quantity of watch-keys, brooches, stones for being set in brooches, and coins, and said they were to be destroyed; that she said she had been down the street changing some foreign money, and thought she was going to be taken up for it; and that she asked her (the young woman) to come down if she was taken and collect the largest coins, and say a foreign captain had given them to her (she being a prostitute).

I think there was evidence that all those articles were part of the stolen property.

It was also proved that at the time of the prisoner's apprehension, she had upon her fingers some of the stolen rings.

At the close of the case for the prosecution it was submitted by counsel for the prisoners, that as against Rachel Wardroper there was no evidence that she received the articles, either in the absence of the husband, or from any other person than him, and that if there was evidence for the jury, the question would be whether she received them from him, and if not from him, whether she received them in his absence.

I ruled that there was evidence for the jury, and did not leave either of those questions to them. The jury convicted the prisoner, and I thought her conviction right; but after the jury had found their verdict I was asked to inquire whether the jury found that the prisoner received the articles in question from her husband, or in his absence. I declined to do so.

I request the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal whether the prisoner was rightly convicted, assuming that all the other evidence as to the receiving was of such a character as to entitle her to be acquitted, by reason of her relation of wife to the other convicted receiver.

If they think she was not rightly convicted, they will please direct the prisoner to be discharged.

The following cases were relied on at the trial on the part of the prisoner:—

Archer's case, 1 Moo. C. C. 143, where husband and wife were convicted on a joint indictment for receiving stolen goods, it was held that the conviction of the wife was bad, it not having been left to the jury to say whether she received the goods in the absence of her husband.

Reg. v. Brooks, 6 Cox C. C. 148: a wife received from her husband goods which he had stolen, she knowing at the time that they were stolen, and she endeavoured afterwards to prevent their discovery. The judge told the jury that, as her husband had delivered the stolen articles to the prisoner, the law presumed that she acted under his control in receiving them, but that this presumption might be rebutted. If, therefore, in considering the evidence they were perfectly satisfied that at the time when she received any of the articles she knew that they were stolen, and in receiving them acted voluntarily and with a fraudulent intention, she might be found guilty. The jury having found her guilty, the Court of Criminal Appeal quashed the conviction.

ERLE, C.J.—The court thinks that there were sufficient circumstances in the case to authorise the prisoner's counsel to request the learned judge to put the question he desired to the jury, so that the point should have been left to the jury for their determination. It was perfectly consistent with the facts proved that the goods might have been taken to and received by the husband at his own house, and so come into the possession of the wife through her husband, in a manner that did not render her liable to be convicted. The goods clearly were taken to the husband's house. If the question had been left to the jury, and they had convicted the wife, the court would have supported that conviction, but as it had not been so left, the court thought it more satisfactory that her conviction should be quashed.

WILLIAMS, J. delivered a similar judgment.

MARTIN, B.—On consideration, I think that I ought to have dealt differently with this case at the trial, and called the attention of the jury with greater accuracy to the law on the subject. I am not satisfied that I dealt as I ought to have done with the case.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The charge was of a joint receiving.

CRANWELL, B.—I am of opinion also that the prisoner was entitled to have the questions suggested by the counsel left to the jury. I attach great importance to the fact of the charge being a joint receipt by her and her husband. Conviction quashed.

KERR v. WILKIE.

Statutory trusts s.—Notice of meetings under the statute—Adjournment of meeting—Notice of adjournment.

A statute empowering neighbouring owners to build a bridge, with powers of raising themselves, constituted certain persons by name, and all others deriving 100l. a-year from the lands, trustees. Notice was to be given of all meetings by circular sent to all the trustees. The interpretation clause stated trustees to mean "the acting trustees."

Held, that K., though qualified to be a trustee, yet not being among those named, and never having acted, was not entitled to any notice of the meetings: Held, further, that a notice of a meeting stating the purpose thereof extended to an adjourned meeting, and that no notice of the adjournment was required to be given.

Quære, whether the failure to give notice of the meetings to any one of the acting trustees would have vitiated the proceedings of the trustees?

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Session in Scotland.

A statute (15 Vict. lxii.) was passed in 1852, called "the Kelvin Bridge Act," the object of which was to enable certain trustees to build a bridge for the improvement of a locality near Glasgow, and for that purpose to make a rate on the adjoining proprietors. The first section enacted that John Bain (and certain other persons, naming them) "and all other parties who hold or derive in their own right, or who may hereafter hold or derive in their own right, the sum of 100l. sterling of annual feu duties or annual rents out of or from any part of the lands hereinafter described, shall be, and they are hereby appointed, the trustees for carrying this Act into execution, and shall be called "the Kelvin Bridge Trustees." The 2nd section enacted "that when and so often as the number of trustees acting under the authority of this Act shall by death, refusal, or incapacity to act be reduced to a less number than ten, it shall be lawful for the remaining trustees for the time being at their next meeting to appoint other trustees liable to be rated and assessed under the provisions of this Act," &c. The 4th section required the trustees to hold meetings at least once every three months, "and the first meeting of the trustees shall be held within three months after the passing of the Act, and shall be called by any one or more of the trustees, and all the subsequent meetings of the trustees shall be called by the clerk to the trustees (either when he himself shall find it necessary, or on the requisition of any one of the trustees or of the treasurer) by circular sent through the post-office to each trustee, and posted not later than the second day before the day of meeting, and five of the trustees present at any meeting shall be a legal quorum; and the trustees present at each meeting shall elect their own chairman, and the notices calling the various meetings shall specify generally the business to be transacted thereat." By sect. 34 "no rate or assessment to be made shall be valid unless notice of the intention of making such rate or assessment, and of the time at which the same is intended to be made, and of the place where a statement of the proposed rate shall be deposited for inspection, shall be given by the clerk of the trustees by circular to all the proprietors and feuars intended to be charged with such rate, or their respective agents, and posted at Glasgow at least seven days previously to such rate being made." The interpretation clause, sect. 92, enacted, "the word 'trustees' shall mean the trustees acting by virtue of this Act."

The appellant R. Malcolm Kerr, barrister-at-law, in

KERR v. WILKIE.

[H. OF L.]

1854 commenced an action of reduction, the object of which was to set aside all the proceedings of the trustees under the statute, on the following grounds:—He alleged that he was proprietor of certain lands in the county, which were comprehended in the statute from which he derived in his own right upwards of 100*l.* of annual feu duties and rents; that, therefore, he was one of the trustees (though not individually named) appointed by the Act; that a meeting of the trustees had been called by circular in 1852, with a view to carry the Act into operation, but that no circular was sent to him giving notice of such meeting; that another meeting had been called by circular, the purpose being stated to be to impose an assessment, but that no such circular had been sent to the plaintiff; that this meeting took up various matters of business, but did not impose any assessment; that the meeting adjourned from 24th Dec. 1852, the day on which it was summoned, till the 5th Jan. thereafter. This adjourned meeting on the latter day imposed an assessment of 1*l.* 10*s.* per acre. A subsequent meeting in 1853 also imposed a similar assessment for the following year. Of neither of those meetings had the plaintiff received any notice whatever. That such meetings were therefore illegal and void, and the proceedings ought to be set aside.

The defendants, the Bridge Trustees, contended that they had acted within the powers of the statute. The Court of Session held that no sufficient ground had been stated for setting aside the proceedings; whereupon the plaintiff brought this appeal.

Rolt, Q.C. and Anderson, for the appellant, contended that by the 1st section the appellant was de facto constituted a trustee under the Act, and that he was entitled to a notice of every meeting. The statute required to be followed strictly: (R. v. Longhorne, 4 Ad. & E.; Mauler v. Monreiff, 5 Bell's Ap. 345; R. v. Croke, 1 Cowp. 26; Friend v. Bennett, 3 C. B., N.S.) Moreover there was no notice of the adjourned meeting given, and the notice of the original meeting did not extend to it.

The Attorney-General (Bethell) and Bovill, Q.C., for the respondents, contended that the trustees meant only "the acting trustees," and no others required notice of the meetings; that the appellant was not an "acting trustee;" that even if he had been a trustee within the meaning of the Act, the omission to send a notice would not have been fatal; that the notice of the meeting extended to the adjournment: (Scadding v. Lorant, 3 H. L. Cas. 418.)

Anderson replied.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—My Lords, I am of opinion, and must so advise your Lordships, that there is no ground whatever for this appeal. The first ground taken, and which was, I think, the ground mainly relied upon on the part of the appellant, seems to me to be wholly untenable. That was, that no notice was given to the plaintiff, or to those who may be denominated the qualified trustees of the adjourned meeting at which the rate was made. Now, my Lords, I am of opinion that it was not necessary to give notice to that class, they never having acted as trustees. And with reference to that, I look to the definition of the word "trustees" in the 92nd section of the Act of Parliament, where we are desired to consider that "the word 'trustees' shall mean the trustees acting by virtue of this Act." These trustees (if they are to be considered as trustees) never have acted, and it would be most preposterous to suppose that the Legislature intended that notice should be given to each one of that indefinite body of everything that was to be done at any meeting; and that if any one of them did not receive notice it would nullify the proceedings. Their qualification is given in these terms: "And all other parties who hold or derive in their own right, or who may hereafter hold or derive in their own right, the sum of 100*l.* sterling of annual feu duties, or annual rents, out of or from any part of the lands hereinafter described." Now, who is to find out who are qualified by having 100*l.* derived in their own right, or hereafter to be derived, not only of annual feu duties, of which there is some record, but of annual profits, of which there are no means of forming any judgment? In order to exclude that, the definition says that none are to be considered as trustees except they have acted as trustees, and these gentlemen who now appear as appellants, never having acted as trustees, no notice was necessary to be given to them. I abstain from giving any opinion upon the question whether, they being trustees, and having acted as if they were without any bad faith, an accidental omission to serve any of them with notice would or would not have nullified the proceedings. I abstain from giving any opinion upon that question, for it does not seem necessary for the House to consider it. Now, then, we come to the other objection, upon which Mr. Rolt relied much less in his very luminous argument, that is, that there was no notice of the adjourned meeting as regards the purpose for which that meeting was to be held. Now, my Lords, whether that is a good objection or not depends entirely upon this, whether the adjourned meeting was to be considered as part of the original meeting; that is to say, whether there is an identity between the two meetings. If the adjourned meeting were a separate and independent new meeting, certainly new notice should be given; and, according to the 34th section of the Act of Parliament, without such notice no rate can be made. But, my Lords, it seems to me quite clear that this meeting having the power of adjournment, and having exercised that power bonâ fide when the adjournment took place, it was part of that meeting, just as much as if it had been a meeting held on the same day. My Lords, supposing that there had been a debate, as has been suggested during the argument, and that during that debate the clock had struck twelve at night, could there not have been an adjournment till the following day at nine o'clock, and would not the meeting that was then resumed have been part of the meeting which had taken place the day before? I cannot doubt it for a moment. And whether the adjournment be only for three hours or for three days, if the proceeding is bonâ fide, can make no difference. Mr. Rolt very properly admitted that the moment you admit identity of meeting, no more is to be said, and the notice that was given for the first meeting holds good for and includes all the other meetings following upon it. Now there has been a great deal of argument as to whether the case of Scadding v. Lorant, relating to the parish of St. Pancras, applies to this case. It seems to me that it does completely apply to it. It seems to me not only to apply in its principles, but in its circumstances. But, independently of that case, I hold it to be quite clear that, upon general principles, an adjournment, where there is power of adjournment, if bonâ fide, is only a continuation of the meeting; and that being so, it seems to me to be quite unnecessary to consider more minutely how far that case does apply to the present. It is not pretended that there is anything in that case contrary to this general principle. I think that it does apply to this case even in its circumstances, as well as in its principle; but if there had been no such case to be found in the books, I should without hesitation have given my opinion to your Lordships that this was the same meeting, and that the notice that was given for the original meeting as to the purpose of making a rate applied until the rate was actually made. For these reasons I must advise your Lordships to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Lord BROUGHAM.—I entirely agree with my noble and learned friend. The decision in the case of Scadding v. Lorant, by this House, was not necessary in order to throw light upon this case, but it greatly assists us. The opinion of the learned judges there taken lays down that which amounts to a general principle; but it was unnecessary to have it laid down, for I agree with my noble and learned friend that if a meeting is held, and then a power possessed by those who hold the meeting to adjourn it, except under peculiar circumstances, which do not exist in this case, the original meeting and the adjourned meeting must, generally speaking, be taken to be absolutely identical.

KERR v. WILKIE—PARISH v. SLEEMAN.

LORD WENSLEYDALE.—I entirely agree with my noble and learned friends that this appeal ought to be dismissed. I entirely agree with my noble and learned friend upon the woolsack upon the construction of this Act of Parliament. I think it is clear that this Act of Parliament, though extremely ill-drawn, meant something more to constitute a person an acting trustee than that he should be the proprietor of lands yielding 100*l.* sterling in feu duties or annual rents. I abstain from giving any opinion whether it was necessary to summon the present appellant, supposing he had been a regular trustee. The inclination of my opinion certainly is, that it would have been necessary to summon all those who were acting trustees, and that every proceeding before the board of trustees would have been coram non judice, if they did not summon all the acting trustees. However, it is not necessary to give a final opinion upon that point. The second question which struck me at first in the argument of Mr. Rolt as entitled to a good deal of weight, was, that the persons who were liable to be assembled had a right to have notice of the precise day upon which the meeting for making the assessment was held. That is under the 34th section. It occurred to me at first that there was a distinction between this case and Scadding v. Loran, that case not having decided this particular point, and on that account I wished to hear counsel argue as to that case; because there is a considerable difference between the case of persons affected by the rate, and the case of those who are themselves a component part of the body which is to act. With reference to those, no doubt there is a general power, although it is not given by the Act of Parliament, to adjourn. If such an adjournment took place, those who were members of the body so adjourning would be bound to take notice of their own proceedings. They might have objected to the adjournment if they were present, or if the adjournment were made by the chairman of the meeting, as it is done in some cases; those who were not present ought to have been present and take notice of it. But with regard to third persons affected by the rate, they would not necessarily be parties to what took place at the meeting; and the question occurred to my mind, whether there ought to have been notice given to them, if nothing was done on the previous day, of the adjournment of that meeting. However, the argument in the case of Scadding v. Loran completely satisfies me that there is no weight in that point which struck me at first; because, though that point was really not taken in the court below, it was taken in the court above, in your Lordships' house, and on that occasion it was decided that there was no weight in that objection. The notice required in that case to be given of the object of the meeting by the clerk after the second session on the church is just equivalent and in the same position as the notice required by this sect. 34, which is a notice to be given by the clerk of the trustees by circular to all the proprietors of feu rights. And it was in that case found by the special case, that notice was given of the original meeting, but that there was no notice in the church of the adjourned meeting, and your Lordships expressly decided that there was no occasion for such notice. It appears to me, therefore, that that point is overruled by the case of Scadding v. Loran, so that the objection altogether fails. I concur, therefore, in the opinion of my noble and learned friend, that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LORD CHELMSFORD concurred on the first point, though the Act of Parliament was extremely perplexed and confused. With regard to the other point, I also agree entirely. I think that the case of Scadding v. Loran decided the question. But independently of that case, I should have thought, when a meeting is to be held and business to be transacted, and where it is possible that at the original meeting the whole of the business may not be got through, that there must be power to adjourn that meeting, and that the adjourned meeting is to be considered as part of the original meeting. If that be so, I apprehend that that gets rid of the whole question; because, if the adjourned meeting in this case is part of the original meeting, then there was ample notice to the parties. And in this case more particularly so, because there is not, as in the case of a poor's-rate, a mere notice that the vestry are to assemble and to make the rate; but there is no notice of the rate which is proposed, and the proprietors themselves are entitled to attend the meeting of which they have notice, for the purpose of objecting to the rate or assessment upon their property. Therefore it must be assumed that if any person had an objection to make to the rate to be imposed, he would attend the original meeting, and that he would there state his objection; or if he found that the business could not be got through at that meeting, he would have notice of the adjournment of his case, and distinct and personal notice upon the subject of the adjournment of the question of the rate. Therefore it appears to me that upon this point the case of Scadding v. Loran is conclusive; but without the case of Scadding v. Loran I should be clearly of opinion that there was not the slightest objection here on the ground of the want of notice of the agenda or purpose of the adjourned meeting.

Affirmed with costs.

PARISH v. SLEEMAN.

Lease—Free of all outgoings—Land-tax.

*In an agreement for a farming lease, the tenant agreed to pay a rent of 40*l.* per annum "free of all outgoings." He afterwards claimed to be allowed to deduct from his rent the land-tax and commutation rentcharge:*

Held (overruling the decision of Stuart, V.C.), that the tenant was not entitled to make these deductions.

This was an appeal from the decision of Stuart, V.C., reported 1 L. T. Rep. N.S. 24, where the facts of the case are stated. The question arose on an agreement signed on Oct. 3, 1851, the material part of which is as follows:—

"The undersigned Samuel Rowles Pattison, as landlord, hereby agrees to let, and the undersigned Joseph Parish to take as tenant, all that farm in and called Tinnye, in the parish of Bridgerule, late in the occupation of Thomas Leigh, and now of the said landlord, for a term of fourteen years from Lady-day next, determinable at the end of the first seven years thereof, at the yearly rent of 40*l.*, payable quarterly, free of all outgoings, the landlord to abate 5*l.* per annum of the rent for the first two years, in consideration of the present condition of the place, and to put the said farm into repair forthwith, and the tenant to keep the same in repair."

The lease was originally prepared in chambers, and on settling it the chief clerk was of opinion that the land-tax and tithe commutation rentcharge were excepted from the payments to be made by the tenant under the term "free of all outgoing." Stuart, V.C. confirmed the certificate of the chief clerk, and from this decision the defendant Mr. Sleeman now appealed.

The following authorities were referred to:—Smith v. Anderson, 4 Russ. 352; Marshall v. Wisdall, Freem. 148; Bradbury v. Wright, 2 Doug. 624; Bennett v. Womack, 7 B. & Ald. 629; Cranston v. Clarke, Sayer, 78; Church v. Brown, 15 Ves. 258.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The question in this case arises on the construction of an agreement entered into between a landlord and a tenant, whereby the landlord agrees to let, and the tenant to take a farm for a term of fourteen years at the yearly rent of 40*l.*, free of all outgoing. Stuart, V.C. was of opinion that the land-tax and tithe commutation rentcharge ought to fall on the landlord, the tenant not being by this agreement deprived of the right to deduct them which otherwise he would have had; but in this decision I confess I am not able to agree. The tenant, by Acts of Parliament relating to these charges, is held primarily liable both for the land-tax and the tithe commutation rentcharge, but he is entitled to deduct them from his rent. It appears to have been the intention of these parties that the rent was to be paid free from these outgoing. It is admitted that the plaintiff for some time paid his rent without deducting these charges, and his counsel was unable to point out any other outgoing to which he was primarily liable. Here his Lordship referred to the cases of Cranston v. Clarke, Bradbury v. Wright and Bennett v. Womack, and concluded by saying, that he was of opinion that the certificate ought to be varied by making the rent payable free from the land-tax and tithe commutation rentcharge.

MYTTON (appellant) v. THE OVERSEERS OF THORNBURY (respondents).

Extra-parochial—Poor-rate—Agreement with owner of estate to maintain his own poor—Custody—Evidence—20 Vict. c. 19, s. 1.

On a question whether N. was part of the parish of T., an ancient agreement was produced to show that it was. The agreement was between the owner of N., and the then rector and parishioners of T., and by it all the poor from N. which should happen to be chargeable to the said parish T., notwithstanding the said estate N. doth happen to lie in the said parish T., should be in no way chargeable to the rest of the inhabitants of T., but that the said estate N. should maintain the same poor, and the said estate was to be freed from the poor-rate. This agreement was found in 1858 among the title-deeds of another large estate belonging to a different person in the parish of Thornbury:

Held that it was admissible in evidence as coming from proper custody.

The Extra Parochial Places Act, 20 Vict. c. 19, enacted that, "after the 31st Dec. 1857, every place entered separately in the report of the Registrar-General in the last census, which now is, or is reputed to be, extra-parochial, and wherein no rate is levied for the relief of the poor, shall, for all the purposes of the assessment to the poor-rate, the relief of the poor, the county, police, or borough rate, the burial of the dead, the removal of nuisances, the registration of parliamentary and municipal voters and the registration of births and deaths, be deemed a parish for such purposes, and shall be designated by the name which is assigned to it in such report." In the registrar's report N. was not entered by itself as reputed to be extra-parochial; but the entry was T. with N.:

Held, that N. did not become a parish per se under 20 Vict. c. 19, s. 1, by virtue of such entry in the Registrar's report.

This was a case stated on appeal by an inhabitant of Netherwood, against an assessment to the poor-rate of the parish of Thornbury, and the only question at issue was, whether Netherwood was extra-parochial, or part of the parish of Thornbury.

It was found that, from the year 1698 to the present time, Netherwood has maintained its own poor, but that it paid church-rates to Thornbury, and its baptisms and marriages took place there. To account for the fact of Netherwood's maintaining its own poor, the respondents produced an agreement dated 1698, between the owner of Netherwood and the inhabitants of Thornbury, which released Netherwood from liability to the poor-rate of Thornbury, on condition of maintaining its own poor, although it was in the parish of Thornbury.

The other material facts in the case sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Nov. 9. — Huddleston (H. James with him) for the respondents.—The appellant was properly rated to the parish of Thornbury, as Netherwood is part of that parish. The agreement of 1698 shows that conclusively. That agreement is evidence as coming from proper custody, and accounts for the way Netherwood came to maintain its own poor, and shows that it originated in a mere private arrangement between the then owner of the estate and the parish: (Bishop of Meath v. Marquis of Winchester, 3 Bing. N. C. 183; 1 Taylor on Ev. 523; Bullen v. Michell, 2 Pri. 413; R. v. Walsall, 2 B. & Ald. 157.)

Bovill (J. J. Powell with him) for the appellant.—The agreement of 1698 was not admissible, as it was not found in proper custody: (1 Taylor on Evid. a. 596; Potts v. Durrant, 2 Eagle & Young, 432.) Secondly, the Census Return Act of 1851, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 53, s. 5; and 20 Vict. c. 19, Extra-Parochial Places Act, made Netherwood a separate parish. By the latter statute, Netherwood having been entered in the Registrar-General's report as extra-parochial, it is to be deemed a parish for the purposes of the poor-rate among others; and overseers have been appointed accordingly for it. It cannot therefore be liable to be assessed to the poor-rate of Thornbury.

Huddleston in reply.—The entry in the registrar's report is Thornbury-with-Netherwood; that is not a separate entry, as required by the 20 Vict. c. 19, s. 1. Besides, sect. 7 enacts, "Nothing above contained shall apply to any extra-parochial place in respect whereof there shall be any agreement with any parish as to the liability of such place to contribute to the poor-rate of such parish contained in any Act of Parliament."

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 26.—BLACKBURN, J.—This was a case stated for the opinion of this court, to determine the validity of a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Thornbury, in which the appellant was rated as occupier of an estate called Netherwood. The case was argued in last term before my brothers Wightman, Hill and myself. The objection to the rate was on the ground that Netherwood estate was not properly included in a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Thornbury. Our decision in this case would not have finally determined the real question between the parties, as the appellant might still raise the same point in an action of trespass, contending that the warrant of distress was without jurisdiction; but as both parties having prayed for decision on the real point,

Q. B.]

MYTTON v. THE OVERSEERS OF THORNBURY.

and agreed to be bound by it, we have considered the question carefully. Two distinct grounds were relied on by the appellant. First, it was said that Netherwood estate never was a part of Thornbury parish, being extra-parochial. The appellant's case so far depended on the fact, that for many years past Netherwood estate had not contributed to the relief of the poor of Thornbury, and, on modern reputation, that Netherwood estate was extra-parochial. There are many facts stated in the case strongly tending as evidence to show that Netherwood estate is not extra-parochial; but it is not necessary to inquire on which side the balance of evidence preponderated, as it was scarcely contested by the appellant's counsel that if the respondents succeeded in accounting by legal evidence for the practice as to the relief of the poor, this part of his case failed. - The second ground depended on the effect of the recent Act: (stat. 20 Vict. c. 19.) It is convenient to deal with these two grounds separately. As to the first objection, the case stated that "from the year 1698 to the present time, Netherwood has (with an exception not material for us now to notice) maintained its own poor," and has never been charged with the support of the poor of any other place. Of the mode in which the poor of Netherwood were provided for before 1698, there is no evidence except as appears by the agreement hereinafter mentioned. The case afterwards states that "on or about the first day of April 1858, an agreement, a copy of which is hereunto annexed, and is hereby admitted to relate to the Netherwood estate, and is to form part of this case, subject to any objection which may be raised to its being admissible in evidence on the present appeal, was found by Evan Pateshall, Esq., of Wilfred-house, Builth, in the county of Brecon, among the title-deeds of a large estate, of which he is owner, in the parish of Thornbury, and immediately delivered over by him to the present rector of Thornbury, in whose custody it has since remained." This agreement is dated the 12th Jan. 1698, and expressed to be made between Samuel Pytts, Esq., a former owner of Netherwood estate, and the then rector and certain parishioners and owners of land in Thornbury. One of the principal points argued before us was, as to the admissibility of this document in evidence, and our decision on its admissibility will dispose of this part of the case. The document purported to be made between Samuel Pytts of the one part, and the six persons named and described as of Thornbury, as well on behalf of themselves as on the part and behalf of all the rest of the inhabitants of Thornbury, of the other part, and commences by a recital that Samuel Pytts had an estate, called "Netherwood," within the parish of Thornbury, late the estate of James Pytts, Esq., deceased; and that there was an agreement formerly made by James Pytts in his lifetime, and the then parishioners of the parish of Thornbury, "that all such poor that should happen at any time after to be chargeable to the said parish from the estate called Netherwood estate, notwithstanding the said estate doth lie in the said parish of Thornbury, should be no way chargeable to the rest of the inhabitants of Thornbury, but that the said estate should maintain and keep the same poor distinctly and apart from the rest of the inhabitants of Thornbury and their estates. And that all the rest of the estates of all the inhabitants and parishioners of the said parish of Thornbury, should maintain and keep all such poor as should come and arise, and be charged or chargeable, from any other place or places in the said parish of Thornbury, distinctly from the said estate called Netherwood estate, and that the same should be no way liable to maintain the same, which said agreement was never reduced into writing, and as all the parties were content that the agreement should be then put in writing, and confirmed under their hands and seals, and ratified for the time to come for the preventing of all disputes that may at any time or times hereafter arise or come, touching and concerning all such poor that shall have happened at any time or times hereafter to come and arise in the said parish of Thornbury, and charged on the same, it is agreed by and between the parties to these presents that, notwithstanding the said estate, called Netherwood, is lying and being in the said parish of Thornbury, the same should be no way liable to maintain and keep, or be at any charges or expenses in maintaining and keeping, any poor that shall at any time or times hereafter arise, happen, or come in or from any other part of the said parish of Thornbury, but only all such poor as shall at any time or times hereafter happen, arise, or come from the said estate, called Netherwood estate, and that the same shall be distinctly maintained from the rest of the estates of the inhabitants and parishioners of the said parish of Thornbury." The instrument then contained covenants by the parties for carrying out the agreement. It purported to be sealed by Samuel Pytts, and by two of the other parties named. It does not purport to be executed by the other parties, but purports to be agreed to under it by the two other inhabitants. This instrument, after it is properly proved, is decisive both as evidence explaining the modern practice as to the relief of the poor in a manner quite consistent with Netherwood estate being a part of the parish, and as a declaration by the deceased owner of the Netherwood estate and the other inhabitants as to the extent of the parish, that being a matter on which evidence of reputation is admissible. It purports to be an ancient instrument, and is proved, if produced from proper custody. It was argued that in the present case there was nothing to show that Mr. Pateshall was owner of any portion of the estates formerly belonging to those who were parties to the deed, though he had a large estate in the parish; but in the language of Tindal, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the judges in the H. of L. in The Bishop of Meath v. The Marquis of Winchester, 3 Bing. N. C. 200:—"Documents found in a place in which, and under the care of persons with whom, such papers might naturally and reasonably be expected to be found, are precisely in the custody which gives authority to documents found within it, for it is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit." We think that such an instrument as this relating to the interests of all the estates in Thornbury might naturally and reasonably be expected to be found among the title-deeds of a large estate in that parish. That being so, the first objection fails, as we think it proved that Netherwood estate was a part of Thornbury parish. The second ground of objection rests on the provisions of the statute 20 Vict. c. 9, s. 1. That after the 31st Dec. 1857, "Every place entered separately in the report of the Registrar-General on the last census, which now is or is reputed to be extra-parochial, and wherein no rate is levied for the relief of the poor, shall, for all the purposes of the assessment to the poor-rate, the relief of the poor, the county, police, or borough rate, the burial of the dead, the removal of nuisances, the registration of parliamentary and municipal voters, and the registration of births and deaths, be deemed a parish for such purposes, and shall be designated by the name which is assigned to it in such report." It was contended that up to the time when the agreement was found by Mr. Pateshall (which was after the 31st Dec. 1857), Netherwood estate was reputed to be extra-parochial, and that no rate was levied therein for the relief of the poor. An extract from the Registrar-General's report was given in the case, which, it was said, showed that Netherwood estate was entered separately in the report, and consequently it was argued that Netherwood estate was

REG. v. THE LONGTON GAS COMPANY.

[Q. B.]

since the 31st Dec. 1857, by virtue of this Act, a separate parish for the purposes of the poor-rate. If Netherwood estate had been separately entered in the report within the meaning of the Legislature, we are inclined to think that this would have been so. The Census Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 53, required the enumerators to return all accounts to the Registrar-General, but did not require the Registrar-General to make any particular use of them. The Registrar-General did, however, digest the information into an elaborate report, which was laid before both Houses of Parliament and printed. The extract from the report given in the case does not sufficiently show its nature, and we have considered it our duty to examine the report at large. In this report the Registrar-General has set forth a tabular statement of the population of the United Kingdom; he has for the convenience of arrangement divided the whole kingdom into districts, each of which is designated by a separate name, and a separate number. These districts he has again divided into subdistricts, each of which is designated by a separate name and a separate number; and these subdistricts are again subdivided into "parishes, townships, or places," each of which is designated by a separate name and a separate number, and against each of which is printed the word "parish," "township," "extra-parochial," or "chapelry," as the case may be. On the margin of this report are printed, in a small type, such notes as the Registrar-General has thought fit to add. This report was prepared in this form merely because the Registrar-General thought it the most convenient shape in which to communicate the result of the information acquired in making the census, and no legal effect resulted from his having done so, nor was it contemplated at the time that his report would affect the rights of any one. But the 20 Vict. c. 19, appears to have been framed on the supposition that where a place was reputed to be extra-parochial, and the reputation had been such as to lead the Registrar-General to enter it separately as a place, it would be convenient, for the purpose of acquiring titles and avoiding litigation, to make that place extra-parochial for all secular purposes in future. There are very many places entered in that report with a separate number as separate places to which this would apply, but Netherwood is not so entered. "Thornbury-with-Netherwood" is entered as one place with one number. There is, it is true, a note appended, showing that the Registrar-General had information before him which might, perhaps, have led him to enter Netherwood separately, if he had been aware that this would several years later become of importance. Perhaps, if he had known that it was to be important, he would have entered other places jointly which are now entered separately. We cannot enter into such speculations. We can only say, that on looking into the report referred to in the statute, we are of opinion that Netherwood is not a place entered separately in that report. We think, therefore, that the second objection also fails, and that the rate is good. There will be judgment for the respondents.

REG. v. THE LONGTON GAS COMPANY.

Highway — Obstruction — Laying down gas-pipes.

Town commissioners empowered by statute to light the public streets with gas, and to break up the footways and carriage-ways for laying down the gas-pipes, and to enter into contracts with other companies to execute such works, cannot confer on a private gas company not having any parliamentary powers, authority to break up the footways or carriage-ways for the purpose of laying down service pipes from private houses, and connecting them with the main pipes.

A householder who gives directions to have such works done for the purpose of lighting his house with gas, is liable to be convicted as a principal giving orders to commit a nuisance.

Indictment for a nuisance in breaking up the footpaths and streets of the town of Longton, Staffordshire.

The first count alleged that the defendants on the 9th Aug. 1858, in the High-street in Longton aforesaid, being the Queen's common highway used for all, &c., to go, return, pass and repass on foot in and along the same at their free will and pleasure, unlawfully and injuriously did dig up the pavements of the said footway, and put and place bricks, earth, &c., upon the said footway, and did make therein certain holes and trenches, and laid and placed down iron pipes in the same, whereby the highway aforesaid was obstructed and incumbered.

There were other counts charging the defendants with creating a similar nuisance in other streets and roads in the town.

The case was tried before Crompton J. at the last Stafford spring assizes, when a verdict of not guilty was entered as against four of the defendants, and a verdict of guilty against all the other defendants, subject to the opinion of the court on a case.

The town of Longton is in the district known as "The Potteries," and contains about 15,000 inhabitants. It is two miles from Stoke-upon-Trent, where the works of the Stoke Fenton and Longton Gas Company, hereinafter called the Stoke Fenton Company, are situate.

Before the 2 Vict. c. xlv. Longton was not lighted by gas at all. By that Act, which was "An Act for establishing an effective police in places within or adjoining to the district called the Staffordshire Potteries, and for improving and cleansing the same, and for better lighting parts thereof," Longton and several other towns and places were divided into four districts, called respectively the Longton, the Fenton, the Stoke, and the Trentham districts. Each district was placed under the government and direction of separate and distinct commissioners of police.

By sect. 68 power was given to the commissioners to light the public streets and places of Longton with gas or oil, and to execute the necessary works, or to enter into contracts with any company or other persons to execute the same, but not to fix any lamps, or carry any pipes through or against any dwelling-house or private building without the consent in writing of the owners or occupiers thereof.

By sect. 69 the commissioners were empowered, in case they should think proper to light the said public streets and places, to dig and break up the soil of any footways and carriage-ways, and to lay down pipes, &c., and from time to time to take up and repair the same, restoring the soil to its former state.

By sect. 83 it was provided that the expenses of lighting should be defrayed by a rate on the occupiers.

Soon after the passing of the said Act the Stoke Fenton Company was established, and incorporated by 21 Vict. c. xi., for the purpose of supplying Stoke Fenton and the places adjacent with gas; and the company erected gasworks, and laid down mains and pipes for public and private lighting through the streets and footways of Longton, and other places. Since that time the commissioners have from time to time contracted with the company, for lighting the public streets and places within Longton, and other portions of the Longton district; and the company have accordingly lighted the public streets and places, and also private houses and buildings. The only authority which they had for breaking up the streets and footways, and laying down the mains for public or private lighting, was the permission given to them by the Longton commissioners under the said Act.

While the 21 Vict. c. xi. was before Parliament, a company was established under the name of the Longton Gas Company (Limited), hereinbefore called the Longton Company, and in Aug. 1858 the said last-mentioned company began to erect their works.

REG. v. THE LONGTON GAS COMPANY.

The contract entered into by the commissioners with the Stoke Fenton Company expired on the 1st May 1858, and was not renewed. On the 15th June they contracted with the Longton Company for the supply of gas to the public lamps for the term of three years, upon the same terms as they had previously contracted with the Stoke Fenton Company, and also conferred on the Longton Company the same powers for breaking up the streets and laying pipes within the Longton district, which they had conferred on the Stoke Fenton Company. The Longton Company accordingly made a contract with one William Moore, for laying the necessary mains and pipes for the purpose of carrying out their contract with the commissioners, and the work was commenced on the 9th Aug. 1858.

The only act proved against Knight, one of the defendants against whom a verdict of guilty was entered, was that, he being the owner and occupier of a house, contracted with the Longton Company to have it lighted, and that he then directed the workmen of the Longton Company to lay down the service pipes for the purpose of connecting his house with the company's mains, which was accordingly done. Another defendant, William Moore, was the contractor with the Longton Company as aforesaid; another, William Hunt, was the manager of the company; and the others were labourers in the employ of the company. These defendants, besides making the necessary excavations for laying down the mains and carrying service pipes to the various public lamps in the Longton district, also caused to be dug a great many other trenches in the different parts of the streets and highways of the district for the purpose of laying down service pipes, in order to supply gas to private individuals for the lighting of private houses and shops.

The defendants used all reasonable dispatch in digging the trenches and laying down the pipes, and in restoring the streets and highways; and during the time that the trenches were being dug and were open, and the pipes being laid, the streets and highways were not otherwise interfered with than was necessary for digging the said trenches and laying the said pipes. Before the said works were commenced, the Longton Company had obtained the consent of the board of surveyors of highways of the town of Longton, and the approval and consent of the inhabitants of Longton, assembled in a public meeting convened by the chief bailiff.

The lord of the manor of Longton had also given a similar consent.

Bovill (Pigott, Serjt. and Scotland with him) for the prosecutors.—The defendants could have no authority to break up the streets, except it was conferred by some statute. Under the 2 Vict. c. xlv., the commissioners have power to authorise the breaking up of the streets for public purposes only, not for lighting private houses. In the Gasworks Clauses Act 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, ss. 6–12, a variety of provisions and safeguards is introduced to prevent undue interference with the public rights by the breaking up of streets for the purpose of laying pipes. A mere private joint-stock company, like the Longton Gas Company, not incorporated or authorised by Act of Parliament, has no authority to break up the public street for the purpose of laying down mains and service pipes. The parties who gave their consent, as stated in the case, could not confer any power to do what the defendants did. Cases cited:—*Ellis v. was not raised in Ellis v. The Sheffield Gas Consumers Company. In *Rex v. A cart or a waggon may be unloaded at a gateway, but this must be done with promptness. So, as to the repairing of a house; the public must submit to the inconvenience necessarily occasioned; but if this inconvenience is prolonged for an unreasonable time, the public have a right to complain, and the party may be indicted for a nuisance." It is found that the works of the defendants were done with reasonable dispatch. The soil below the surface of the streets belongs to the owners of the adjoining land, ad medium filum viæ. If a person is to be restricted to using the highway as a way merely, he could not put a ladder up for the purpose of doing anything to his house: (R. v. Ward, 4 Ad. & Ell. 384; *R. v. Cur. adv. vult.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The indictment in this case charged the defendants with obstructing certain highways and footways in the town of Longton in the county of Stafford, by placing earth and bricks there, and by digging trenches therein. At the trial certain of the defendants were convicted, subject to the opinion of this court upon a special case, from which the following facts appeared:—In the town of Longton there was a gas company, established by an Act of Parliament, which incorporated the provisions of the General Gas Companies Act. There was also a body of commissioners for the purpose of public lighting, with powers to lay down mains and pipes for the public lighting of the town, but with no powers to supply or lay down pipes for the supply of private houses or individuals. The commissioners, who had formerly been supplied with gas by the old company, entered into a resolution to transfer, and did duly transfer, their powers to the defendants the Longton Gas Company (Limited), who were a joint-stock company, but without any parliamentary powers as a gas company. The indictment was preferred against the company for obstructing the public highway by opening trenches and laying down pipes, and conveying gas to the public highway and to private houses. On the argument before us, it was conceded on the part of the Crown that the conviction could not be sustained against the defendants in respect of the acts done in making and laying down mains and pipes for the public lighting of the town, the acts in such respect being authorised by the powers transferred to them by the commissioners. It was admitted on the part of the defendants, that they had no parliamentary powers which gave them authority to create obstructions, or lay down pipes for private supply. The question, therefore, was confined to the acts done by the defendants in laying bricks and earth and digging trenches in one instance across the street, but in the other instances across the footway of the street, for the purpose of laying down supply or service pipes to private houses, from the mains laid down under the powers of the commissioners for public lighting. It appeared that these service pipes had been laid down by the joint-stock company at the request and by the direction of the owners of the houses; and that they had been so laid down carefully, without creating any unnecessary nuisance. It was not disputed, however, that the highway was obstructed so as to amount to an indictable nuisance, unless the defendants were justified in committing the acts complained of in the exercise of the right of each householder, to make such slight temporary obstruction on a highway or footway as necessarily incidental to the enjoyment of his property, such, for example, as the obstruction caused in using the common coal-holes in the pavements, the unloading of carts, the putting up boards for repairing, and other similar temporary obstructions. We are of opinion that the present case does not fall within any of the exceptions to the general law as to the obstructions of highways. We find no authority, according to which so wide and large an exception to the general rule is established, as would allow either a private person, or anybody acting at the request of private persons, to open the streets, for the purpose of supplying private houses with water or gas from sources from which a supply of water or gas may be procured. Such an act is not in any respect a user of the highway such as occurs where a cart or carriage stops before a door, or where goods are unloaded on the highway, to be immediately taken into the house. Such matters may well be said to be a use of the highway as a highway; and this is made more clear by the rule that where there is an excess or abuse, in such case, the party is indictable. Thus, where, instead of using the highway merely for taking the goods in, the party sawed blocks of wood in the street before taking them in, he was held to be indictable for so doing. The case put of the coal-holes in the pavement of a street is perhaps the one apparently most in favour of the defendants. It is not, however, to be assumed that there is any right in the owner of a house to open the pavement to make a new coal-hole where none has existed before. He could not, we think, make a new hole in the middle of the street, if his cellar extended so far. In many instances, no doubt, such coal-holes may be of right, as where they have been made when the houses were first built, and so, as was suggested during the argument, the highway has been dedicated subject to such use. In many cases of a single obstruction for a short time, for the purpose of obtaining some such advantage, there would probably be no indictment, although the party might strictly be liable to indictment, and although, were such instances multiplied, it might become necessary to indict. It may be also that the almost universal use of coal-holes may have led to their not being complained of, as they might be, from their being regarded as a usual, if not a necessary, means of enjoying the house if made in their usual place. They do not, in any of these respects, appear to be analogous to the case now before us, for there is no evidence that the right here claimed originated in any reservation, nor is its exercise matter of absolute necessity, nor is it one ordinarily exercised by the owners of property, except under parliamentary powers, and subject to regulations imposed for the protection of the public. The case is not one of absolute necessity, either for the party or for the public, as in the case of hoarding required during the repairing of a house, to protect the public, or in the case of putting a ladder against a house to clean windows, or to escape in the case of fire. General convenience is greatly against the allowing private persons or companies, without parliamentary powers, to interfere from time to time with the public streets. The making such openings from time to time for water, gas, sewage, and other purposes, and the opening of the streets for repairs and alterations, are a serious inconvenience even when done under the restrictions which an Act of Parliament puts upon the persons clothed with parliamentary authority so to act; and it would be difficult to see how far the annoyance might extend, if unauthorised dealings of this nature with the highways were allowed. Is every private person to be at liberty to open the street for the purpose of laying down a pipe to any gasworks, or to any conduit of water, or to any well or fountain in a market-place? How far is such right to extend? If everybody may lay down a pipe from the nearest water or gas, how great would be the inconvenience from the continuous opening of the streets for the first laying down and for the constantly recurring purpose of repairing. Were such private rights as to gas, sewerage and water-pipes to be allowed, the highways would be in a constant state of obstruction. The present is an exceptional case, where it happens, from the fact of the mains being laid for public purposes, that it is more easy to get at the supply of gas than in ordinary cases; but this ought not to affect the principle. The case does not seem to us to fall within what may be called the ordinary incidents and rights, which in common sense and from common use, are understood to appertain to the enjoyment of property. On the contrary, a right, as is here claimed, of interfering with the streets is never exercised except under the authority of Acts of Parliament conferring special powers, with great care, and under proper control, in the case of gas, by placing the companies supplying it under the provisions of the General Gasworks Companies Act, according to which the parties are subjected to wholesome restrictions, and to the control of the magistrates. We think, therefore, that the obstructions in question are indictable, and that the conviction was right; and the verdict must be entered accordingly. A question was raised, but not very seriously pressed, as to whether one of the defendants, who had given directions to have the particular works done to his own house, was properly convicted. On this we entertained no doubt, as the party giving orders to commit a nuisance is a principal in the transaction. It was agreed at the trial that the defendants should be at liberty to turn the case into a special verdict, if the court should think fit to give them leave so to do, and considering the importance of the question, we think it quite right that such leave should be given. If that course be taken, that which was conceded in the argument must be found as a fact in the special verdict, namely, that there was obstruction to the road; and the question must be, as to whether the parties are indictable for making such obstructions under the circumstances. Our judgment will be for the Crown as to the obstructions arising from laying down the service pipes.

Judgment for the Crown.

Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63.

Upon an application for a warrant under sect. 103, the justices are not required to draw up any formal order.

Denman (on behalf of two justices of Middlesex) and B. C. Robinson (on behalf of the Tottenham Local Board of Health) showed cause against a rule calling upon their respective clients to show cause why an order for the payment of two district rates for 1857 and 1858, made under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, ss. 102 and 103, amounting to 1*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, and upon which a warrant of distress had issued, should not be removed into this court by writ of certiorari, in order that it may be quashed. It appeared that, upon the justices deciding upon the application, their clerk, as an act of courtesy, handed the defendant a memorandum of their decision, and this without the knowledge of the justices, and without their signatures attached. Upon the application for this rule many objections were taken to this document, it being treated as a legal order under the statute. It was now contended that, under the 103rd section, no formal order was necessary, and that what the clerk to the justices did was merely an act of gratuitous civility.

H. James, in support of the rule, after contending that an order was necessary, argued that, if not, yet, as his client had been misled by the act of the clerk to the justices, the rule should be discharged, without costs.

BLACKBURN, J.—It is clear that no order was required by the statute. The point upon which the rule will be discharged is, that this was an inoperative document, and not a judicial proceeding which could do either good or harm. Rule discharged, with costs.

Re THE BRISTOL FREE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Free grammar school—Boarders.

The court will sanction a scheme allowing the masters of a free grammar school to take boarders only with reference to the special circumstances of each case, and where it will not interfere with the objects of the original foundation of the school.

This was an application by the majority of the trustees of the Bristol Grammar School to vary one of the provisions of the present scheme, which prohibits the masters from taking boarders.

The Bristol Free Grammar School was founded by letters patent, granted in the reign of Henry VIII., and a house or hospital and lands were conveyed to the mayor, burgesses and commonalty of Bristol, for the establishment of the school, for "all children who would repair to the said school for learning and knowledge of the Latin and other good learning, and that freely, and without anything to be taken, other than fourpence only for the first admission of every scholar into the same school."

The corporation were empowered to make ordinances for the government of the school.

This capitation fee was increased from time to time until, in 1812, it was fixed at the sum of 4*l.* for each scholar, the son of a burgess or freeman residing within one mile of the city on his admission, all other scholars to pay such sum as should be agreed upon between the master and the parents of such scholars.

The revenues of the charity and the fees paid by the scholars being insufficient to pay adequate salaries to the masters, on two different occasions, viz. in 1764 and 1812, resolutions were passed by the corporation, by which the masters were authorised to take boarders, and the practice continued for some time, but the number of free day scholars on both occasions fell off, and it was again discontinued.

By a scheme approved by the decree of the Court of Ch. made in 1847 for the future management of the estates and government of the school, it was declared that all boys of the age of eight years and upwards, resident within two miles of the Exchange of the city, should be eligible for admission to the school, and to partake of all the benefits thereof.

And it was provided that besides the learned languages there should be taught mathematics, algebra, arithmetic, writing, reading, general English literature, geography, composition, and profane history; and such of the modern languages and elements of such of the arts and practical sciences as the trustees should think fit to direct.

And it was declared that each boy should pay during his continuance in the school such sum not exceeding 6*l.* per annum as the trustees of the school should fix.

And it was declared that no master, whether residing on the school premises or not, should take any scholar of the said school to reside or board with him.

The salaries received by the masters for the year 1859 were as follow: Head master, from the income of the charity, 150*l.*; from the fees paid by the boys, 287*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*; total, 417*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Second master, from the charity, 100*l.*; from fees, 191*l.* 15*s.*; total, 291*l.* 15*s.* Third master, from the charity, 25*l.*; from fees, 144*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.*; total, 169*l.* 6*s.* 3*d.* Fourth master (Latin and German), total salary 139*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.* Fifth master, 120*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* Sixth master, 99*l.* 18*s.* French master, 87*l.* 14*s.* Drawing master, from fees only, 57*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* The head master has also a house rent free.

The income of the charity is increasing, and will increase, at the rate of about 30*l.* per annum for several years to come.

There are several exhibitions to the Universities.

The number of boys attending the school at the present time is 200.

The majority of the trustees now seek an alteration of the scheme of 1847 in several particulars, amongst others, to permit the masters to take boarders. This is the only alteration in dispute. In support of their application they urge that since the re-establishment of the school in 1847 the trustees have found that its income has been very inadequate to meet its outgoings, and that they have been obliged to reduce the salaries below what they conceive the services of the masters entitle them to be paid, thus preventing a full development of the school, both in an educational point of view and as to the position it may be justly expected to attain.

They believe that the reputation already acquired by the school will induce a larger number of scholars to resort thereto, if an efficient and sufficient staff of masters can be supported and retained therein.

That the number of scholars is out of proportion to the number of masters, and that the classes are consequently too large, but that another master could not be appointed for deficiency of funds.

That the salaries of the masters are greatly below those received by the masters of kindred establishments, and consequently it is difficult to retain an efficient staff of masters. This is done at present only by allowing the under masters to devote their time out of school hours to private tuition.

That from the inquiries which have been made of the masters of some of the other public schools in England it appears to be the general opinion that the granting permission to the masters to take boarders, not only adds to the status of the school, but also increases the number of day boys, and the emoluments of the masters. They set out the opinion of the head master of Rugby school: "A good school requires not only an efficient head master, but really able men for under-masters; they cannot be got without being properly paid. There is no way of paying them so good as that of allowing them to keep boarding-houses. Further, there are no other persons who can equally well be trusted with such houses, and no reform of Dr. Arnold had so good an effect as that which abolished all boarding-houses except those kept by under-masters. They have an authority over the boys which it is not wholesome, even when it is safe, to intrust to others."

The minority of the trustees opposing the alteration of the scheme in this respect, stated as follows:—

That all our local experience of schools, where part of the pupils are on a cheap foundation provided by a charity, and part paid for, more expensively, as boarders, has shown them to have the elements of failure within themselves. This was strikingly exhibited in the present school under two successive masters. At the appointment of Dr. Lee there were ninety-nine scholars. Dr. Lee was permitted to take boarders, and the ultimate result was that no foundation boys remained. Dr. Goodenough was appointed, and the boys again rose to the former numbers, but by degrees they fell off, finding insult and contumely constantly offered to them, being always designated as "scamps," &c., and for twelve years before the present trustees were appointed no boy had been on the foundation; consequently for twelve years this excellent charity was virtually defunct.

A similar instance occurred in Bath, where we are credibly informed there existed a foundation school for all boys paying 4*l.* per annum. The master was allowed to take boarders and day scholars on his own account, and the consequence was that constant complaints were made to the trustees by the parents of the foundation boys, of insult, indignities and favouritisms, until at length the trustees were compelled to limit the master to eight boarders, when the foundation boys increased from almost none to the full complement; but all men of experience know that when two classes, so widely different as one composed of boys supposed to receive benefit from charity and another self-supported and liberally paid for, are placed in the same school, they will not equally estimate each other, and all the evils we note here, amongst many others, will follow. They also stated they had heard from many parents of children now in the school that they were determined to withdraw them as soon as boarders were admitted.

On the other side it was argued that these arguments do not apply to the Bristol school, as all the boys there pay equal fees. The information obtained by the promoters shows that the great public schools of this country are at present on the now proposed footing, and that the evils alleged to be caused by the mixture of boarders with day scholars do not exist. The class of boys whose influence appears to be dreaded (namely, the sons of persons of higher station than the average) already exists in the school in considerable numbers, without the apprehended ill effects. In the Bristol Grammar School, as in other such schools, the boys are and will be indiscriminately mixed in the several classes.

They stated that, from numerous inquiries, they were perfectly satisfied that there is no cause to apprehend a loss of numbers, but, on the contrary, they confidently expected a considerable increase in the number of scholars from the permission to take boarders.

They denied that the falling off of the number of boys on the two former occasions were attributable to the fact of the masters taking boarders, and stated other reasons for such falling off.

They cited the case of the Tiverton School, as having greatly fallen off in numbers when the masters were prohibited from taking boarders.

T. H. Terrell, for the trustees promoting the proposed alterations, cited the case of the Manchester School.

The following authorities were cited:—The Attorney-General v. Earl of Devon (Tiverton School), 15 Sim. 193; The Attorney-General v. Earl of Stamford, 16 Sim. 453; S.C. on appeal, 1 Phil. 737; The Attorney-General v. The Bishop of Worcester (Worcester School), 9 Hare, 328.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The perusal of the statements submitted to me, and the consideration I have given to this subject, have induced me to come to the conclusion that I ought not to sanction the introduction of boarders into this school. In coming to this conclusion, I think it necessary to guard against any misapprehension which might arise from the belief that I propose by this decision to lay down any general rule as to the non-introduction of boarders into free grammar schools. I mean to do nothing of the sort; and, accordingly, the evidence laid before me of the answers derived from a large number of free grammar schools, declaring that such a rule would go far to destroy such schools, has had little or no weight with me in regard to the present application. Each case must, in my opinion, be tried on its own merits. I should consider a man as devoid of sense who should insist that boarders ought not to be admitted at Eton, Harrow and Rugby, and schools of a similar description; but a very different rule applies and different principles suggest themselves in the case of a school situated as the Free Grammar School of Bristol is. The principal argument in favour of giving permission to the masters to receive boarders is very forcible—that by augmenting the income of the masters you tend to raise the character and qualifications of the school and of the class of instructors, and that without this assistance in some places efficient masters could not be obtained. This argument has, no doubt, considerable weight, and the probability resulting from it, that a master might leave the Bristol Grammar School if he could obtain a more lucrative or eligible appointment is indisputable. At the same time, I observe that the head master of the Bristol Grammar School now obtains 430*l.* per annum, besides a house rent-free and kept in repair. I do not doubt that this remuneration will secure a master of very high qualifications, and that on the vacancy of that office the trustees will rather be puzzled which out of the great number of well-qualified persons who would offer themselves as candidates they shall select, than feel any difficulty in obtaining a competent person to accept the situation. I do not, therefore, in the present case, feel the necessity of admitting boarders in order to secure an adequate supply of efficient masters for the sustentation of either the credit or character of the school, or for the instruction of the scholars. Another argument, frequently relied on in favour of the admission of boarders into free grammar schools, is derived from the advantages anticipated to arise from the intermixture of the children of different classes of society in the same school. This was well expressed by Lyndhurst, L.C. in a passage quoted with admiration by Turner, L.J. in the case of the Worcester Grammar School: "There is another consideration also connected with these establishments—that they are the avenues by which the humbler classes, by industry, activity and intelligence, can force their way into the highest situations of the State; and by furnishing the means of uniting at an early age the upper and lower classes, they tend to bind together by the strongest ties the whole system of society." Nothing can sound better or more plausible than this language, but it unfortunately does not agree with the result of experience. It is found that the two classes of scholars—viz., those educated at the cost of the charity, or nearly so, and those whose parents pay largely for their instruction, do not coalesce or mix harmoniously together. I have in vain looked for any evidence to that effect. The cases in the books all appear to establish the exact opposite. Either the school becomes a school for the rich—that is, for what may be termed the higher branch of the middle classes—or it becomes a school from which they are practically excluded; and it is in the nature of things that it should be so. The regard paid to wealth in this country gives an unusual degree of importance to boys whose parents are supposed to possess it over those whose parents are supposed to be wanting in that respect. The history of this very school has shown that this result occurred there a few years ago; nor am I aware of any school where a large intermixture of boarders and free scholars, amounting to something like an equal division, works harmoniously and well. The boarders, almost as a matter of course, secure more instruction than the free scholars, and are more subject to the discipline of the master. If the prizes and exhibitions are open to them, they carry them all away; and this circumstance adds to the prestige, if the word can be so used, with which they are surrounded, owing to their supposed greater wealth. If the boarders, on the other hand, are excluded from such competition, then an additional evil of another sort is introduced, arising from one class of scholars being excluded from obtaining the due reward of their industry. My opinion is that, so far from the union of classes being promoted by the admixture of boarders and free scholars, it is impeded and checked. If I am right in the observations I have already made, this admixture is likely to engender an ill-feeling in boys which becomes matured and permanent in manhood in a great majority of instances. But, on the other hand, I think that the eventual harmonious admixture of classes is much better obtained by the keeping distinct the schools to which boarders are admitted and those to which free scholars are admitted. I do not mean to say that there are no free grammar schools well conducted where boarders are admitted, but in these cases either the boarders form but a very small portion of the school, or, which is the general case, the free scholars form but a very small minority. In neither case is the character of the school practically affected. Practically, there are no free scholars at Eton, Harrow, and Rugby, or they are in such small proportion as not to affect the character of the school. If the boys in these schools are not all boarders, it is because the parents or near relations of the boys establish themselves in the immediate vicinity of the school for the purpose of obtaining its advantages at a less cost than they could ordinarily be obtained. Practically, the distinction is nothing. So, also, in free grammar schools the free scholars may reside with parents, relatives, or persons living in the town, or with persons attached to the school, and who are permitted by the school to board and maintain them. But these cases again are all alike, and differ in no material respect. The boarding for which permission is applied for by this and similar applications is the boarding of boys with masters attached to the school, by means of which the boys are supposed, and justly so, to be subjected to a more complete discipline, and to obtain a more perfect instruction than if their discipline and instruction were confined to the period of their attendance during school hours. One of my main reasons for believing that the ultimate admixture of classes is promoted by the practical exclusion of boarders from some of the free grammar schools is, that that which materially contributes to the harmony and well-being of society in this country is not merely the perfect and imperceptible gradation of all classes from the lowest to the highest, but the fact that no dignity or honour in the Church or State under the Throne is excluded from any person, however humble may be his origin, provided his abilities and industry enable him to attain them, and that when he has attained them he is accepted by the higher classes, into which he has risen, exactly as if he had been born in the ranks into which he is adopted. But to accomplish this result the means of a liberal, classical and extended education must be open to him; and if there were no free grammar schools open to the lower classes this would be impossible. The child could not obtain the instruction required unless at the cost of associating with other boys of the same age, who would look down on him and treat him as of a class inferior to themselves. Few parents would permit their children to be placed in such a situation; few boys would desire it, and those who were subjected to it would probably imbibe feelings of a deep and implacable character, the power of which subsequent years might mature to a result anything but amiable or to be desired. The existence of the free grammar schools without boarders provides the necessary instruction for the lower class of the community. The existence of free grammar schools like Eton, Harrow and Rugby, without, or almost without, free scholars, provides the necessary instruction for the sons of the higher classes of the community. The scholars from each class of schools when they become men unite and harmonise together much better than they could do as boys in the same school in early life. The son of a peer may avoid, or be excused from associating with, the son of a small tradesman; but when the son of the tradesman has become eminent in the State, or distinguished for his literary, classical, or scientific attainments, the peer may eagerly seek the acquaintance and friendship of the man who when a boy he would have shunned. It would be better, I admit, if it were possible that the two institutions could be united, and that the scholars of all degrees could associate together on equal terms; but experience has taught us that this is scarcely possible, it being the tendency of the higher classes to exclude the lower where both are mixed together, and to obtain an unjust proportion of those advantages which charity intended should be administered in a spirit of fairness and benevolence, without prejudice or favour. The interests of society will eventually be best consulted and advanced by holding that, into the free grammar schools, which are from their position and neighbourhood well attended by free scholars, boarders should not be admitted, or should be admitted only to such a limited extent as would not interfere with the general character of the school; and when a school has attained a great amount of scholars under either system — viz., that of taking free scholars almost exclusively or boarders almost exclusively—it would, in my opinion, be foreign to the duty or province of this court to interfere with or alter that system. I have made these observations in order to explain the view that I take of cases of this description, and in applying them to the present case, I find that this school is in a large, prosperous and populous city, where its advantages are so well appreciated that the parents of upwards of 200 boys avail themselves of the advantages thereby afforded for the instruction of their children. I find the salary of the head master, combined with the incidental advantages attached to his station, sufficient to obtain the services of a gentleman of great merit and abilities, and well fitted to perform the duties which belong to his difficult and anxious position. I find that there is no want of able under-masters of all sorts, at the rates of salary at present attached to their offices. I find a charity estate constantly and gradually increasing in value every year, and sufficient to provide additional remuneration. I find that this system of things, which I cannot but think very prosperous, has gone on increasing, and is expected to continue for some years. I find that an opposite system some time ago had led practically to the destruction of the free scholars, and that the scheme under which the school is at present conducted was deliberately established by the court only a few years ago. If this were altered, the result might and probably would be that the number of scholars would increase the reputation of the school, and that the school might rise in general estimation; but the character of the school would be changed, and that liberal and classical education afforded by it would no longer, or not to the same extent, be accessible to the poor. Taking all these matters into consideration, I have deliberately, and without hesitation, come to the conclusion that it would be inexpedient to alter the scheme in this respect, or to allow the head or other master of this school to take as boarders any boys who are to be educated in this school.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACT 1853.Appeal from an order of a County Court judge— 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137.Where the rents of a piece of land had been regularly paid to the churchwardens of a parish towards the repair of a church, for which purpose the land was supposed to have been given at an unknown date by an unknown benefactor, the proper persons to be appointed trustees were held to be the rector and the churchwardens.

This was the petition of the Rev. C. M. Wimberley, rector of the parish of Donington-on-Baine, Lincolnshire, presented, by way of appeal, under the 39th section of the above Act, from a decision of the County Court judge of Lincolnshire.

By a certificate of the Charity Commissioners, dated the 2nd Aug. 1859, it was recited that it appeared that there was a piece of arable land in the parish of Donington, containing about eight acres, the rent of which was regularly paid to the churchwardens of the parish towards the repair of the church, for which purpose it was supposed to have been given at an unknown date by some unknown benefactor; that the same was then in the occupation of a tenant, at the rent of 20*l.*; that there were not at that time any legally constituted trustees of the charity; and that disputes had arisen as to its administration. It had accordingly been thought desirable that an application should be made to the proper court for an order appointing trustees of the said charity, and the petitioner and John Fletcher, one of the churchwardens, had transmitted to the board notice of this intention to apply to the County Court judge. The commissioners then proceeded to certify that the board thereby authorised the petitioner and the said John Fletcher to make an application within three months for an order appointing "the rector and churchwardens of the parish, and their respective successors for the time being, or some other fit and proper persons, to be the trustees for the administration of the said charity."

Application was accordingly made to the County Court judge, who, on the 12th Nov. last made an order appointing the petitioner (the rector), the said John Fletcher and Joseph Goy (the churchwardens), the overseers of the poor of the parish and the surveyor of highways, and their successors for the time being, and George Tomline, Esq., a landowner in the parish, to be the trustees of the charity.

The petitioner submitted that Geo. Tomline, Esq., was an improper person to be appointed trustee, inasmuch as his residence was twenty-five miles away from the parish, and that the sexton and churchwardens of the parish were the proper persons to be trustees.

The petition (which was duly certified by the charity board to be reasonable and proper) prayed that the order might be varied, by providing that the rector and churchwardens should be trustees.

The petition alleged, amongst other things, that at the hearing before the County Court judge the solicitor of the petitioner proposed to call and examine him for the purpose of showing that the number of directors in the parish was very large, and that the overseers of the poor and surveyor of the highways would for the most part be Dissenters, but the judge refused to hear evidence on any of these subjects.

It was stated that no church-rate had been levied in the parish for many years; that great differences existed between the rector and his parishioners (500 in number), 100 of whom were Dissenters. Mr. Tomline was the largest proprietor in the parish, and owned about one-third of it.

Hobhouse supported the petition.

Cotton opposed on behalf of Mr. Tomline and the surveyor of highways, and the overseers of the poor.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he could not agree with the view which the County Court judge had adopted. The Charity Commissioners had sanctioned this appeal, and it seemed to him that the rector of the parish and the churchwardens ought to have the care of this property, because the rents and profits of it had been dedicated to the purposes of the church. One of the respondents, who was the largest landed proprietor in the parish, had instructed counsel to appear in support of the view of the County Court judge; and the same counsel had been instructed for the other parties who had been nominated trustees by the order of the County Court. It was satisfactory, therefore, to know that all parties had had an opportunity of stating their case. In his (the V. C.'s) opinion, the Charity Commissioners having sanctioned the appeal, it was his duty to appoint the rector and churchwardens alone to be the trustees. The case was an unfortunate one, because the costs must come out of the estate; unless Mr. Tomline, under the circumstances of the case, should think it right to refund them.

The order was, that the rector and churchwardens were to be the trustees; the petitioner's costs to be taxed and paid out of the rents; the respondents to bear their own costs.

V. C. WOOD'S COURT.

*March 16, 20 and 21.*DUDLEY AND WEST BROMWICH BANKING COMPANY v. SPITTLE.Forgery—Debt—Trust-deed—Cestui que trust and trustee—Criminal conviction.

*A. forged the name of S. to a cheque for 550*l., and obtained the money from the bankers. He was subsequently apprehended for another felony, and indictments for both felonies were preferred against him at the next assizes. To the first (not the plaintiff's) he pleaded "guilty," to the plaintiff's indictment "not guilty." He was sentenced on the first to four years' penal servitude. The second was not tried, but ordered to stand over, the ends of justice, in the words of the judge, having been satisfied. Previously to the sentence A. had executed an assignment of all his real and personal estate for the benefit of his creditors to S., whose name he had so forged. The bankers claimed to rank under this deed of assignment as creditors for the money of which they had been so defrauded:

Held, first, that the money so obtained was a debt due to the bankers;

Secondly, that they had done everything which depended upon them to do to bring A. to conviction;

Thirdly, that the bankers were entitled to come in under the deed of assignment and rank as creditors.

This was a bill filed by the Dudley and West Bromwich Bank on behalf of themselves and the other creditors of one Frederick Farley against the defendant John Spittle, who had been a customer of the bank, and had also become the sole trustee under a deed of assignment, bearing date 16th March 1858, for the benefit of the general creditors of the said Frederick Farley.

The plaintiffs have branch establishments as bankers at Dudley, in Worcestershire, and West Bromwich, in Staffordshire.

On the 27th Jan. 1858 a cheque for 550*l.* in favour of one Guest, and professing to be signed by the said John Spittle, was presented for payment at the Dudley branch bank by one Mary Ann Whitehouse. She was there told that Spittle kept his account at the West Bromwich branch. On presenting the cheque at that place, she was paid the amount of it. Soon after the payment of the cheque, the defendant Spittle informed the bank that his name had been forged, and that it had not been drawn or signed by him or by his order.

On the 5th March 1858 Frederick Farley and the woman Whitehouse were apprehended at Birmingham on a charge of forging and uttering another forged cheque on Messrs. Attwood, the bankers at Birmingham, and were committed for trial on that charge at the next Warwick assizes, to be held on the 17th March next following. During the inquiries which ensued, it was discovered that Farley had taken the woman with him to the Dudley branch bank with the first-mentioned forged cheque, and afterwards to West Bromwich, where it was paid, and the amount of it was handed over to him by the woman at the door of the bank there.

The plaintiffs thereupon preferred an indictment at the Warwick assizes against Farley for forging and uttering the cheque for 550*l.* and the woman Whitehouse was admitted before the grand jury as a witness against him. At the same time defendant Spittle deposed before the grand jury that his name had been forged to the cheque. A true bill was found.

At the same assizes Messrs. Attwood preferred an indictment against Farley for forging and uttering the cheque upon them. To the indictment of the Birmingham Bank he pleaded "guilty." To the indictment of the plaintiffs, the Dudley Bank, the defendant pleaded "not guilty;" and thereupon the presiding judge, Coleridge, J., passed a sentence of four years' penal servitude upon Farley, on the indictment to which he had pleaded "guilty;" and he directed the plaintiffs' indictment to stand over and not to be tried, being of opinion that the ends of justice were answered by the sentence passed against Farley on the one indictment.

The plaintiffs alleged that they were at the time ready to proceed with their indictment, and that by reason of the judge, in the exercise of the discretion by law vested in him postponing the trial of their indictment, were unable to proceed further with such indictment.

They also alleged that the 550*l.* received by Farley under the forged cheque was a debt due to the plaintiffs from him.

Farley had been a licensed victualler and maltster, and by an indenture bearing date the 16th March 1858, before sentence, assigned all his real and personal estate to the defendant Spittle, as trustee to convert the same and pay the amount amongst his creditors, and the usual notice was advertised in the London Gazette and other papers.

As it was expected that Farley's estate would realise 10*l.* in the pound, and probably more, amongst his creditors, the plaintiffs applied to be admitted to execute the deed as creditors for the 550*l.* This, however, was opposed by the defendant, and the present bill was then filed against him as such trustee, to have the trusts of the indenture of assignment to him of the 16th March 1858 carried into effect, and that the plaintiffs might participate with the other creditors in the division of the proceeds of the estate, and for the usual accounts of the real and personal estate received under the deed of assignment.

Amphlett, Q.C. and Isaac Spooner, for the plaintiffs, contended that they had complied with the rule of law which prevailed, that everything should be done by a prosecutor to bring an offender in a criminal case to justice, which could be done before a civil process could be instituted against him, his estate, or third parties, in consequence of such criminal act. In the present case, it was not the fault of the prosecutors that Farley had not been convicted. The judge, in his discretion, had sentenced him to penal servitude on the indictment to which he had pleaded guilty, and had seen the depositions and written evidence in the case upon which Farley had been indicted at the instance of the plaintiffs. The defendant, by appearing before the grand jury and swearing to the handwriting to the cheque being a forgery, had precluded himself from disputing that fact. The judge was the sole arbiter of how the business of his court should be conducted, and the prosecutors in the present case had had no power of obliging him to proceed with the second indictment, the ends of justice, as he (the judge) stated, being satisfied by the consequences of the first. They relied upon Ex parte Bolland, Mont. & M. Bank. Rep. 319; Stone v. Marsh, 6 Bar. & Cr. 340; March v. Keating, 1 Bing. N.C. 198; Crosby v. Leng, 12 East, 409. As to the right of parties who had taken all necessary proceedings towards a conviction to proceed against third persons—White v. Spettigue, 13 M. & W. 603; Whickham v. Galliol, 2 Sm. & G. 353; Cox v. Paxon, 17 Ves. 329; Re Hardwick Willmore, W. & D. 197.

Daniel, Q.C., T. H. Terrell and Begg, for the defendant, contended that the plaintiffs had entirely mistaken their course of proceeding. The assignment having been executed by Farley was an act of bankruptcy, and the usual notices by advertisement having been published, the plaintiffs should at the end of three months have proceeded under the 78th section of the Bankruptcy Act to have got Farley declared a bankrupt, and then proved their demand under his estate. The relation of cestui que trust and trustee had never been constituted between the plaintiffs and the defendant, the trustee of the deed of assignment, as they had not executed the deed within the three months, the time limited by the deed, and they consequently were not within its provisions. There was no admission of any debt by Farley. They cited Barough v. White, 4 B. & C. 325; Beauchamp v. Parry, 1 B. & Ad. 91.

No reply was called for.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said it appeared to him there was a clear admission of a debt, and this before the execution of the deed of assignment by Farley. That being so, the provisions in the deed were as much for the benefit of the plaintiffs as for any other of the creditors of Farley. The cases cited on behalf of the defendant, which had relation to negotiable instruments only, were not applicable to the circumstances of the present case, which was one of criminal delinquency. As to the deed, Spittle himself was a large creditor, and he might have constituted himself, if he had so thought fit, sole cestui que trust, as well as trustee, if he had bought up the claims of all the other creditors of Farley, which it appears he had attempted to do. As to the deed not being executed by the plaintiffs, that was no fault of theirs. They offered to execute it, and that in writing, by a letter of the 10th June, but no reply was given to their application, and in that letter they offered to do anything that might be necessary on their part. Their claim, however, was repudiated, when it should have been admitted to rank as that of any other creditor under the deed. The only arguable point was, that the debt having been founded upon a criminal act, the plaintiffs had not proceeded and brought the criminal to conviction. Before Faulstich's case it was thought that a debt arising out of a felony was extinguished, but subsequent cases had rectified this. It was clearly a debt; but the right to recover it was suspended until conviction. The principle upon which this proceeded was, that it was against public policy that a compromise should be made of a criminal act by accepting a sum of money as an equivalent or extinguishment of the consequences of such act. Now a conviction could not be assured, but you must do all you can to obtain one. In the present case the plaintiffs had done everything which depended upon them to obtain it, and it was from no fault of theirs that conviction had not followed. Farley could not be now tried upon the old indictment until after the expiration of his penal sentence, which was four years. The judge must be supposed to have had before his eyes the depositions, and particularly the admission of the woman who had obtained the moneys under Farley's instructions and paid them over to him, in both cases; and it is admitted that he said distinctly, in passing sentence, that he thought the ends of justice would be satisfied by the sentence which he then proceeded to pass upon the prisoner. It would be quite farcical now to go through any mere form to revive the criminal proceedings. The ends of justice could in no way be more satisfied than they had already been.

Declared, the 550l. a debt due from Farley, and the plaintiffs entitled to be admitted to the benefit of the deed of assignment, with the necessary accounts, and to be paid their costs.

ROUTLEDGE (appellant) v. HISLOP (respondent).

A former decision between the same parties in a court of concurrent jurisdiction—Master and servant—A plaint for illegally discharging—A summons for wages.

A judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. When, therefore, a servant in husbandry, who had been discharged by her master before the proper time, sued him in the County Court for wrongfully discharging her without reasonable cause, whereupon judgment was given for the defendant, and she afterwards at the expiration of her quarter took out a summons before justices to recover her quarter's wages, the same question arising:

Held, that the decision in the County Court was a bar to such a proceeding.

This was a case stated by justices under the provisions of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon an order made by them upon the appellant for the payment of 5l. wages to the respondent as a servant in husbandry.

It appeared that the respondent Mary Hislop had been hired by the appellant William Routledge as a servant in husbandry on the 1st Aug. 1858, to serve from thence till Martinmas then next, for the sum of 5l. wages. She served him till the 7th Sept., when he discharged her. Upon this she entered a plaint in the Penrith County Court, and the cause was tried upon the amended particulars, which were as follows:—"The plaintiff claims 6l. 6s. 6d. for damages for the breach by the defendant of a contract of hiring made between him and the plaintiff on the 1st Aug. 1858, by discharging the plaintiff from the defendant's service before the determination of the said contract, without reasonable cause." Upon the trial, the judge, after hearing witnesses on both sides, gave judgment for the defendant. In May following the respondent took out a summons against the appellant, which recited that "information and complaint had been made upon oath, for that you, William Routledge, at Lammas last past, hired or employed one Mary Hislop to be your servant in husbandry from Lammas last past till Martinmas last past, for the wages of 5l. That she entered upon the said service and stayed until the 7th Sept. 1858, when she was discharged from the said service without just cause, but that she was always ready to complete her service, and that you refuse to pay her the wages justly due for the time she was hired, amounting to 5l." Upon the hearing of the summons the appellant's counsel contended that the justices had no jurisdiction, the same question between the parties having already been decided by the County Court, which was a court of competent jurisdiction. For the respondent it was contended that she had additional evidence to show that she was improperly discharged, and that the damage sought to be recovered in the County Court was for breaking her box as well as for being improperly discharged, and that the present summons was not for damages at all, but simply for wages. The justices overruled the objection, heard the case throughout, and decided in favour of the respondent, awarding her 5l. as for her wages.

Welsby appeared for the respondent.

Brett for the appellant.

The following cases and statutes were referred to:—The Duchess of Kingston's case, 2 Smith's L. C. 424; Dunn v. Murray, 9 B. & C. 780; Lord Bagot v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 235; 20 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1; 31 Geo. 2, c. 11; 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 5.

COCKBURN, C. J. now delivered judgment.—The question for our determination is, whether the decision of the justices was correct in point of law. We are of opinion that it was not. The matter for their consideration was, in truth, the same identical matter which had been decided by the judge of the County Court, namely, whether the discharge of the respondent by the appellant was wrongful and without just cause. The judge of the County Court had jurisdiction to hear and determine that question, and after he had given his judgment thereon it was not allowable to the respondent, by resorting to a different tribunal, to reopen the question and have it tried a second time. The rule of law is plainly stated by De Grey, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the judges in the H. of L. in The Duchess of Kingston's case, namely, "that the judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court." Applying that rule to the present case, it was open to the justices to inquire whether the County Court had jurisdiction, and whether the judge had determined that the discharge of the respondent was rightful, and not without due cause; but as soon as they had ascertained both those facts in the affirmative, they were bound by law not to allow the dispute as to the discharge being wrongful to be reopened, and to treat the decision of the County Court as conclusive between the parties. It was urged before us by counsel for the respondent that the form of the claim before the justices was different from that made in the County Court, and that the jurisdiction was different; but it was admitted, and indeed could not be denied successfully, that the question raised by the plaint and particulars in the one case and the complaint on oath in the other was the same, namely, whether the discharge of the respondent was without just cause? Varying the form of the claim, where the claim itself is the same, does not prevent the application of the rule of law to which reference has been made. As an illustration of this may be mentioned Slade's case, 4 Rep. 94 b, where it is said, "that a recovery or bar in assumpsit would be a good bar in an action of debt brought on the same contract." Other instances of the like kind will be found referred to in Com. Dig. tit. "Action," K 3, and in the argument and judgments in Buckland v. Johnson, 15 C. B. 145; 23 L. J. 204, C. P. Our judgment will therefore be for the appellant.

CLARK v. HAGUE.

Cruelty to animals—Cock-fighting—Aiding or assisting at—12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 3.

[Q. B.]

CLARK v. HAGUE.

[Q. B.]

The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 3, enacts that every person who shall keep or use or act in the management of any place for the purpose of fighting or baiting any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other animal, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5l. for every day, &c. And every person who shall in any manner encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting or baiting of any bull, &c., cock, or other animal as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding 5l. for every such offence:

Held, that aiding or assisting at the fighting or baiting must occur at a place kept or used for the purpose, to constitute an offence under the above section.

Case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions in and for the division of Loughborough, in the county of Leicester, on the 7th April 1859, before two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, an information in writing, preferred by Samuel Hague, of Loughborough, licensed victualler, hereinafter called the respondent, under sect. 3 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, was heard and determined, in which information it was alleged that the appellant Clark, on the 2nd March then last past, at the parish of Loughborough, did encourage, aid and assist at the fighting of two cocks then being fought in a certain place (to wit), a bowling-alley there in the occupation of the said appellant, then kept and used for the purpose of fighting cocks, contrary to the provisions of the said statute, intituled "An Act for the more effectual prevention of cruelty to animals." And upon such hearing the appellant was duly convicted, "for that he the said appellant, on the said 2nd day of March, at the parish of Loughborough aforesaid, did encourage, aid and assist at the fighting of two cocks then and there being fought, contrary to the provisions of the said Act, intituled "An Act for the more effectual prevention of cruelty to animals." And the said appellant, for his said offence, was adjudged to forfeit and pay the sum of 10s. to be paid and applied according to law, and also to pay to the said respondent the sum of 15s. for his costs in that behalf, and that if the said several sums should not be paid forthwith, the said appellant should be imprisoned in the House of Correction at Leicester, in the said county, for the space of fourteen days, unless the said several sums should be sooner paid.

And the said appellant being dissatisfied with such determination upon the hearing of the said information, as being erroneous in point of law, did, pursuant to sect. 2 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, apply in writing, within three days after the said determination, to the said justices to state and sign a case setting forth the facts, and the grounds of such our determination as aforesaid, for the opinion thereon of the Q. B.

At the hearing of the aforesaid information it was proved on the part of the informant, the respondent in this appeal, that on the 2nd March, at a bowling-alley belonging to the appellant's licensed victualling house at Loughborough aforesaid, two cocks were fought by the appellant and one John Taylor. We were of opinion on the evidence produced before us that the said appellant and the said John Taylor did resort to the said bowling-alley with the intention of causing the said cocks to fight together there, and that they did encourage, aid and assist at the fighting of the said two cocks at the said place, but it was not proved before us that in any other instances had cocks been fought there.

Upon the hearing of the said information it was contended on the part of the appellant that there was no offence committed within the intent and meaning of the 3rd section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, inasmuch as the said section only applied to encouraging, aiding, or assisting at the fighting of cocks in any place regularly kept or used for that purpose, as mentioned in the first clause of the said section, viz., a place so kept or used for the purpose of fighting any cocks, as to subject the keepers thereof to the penalty fixed by the said section, and that it did not appear that the said bowling-alley was a place so kept or used.

We, however, were of opinion that the words "every person who shall in any manner encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting or baiting of any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other animal as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding 5l.," contained in the concluding clause of the said 3rd section, applied to the encouraging, aiding, or assisting at the fighting of cocks in any place, and that the words "as aforesaid" meant "other animals as aforesaid," and not, as was contended by the appellant, "the place as aforesaid," namely, a place kept or used for the purpose of fighting any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other kind of animal, as mentioned in the first clause of the said section; and being also of opinion that the evidence given before us brought the case within the concluding clause of the said 3rd section, we convicted the said appellant of encouraging, aiding and assisting at the fighting of two cocks at Loughborough, considering, according to our construction of the Act as above stated, that the portion of the information which alleged that they were fought in a place kept or used for the purpose of fighting cocks was not a material allegation, and consequently might be treated as irrelevant matter.

The question of law arising on the above statement is, whether it is an offence within the intent and meaning of the 3rd section of the said statute, to encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting of cocks in any place, or only in a place so kept or used for the purpose of fighting cocks as to subject the keeper thereof to the penalty prescribed in the first clause of the said section.

Hayes, Serjt. for the appellant.—It is no offence under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 3, to fight cocks, unless in a place kept for that purpose. The object of the Legislature was to put down places kept for bull-baiting and cock-fighting, and it does not meet the case of fighting cocks on premises not kept or used for that purpose. [HILL, J.—If a person in his own poultry-yard encouraged two cocks to fight, would he be within the enactment?] No. Statutes referred to, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 19, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

BLACKBURN, J.—This is a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, for our opinion on a question of law, stated to be, whether it is an offence within the intent and meaning of the 3rd section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, to encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting of cocks in any place, or only in a place so kept or used for the purpose of fighting cocks as to subject the keeper thereof to the penalty prescribed by the first clause of the section. The 3rd section enacts, "that every person who shall keep or use, or act in the management of any place for the purpose of fighting or baiting any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other kind of animal, whether of domestic or wild nature, or shall permit or suffer any place to be so used, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 5l. for every day he shall so keep, or use, or act in the management of any such place, or permit or suffer any place to be used as aforesaid, provided always that every person who shall receive money for the admission of any other person to any place kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof." So far the meaning of the Act is plain; it creates a substantial offence, that of keeping or using a place for the purpose of baiting animals. The Act proceeds in the same section: "And every person who shall in any manner encourage, aid, or assist at the fighting or baiting of any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other animal as aforesaid, shall forfeit and pay a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* for every such offence." The Legislature here employs words apt, if intended to describe the accessories to the offence stated previously in the section, but not apt if intended to create a fresh offence. It cannot be supposed that the Legislature intended that those who were the principals in fighting the animals should be exempt from the penalty imposed on those who encourage, aid and assist therein; and treating it in this way, we are much confirmed by looking at the former Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59, s. 3, for which the present enactments are substituted, and which clearly only affected those who frequented such places. We think, therefore, the intention of the Legislature was, that the penalty should be imposed on those who were aiding or assisting at the fighting or baiting of any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other animal as aforesaid, that is, "at any place so kept or used for any of the purposes aforesaid."

Q. B.] WHEELER v. CHURCHWARDENS, &C., OF BRIMINGTON—HORLEY v. ROGERS.

Conviction quashed.

Saturday, April 21.

GEORGE D. WHEELER (appellant) v. THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF BRIMINGTON (respondents).

Appeal—20 & 21 Vict. c. 43—Appeal at special sessions against an assessment to a poor-rate—Non-application of the statute.

The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, does not apply to a decision of justices at a special sessions for hearing appeals against poor-rates upon an appeal against an assessment.

This was a case stated under the provisions of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

It appeared that the appellant was rated to the poor-rate of the parish of Brimington, Warwickshire, in respect of his occupation of the appropriate tithe rentcharge of that parish; and at a special sessions for hearing appeals against such poor-rate the appellant appealed and claimed several deductions, some of which were allowed and others disallowed, subject to the opinion of this court upon the present case, which the appellant required the justices to state. The question stated for the court was: "Is the appellant entitled to have his assessment reduced by the amount of the stipend paid by him to a curate under the circumstances stated in the case, or by any other proportionate part of such stipend?"

Phipson, who appeared for the respondents, took a preliminary objection that this was not a matter in respect of which a case could be stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2, for that the justices were sitting in special sessions under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 6, to hear appeals merely against inequality, unfairness, or incorrectness in valuation, their decision being binding and conclusive on the parties, unless within fourteen days, notice of appeal to the quarter sessions shall be given; that if it had been deemed desirable by the parties to have a case stated for the opinion of this court, it should have been stated under sect. 11 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, whereby the facts would have been stated in a manner more satisfactory: (Walker v. The Great Western Railway Company, 29 L. J. 107, M. C.) [CROMPTON, J.—The appeal to the justices in special sessions is only for the purpose of getting the amount properly settled. HILL, J.—Why will not the parties agree to state a case under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45? The respondents are willing to do so, they are dissatisfied by the way in which it is at present stated; under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, the case will be mutually settled by the litigating parties, whilst under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, it is settled by the justices only. [COCKBURN, C.J.—You say that this is in effect an appeal against a poor-rate, and that they cannot get rid of the assessment except by an appeal to the quarter sessions in the regular way.]

F. M. White, for the appellant, contended that the words of sect. 2 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, are sufficiently large to include this case, the words being "after the hearing and determination . . . of any information or complaint . . . either party to the proceeding . . . if dissatisfied with the said determination as being erroneous in point of law," &c., and that it is not because there is a power of appeal to the quarter sessions that a case may not be granted, for the statute contemplates cases where there is such a power, for the 14th section provides that appellants under the Act shall lose their right of appeal to the quarter sessions. [BLACKBURN, J.—Is this within the words of the Act, either as a complaint or an information?] It is a complaint.

COCKBURN, C.J.—We are of opinion that the statute does not apply to such a case. You had better assent to a case being stated, as proposed by the other side.

Appeal dismissed.

HORLEY (appellant) v. ROGERS (respondent).

Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83—Leaving wife chargeable to the parish—Apprehension of husband without a warrant.

By sect. 3 of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, the Vagrant Act, every person who is able to maintain his family refusing or neglecting to do so, whereby they become chargeable to the parish, is to be deemed an idle and disorderly person; and, by sect. 6, any person whatsoever may apprehend any person found offending against the Act, and deliver him to any constable to be taken before some justice of the peace; and in case any constable shall refuse to take any such offender into his custody, it shall be deemed a neglect of duty in such constable, for which he may be punished upon conviction.

This summary power of apprehension does not apply to the case of a man who is charged under the above section with having neglected to support his family, whereby they have become chargeable to the parish. Where, therefore, the wife of A. had become chargeable to the parish under circumstances, as it was alleged, that brought him within the meaning of an idle and disorderly person in the 3rd section of the above Act, and the relieving officer having met with him, gave him in charge to a constable, who, however, refused to take him into his custody, and an information having thereupon been laid against him for a neglect of duty:

Held, that the constable acted correctly, for that A. was not found offending within the meaning of the Act.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. It appeared that a summons had been taken out before Mr. Combe, one of the metropolitan police magistrates, by Horley (the appellant), charging Rogers (the respondent), who is one of the metropolitan police constables, with "unlawfully refusing to take into his custody from him, the said Horley, one James Whistler, who was found by him offending against the Act of Parliament made and passed in the 5th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the 4th," entitled "An Act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons, and rogues and vagabonds in that part of Great Britain called England," and was apprehended for so doing by Horley. The only witness examined was the complainant, who stated as follows:—"I am relieving officer of Christchurch district, in St. Saviour's Union. There was a person of the name of Charlotte Whistler in the workhouse receiving relief. On the 17th November last I went, from information I received, to a house, No. 121, Waterloo-road. I found the husband of the woman who was chargeable. He was removing goods. I believe he was residing at that house. I charged him with neglecting to support his wife, and I said I was the relieving officer of Christchurch. He said she was quite able to support herself, as she could earn ten shillings per week, and she had not been faithful. I said that was a question that must be settled by the magistrate. I sent for a constable, and defendant came and I told the constable I was relieving officer of St. Saviour's Union; that Whistler's wife was chargeable, and I wished him to convey Whistler to the police court. He at first said he would. Whistler said he didn't see why he should support her—she went with other men. The constable said to me, "I suppose you have a warrant." I said "I had not," and he said "his orders were, not to take such a charge," and he refused to take the man. I said, "You observe the man is removing away," and I asked the man for his address, and the man refused to give it to me. I have not seen the man since.

Cross-examined.—I had not taken any pains to ascertain before I sent for a constable whether the man was able to support his wife. I did not know the constable. When the constable refused to take the man I said, "I shall take your number, as I wish to have the point settled." Whistler did not say he would go to the station."

Re-examined.—The man admitted he earned 15s. per week, in the presence of the constable.

The magistrate was of opinion that the defendant was not bound to take Whistler into custody, inasmuch as he, Whistler, was not found offending against the before-mentioned statute, and he, therefore, dismissed the summons.

By sect. 3 of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, it is enacted, "that every person being able wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, by work or by other means, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, by which refusal or neglect, he or she, or any of his or her family, whom he or she may be legally bound to maintain shall have become chargeable to any parish, township or place . . . shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person." By sect. 4 it is enacted that every person running away and leaving his wife, &c., chargeable, or whereby she may become chargeable, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond.

By sect. 6 it is enacted that "it shall be lawful for any person whatsoever to apprehend any person who shall be found offending against this Act, and forthwith to take and convey him or her before some justice of the peace to be dealt with in such manner as is hereinbefore directed, or to deliver him or her to any constable or other peace officer of the place where he or she shall have been apprehended to be so taken and conveyed as aforesaid; and in case any constable or police officer shall refuse or wilfully neglect to take such offender into his custody, and to take and convey him or her before some justice of the peace, or shall not use his best endeavours to apprehend and convey before some justice of the peace any person that he shall find offending against this Act, it shall be deemed a neglect of duty in such constable or other peace officer, and he shall on conviction be punished in such manner as is hereinafter directed."

Collier, Q.C. (C. Smith with him) appeared for the appellant, and contended that the magistrate was wrong, for that Whistler was found committing an offence under the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, and ought to have been apprehended by Rogers the constable.

Ellis, for the respondent, was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is perfectly clear that the constable was not justified in apprehending Whistler without a warrant, since he had committed no offence in his presence, or in the presence of the party wishing to give him in charge. It was not the province of the constable to take upon himself to say whether or not any offence had been committed. It is not as where some offence under the Act had been committed under his own eye—in such a case he may apprehend summarily; but where, as in this case, the supposed offence is dependent upon a variety of particulars, upon which he could only be informed by others, and which, as in this case, might be justified upon the ground of the wife's infidelity, which is a question to be ascertained elsewhere, he is not justified in interfering in this summary way.

CROMPTON, HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred,
Appeal dismissed.

THE LUTON BOARD OF HEALTH v. DAVIS.

Public Health Act—Assessment to a rate—Enforcing rate—Case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

If a rate be good upon its face, the justices ought to enforce it: unless in the cases, first, of the party assessed not having any assessable property; or, secondly, some formalities not having been complied with.

Where, therefore, a party was assessed under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (Public Health Act), to a special district rate, and not having appealed against it, he was summoned for nonpayment, whereupon he alleged that the rate was bad, inasmuch as it was made to repay expenses to which it was not applicable:

Held, that this was not an objection to which the justices ought to have given effect; but that, the rate being good upon its face and unappealed against, they ought to have issued their warrant to levy it.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

It appeared that the Luton board of health having done certain paving works in a particular district, in order to pay for the same they borrowed money upon the special district rates, under the powers of sect. 107 of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (Public Health Act). They afterwards assessed and levied a special district rate for the purpose of repaying the money so borrowed. By sect. 86 it is enacted that whenever any expenses are incurred by the local board in making, enlarging, altering, arching over, covering, or inclosing any sewer, vested in them by the Act, "or in or about any other works, matters and things of a permanent nature, and executed or done for the benefit of any district, or part of a district, the said local board shall make and levy in respect of the premises situate in the district, or part of a district, for the benefit of which the expenses are incurred or to be incurred, a rate or rates, to be called special district rates, of such amount as will be sufficient to discharge the amount of such expenses and interest thereon, within such period not exceeding thirty years as the said local board shall in each case determine." The 87th section provides for the making of "general district rates" for defraying such expenses as are not otherwise expressly provided for. Sect. 135 gives a right of appeal against any rate; and sect. 136 gives the sessions a power to amend any rate, and provides "that, notwithstanding the quashing of any rate appealed against, all moneys charged by such rate shall, if the court before whom the appeal is heard think fit so to order, be levied as if no appeal had been made, and such moneys when paid shall be taken as payment on account of the next effective rate for the purposes in respect of which the quashed rate was made."

The defendant having been assessed to the special district rate, and not having paid it, or appealed against it, he was summoned to show cause why the rate should not be paid, and upon his appearance he objected that the rate was invalid, inasmuch as the work in respect of which it was made was not "of a permanent nature" within the meaning of the 86th section. The justices, being in doubt, declined to issue their warrant.

T. Jones now appeared for the defendant, and contended that paving was not a work of a permanent nature, and so not the subject of a special district rate, but should be paid for by a general district rate; that it is a condition precedent to the right to make such a rate that the works should be of a permanent nature within the section. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Is it now open to you to take this objection, not having appealed? The case of Reg. v. The Justices of Kingston, 27 L. J. 119, M. C., is against you.] The justices had no jurisdiction to enforce a bad rate.

Taylor, for the board of health, and Malcome, for the justices, were not called on.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The justices had no other course open to them than to issue their warrant for the recovery of the rate. The argument of Mr. Jones may or may not have been correct as to the rate itself, but upon that it is quite unnecessary to pronounce an opinion. If the work was of a permanent nature, then the rate in point of law and form is good. Now, before the justices there was nothing to show that the rate was not good. But Mr. Jones says that it was proposed to show that the works were not of a permanent nature. But if this were so, it would have been a good ground of appeal, and then, if he had succeeded, the 136th section may have been resorted to, whereby the sums collected under the rate may have been carried on to the next rate; but by the present proceeding this beneficial enactment is superseded. The objection was ground of appeal, and allowing the appeal to be made to this court in this way would be very inconvenient. The justices ought to have issued their warrant.

CROMPTON, J.—It is very important to adhere to the rule that, where a rate is good upon its face, the justices should enforce it. There are two exceptions only, as I believe, to this—first, where the party assessed has no assessable property in the locality; and, secondly, where certain forms and ceremonies have not been complied with. The justices at petty sessions are not a court of appeal against the validity of the rate.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. As there was no appeal against the rate, and it was correct in form, the justices ought to have enforced it.

Judgment, that the justices do issue their warrant.(a)

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF THE PARISH OF LIVERPOOL.

Poor-law—Order of maintenance of a lunatic—Service and direction of—Wrong direction—Amendment by the sessions—16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, ss. 113-116.

By a local Act of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 88, entitled "An Act for the administration of the laws relating to the poor in the parish of Liverpool," the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, together with twenty-one persons to be elected, are constituted a select vestry, and are to "be deemed to be a board of guardians for the relief and management of the poor." An order of adjudication of settlement, and for the expenses of maintenance, was made with reference to a lunatic pauper, and was directed, "To the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster." Against this the churchwardens and overseers appealed, and at the sessions objected that the order was wrongly directed, whereupon, upon the application of the respondents, the sessions amended the order, by striking out the direction as it then stood, and substituting "To the guardians of the poor of the said parish of Liverpool:" Held, first, that the order, as it originally stood, was misdirected; secondly, that the justices had no authority to make the amendment.

(a) This is an important case, for it helps to relieve justices from some of the difficulty in which they find themselves when an objection is taken to the validity of a rate. Clearly, they should not enforce the payment of an invalid rate. But are they first to determine its validity or otherwise? The Q. B. says "No." All that the justices have to do is to see that the rate is good upon the face of it, and if so, to enforce it. In this case it was objected that the rate was bad, inasmuch as it was made to pay past expenses. That was not a question for the justices then to decide. The rate was not informal, and there was no appeal against it, and therefore the justices should have issued their warrant to levy it. The rule is equally applicable to church-rates and all other rates.

This was a case stated by the quarter sessions of the North Riding of Yorkshire upon an appeal against an order adjudicating the settlement of a lunatic pauper, and ordering the overseers of the poor of the parish of Liverpool (his parish of settlement) to pay certain sums of money for his maintenance, &c. Upon the hearing the order was confirmed, subject to the present case.

It appeared that, by a local Act, passed in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 88, entitled, "An Act for the administration of the laws relating to the poor in the parish of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster," the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, with twenty-one persons to be elected, are constituted a select vestry by sect. 1, and "shall be deemed to be a board of guardians for the relief and management of the poor."

The order of adjudication was thus directed: "To the guardians of the York Union and the overseers of the poor of the township of Clifton, in the North Riding of Yorkshire; and to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, township, or place of Liverpool, in the county of Lancaster."

By sect. 113 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97 (Lunatic Asylums Act), it is enacted, that "if upon the trial of any appeal against any such order, or upon the return to a writ of certiorari, any objection be made on account of any omission or mistake in the drawing up of such order, and it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that sufficient grounds were in proof before the justices making such order to have authorised the drawing up thereof free from the said omission or mistake, it shall be lawful for the court, upon such terms as to payment of costs as it shall think fit, to amend such order, and to give judgment as if no such omission or mistake had existed." By sect. 116 it is enacted, that "the decision of the court upon the hearing of any appeal against any such order . . . upon the amending or refusing to amend the order as aforesaid . . . shall be final, and shall not be liable to be reviewed in any court by means of a writ of certiorari, or mandamus, or otherwise."

One of the grounds of appeal took the objection that the order was made upon the wrong parties, for that it should have been directed to the select vestry of the parish of Liverpool under the local Act, and not to the churchwardens and overseers.

At the trial this objection was insisted upon by the appellants. The sessions overruled the objection, subject to the opinion of this court. The respondents then applied to the sessions to amend the said order under the provisions of sect. 113, in case it should be necessary, by inserting in the said order instead of the words, "The churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Liverpool," the words, "The guardians of the poor of the said parish of Liverpool." This was objected to by the appellants. The sessions, however, made the amendment, subject likewise to the opinion of this court as to whether they had the power to make any such amendment.

Price and A. W. Simpson appeared for the respondents, and contended, first, that the order was properly directed, for that the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Liverpool were by the local Act a portion of the select vestry. [CROMPTON, J.—That objection was clearly a good one, and I think you very properly applied for an amendment. You must address yourself to that.] Secondly, this error was not only amendable under the Lunacy Act, but under the old law: (Rex v. Ambloch, 4 B. & C. 757; R. v. Bingley, 4

Q. B.] KNOWLES v. DICKINSON—Ex parte THE LATE CHURCHWARDENS, &c. OF FLETON. [Q. B.]

B. & Ad. 567; Reg. v. Hellingley, 28 L. J. 167, M.C.; Reg. v. Heaton, 28 L. J. 181, M.C.) [HILL, J.—You ought to have shown that the party cited is the proper party, but that is not so here.] It is the same locality that is affected. Thirdly, but however this may be, the decision of the sessions by virtue of sect. 116 is final, and not liable to be reviewed by any court. [CROMPTON, J.—That is where you amend the old order. Here you make a new order on other people. It is not a mistake or omission, but the order is wrong in substance. You are substituting one body for another.] If the justices at petty sessions had had the local Act before them, they would have made the order free from the mistake; there would have been sufficient grounds in proof before them to have enabled them to have made a correct order.

Pickering, Q.C., for the appellants, was not called upon.

CROMPTON, J. (a)—The first point is quite clear, that the order was made upon the wrong parties. There were several bodies in the parish, and the order was made on the wrong one. There was no very great hardship upon the respondents, for when they were informed of the error, it was very easy for them to have abandoned the order and have procured a fresh one. But they go to the sessions, and there they ask to amend. Now it seems to me that this is making a new order on different parties, and is not within the meaning of the Act. I do not see where we are to stop if new parties may be made in this way of persons who are not before the court. This is not an omission or mistake within the Act. My notion is, that this Act does not go so far as to authorise the justices to make a fresh order against other parties. This was not a mistake, for the order was in fact directed to the parties intended. I think the quarter sessions could not make such an amendment with reference to parties not before the court.

BLACKBURN, J.—The order is clearly bad. The 97th section points out upon whom the order should be made. This order should have been made upon the guardians under the local Act, and not upon the churchwardens and overseers. If the select vestry had been the body actually served with the order, but misnamed, that may have been different.

Order of sessions quashed. (b)

KNOWLES (appellant) v. DICKINSON (respondent.)
Coal Mines Inspection Act—18 & 19 Vict. c. 108—Constant ventilation—Meaning of—Conviction.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108 (Coal Mines Inspection) directs that certain rules shall be observed in every coal mine, rule 1 being that "an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced at all collieries to dilute and render harmless noxious gases to such an extent as that the working places of the pits and levels of such collieries shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working:" and sect. 11 imposes a penalty for a breach of the rules whilst any mine is being worked:

Held, that the mine is still being worked within the meaning of the Act on a Sunday, although nothing is being done there, and that it is a breach of the rule to discontinue the ventilation on that day.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction under sects. 4 and 11 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108 (Coal Mines Inspection Act), for not adequately ventilating a coal-mine.

It appeared that, upon the discontinuance of work on the Saturday afternoon, the ventilation was discontinued and remained so during the Sunday and until the engineer and others were sent down early on Monday morning to prepare the mine for the colliers, when, in consequence of the accumulation of foul air, an explosion took place and personal injury was sustained.

By sect. 4 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 108, the following rule is directed to be observed: "An adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced at all collieries to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent as that the working places of the pits and levels of such collieries shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working." Sect. 11 imposes a penalty for the breach of the rules in any mine that is being worked.

Manisty, Q.C. for the appellant, contended that the words in the rule, "an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced," must mean to apply to such time only as the pit is being worked, and will not include, as in the present case, the Sunday, when the pit is not being worked.

Welsby, for the respondent, was not called on.

The COURT were of opinion that the pit must be considered at work for the purposes of the Act even during the necessary intervals of night and Sunday, and that it could only be considered as not being worked when the use of the pit for working purposes is discontinued.

Conviction affirmed.

Monday, April 23.

Ex parte THE LATE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF FLETON.

Costs—Appeal—Poor-rate—New officers.

A poor-rate was appealed against, the rate having been made by churchwardens and overseers who had gone out of office. The new officers did not defend the rate, and the sessions quashed it, ordering the respondents to pay full costs. No effort was made to enforce payment of the costs till the day on which these officers quitted office, and they had not paid them previously:

Held, that these officers could not apply to set aside the order of sessions, on the ground that they apprehended the appellants might seek to make them individually liable for the costs.

Held, also, that the orders were good.

Field, on behalf of Core, Marriott and another, moved to set aside an order of quarter sessions of April 4, 1859, and an order of Crompton J., of 12th March 1860, under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, for the purpose of enforcing the order of sessions. It appeared that on the 22nd Sept. 1858 a poor-rate had been assessed upon the Eastern Counties Railway Company's station, against which they appealed. At the quarter sessions held in Jan. 1859, the overseers not being ready to try the appeal, got it adjourned till the 4th of April, and the court ordered them to pay full costs occasioned by the adjournment. On the 26th March, finding that they could not maintain the rate, they gave notice to the company that they should not defend it. On the 29th March, Core, Marriott and others were appointed churchwardens and overseers; and at the sessions on the 4th April, as no one appeared to support the rate, the sessions quashed it and made an order that the respondents should pay the company full costs. These costs were afterwards taxed, and also the costs of the adjournment, and amounted to 125*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*; and the order of sessions of April 4, when drawn up, specified 125*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* as the amount of costs ordered to be paid. In December a formal demand of payment of these costs was made on the new overseers, but no attempt was made to force payment till the 12th March last, a few days before the overseers went out of office, when Crompton, J.'s

(a) Cockburn, C.J. and Hill, J. had left the court.

(b) The power of the sessions to amend is, therefore, not infinite. Strictly it is only to do what the word means in its common use. The Court may amend an order; but not make a new one; and certainly to change the parties to whom the order is directed is not to cure a defect in an order, but to make a new one on different parties. This distinction will be easily remembered and readily applied in practice.

Q. B.] HORNSBY AND ANOTHER v. THE VESTRY OF THE PARISH OF ST. LUKE, CHELSEA. [Q. B.]

order was made to bring the order of sessions into this court to be enforced. By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 1, it is enacted, that if overseers contract debts on account of the parish within three months of the termination of their year of office, their immediate successors shall discharge the same. And sect. 2 enacts, that bills of costs for legal proceedings on account of the parish shall be payable out of the poor-rates within the space of one year next following the termination of the proceedings, but not afterwards, unless the Poor-law Commissioners shall so order. Here the appellants made no demand of payment until December last, and they ought to have been more prompt. Besides, the order of the 4th April improperly includes the costs of the adjournment ordered at the preceding January sessions. [HILL, J.—No; the order of the 4th April is for full costs of the appellants, and includes the interlocutory costs of January, which are the same as costs in the cause.] Here it is difficult to see how the parish can be made to pay these costs, as a retrospective rate would be necessary, and the individuals who went out of office in March 1860, fearing that the railway company are going to proceed against them personally, desire to have these orders quashed, which it is submitted are bad. Cases cited: K. v. Hyde, 21 L. J. 184, M. C.; R. v. Hellier, 1b. 3; and Reg. v. Huntley, 3 E. & B. [By the COURT.—There the objections appeared on the face of the orders, and were therefore open, although the orders could not be brought up by certiorari.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that no rule should be granted. The facts are these:—A poor-rate was made and appealed against by the railway company, and while the appeal was pending a change took place in the churchwardens and overseers, and the parties applying for this rule then came into office. After they came into office the appeal was determined and disposed of, and costs awarded to the appellants. The appeal being directed against the parish by the general name of the churchwardens and overseers, and the order of sessions and also the order of Crompton, J. being in the same form, they might be treated as operating against whomsoever might be the parish officers for the time being. It appears that there might be a difficulty in enforcing the orders against the present officers, because they would have to make a retrospective rate to provide the necessary funds; but to say that it could not be enforced against the existing officers because they took no part in the appeal, would lead to so much inconvenience that it could not be maintained for a moment. The present applicants knew of the orders being made, and they allowed them to stand without bringing them up by certiorari within six months, the period allowed for doing so. Application was made to them for payment, and they allowed the time for making a rate for that purpose to expire; and they have thereby put the appellants in this position, that there is no party against whom they can sue for payment. I therefore think we ought not to grant them this rule.

CROMPTON, J.—The order made by me at chambers was ex parte, and the parties are now in the same state as if they had come to oppose that order. The real question is, whether that order ought to have been made. Except in one point of view, the parish could not stir a step without getting rid of the order of sessions. For the purpose of this application, we must assume that the order of sessions was rightly made; but still, if it is bad on the face of it, or the appellants have been guilty of laches in enforcing it, this court would not interfere to enforce it. It appears that the order of sessions is right in itself, because the churchwardens and overseers were the proper parties before the court. We cannot go into any question about the taxation of the costs, whether they are right or not in point of amount. We must now treat this as a good order of sessions, and not impeached by certiorari or want of jurisdiction. If the appellants had stayed their hands upon it until the last day, when the churchwardens and overseers were going out of office, this might have been a grievance; but it rather seems that the laches are not on the side of the appellants, but of these parties, for when the order is made they do not pay, and then it became necessary to make an application to them for payment before they went out of office. I see, therefore, no ground for this rule.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I wish to be understood as not expressing any opinion that the railway company will be able to have any effective execution under the order in question. It appears that in Jan. 1859 the hearing of the appeal was adjourned to the following quarter sessions, on payment of full costs by the churchwardens and overseers, and that in March 1859 the individuals on whose behalf the present application is made came into office, and the appeal then came on and was determined, and judgment given in favour of the appellants, with full costs to be paid by the respondents; that is, by the churchwardens and overseers in their official capacity, and not as individuals. The railway company take no steps to enforce the order until the December following, when they serve it on the individuals now moving, and nothing further is done until the 12th March 1860, when the order of Crompton, J. was obtained, on a demand of payment and refusal by parties who have gone out of office. This application is to set aside the orders of quarter sessions and Crompton, J.; but the order of quarter sessions is a perfectly valid order, and even if there are any objections to it ultra what appear on the face of it, this court cannot go into them now; and the order of Crompton, J. is also a good order; therefore this application cannot be granted. The judgment of the quarter sessions is not against these parties quâ individuals, but as officers of the parish. If the railway company seeks to enforce the orders against them as individuals, this court may possibly say that they should have acted more promptly.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I confine my judgment to the same point as my brother Hill. I consider these orders unobjectionable. Mr. Field said that the last order for costs was partly made up of interlocutory costs; but that is an objection to the taxation, into which we cannot now enter. If this order is sought to be enforced against the wrong persons, they must apply at the proper time. As this is an application to set aside the orders, it cannot be granted.

Rule refused.

Contract to water streets, &c.—Construction.
Plaintiffs covenanted with defendants to furnish and supply, when required so to do by defendants' surveyor, horses, harness, carts and able-bodied men, at certain rates, from 25th March 1858 to 25th March 1859. Defendants covenanted with plaintiffs that they the plaintiffs observing their covenant, defendants would pay monthly to plaintiffs the sum due in accordance with the said rates for the works so ordered and done. The contract then contained provisions that in case plaintiffs did not supply men, horses, &c., the surveyor of the defendants might hire of other parties the number of men and horses not so supplied, or, if he should disapprove of any of the men, horses, &c., he might dismiss them at once, without notice, and provide other men, horses, &c., and charge the expense incurred thereby to plaintiffs, which should be deducted from any moneys due or to become due to them. And if the watering was not well and sufficiently done, the said surveyor might dismiss any of the men and horses and hire others, and the said plaintiffs should pay on demand the costs thereof to defendants. Plaintiffs then agreed not to assign or underlet the contract, and that, if they did not in all things well and truly perform the several matters therein contained, or if they should become bankrupt or insolvent, it should be lawful for the defendants at any time, on giving three days' notice, to declare the agreement null and void:

Held, that the contract contained an implied covenant on the part of the defendants to employ the plaintiffs and no others for the performance of the works therein referred to during the specified time.

This was an action brought by Thomas William Hornsby and Charles Hornsby against the vestry of the parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, for breach of contract. The declaration stated that by articles of agreement duly signed and sealed, after reciting that the plaintiffs had proposed to the defendants to supply men, horses and carts, if the case should be so, for the purpose of watering or cleansing the carriage-ways of, and for the cartage of materials to, the roads, streets and places within the said parish, for the time and upon the terms and conditions thereafter mentioned; and that the defendants had accepted such proposal, and that James Hunter Tuck and James Hornsby had consented to become sureties for the plaintiffs for the due performance by them of the several matters and things therein-after by them agreed to be done and performed; it was witnessed and agreed, and the plaintiffs, for themselves, their heirs, executors and administrators, did thereby covenant and agree with the defendants that they the plaintiffs, their executors and administrators, should and would furnish and supply, when required so to do by the surveyor of the defendants for the time being under his hand, good and well-conditioned horses, carts and men, upon the terms therein set out, from the 25th March 1858 to and including the 25th March 1859; and the defendants did thereby covenant and agree with and to the plaintiffs, their executors and administrators, that they the plaintiffs, their executors and administrators, duly executing and performing all and every the articles, covenants, agreements and things on their parts to be observed, done and performed according to the true intent and meaning of the said agreement, they the defendants would pay monthly to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, the sum which might be due in accordance with the thereinbefore-mentioned rates for the said watering and scavenging and cartage so ordered and done as aforesaid, and that in case the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should not supply the number of men and horses, or men, horses and carts, as the case might be, at the time and of the description in the said agreement agreed to be supplied with the necessary harness and tackle, it should be lawful for the surveyor of the defendants to hire of other parties the number of men and horses, or men, horses and carts, as the case might be, not so supplied by the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, or if the said surveyor should disapprove of any of the men, horses and carts so supplied by the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, he should be at liberty to dismiss the same at once, without being obliged to give notice to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, and provide other men, horses and carts, and charge the expense incurred thereby to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, which should be deducted from any moneys then due or thereafter to become due to the plaintiffs under the said contract or agreement, and that in case the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should use any of the water-carts belonging to the defendants in watering the roads of any other parish, or for any other purpose than watering the roads of the said parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should forfeit the sum of 5*l.* of lawful British money for every cart so used, and for every occasion on which the same should be so used, such sum or sums to be deducted from the contract moneys of the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, in manner aforesaid, and that if the watering of the said carriage-ways, or any part thereof, should not be well and sufficiently done, in manner and within the times of the said agreement mentioned for that purpose, it should be lawful for the said surveyor, from time to time, forthwith to dismiss all or any of the men and horses, as the case might be, of the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, and hire other horses and men to perform the watering left undone, or insufficiently or ineffectually done, or not done in manner and at or within the times mentioned in the said agreement for the doing thereof, and that the plaintiffs, their executors and administrators, should pay on demand the full amount of the costs and expenses thereby to be incurred, unto the defendants or their surveyor; if any complaint should be made at any meeting of the said vestry, of any misconduct, neglect or default of the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, in the performance of the said contract or agreement, they should and would forfeit and pay to the defendants such sum not exceeding 5*l.* of lawful British money, as in the judgment of the defendants should seem reasonable, and which the defendants should accordingly order for every such misconduct, neglect or default, which sum or sums, as all expenses to be incurred for watering left undone or insufficiently done, or not done in manner and at the times aforesaid, should and might be deducted and retained out of the moneys that might then be due, or thereafter become payable to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, in pursuance of the said agreement or otherwise; and that, if any water-carts or pumps belonging to the defendants should be damaged by the misconduct or negligence of any of the men, or by the unfitness of any of the horses supplied by the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, such damage might also be deducted and retained out of any moneys due or to become due to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators as aforesaid; and that the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should not assign or underlet the providing of men and horses, or of men, carts and horses, as the case might be, under or in pursuance of the said agreement; and that if the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, should do so, or should not in all things well and truly perform the several matters and things in the said agreement contained, on their parts to be done and performed, or if the plaintiffs should become bankrupt or publicly insolvent, it should be lawful for the defendants at any time thereafter, on giving three days' notice to the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, to declare the said agreement and every matter and thing therein contained null and void; and that the plaintiffs had by the said agreement, and did thereby bind themselves, their heirs, executors and administrators, jointly and severally to the defendants, for the due and full performance by the plaintiffs, their executors or administrators, of all and singular the covenants and agreements in the said agreements contained on their parts to be performed, fulfilled and kept according to the true intent and meaning therein expressed, in the sum of 100*l.* of lawful British money, to be paid to the defendants. Second breach;—and the plaintiffs further say, that during the period of the said contract they were ready and willing to provide and supply certain men, horses and carts, which were necessary and required for watering and cleansing the carriage-ways and for the cartage of materials mentioned in the said contract in that behalf during the period of the said contract, and which by their contract they were bound to have ready, whereof the defendants always had notice; but the defendants wholly neglected and refused to employ the plaintiffs to do the said watering and cleansing the said ways, or to carry the said materials, and wrongfully employed others to do so during the period of the said contract. And the plaintiffs further say, that after making the said deed, and after the 25th March 1858, and before the 25th March 1859, the defendants wrongfully put an end to the said agreement, and treated and declared the same to be as null and void, although the plaintiffs had not, nor had either of them, become bankrupt or publicly insolvent, without giving the plaintiffs three days' or any notice of their intention to do so, &c.

Demurrer and joinder in demurrer.

The cause had been tried, and a verdict for the plaintiffs returned, since which the defendants had obtained a rule nisi for a new trial. The rule and demurrer came on for argument together.

Lush, Q.C. (Keane with him), for the defendants, contended that they did not covenant to employ the plaintiffs to do such cartage, &c. as might be necessary and required, but only to pay them after certain rates if the case should be so that the defendants did employ them; that the defendants only covenanted to pay for what should be ordered and done, and not that something should be ordered and done to be paid for; that the proposal of the plaintiffs must be taken to be one for doing such cartage, &c. as and when the surveyor should, by writing under his hand, order of them, and that the defendants accepted a proposal in those terms and no other; that the contract is not one for the watering, &c. of the parish of Chelsea, but for supplying so many horses, or so many men and horses, or so many men, horses and carts as might be ordered in writing by an officer of the defendants, and for such length of time only as he might fix beforehand; that the contract is not that the plaintiffs should always have men and carts ready provided, but that they should provide on requisition, that is on reasonable notice, and that the terms of the contract show that such notice exceeds three days; that on the true construction of the deed the defendants are at liberty not to order cartage, &c. of the plaintiffs, or to revoke and annul an order employing them on giving three days' notice in certain cases: (Smith v. The Mayor of Harwich, 26 L. J. 257, C. B.; Pilkington v. Scott, 15 M. & W. 657; Emmens v. Elderton, 4 H. of L. Cas. 624; Aspden v. Austin, 5 Q. B. Rep. 671; Dunn v. Syles, Ib. 685, were cited.)

Geo. Francis (Murray with him), for the plaintiffs, contended that the defendants did covenant with the plaintiffs to employ them, and not to employ others to do the work mentioned in the second breach; that such a covenant was to be implied from the defendants' acceptance of the plaintiffs' proposal from the power reserved to them to employ others in the plaintiffs' default, and to put an end to the agreement; that the effect of the deed is, that the plaintiffs shall do all the watering, &c., required in the parish during the period mentioned in the agreement, and the defendants, by not employing them and employing others, prevented them from performing the contract. The contract is only for work done, and the defendants would not be bound under the contract to pay for work ordered but not executed, since the order might be rescinded. [They were stopped by the court.]

Cockburn, C.J.—I think Mr. Francis has hit the right nail on the head. I think there was an implied covenant on the part of the defendants to employ the plaintiffs and not others. Much of this contract would be unnecessary and superfluous if it had been contemplated to put an end to it at any time. It cannot be supposed that one side intended only to be bound without an equivalent binding on the other. The court will not by implication draw a conclusion which does not arise; but whenever you can see an intention of the parties that an implication should be drawn, we are then to draw such implication as may fairly arise. Then to apply that rule to the present case: defendants might, as and when they pleased, cease to employ plaintiffs on giving them three days' notice. That clearly shows that the contract meant something more than to bind the plaintiffs to find men, horses and carts, and leave it open to the defendants to employ them or not as they pleased. The defendants, by employing other parties, have not performed their contract, and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

Crompton, J.—I am of the same opinion. We must first see what is within the four corners of the contract. Mr. Lush says there are no express words to bind the defendants; but let us see: the plaintiffs are to furnish and supply, when required so to do by the surveyor of the said vestry for the time being under his hand, good and well-seasoned horses and scavengers' and other carts, and able-bodied men, at certain prices therein mentioned; then there are stringent covenants on the part of the plaintiffs to do the work, and the defendants covenant to pay plaintiffs monthly during the continuance of the contract. It was clearly contemplated then, it seems to me, that both parties should be equally bound; and further it is strong evidence that we find that, if the horses supplied were not sufficient and the defendants were dissatisfied with the men, they might employ others; that I think is conclusive. I think it means that the defendants may in such case employ other persons and charge the cost to the plaintiffs. But besides, there is an express power, if the work is not properly done, to set the contract aside on three days' notice; that would not be necessary if the defendants' construction is right. By saying parties could do certain things in certain events, it is saying they cannot do them in certain other events. I think, therefore, our judgment should be for the plaintiffs.

Judgment for plaintiffs on demurrer—Rule for new trial discharged.

FOLLIT (appellant) v. KOETZOW (respondent).

Bastardy—Affiliation order—Contract by mother to receive money in satisfaction—Right of child—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

A putative father, before the mother's applying for an affiliation order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, contracted with the mother to pay her 5s. per week for the support of the child, and paid two years' amount in advance, and afterwards contracted with her to pay, and did pay her 10l. to release him from all future payments:

Held, no bar to the mother's afterwards applying for, and the magistrate's making, an affiliation order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101:

Held, also, that the magistrate was bound to consider such contract along with all the other circumstances to guide his discretion in adjudicating.

This was an application made by the said Susannah Koetzow for an order under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, to compel the said George Follit to maintain a certain bastard child, of which the said Susannah Koetzow had been delivered on the 24th Jan. 1856, and of which child the said G. Follit was alleged by her to be the putative father.

Upon the hearing of a summons issued by me on the 28th May 1859, calling upon the said G. Follit to show cause why he should not be adjudged the putative father of such child, the complainant S. Koetzow swore that he was the father of such child, and that the defendant had made payments to her for the maintenance of such child within twelve months of its birth, which facts were admitted by the said defendant; and I thereupon made the usual order to pay 2s. 6d. per week for the maintenance of such child.

The defendant's attorney then contended that the defendant was not liable to maintain such bastard child, and that no order could be made for the maintenance of such child for the reason that the said defendant had previously to the 23rd Oct. last past, contracted to pay to the said complainant the sum of 5s. per week for the support of the said child, which contract he alleged he had performed up to the 23rd Oct. last past, and paid her in advance sufficient to maintain the said child for two years then to come, and also that the said defendant had on such last-mentioned day paid to the said complainant the further sum of 10l., in consideration of which the said complainant had, as he stated, agreed to release the said defendant from all future payments in respect of the said child. And I thereupon stated my opinion to be, that such contract was void as against public policy, and I could not entertain it; but I promised to consider the point, and give judgment on the 14th June last past.

On the said 14th June last past the defendant's attorney again appeared before me and urged that, even if such contract was not binding between the parties, yet I could exercise my own discretion in the matter, inasmuch as the Act of Parliament required me to decide "after considering all the circumstances of the case," and that I might be influenced by the fact that the father had paid more than double what I had power to order for the next four or five years. Being of opinion that I had no discretion in the matter, as the defendant was proved to be the father of the said child, I refused to alter my determination. I felt strengthened in that determination by it seeming to me clear that all the clauses relating to bastards in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, have but one object, namely, the maintenance and protection of the child; and therefore this contract to pay, or having paid, a sum of money to the mother, which may be expended or lost long before the child reaches the age when the weekly payments under a magistrate's order cease, is of no avail. The mother is only the guardian of the child, and, under circumstances, another guardian may be appointed. It seemed to me that the child and the parish to which it might become chargeable ought to be my first consideration, and that the payment of a sum of money to the mother was no answer to my assuming jurisdiction. I therefore made the order.

The question for the opinion of the court is, had I any discretion under the Act of Parliament to entertain the said contract attempted to be set up by the said defendant, as aforesaid, the paternity of the said child having been proved to my satisfaction.

P. BINGHAM.

Police-court, Marlborough-street, 8th Nov. 1859.

Coleridge for the respondent.—This contract is conceded to be valid, and not void on the ground of being against public policy: (Pope v. Sale, 7 Bing. 477.) Yet, though a valid contract, it is no bar to the magistrate proceeding to make an order on the putative father under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101: (Middleham v. Bellarby, 1 M. & S. 310. [COCKBURN, C.J.—It is put that, although under the old law the parish officers might intervene, yet, since the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, it is entirely optional with the mother to institute proceedings; and that this is a right given to her for her own protection.] The application to a magistrate for an order under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, might possibly deprive her of her rights under the contract; but it does not preclude her from applying to the magistrate: (Crowder v. Laverack, 8 Ex. 209; Jennings v. Brown, 9 M. & W. 496.) The mother cannot effectually release the putative father from the statutory obligation. The maintenance of the child is specifically referred to by the Legislature: (sects. 5, 7, 8.) No doubt the magistrate may take the agreement into his consideration, and see whether the bargain is an improvident one or a fair one. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Suppose, after an order is made for payment of a weekly sum, the mother takes a lump in satisfaction, or, in other words, discounts the weekly payments, and afterwards becomes lunatic, or dies, then it is clear from sect. 5 that the parish officers might intervene for the maintenance of the child.] Yes. The policy of the statute is to protect the parish and to provide for the maintenance of the child. [HILL, J.—The statute contemplates only one species of contract, viz., the mother's marrying another man, as putting an end to the liability of the putative father.]

Parry, Serjt. (Gibbins with him).—By the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71, the burden of maintaining a bastard child is entirely thrown on the mother; and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, imposes the liability of the putative father to this order for the relief of the mother only, and it is declared that relief to the child shall be deemed in law relief to the mother. The obligation of the father to this liability is a civil one, and he is admissible therefore as a witness on his own behalf. Therefore, on the maxim quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto, the mother is competent to make a contract to release the putative father from the obligation. [BLACKBURN, J.—If this is the mother's right, and the weekly payments are to be her money, why, under sect. 5, should they cease to be made to her when she is in prison?] It is only when the mother is under legal incapacity that the parish officers can interfere; but now the mother is making the application, and the question is, how is her right affected? Until an order is made, the mother is the mistress of the whole transaction, and cannot be compelled to apply, and if after an order she deserts her child, the money does not cease to be payable to her.

COCKBURN, C.J.—As regards the main question, I am of opinion that what took place between the mother and the putative father was not sufficient to oust the magistrate of his jurisdiction to make the order under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3. The statutable right given to the mother to apply for the order, and to the magistrate to make it, is of a peculiar character. No doubt it is entirely in the choice and discretion of the mother to apply for the order, and if she does not choose to apply, neither the parish officers nor any other person can compel her to do so. At first sight it would seem to be a personal right for her own benefit, but when the object of the Legislature and the language of the statute are looked at, that view cannot prevail. The intention of the Legislature was, that when once the application has been made and the order obtained, the weekly payment is to be not merely for the relief of the mother, but the main object was to be the maintenance of the child. The first section of the statute speaks of it as an order for the maintenance of the bastard child, showing that something was intended beyond the mere relief of the mother. The magistrate held that the agreement between the mother and the putative father was void; but he was going too far in determining that, for the question now to be decided is, whether the agreement takes from the magistrate his discretionary power, "having regard to all the circumstances of the case," to make an order on the putative father. Now, looking at the policy of the statute, I do not think that a bargain of this sort between the mother of a bastard child and the putative father ousts the magistrate of his discretionary power to make an order. If by such an agreement before making an application the mother can oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate, she may also by such an agreement annul the effect of such an order after it has been made. I am, however, of opinion that she cannot do so, and under all the circumstances I think the case should go back to the magistrate to exercise his discretionary power, taking this very material agreement into his consideration along with the other facts to guide him.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. First, was this agreement a bar to the magistrate's proceeding to make an order on the putative father? and secondly,

Q. B.]

MACKAY v. FORD—HODGES v. BENNETT.

had the magistrate a discretion to consider this agreement in making the order? There are no words in the statute that meet a case like this. The magistrate is to look at all the circumstances of the case. The order is to be for weekly payments by the putative father. He is to consider whether an arrangement of this kind would not defeat that. The case is put on the maxim quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto, and it was urged that this was given as relief to the mother, and she might release it. But is this a mere right of the mother, and is it not also for the benefit of the child? The words of the statute are for the support and maintenance of the child, and sect. 7 shows that this is clearly not the right of the mother merely, for after the mother's death or incapacity, as enacted, the payment is to be enforced by the board of guardians, and made to some person appointed by the justices. The object of the statute, then, might be defeated if the mother, for an insufficient, or what perhaps is worse, a lump sum, might contract with the putative father to oust the discretion of the magistrate under the statute. I therefore think that this agreement was no bar to the magistrate's proceeding, and that the case must go back to him.

HILL, J.—It is admitted that the agreement by which the mother agreed to take upon herself the maintenance of the child, and to forbear to apply for an order on the putative father, is a good agreement, but the question is, whether it takes away the power of the magistrate to make an order on him. It is necessary to see what power the magistrate has for this purpose. He has a power, first, absolutely and without any discretion to adjudicate the man to be the putative father; and secondly, to make an order, if he sees fit, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, on the putative father for the payment to the mother of a sum of money weekly, &c. The statute treats it as a matter entirely for the discretion of the magistrate under all the circumstances. Therefore, the utmost such an agreement as this can come to is, that it is to be treated as a strong fact for the consideration of the magistrate in adjudicating as to making an order. I think that there has been a miscarriage in this case, and that the agreement is a valid one, and that the magistrate ought to have taken it into his discretion and exercised his discretion upon all the circumstances as to making an order.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. There is no enactment that the mother may release or bar her right to apply for such an order. If the order had been for her sole exclusive benefit, I should have inclined to act on the maxim quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto, and to hold that, as she had released her right, she was precluded from applying for the order. But the order is not for her sole personal benefit at all: it is partly for her benefit and partly for the benefit of the child. Sect. 5 shows that it is not for her personal benefit, but as a means to enable her to maintain the child. It is called an order for the maintenance of the child. That being so, the mother ought not to be able to renounce the right given by the statute. The justices may in every case, if they see fit, proceed to make an order on the putative father. That is what the Legislature intended, and what it has said. The case must go back to be reconsidered.

Case remitted accordingly. (a)

(a) Hard and unjust as is this decision towards the father, it would be still more unjust towards the public had it been decided otherwise, for the mother might then have obtained a handsome bonus from the father, spent it, and afterwards thrown upon the parish the charge which she had received money to defray. The weekly payment effectually prevents this wrong being done.

MACKAY v. FORD.

Action of slander against an attorney for words used by him when acting as an advocate at a police-court in defence of a client summoned to attend here.

This was an action of slander, tried at Chester, before R. Gurney, Esq., commissioner. The defendant was an attorney, and the action was brought against him for words used by him when he attended before a police-court to appear as an advocate for certain persons who had been summoned there. The plaintiff had been employed by one Mr. Jones to sell wines, &c., for him upon commission, and that he was to hold the Albion vaults upon the terms agreed to. Jones afterwards assigned his goods and the premises to assignees for the benefit of his creditors; and men, then acting under the direction of the assignees, turned out Mackay by force, who then summoned them to the police-court for it, and the defendant appeared there on their behalf. In the course of his observations it was stated that he said, "Mackay claims certain rights under the agreement produced by Mr. Bridgman, and of which he has read an abstract; but I think we have sufficient reason to terminate the connection therein referred to. Mr. Jones has been plundered by this man to a frightful extent." A verdict was found for the plaintiff for 20*l.*, with leave reserved to the defendant to move to set it aside and enter it for defendant.

Giffard now moved accordingly pursuant to leave reserved, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence. No action will lie for words spoken under these circumstances. [MARTIN, B.—That depends upon whether they were properly relevant to the subject-matter of the inquiry. BRAMWELL, B.—It is not correct to call it misdirection where the learned judge at the trial gives leave to move for the point reserved to be determined by the court.] The learned commissioner should have determined the point himself, and not have left it to the jury. In Hodgson v. Scarlett, 1 B. & Ald. 232, it was decided that an action for defamation will not lie against a barrister for words spoken by him as counsel in a cause pertinent to the matter in issue.

HODGES (appellant) v. BENNETT (respondent).

Bastardy appeal — Summary proceedings before Justices Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43—Corroborative evidence.

The mother of an illegitimate child summoned the putative father before the justices, and proved, by her own oath, that he had, within twelve months from the birth of such child, paid money for its maintenance, and the justices made an order upon him to contribute to its support, without the evidence of the mother upon that point being corroborated at all; the putative father appealed:

Held, that the Act of Parliament, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, did not require the mother's evidence to be corroborated in this particular, and that the justices were right.

This was an appeal under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 (the Summary Proceedings before Justices Act), against the determination of justices in petty sessions, making an order of affiliation upon the appellant. The appellant had been summoned by the respondent as the alleged putative father of her illegitimate child, after the birth of such child, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101; the information in the first instance, it appeared, although in writing, was not upon oath. The summons was issued, and on its return the woman, by her testimony only, proved that the appellant had, within twelve months from the birth of her child, paid money for its maintenance, and the justices thereupon, without having her evidence corroborated in that particular, granted the order, her evidence having been corroborated in other respects, against which the reputed father appealed.

D. D. Keane for the appellant.—The first question is whether the information in the first instance should have been upon oath; but perhaps, after the decisions in R. v. Berry, 1 Bell's Cro. Cas. 46; and R. v. Simons, 168, that point will not be argued. The 2nd section enacts that any single woman who may be with child, or who may be delivered of a bastard child after the passing of the Act, or who has been delivered of a child within the period of six calendar months before the passing of this Act, may, either before the birth or at any time within twelve months from the birth of such child, or at any time thereafter, upon proof that the man alleged to be the father of such child has within the twelve months next after the birth of such child paid money for its maintenance, make application to any one justice of the peace acting for the petty sessional division of the county, or for the city, borough, or place in which she may reside, for a summons to be served on the man alleged by her to be the father of such child; and if such application be made before the birth of the child, the woman shall make a deposition upon oath stating who is the father of such child, and such justice of the peace shall thereupon issue his summons to the person alleged to be the father of such child to appear at a petty sessions to be held after the expiration of six days, at least, for the petty sessional division, city, borough, or other place in which such justice usually acts. Sect. 3. That after the birth of such bastard child, on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served on such person, or left at his last place of abode, six days at least before the petty session, the justices in such petty session shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce, and shall also hear any evidence tendered by or on behalf of the person alleged to be the father, and if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to the satisfaction of the said justices, they may adjudge the man to be the putative father of such bastard child, &c. The proof before the justices was, that the appellant had within the twelve months next after the birth of such child paid money for its maintenance. This was proved by the oath of the respondent alone, uncorroborated by any other testimony upon that point. The other question in the case was, whether this evidence of the mother should not have been corroborated in that respect by other testimony. The justices made an order upon the appellant, fixing the paternity of the child upon him, and ordered him to pay a sum of money weekly to the respondent for its maintenance upon that uncorroborated evidence of its mother the justices acted. If this were correct, the mother of an illegitimate child may, ten or twelve years after its birth, go before a justice and depose to a person having within twelve months after the birth of her child paid money for its maintenance, and upon her oath alone, uncorroborated by any other testimony, give the jurisdiction.

No one appeared on behalf of the respondent.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The only question for us to determine is, whether the respondent was bound to produce before the justices corroborative evidence of the payment of the money by the appellant, which she proved to their satisfaction that he had paid for the maintenance of her illegitimate child within twelve months next after the birth of such child. I think not; and that the justices were right.

MARTIN, B.—I also think the justices were clearly right. There is nothing whatever in the 2nd section to show that the woman is to have her evidence corroborated upon the subject of payment of money by the man towards the support of the child within twelve months of its birth, nor a word in the Act of Parliament about this confirmatory proof. [The learned Baron read the 3rd section.] The evidence of the mother to be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony, to the satisfaction of the said justices, has reference to what takes place at a much earlier period; when, where, and under what circumstances the parties have been seen, enabling the justices to determine as well as they can after hearing the evidence on both sides, on which side it is the truth lies. I see nothing in the Act that induces me to think corroborative evidence of the woman's testimony is required upon the point here raised.

BRAMWELL, B.—The first question raised in this case I understand to be given up; and we need not answer it. As to the second, the justices were right in not being obliged to require corroborative evidence of the mother's testimony as to the payment of money by the alleged putative father within twelve months of the birth of the child, under the Act of Parliament.

WILDE, B. expressed a similar opinion.

Appeal dismissed with costs. (a)

BIGNOLD v. CLARKE.

Distress—Damage feasant—Duty of distrainer to provide a proper pound.

A distrainer is bound to provide a proper pound; although he place the distress in the manor pound, he is liable to any injury to it, unless the pound was in a proper condition when he placed it there.

This was an action for abusing a distress. The declaration alleged that the distress was placed in a pound which was improper and insufficient, as the defendant well knew. The case was tried at Westminster during the sittings, after last term, before Martin, B.; it appeared that eighty sheep had been distrained damage feasant and placed in the manor pound of the manor of Twickenham. A number of the sheep afterwards died. The learned judge left the question to the jury, whether or not the pound was improper and insufficient? The jury found in the affirmative, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

Chambers, Q.C. now moved for a rule to set aside the verdict as against the evidence, and also on the ground of misdirection. The learned judge ought to have told the jury that the distrainer was not responsible for the state of the pound; he had placed the distress in the manor pound, which was the proper place. The declaration in this case contains an allegation that the defendant well knew the pound was improper and insufficient; there was no proof of any such knowledge, and the case is therefore distinguishable from Wild v. Sheer, 8 Ad. & Ell. 547; (Doctor & Student, Co. Litt. 47; Bacon's Abr. tit. "Distress.")

POLLOCK, C.B.—I think there ought to be no rule. The learned judge was quite right in his direction to the jury; the distrainer is bound, at his peril, to provide a fit and proper pound. If the manor pound is not convenient and sufficient he must find another.

MARTIN, BRAMWELL and WILDE, BB. concurred.

Rule refused.

(a) The corroboration required is of some material particular in the proof of connection—such as being seen together in suspicious places, communications in the nature of confessions and such like. Payment of money is made substantial evidence of the paternity by express words, without reference to corroboration, and the corroboration required by the Act is limited to the general proof thereby required, and does not extend to the special evidence.

Scotland.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY.

BANNATYNE v. MACLULLICH AND FRASER.

Night Poaching Act—Complaint.

The complainer, a shoemaker at Rothesay, was charged, in a complaint at the instance of the defenders, who are procurators-fiscal there, with an offence under the Night Poaching Act. Their complaint averred that Bannatyne and another person did—(1) "unlawfully enter with one or more nets, engines, or other instruments for the purpose of taking or destroying game, in or upon one or more outlets, gates of, or upon the public road," in a locality there described, near a certain field, "and did then and there kill or destroy a hare; (2) or otherwise, time above libelled, unlawfully enter in or upon the said field above libelled, with one or more nets, engines, or other instruments, for the purpose of taking or destroying game." The justices convicted Bannatyne of unlawfully entering, &c., and of "unlawfully killing" the hare, and also of the second offence; and sentenced him to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. The suspender pleaded that the complaint was informal, in respect that the essential word "unlawfully" was applied not to the killing of the hare, but to the entering upon the public road, which was not an unlawful act, and also because the suspender was convicted of both offences cumulatively, which were only charge^d as alternative in the complaint. Lord Ardmillan thought there were two objections conclusive against this conviction. He was not for giving effect to the objection as to the date of the warrant, as no objection had been taken at the time. But the first fatal objection to the regularity of the procedure was, that the complainer had applied the word "unlawfully" to entering upon the public road, which could never be unlawful, and had omitted it as to the killing of the hare, which might be an unlawful act. The justices had inserted the word "unlawfully" to apply to the killing of the hare, but neither in reason nor in grammar could that be done. The second objection was, that the charge was laid alternatively, and the finding of guilty was cumulative. He held it as settled that where a public prosecutor says in his complaint—"You did one thing or you did another thing," that the finding that the one thing was proved excluded the finding of the other proved; and the justices had no more right to convict of both these alternative offences than they would have had to convict of an offence which was not charged at all. The other judges concurred, the Lord Justice-Clerk observing that it was difficult to say whether the complaint or the conviction was the most objectionable. The complaint was drawn in a most slovenly manner, and it showed that the person who wrote it had not been at the pains to read and understand the statute. The conviction was disconform to the charge, and showed an attempt on the part of the justices to amend in the conviction a plainly irrelevant complaint, and also so great an ignorance of the usual forms of criminal courts as to give a cumulative finding of guilty on an alternative charge.

BIRREL v. JONES.

Day Poaching Act—Apprehension.

The complainer was convicted, under the 6th section of the Day Poaching Act, by the Annan Justices, of assaulting John Affleck, gamekeeper to Colonel William Graham of Mossknowe, when trespassing in pursuit of game, on Dornoch Moss, he having been convicted immediately before of trespassing in pursuit of game on the 1st section of that Act. He contended that, to make a relevant charge under the statute, it was necessary to state that he was in the pursuit of game without the leave of the proprietor; and also that the gamekeeper had no right to apprehend any one unless he had required the person forthwith to quit the land, and also to tell his name. The Lord Justice-Clerk said that the objection that it was not stated that the complainer was trespassing without leave was answered by this, that a trespass can't take place at all unless without leave. The other objection, that this complainer was not asked his name, surname and place of abode, would land the construction of the statute in inextricable absurdity. The true rule of construction evidently was applicando singula singulis. Whoever refuses to tell his name when required is an offender, and he who refuses to quit the land when required to do so is an offender also. Going through the gamekeeper's catechism in the manner proposed, would be both difficult and absurd. Before the gamekeeper has got through half his questions, the man would of course run off. In its first and rough form the conviction was defective, and might not have stood; but it was corrected in the second form, and he was far from holding that justices, if they found a conviction bad before anything was done on it, might not put it in the fire and have one drawn in correct form. The other objection, that one justice only signed, was one on which he had as yet no opinion, and there was a need for further argument and for information concerning the statutory history of the constitution of J. P. Courts. The further consideration of the case was accordingly postponed.

SCANNELL v. FRENCH.

Summary Jurisdiction Act, s. 9—Removal of obstruction to the flow of water off a public road—Construction.

The owner of land contiguous to a public road stopped up a gap in the ditch separating his land from the road through which gap the water off the public road had been accustomed to flow:

Held, that this was not an obstruction which he could be called upon to remove under the 9th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92.

This was an appeal brought under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, against an order made by the magistrates of the county of Cork, and upon a case stated for the opinion of the court. This case depended upon the construction of the 9th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92. It appeared from the evidence given before the magistrates at the petty sessions of Douglass, in the county of Cork, that the land of the appellant Scannell bordered on the public road leading from Cork to Kinsale; that the portion of this road adjoining the appellant's land was subject to be overflowed in rainy weather, and that, previously to the obstruction complained of, the water so accumulated flowed off the road through a gap in the ditch separating the road from the appellant's land, and over his ground; and that this gap was used by the appellant for taking manure into his land. In Oct. 1859, the appellant finding his land was injured by the overflow of the water, stopped up the gap, and so caused the obstruction complained of. On 19th Nov. the respondent French, the contractor for the repair of that part of the road where the obstruction took place, served a notice upon the appellant under the 9th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, requiring him to remove "any matter or thing obstructing or preventing, or in any way whatsoever causing the obstruction or prevention of the full, free and uninterrupted course or flow of the water running in, upon, or through and over his lands and premises." The obstruction not having been removed, pursuant to this notice, the appellant was summoned to appear before the justices of the peace, at the petty sessions of Douglas, and show cause why such obstruction was not removed; and witnesses having deposed to the facts more detailed, the magistrates, on the 15th Dec. 1859, made an order requiring the appellant "to remove the obstruction to the passage of the water off the high road complained of, within ten days, as required by the notice of the 19th Nov., according to sect. 9 of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92." Against this order the present appeal was brought; and the case stated by the magistrates under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2, was as follows:—"We ground our decision on the evidence, as taken on the hearing of the case, a copy of which is herewith forwarded; that the defendant John Scannell's house and garden adjoins the road at the lowest part of it; that the water flooding the road opposite his house always ran through the ditch into his land, and through his ground into Mrs. Landers'; that there is no other way for taking it off the road, when flooded in rainy seasons, and at such times the road must remain flooded if the passage into defendant's land is not left open as heretofore; and our decision was grounded on the jurisdiction given to the magistrates under the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, s. 9, and was unanimously signed by six magistrates."

Sullivan, Q.C. and H. Jellett appeared for the appellant.

H. Jellett.—This order was made under the 9th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92. The 1st clause of the 9th section is as follows:—"Any owner or occupier of any lands contiguous to any public road, who shall omit to scour any ditch or drain leading from any such road, so as to allow the water to pass away, within ten days after notice shall have been given to him so to do by the county surveyor, or by the contractor for the repair of such road, or who shall suffer the passage of the water to be obstructed by making or leaving any way or passage from any road into the adjoining lands, or into his house, without a sufficient pipe, sewer, or gullet underneath it, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty shillings." There are two classes of offences for which the magistrates have jurisdiction to impose a penalty: the first for omitting to scour a ditch or drain; and the second for suffering the passage of the water to be obstructed, by making or leaving any way or passage from any road into the adjoining lands, without a sufficient pipe underneath it. At the investigation before the magistrates, the witnesses agreed that there was no ditch or drain from the road through the appellant's ground; and consequently this case cannot come under the first class; nor can it come under the second class, as that branch of the class does not contemplate offences of this nature at all. [O'BRIEN, J.—You contend that you are entitled to stop the flow of the water from the ditch of the road into your land, except in cases where there is a ditch or drain leading from the ditch of the road through your land, but not to prevent the flow of the water parallel to the road?] Certainly; the notice and the summons being for the removal of an obstruction, must point to an obstruction under the second branch of the clause; and this does not fall under the first of obstructions contemplated by that part of the section. [HAYES, J.—The word "underneath" in that section confirms your view of the case.]

W. O'Brien for the respondent.—This Act should receive a liberal construction; and in interpreting this section we should adopt a rule of interpretation which has been followed from the time of Lord Coke—that an Act of Parliament is to be construed so as to advance the remedy, and not to defeat the object of the Act. [HAYES, J.—Is not this a penal statute, which must be construed strictly?] We are now dealing with the Act in its remedial, and not in its penal character. The notice and the order of the magistrate, taken together, comprise every offence falling within the 9th section. Any objection to the formality of the proceedings is cured by the 24th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act.

Sullivan, Q.C. was not called on to reply.

By the COURT.—The 9th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act is specific as to the nature of the obstruction which an owner of land contiguous to a public road can be called on to remove. We consider that the obstruction complained of in this case does not fall under the class of obstructions specified by that section. We are therefore of opinion that the order of the magistrates below should be reversed.

REG. v. SAMUEL RIALI AND WILLIAM H. RIALI, AND re JOHN FETHERSTON (a Lunatic.)

Committal of a lunatic—Habeas corpus and certiorari by the father of a lunatic—Warrant of justices, and order of Lord Lieutenant—Delay—Costs—1 & 2 Vict. c. 27, s. 1; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107, s. 10. To warrant the committal of a person as a dangerous lunatic, by justices of the peace, the informations must strictly comply with the provisions of stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107, s. 10.

Where an application is made for a certiorari, as auxiliary to a habeas corpus, to quash the proceedings under which a party is in custody, the certiorari will not be granted unless it appear necessary for the purposes of the habeas corpus. The proper remedy is by the latter writ, upon the return to which all the proceedings will appear before the court.

The father of a person committed to gaol as a dangerous lunatic, by justices of the peace, has no locus standi in this court, so as to entitle him to apply for a certiorari to quash the proceedings by the justices, unless it be applied for as auxiliary to a habeas corpus, and it appear to be necessary for the purposes of the latter writ.

To entitle a party to a writ of certiorari, it must appear that due diligence has been used in bringing the matter before the court. This court will make delay a ground of refusal.

Nov. 2.—Harris, Q.C. obtained a conditional order for a writ of certiorari calling on Samuel Riall and William H. Riall, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Tipperary, to show cause why "all and singular the informations, depositions, warrants, committals, orders, and all other matters and things taken or made before said justices, of and concerning one John Fetherston, an alleged lunatic, on or about the 14th day of January 1859," should not be removed into this court for the purpose of being quashed, "on the grounds that the committal signed by the said justices, on the 14th January 1859, was not warranted by any information sworn before the said justices, as required by the statute in that case made and provided." On the same day another conditional order for a writ of habeas corpus was obtained, directed to the governor of the Clonmel district lunatic asylum, "commanding him to have before this honourable court the body of John Fetherston, together with the day and cause of his detention," &c., unless cause shown.

It appeared that on the 14th Jan. 1859 John Fetherston had been committed to Clonmel gaol, as a dangerous lunatic, by Samuel Riall and William H. Riall, two of the justices of the peace for the county of Tipperary, upon informations sworn by Ralph Bernal Osborne and Patrick Ryan; and that by a warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, dated the 14th March

[IRELAND.]

REG. v. SAMUEL RLAIL, &c.

[IRELAND.]

1859, the said John Fetherston had been transferred to the Clonmel district lunatic asylum, where he still remained; and it was upon the insufficiency of the informations to warrant the committal that the present application for a writ of certiorari and for a writ of habeas corpus was grounded. The informations of Ralph Bernal Osborne and Patrick Ryan were as follows:—

"The information of Ralph Osborne, of Newtown—who saith, on his oath, that the complainant was walking in his demesne at Newtown, in the county of Tipperary, with Sir John Keane, Bart., and others, when the defendant John Fetherston, on being asked to leave the grounds he was trespassing on, refused, saying, at the same time, he was the lawful possessor; on assistance arriving, which I sent for, he again refused to leave the ground, and on Patrick Ryan and the gardener arresting him, he violently assaulted both, and kicked Ryan in the mouth; he also threatened complainant. And said informant binds himself to attend," &c.

"The information of Patrick Ryan, of Derinlain, in the county of Waterford, employed by Ralph Osborne, Esq., at Newtown, in the county of Waterford, who, being sworn, saith, that on this day, the 14th Jan. 1859, he was at his employment at Newtown, above mentioned, when Mr. Osborne called upon him to remove a man named John Fetherston, who had come into said grounds at Newtown, and would not leave the premises when called upon so to do; that the said Fetherston refused to leave, and informant then quietly caught hold of him, to remove him; that the said Fetherston then assaulted informant by striking him with the heel of his shoe in the mouth."

The committal warrant directed by the magistrates to the governor of Clonmel gaol, was in these terms:

"Whereas Ralph Osborne has sworn informations before us, stating facts from which it appears that John Fetherston has been discovered and apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, and a purpose of committing an indictable crime—that is to say, on this day he went to Newtown, in the county of Tipperary, the property of said Ralph Osborne, and claimed the same as his own, and threatened to injure the said Ralph Osborne and the gardener, and did assault Patrick Ryan and the gardener; and whereas we have called to our assistance John M. Dowsley, Esq., being a legally qualified surgeon and M.D., and on view and examination of the said John Fetherston, and on the informations of the said Ralph Osborne and Patrick Ryan, we are satisfied that the said John Fetherston is a dangerous lunatic."

The affidavit of George Fetherston, the father of John Fetherston, on which the two conditional orders were obtained, after setting forth the facts above detailed, stated that in the month of June 1857 his son John Fetherston received a severe injury in the head, and that shortly afterwards he appeared to labour under a delusion that the property of the said Ralph Osborne was forfeited by him; and that his said son sometimes walked about the demesne of the said Osborne, which he was permitted to do until twelve months ago, when he was stopped by the gardener of the said Ralph Osborne; that ten days afterwards, viz., in the month of Oct. 1858, he was arrested in deponent's house, and brought before the justices on a charge of being a dangerous lunatic; that at the hearing of the said case, John M. Dowsley, surgeon and M.D., was examined, and stated that deponent's son was quite harmless, though he laboured under a delusion, which time would wear away, and that imprisonment would have a dangerous effect; and that on the evidence of the said John M. Dowsley the complaint was dismissed. The affidavit further stated that the deponent, ten days after the committal of his son, employed a solicitor to take the necessary proceedings to have the matter brought forward at the next spring assizes, but, by the neglect of the solicitor, no proceedings were taken; and that in the month of April following deponent employed another solicitor, but from the expensive mode of the proceedings which he was adopting, deponent apprehended his inability to bear the expense of the same, and was obliged to discontinue those proceedings; that deponent forwarded two memorials to the Lord Lieutenant, and having received a reply to the latter which was unsatisfactory, deponent saw the necessity of taking proceedings in the Superior Courts; that from deponent's close application to his business he was unable to take these proceedings sooner, and that he has done everything in his power to have the necessary steps taken with as little delay as possible. The affidavit also contained imputations against Ralph Osborne and the governor of the lunatic asylum, which were refuted in their affidavits.

Jan. 23.—Brewster, Q.C., Lane, Q.C., and Ch. Shaw, showed cause, and cited Rex v. Gourlay, 7 E. & Cr. 669; Rex v. Clarke, 3 Burr. 1363; Grady and Scotland's Practice of Queen's Bench, 151; Rex v. Bowen, 5 T. R. 156; Reg. v. The Commissioners of Sewers for the Tower Hamlets, 7 Jur. 1169.

Whiteside, Q.C. and Harris, Q.C., in support of the motion, cited Shelford on Lunacy, 679; Ex parte Fell, 3 Dowl. & Lownd. 373; Reg. v. Dunn, 12 Ad. & Ell. 599; Rex v. Turlington, 2 Burr. 1115; Ex parte Carpenter, Sm. & Bat. 81; and the case of the Hottentot Venus, 13 East, 195.

Lawson, Q.C. and Barry, Q.C., for the Crown, cited Rex v. Turlington, 2 Burr. 1115; and Ex parte Carpenter, Sm. & Bat. 81.

Brewster, Q.C.—The statutes authorising the committal of lunatics by justices of the peace, are stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 27, and stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107. The first section of the former statute enacts, that "if any person shall be discovered or apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, such person would be liable to be indicted, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace before whom such person shall be brought to call to their assistance any legally qualified physician, surgeon, or apothecary, and if upon view and examination of the said person so apprehended, or from other proof, the said justices shall be satisfied that such person is a dangerous lunatic or a dangerous idiot," they are empowered to commit him. The stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107, s. 10, after reciting the 1st section of the former Act, provides, "That it shall not be lawful for the said justices to commit such person to gaol, unless information on the oath of one or two credible witness or witnesses shall have been made before the said justices, stating facts from which it shall appear that such person was discovered and apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind and a purpose of committing some crime for which, if committed, such person would be liable to be indicted, and that such person is a dangerous lunatic or a dangerous idiot; and such justices shall, if they shall so think fit, bind the person or persons so making such information, to appear at the next commission or assizes, or general or quarter sessions of the peace, whichever may first occur, which information shall be returned to the clerk of the peace or crown." This section does not repeal the first section of the former statute, but is supplemental to it. Everything that could be done by the justices under the former statute, can be still done under the latter; but there is this additional provision, that the evidence before the justices must be by information—and further, the informations must fulfil three conditions: they must state facts from which it shall appear that the person was apprehended under circumstances denoting, first, a derangement of mind; secondly, that he had a purpose of commit-

[IRELAND.]

REG. v. SAMUEL RIALI, &c.

ting an indictable crime; and thirdly, that he was a dangerous lunatic. The words "under circumstances denoting" apply to these three conditions equally. This section was purposely framed from a consideration of the peculiar nature of the investigation. These informations satisfy all the conditions required. The facts stated show that John Fetherston was apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind. This was not the first time that John Fetherston had been brought before the magistrates, and therefore they did not consider it necessary that the informations should be so full on this point as if it had come before them for the first time; and further, the affidavit of George Fetherston, the present applicant, admits that his son had been for some time labouring under a derangement of mind. Then the informations contain a statement of the commission of an assault for which John Fetherston would have been liable to be indicted. This is a stronger statement than that he had a purpose of committing an indictable crime: a fortiori, therefore, the informations are sufficient on this point. If, then, the facts stated show that John Fetherston was apprehended under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, and that he had a purpose of committing an indictable crime, the necessary inference from the facts must be, that he was a dangerous lunatic. The duty imposed upon the justices, of calling in to their assistance a legally qualified physician, is not taken away by the latter statute; they have availed themselves of his assistance in this case. This court is not so strict in the case of committals under these statutes as in the case of committals under convictions. In the case of Rex v. Gurlay, which was a commitment under stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94, an English Act, similar in its provisions to stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 27, Lord Tenterden says: "This is not a commitment in execution, but is a commitment for safe custody, in order to secure the party, and prevent mischief to his Majesty's subjects. That being the object, I think the warrant ought not to receive the same strict construction as a warrant in execution. If we required the same certainty in this as in other cases, we might render the provisions of the Act nugatory." With respect to the application for a writ of habeas corpus, the case of Rex v. Clarke is an authority that, in a case where not only the life and safety of the unfortunate individual himself is concerned, but also the lives and safety of all her Majesty's subjects, this court will not be astute in giving a strict interpretation to these statutes, so as to deprive the public of the security of their lives and persons.

Whiteside, Q.C.—Under stat. 1 Vict. c. 27, the justices were empowered to commit upon view and examination; they might call in to their assistance a medical man, who was to act in the capacity of an assessor and was not required to give a certificate, and no informations were necessary. With regard to the state of the law under that statute, and the necessity for an alteration, it may be mentioned that the commissioners for the inspection of lunatic asylums in their 23rd report use the strong expression that at that time lunatics were "manufactured." The provisions of the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107, s. 10, are negative. After reciting the 1st section of the former Act, it proceeds to enact that it shall not be lawful for the justices to commit unless upon information on oath. The informations must comply strictly with the provisions of this statute, and state facts in the face of them, from which it shall appear that the person was arrested under circumstances denoting a derangement of mind, a purpose of committing an indictable crime, and that he was a dangerous lunatic. Do they state circumstances that denote that John Fetherston was deranged in mind? The only allegation that at all approaches such a statement is, that John Fetherston, upon being asked to leave the grounds of Mr. Osborne, said that he was the lawful possessor. This is no circumstance necessarily denoting a derangement of mind: many persons in as unlikely a position as John Fetherston have laid claim to estates as extensive as those of Mr. Osborne, and succeeded in establishing their claims. Again, do the informations state a purpose of committing an indictable offence? The circumstance denoting this purpose, as stated in the informations, is, that John Fetherston, upon being arrested by Patrick Ryan and the gardener, kicked Ryan in the mouth. Is an assault of such a nature as this, arising in an accidental scuffle, to be construed into a purpose of committing an indictable offence? It has been argued that the statement of the commission of a crime is even stronger than of the purpose of committing a crime. The object of the statute is not to commit to prison persons who may have been guilty of assaults similar to this; but to protect the Queen's subjects from persons going about with a purpose of committing indictable offences. In the case of Rex v. Gurlay, cited by Mr. Brewster, Lord Tenterden gives two examples of a purpose such as is contemplated by this section. "The case of a man in high excitement running through a street with a knife in his hand intending to murder any person he may meet with, or with a firebrand in his hand intending to set fire to any house." It has been contended that, if the informations satisfy the two first conditions, they must necessarily satisfy the third; that if the circumstances denoted a derangement of mind and a purpose of committing an indictable crime, they must also denote that the person was a dangerous lunatic. The Act, however, is express that the informations must satisfy the third condition; it cannot be supplied by inference. [LEFROY, C.J.—The affidavit of George Fetherston admits the lunacy of his son, we are called upon to supply the deficiency of the informations from this affidavit. Can we not do so?] The defect of the informations cannot be supplied from anything outside them; they must stand or fall by what is on the face of them: (Reg. v. Dunne.) The case of Rex v. Gurlay is no authority in the present case. That case was decided by Lord Tenterden on a statute similar to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 27. There is no doubt that under that statute this committal would have been warranted. The committal warrant states that the justices called in Dr. Dowsley to their assistance; but he has not given a certificate, nor made any statement upon oath. [LEFROY, C.J.—The statute does not require that the physician should give a certificate; there is not a word about giving a certificate in either of the Acts.] The object of the latter statute evidently is, that every circumstance upon which the justices ground their decision should be upon oath. Counsel cited Shelford on Lunacy, 679, and Ex parte Fell.

Lawson, Q.C. and Barry, Q.C. for the Crown.—Under this code of laws it is the duty of the Lord Lieutenant, before issuing the order for the transfer of a lunatic from the gaol to the district lunatic asylum, to be satisfied that such person still continues insane, and a certificate of two physicians to that effect is necessary. That certificate was obtained in this case. Before this court grants a writ of habeas corpus, they should be satisfied as to the present state of this person's mind: (Rex v. Turlington and Ex parte Carpenter.) Should the court be of opinion that they have not sufficient matter before them to enable them to come to a decision in this case, the Government are ready to afford every assistance to the court in any inquiry that they may direct.

Harris, Q.C. contended that the informations were bad on the face of them, and that consequently both the writ of certiorari and the writ of habeas corpus should be granted. [LEFROY, C.J.—You call upon us to issue a writ of habeas corpus in a case where the statute is express as to the particular way in which the party is to be discharged.] The order of the Lord Lieutenant being grounded on the committal of the justices, must stand or fall by that committal; if the committal is bad as not being warranted by the informations, the order of the Lord Lieutenant is bad also. [LEFROY, C.J.—Supposing at the time of the service of the conditional order this party was a dangerous lunatic, surely, upon a defect in the informations we are not now to discharge him.] There should, at least, be some inquiry instituted as to the state of this person's mind: (Rex v. Turlington and Ex parte Carpenter.)

LEFROY, C.J.—I think it will answer your purpose, if we direct an inquiry as to the state of this person's mind. The inquiry will be, whether John Fetherston is now a dangerous lunatic. We will give you an opportunity of naming a competent medical man. The Government have a right to nominate another, as they are concerned in the committal of this person. We think that both of these medical men should be persons who have had access to the party already, as they will be more competent to form an opinion on the state of his mind, than a person who will merely see him for the first time. The commission will also include another properly qualified medical man, who will be nominated by both parties.

Harris, Q.C. proceeded to argue in support of the motion for the writ of certiorari. [LEFROY, C.J.—Has the present applicant any locus standi in this court, to entitle him to call upon us to grant a writ of certiorari?] He appears in the character of next friend. In the case of the Hottentot Venus the application was made by a stranger. [LEFROY, C.J.—That was the case of a habeas corpus. We would admit a father, or even a stranger, to apply for a habeas corpus, but the question is with regard to the certiorari.] It is necessary that this writ should be granted for the purpose of the habeas corpus.

Lane, Q.C. in reply.—It is impossible to bring up these informations as required by the conditional order. They are now in the hands of the clerk of the Crown, to whom they have been returned under the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107, s. 10. The party is not now in custody under any of the proceedings before the justices, but under the order of the Lord Lieutenant. And even if it was possible to comply with the terms of the order, the object of this application would be gained by the writ of habeas corpus, under which every document must be brought up: (Scotland and Grady's Practice of the Queen's Bench, 137; Rex v. Bowen.) It is in the discretion of the court to grant a writ of certiorari, and as no object will be gained by it in this case, it ought to be refused. The applicant has been guilty of inexcusable delay in not coming to this court sooner. The committal was in January, and both the Quarter Sessions and the Spring Assizes, the proper courts of appeal, intervened between the date of the committal and the time when John Fetherston was transferred to the lunatic asylum: (Rex v. Commissioners of Sewers for the Tower Hamlets.) After the party is so transferred, the statute is explicit as to the way by which he is to be discharged. The applicant has not pledged his belief that there was any unwillingness on the part of the Government to act in the matter. The explanation given of this delay in the affidavit of George Fetherston is quite insufficient.

LEFROY, C.J.—This case comes before the court upon a motion to make absolute a conditional order for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of John Fetherston, an alleged lunatic; and a conditional order for a writ of certiorari to quash a committal warrant and order under which this person has been committed to gaol and sent to a lunatic asylum, where he still remains. The circumstances of this case are such as naturally and properly to form the grounds of these conditional orders. The committal warrant of the justices under which John Fetherston has been committed to gaol is grounded on two Acts of Parliament, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 27, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 107. And we are clearly of opinion that a committal in order to be valid must be in strict compliance with the provisions of both these statutes; and that, under the provisions of these statutes the evidence on the face of the informations must show, first, that the party was labouring under a derangement of mind; secondly, that he was discovered under circumstances denoting a purpose of committing a crime for which, if committed, he would be liable to be indicted; and, thirdly, the evidence must be such as to show that the party was a dangerous lunatic. It is not enough that there should appear on the face of the informations facts from which it may be inferred, that the circumstances under which this person was apprehended may possibly have been such that the justices might have been warranted in committing him. The second Act seems to have been passed for the purpose of protecting the subject from this mischief, that he might be apprehended and committed to gaol without knowing or having an opportunity of knowing on what grounds the warrant of committal may have been made. This Act has made provision against what would have been otherwise an intolerable grievance. In this case we are clearly of opinion that there does not appear sufficient on the face of these informations to satisfy us that the provisions of this statute have been complied with. If the case turned simply on the validity of this committal we should have no difficulty. But then there is an application for a writ of certiorari for the purpose of quashing these proceedings; an order for such a writ is not granted as of course, even though it should appear that the warrant of the justice was illegal. We are to consider here whether it is necessary for the purpose of the habeas corpus that these proceedings should be quashed. No such necessity appears to us to exist, nor does this appear to be the proper course of proceeding under the authority of the case of Rex v. Bowen, where Lord Kenyon, though he permitted counsel to argue the point, was of opinion that under the writ of habeas corpus the party would have obtained relief if he had been entitled to it, and that the proceeding by the writ of habeas corpus was the proper mode of obtaining it. The applicant in this case should have moved, not for a certiorari, but for a writ of habeas corpus, in the return to which the warrant of the justices, the order of the Lord Lieutenant, and all the other proceedings would appear before the court. Again, there are other grounds upon which we are satisfied that this application for a certiorari should be refused. It is not necessary for the purpose of obtaining the liberty of this person. He is now confined in the lunatic asylum under the order of the Lord Lieutenant, and if his state of mind is such as to entitle him to his discharge, he can obtain it under the provisions of these Acts of Parliament without coming to this court. There are other reasons which we have not yet mentioned upon which we refuse this motion, and we think it our duty to state them in order that it may be clearly understood upon what grounds the court acts. This application has been made by a person who, with respect to the certiorari, has no locus standi in this court; if the grant of the certiorari were necessary for the purposes of the habeas corpus, we would receive this application from any one. But we know of no authority which allows a party to come into this court for a certiorari on behalf of another, unless it were necessary for the purposes of a habeas corpus. Again, the delay that the present applicant has been guilty of in not bringing this matter sooner before the proper tribunals for investigating it is an additional reason why we should refuse this motion. The magistrate's warrant must have been returned to the clerk of the Crown previous to the spring assizes, and John Fetherston's name must have appeared on the judge's calendar at those assizes; this applicant would then have had an opportunity of getting rid of this illegal order, and it would have been the duty of the judge to have discharged it. Another opportunity occurred at the quarter sessions. Then the Lord Lieutenant, in discharge of his duty, exercises the authority given to him, of removing this person to the lunatic asylum. The first application is made to this court in November, and what occurs in the mean time? This order is allowed to stand as a legal order, no application is made to any of those tribunals to which the present applicant might have had access; and after having allowed this matter to stand over for such a length of time, we are now asked to issue a certiorari for the return of this committal warrant and order, and thereby express our opinion that the Lord Lieutenant has acted unadvisedly in this matter, his order being grounded on an illegal warrant. This case strongly instances the great inconvenience that may arise from delay in bringing forward such an application as the present. And as delay has been made on other occasions the ground of refusal, this consideration, taken along with the circumstance that the present application has been made by a person who has no locus standi in this court, leaves no doubt on our minds that this motion should be refused. This disposes of the question with regard to the certiorari. But then, the affidavits show that the evidence before the justices disclosed facts which have been defectively put on the face of the informations, and, looking at these documents, there cannot be a doubt that the jurisdiction of the justices has been defectively and carelessly exercised; and, as they have not discharged their duty with that diligence and precision which the statute requires, we will not give them costs; they have, by the defective exercise of their jurisdiction, given grounds for these parties to come into this court. With regard to the application for a habeas corpus, we have made each provision as we hope will be satisfactory to all parties; the report of the commission will be, whether John Fetherston is at present a dangerous lunatic.

O'BRIEN, J.—I concur fully in the judgment delivered by my Lord Chief Justice. I shall only add, that the informations do not, from beginning to end, state a single fact from which it would appear that John Fetherston is a lunatic at all. Besides, this certiorari is not necessary for the purposes of the habeas corpus, and such a writ has never been granted on the application of a third party. I am, therefore, clear that this motion should be refused.

DOBBIN v. AIKIN.

Weavers Act—Appeal from the decision of the magistrates thereon.

Held, that weavers may, without violating the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 91, enter into special contracts with their employers.

This was a case submitted, at the desire of the magistrates of Newtownards, for the opinion of this court. The terms of the case were as follow:—"At the petty sessions held on the 14th June 1859, complainant summoned defendant, who was agent to Messrs. J. Muir and Co., Glasgow, manufacturers, for the sum of 6s. 4d., balance of wages due to him for weaving a web. Of this sum 1s. 4d. was admitted to be due, and was duly tendered to the complainant; but the remaining 5s. were kept as a fine, or set-off, for detention of work, being one halfpenny per ell on the whole web of 120 ells. A ticket was produced, setting forth the particulars in accordance with 3 & 4 Vict. c. 91, s. 16. It is to be observed that this ticket is not in exact accordance with the above-recited section, the price being named by the ell instead of by the yard; but as no exception was taken to it on that score, the magistrates confined themselves to the point in dispute. The time allowed for finishing the web was five weeks; it was, however, five weeks and three days before the last cut or portion was brought in, so that, allowing eight days of grace according to the 18th section of the above recited Act, the work was detained three weeks beyond the stipulated time. At the bottom of the ticket is a condition in writing that should the work not be finished within the specified period of five weeks, only 4½d. per ell was to be paid, and if not within six weeks, 4d. per ell instead of 4½d., as mentioned in the body of the ticket. At the hearing of the case, complainant admitted that he did not expect to be paid in full, in consequence of the work being detained so long after the stipulated time. On the back of the ticket is another condition, signed by the complainant, whereby he agrees to refer all matters in dispute between him and his employer to arbitration, and hence it was contended by the defendant that this case ought not to have been brought before the court of petty sessions for adjudication. Having heard the facts as above detailed, the magistrates were unanimously of opinion that the conditions subjoined to the ticket given to the complainant were calculated to supersede the power of the court of petty sessions to measure and award the amount of penalty for the failure, by complainant, to complete the work within the time agreed on, which power is specially vested in the magistrates by the 18th section of the Act above referred to, obviously with the intention of providing protection to the employed against any attempt on the part of the employer to impose arbitrary fines or penalties, and which power the magistrates consider they have hitherto fairly and impartially exercised, by uniformly awarding to the employers, on the hearing of complaints for the detention of work, fair compensation for any loss or damage which may have been proved to result from the defaults of the employed. In this particular case, as the defendant relied on the validity of the condition appended to the ticket to deduct the full penalty specified therein, and as for the reasons above given, the magistrates would recognise no condition which went virtually to supersede and nullify the powers given to them by the Act, they were precluded from entering on the question of compensation for loss and damage caused by detention, and felt obliged to decide in favour of the complainant for the full amount claimed. With regard to the arbitration condition on the back of the ticket, the magistrates considered that before either party could be bound to abide by arbitration, the magistrates themselves should, according to the Arbitration Act (5 Geo. 4, c. 96), hear the cause of complaint, and decide whether it was a subject for arbitration or not, and that the condition on the back of the ticket was in direct contravention of the meaning and intent of that Act."

Arthur Close (with him W. J. Sidney) for the manufacturers.—The question involved in this case is of great importance to the manufacturers of the North of Ireland. Where the web has been detained more than nine weeks, the employers are not, in such case, bound to pay more than 4d. per yard; in other words the special contract is not made under the 16th section of the Weavers' Act. There are no decisions in the reports upon the construction of this Act, but there can be nothing inconsistent in making such a contract as this with the terms of the Act. The decision of the magistrates is plainly bad, and ought to be reversed.

William Andrews and Hugh Law contra.—The Act confers mutual benefits on the employer and the employed. In the 18th section reference is made to particular and specified times, within which the cloth must be returned; no time is fixed for this by the terms which appear in the ticket; the weaver might not, therefore, if he should detain his web for a lengthened period, be entitled to any remuneration. The decisions on the analogous Acts in England may be referred to. The cases all show that actions would not lie when brought upon contracts made in violation of any special Act of Parliament. There being no standard measure referred to in this contract, it is on that ground void under the provisions of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 15. The following cases were cited:—Cope v. Rowlands, 2 M. & W. 149; Little v. Poole, 9 Bar. & Cres. 192; Watts v. Friend, 10 Bar. & Cres. 446; Cundell v. Dawson, 4 C.B. 376; Tyson v. Thomas, 1 M.C. & Young, 128.

MONAHAN, C.J.—We entertain no doubt but that the construction put upon this Act of Parliament by the magistrates is erroneous. There is nothing in the Act itself to prevent the weavers from entering into special contracts with their employers. The party having raised only one point, we confine our judgment exclusively to that point; we reverse the decision of the magistrates, but without costs.

Salvage—Appeal from magistrates—Costs.

The Court of Admiralty has full jurisdiction, and will review the decision of magistrates in a salvage case heard before them, and may either increase the remuneration awarded below, if insufficient, or decrease it if excessive.

If the appeal is by the owners of the vessel salvaged to decrease the salvage award, and the Court of Admiralty decrees in favour of the appellants, the order will be made without costs, as the respondents—the unsuccessful parties—could not expect to get them, and should not be compelled to pay them, as they appeared to support the award of a competent tribunal.

*In this case the property saved was worth 8000*l.*; the magistrates awarded to the salvors 1698*l.*, and the Court of Admiralty reduced that sum to 1007*l.

This was a salvage appeal instituted against the brig Amazon, of Liverpool, 237 tons burden (James Steele, master). It appeared by the pleadings and evidence that she had got ashore on the Arklow Bank on the 4th June 1858, on her outward voyage from Liverpool to Brazil, and a certain portion of her cargo having been discharged into smacks, was by them conveyed to Arklow, and subsequently to Liverpool, where it was sold, realising a net sum of 8000*l.* The rest of the cargo, iron and coal, was, with the vessel, lost. The claims of the salvors were left to the decision of two magistrates at Arklow, Messrs. Courtenay and Edwards, and the value of the property salvaged being then stated at 10,190*l.*, they awarded one-sixth, or 1698*l.* Against this award the owners appealed on the ground of excess. The case was, by consent, heard viva voce, and the facts appear in the judgment of the court.

Gibbon, LL.D. and Elrington, LL.D. for appellants, and

The Solicitor-General, LL.D. (with Townsend) for the respondents.

KELLY, J.—This is an appeal by owners against an award of salvage made by two justices of the county of Wicklow, who awarded to the salvors one-sixth of the property saved, and the only ground of appeal alleged is the excess of the sum awarded. The facts are shortly these. Early in the morning of the 4th June, this brig, the Amazon, 237 tons register, with a master and ten hands, and having a valuable general cargo on board, bound from Liverpool to Para, in South America, got on the Arklow Bank, the dangers of which are well known. The weather was fair, and there was a quiet sea, and the mainland distant about seven or eight miles. The smack Peter, of Arklow, arrived shortly after, and five or six of her crew got on board the brig, informed the captain of his danger, and advised him to lighten his vessel, an advice which he did not think fit then to follow, as he had hopes of getting her off. The coast guard, under Lieutenant Dunsterville, arrived in a short time, and a kedge anchor being got out, it was hove on, with the purpose of warping the vessel off the ground. After some time, however, the warp broke, and the attempt was abandoned. Meanwhile, seven or eight boats more arrived, but the evening being advanced to eight or nine o'clock, it was thought too late to commence the discharge, the more so as the boats in attendance were but few. On the next morning, the 5th, at daybreak, the discharge was begun, when Lieutenant Warren and the coast guard from "Jack's Hole" station arrived, and that officer took charge of the vessel, and under his orders and directions every possible portion of the cargo was discharged. This gentleman remained the whole day and until late in the evening, and under his control and superintendence no less than forty-seven smacks were loaded with the cargo of the ill-fated vessel. It should have been stated that about three o'clock on that day, on the rising tide, another attempt was made to heave the vessel off, but without success, and the discharge, which had temporarily ceased, was resumed and completed—the whole cargo being discharged, with the exception of some coals and heavy machinery. This service was one under peculiar circumstances—a vessel in good condition got on a bank; two efforts to get her out of that critical state failed; and it was to be remarked that these efforts were made by the coast guard and the crew of the vessel, and that the Arklow fishermen did not contribute to it in the slightest degree. All they did was under the orders of the proper legal authority of the coast guard, who exercised a control and supervision of the entire service, and whatever skill was shown on the occasion was shown by the senior officer before referred to—Lieutenant Warren. The usual elements of salvage were wanted in this case. No skill could be claimed by the salvors before the court. No danger could for a moment be suggested—as the slightest risk to life or limb did not occur. The only element of salvage in the case was its success. The conduct of these Arklow fishermen, the salvors before the court, has been properly put forward by their advocates, and must be noticed by the court. Lieutenant Warren tells it, that his orders were obeyed by this numerous assemblage of nearly 500 men; that the smacks came alongside, loaded and departed, as directed by him, and that all the goods were safely given up, and it was not suggested by the appellants that a single article, even of the most trivial value, was not forthcoming. It might be that this good conduct urged the magistrates in their decision, and it would also weigh with that court; but the court must remind these fishermen that the law must be respected, and that its penalties must be enforced, were dishonesty attempted. The only element of salvage, then, in this case was the element of success, and no doubt the services in question had been successfully performed, when it was borne in mind that in the short space of four-and-twenty hours, property of such great value had been rescued. Still the court cannot consider this as a pure salvage service, but rather as a meritorious service. The smacks and crews in question were employed under authority, and were not really "voluntary salvors." They came and went under the control of others. It was a case of great merit, but not of pure and voluntary salvage. Now as to the question of reward. These little vessels were employed from Friday to Tuesday, and some to Wednesday, until their lading was discharged. The usual amount earned by them in fishing was but small, and the property saved was of great value, in all amounting to 8000*l*. The justices have awarded 1698*l*, and this court was required by the owners to review that award. Looking then to the interest of the owners, which the court must consider, and recollecting that this property had been saved for restoration as well as reward, and must not all be swallowed up by that reward, the court was bound to express its opinion that the award was excessive, and must be reduced. It considered that the sum of twenty guineas was a fair and sufficient remuneration for each of the smacks employed, which for forty-seven makes the sum of 987*l*. In addition to this the court would give the sum of 1*l*. each to the twenty men who were engaged in pumping the Amazon, in all the sum of 1007*l*, and would decree the magistrates' award to be reduced accordingly. With regard to the costs the salvors could not expect them, nor could the appellants seek them from the salvors, who come to support the award of a competent tribunal. Let each party bear their own costs.

OVERSEERS, &C. OF CLAPHAM (respondents) v. OVERSEERS, &C. OF ST. PANCRA (appellants).

Poor—Settlement—Apprenticeship—Articled clerk.

An articled clerk to an attorney is such an apprentice as may acquire a settlement in a parish, for the purposes of relief to the poor, under the 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 8.

The short point in this case, which was stated after an appeal to the Surrey Epiphany Quarter Sessions, 1860, was whether an articled clerk to an attorney, bound in the usual way by articles, was an apprentice within the meaning of 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 8, which enacts, "If any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture according to law, and inhabits in any town or parish, such binding and inhabiting shall be adjudged a good settlement."

Kemp (Needham with him) for the respondents.—An articled clerk is not within the 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 8. At the time of that Act an apprentice was a well-known relation, and had been described by the 5 Eliz. c. 4, and was connected with the mysteries and trades there specified. Ex parte Prideaux, 3 Myl. & Cr. 327, was a decision of Lord Cottenham's, that an articled clerk was not an apprentice within the Bankrupt Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 49. Could it be said that the 20 Geo. 4, c. 19, ss. 3, 4, giving justices jurisdiction upon complaints by and against apprentices, would be applicable, if the premium did not exceed 5*l*? Cases cited: Ex parte Gill, 7 East, 376; S. C. Reg. v. St. Petroz, Burr. 248; S. C. R. v. St. Mary, Lincoln, Burr. 728.

Le Breton (Murray with him) for the appellants.—An articled clerk to an attorney is an apprentice: (1 Black. Com.) In Ex parte Prankard, 3 B. & Ald. 257, Bayley, J. uses the word apprentice when speaking of an articled clerk: (R. v. Laindon, 8 T. R. 383; R. v. Whitchurch, Set. Cas. 166; Cuff v. Brown, 5 Price, 297.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that a settlement was gained by apprenticeship in this case, so as to satisfy the statute. We must look at two things: first was there such a binding as would come within the [MAG. C.]

legal acceptance or definition of apprenticeship? Secondly whether, under the statute, such an apprenticeship can be considered sufficient to gain a settlement? As to the first, there can be no doubt that an apprentice is one who is bound to serve for the purpose of learning a business or profession, and the relation is of that nature that the master engages to teach the apprentice, and he engages to serve the master in order that he may learn the business or profession. An articled clerk to an attorney comes strictly within that definition; he binds himself to serve the attorney that he may be taught, and that he may learn his profession. The 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 8, is couched in the most general language, "if any person shall be bound an apprentice by indenture according to law, and inhabit in any town or parish, such binding and inhabiting shall be adjudged a good settlement." Suppose immediately after the passing of that statute a person had come to settle in a parish, and to serve under such an indenture as this, would he have been removeable? This section seems to engraft the exception (among others introduced) that where an apprentice is bound and inhabits in any parish he shall not be removeable. It also protects the parish against a clandestine residence. There is no reason therefore to think that this case would not have been within the protection of the statute. Our attention, however, has been called to the statute 5 Eliz. c. 4; but that was directed to certain classes of trades merely. It was next said that the Legislature has always dealt with articled clerks to attorneys by the name of articled clerks, and not of apprentices. That, however, would not make them the less apprentices if in other respects they come within that description, or be any reason why we should deal with them otherwise than as they are. It is not necessary to impugn the decision in the case in bankruptcy. The question now arises on the statute of 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11, and I am of opinion that this is a species of apprenticeship that statute intended to protect against liability to removal.

CROMPTON, J.—The term "apprentice" has been defined very often, and the relation of master and apprentice is well known in point of law. The essence of the relation is, that the apprentice is to serve the master, and learn his business, and that the master shall teach the apprentice. Then what is the meaning of the term in the stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11? The cases cited for the appellant show that such an apprentice as this is within it, and that its meaning is not to be confined to the mysteries, arts and trades enumerated in the stat. of 5 Eliz. c. 4. The only difficulty presented to us is the case in bankruptcy. There could not have been the argument in the time of 3 & 4 Will. & M. that there is a series of statutes calling them articled clerks, as those statutes are since that date. I therefore think the appellants are entitled to our judgment.

BLACKBURN, J.—The question turns on the construction of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 11. An articled clerk is bound to serve the attorney for the purpose of being taught the trade of an attorney. The statute of Elizabeth was passed to forward certain views of political economy which are now exploded. Taking the words of the 3 & 4 Will. & M. in their natural interpretation, I can see nothing to exclude an apprentice to an attorney. As to the bankruptcy case, that judgment is entirely untouched by anything in this decision. If the language was wide enough in the time of William and Mary to include an articled clerk, we must so construe it now. I am of opinion that it was.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE PORTSEA ISLAND UNION v. WHILLIER.

Principal and surety—Bond for security of poor-rates

Q. B.]

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE PORTSEA UNION v. WHILLIER.

collector—Change in duties of office—Liability of surety.

By an order of the Poor Law Commissioners, the guardians of a union were empowered to appoint one or more collectors of the poor-rates of the several parishes in the union. The guardians appointed four for parish A., to each of whom was assigned a separate district of the parish for collection, and they subsequently resolved to appoint a fifth for the collection from owners of small tenements: (13 & 14 Vict. c. 99.) There being vacancies they advertised that they would appoint two persons to be collectors of the poor-rates of parish A., "to one of whom will be assigned a collection of such rates from the owners of small tenements under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99." W. became a candidate, and was one of the two elected, and the entry in the minute-book of the guardians was, that he was appointed for the purpose of collecting the rates from the owners of small tenements. He and two sureties gave the usual bond, which recited in the condition the order of the Poor Law Commissioners, and that W. was appointed to be a collector under the said order. After some time one of the other collectors having died, W. was assigned the collection of his district, and gave up the small tenements collection:

Held, that the sureties were liable on the bond for W.'s defalcations arising during the collection of the new district.

Special case for the opinion of the court as to the liability of the defendant for the defalcations of a poor-rate collector on a bond as one of the sureties.

Collectors for the poor-rates of the Portsea Island Union are appointed by the guardians of the poor by virtue of an order (Aug. 9, 1836) of the Poor Law Commissioners "to appoint one or more fit and proper persons to be the collector or collectors of the poor-rates of such of the several parishes comprised in the union as the guardians may deem to require a collector; and after death, resignation, or removal to appoint successors. Among the duties of the collectors enumerated in the order, were, first, to assist the churchwardens and overseers of the several parishes for which they shall be appointed collectors in making up the assessments, filling up receipts, keeping all books and making all returns which relate to the collection of rates payable on account of the poor.

In 1852 there were four collectors of poor-rates for the parish of Portsea, to whom particular districts of the parish were assigned for collection. There was a vacancy by the resignation of one of the four collectors, and it had been resolved to appoint a fifth collector, to whom was to be assigned the collection of rates from the owners of small tenements within the parish, the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, having been adopted by the parish.

An advertisement was published by the guardians that they would appoint two persons to be collectors of the poor-rates of the parish of Portsea, "to one of whom will be assigned a collection of such rates from the owners of small tenements under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99."

Mr. J. W. Whillier applied for one of the appointments, and offered the names of the defendant and another person as sureties in case of being elected. He was elected. In the minute-book the entry of his appointment was made "for the purpose of collecting the rates from the owners of small tenements," and also that the sureties nominated, were approved of.

The Poor Law Board sent a letter of approval of the appointment of Mr. Samuel Haslett (the other person appointed) and Mr. J. W. Whillier as collectors of poor-rates in the parish of Portsea, &c.

The bond given by J. W. Whillier and his sureties was in this form:—"They jointly and severally bound themselves to the guardians in 400*l*." The condition of the bond recited the poor-law order of Aug. 9, 1836, and that J. W. Whillier was appointed to be a collector under the said order, and then proceeded, "that if the above-named collector should during his continuance in the office of collector, and whether the district, parish and places for which he is appointed to act be or be hereafter not changed, or diminished, or enlarged, or in any wise altered, duly, &c., discharge the duties thereof," &c.

The said J. W. Whillier thereupon entered upon his duties, and collected the rates from the owners of small tenements in the parish up to June 1855, when he was transferred by the guardians to one of the four districts collected by the other four collectors. He collected the rates of that district down to Nov. 1858, when he was discovered to have committed defalcations to the amount of 554*l*. 3*s*. 10*d*.

No new bond was given by J. W. Whillier in 1855 or at any other time.

Lush (V. Harcourt with him).—The terms of the bond show what Whillier's appointment was, viz., that he was appointed a collector of the poor-rates under the order of the Poor Law Commissioners, recited in it. The office was a freehold one, subject to removal only by the Poor Law Commissioners. He was appointed collector for the parish generally, and the resolution of the guardians does not limit that appointment, for it cannot do that. They had no authority to appoint a collector for any other purpose than that specified in the poor-law order: (Stewart v. M'Kean, 24 L. J. 144, Ex.) The orders of the Poor Law Board define the duties of the office, and the bond is general and binds the sureties for all defalcations as collector of the parish generally.

Joyce for the defendant.—The poor-law order is dated before the passing of the Small Tenements Act. Whillier, by the resolution of the board of guardians, was expressly appointed for the purpose of collecting under that Act; and the change to collecting from the owners of other tenements was such a change in the office as to discharge the sureties. The effect was to alter the remuneration and increase the risk, and if the risk is increased, the sureties are discharged: (Pybus v. Gibb, 6 E. & B. 910.)

Lush was heard in reply, and referred to Frank v. Edwards, 8 Ex. 214.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The first question is, whether the appointment as collector was as collector of the rates of the parish generally, or the rates payable under the Small Tenements Act exclusively. If it was for the latter purpose only, then by the subsequent Act of the guardians in employing the collector for an entirely different purpose, and his default therein, his surety, according to all the authorities, would not be liable for such default. Then, what is the real nature of the appointment? The question is not free from doubt; but, upon the whole, I think that the appointment was as collector of the rates of the parish generally. In the first place, the order of the Poor Law Board directs the appointment of collectors for the parish generally; in the next place the advertisement which led to the application of Whillier for the appointment describes the office as collector for the parish; and then Whillier applies by letter to be appointed as one of those collectors. Then comes the bond, in which he is treated as having been appointed a collector of the rates of the parish generally. That being so, there is sufficient evidence that his employment was treated as in effect arising from his appointment as collector of the rates of the parish generally, and not as collector of the rates for the more limited and special purpose. It is true that the resolution on his appointment is couched in language referring to the more limited character of the appointment; but, looking at the whole, one must not attach too much importance to that circumstance. Suppose the guardians were to choose to transfer a collector from one district to another, I cannot see that he would be justified in refusing to obey the orders to that effect. It seems to me that it is competent to the guardians to point out to which district or set of duties any particular collector is to be assigned. On the whole, therefore, I construe the appointment to be that of general collector of rates to the parish.

CROMPTON, J.—I have entertained considerable doubt upon the question, and am not yet entirely free from doubt, but the inclination of my mind is to agree with the rest of the court, upon this ground, that it is not sufficiently made out that this was a special appointment, and that to construe this as a general appointment for the entire parish is more consistent with the order of the Poor Law Commissioners. In the case of one of the collectors dying, I think Whillier might have been put to the duty of collecting part of the rates of the district belonging to such deceased collector. Then the appointment recites the order of the Poor Law Board, and that is a strong fact in favour of the construction adopted by the court.

BLACKBURN, J.—I also think that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover. I have not been free from doubt during the argument, but upon the whole I think the plaintiffs entitled to our judgment. The law on this subject was settled in Pybus v. Gibb, 6 Ell. & Bl., that where the duties and liabilities of an office are essentially changed, and the risk of the sureties increased, the sureties are discharged from liability on the bond. What then was the nature of the office for which the defendant became a surety in this case? Looking at the bond and the recital in the conditon, I think that he was appointed as one among several collectors of rates for the parish generally, which shows strongly that the duties of collecting the rates of the parish were to be divided among them by the arrangement of the guardians as to the different departments each was to execute from time to time. I think, therefore, that the office which Whillier took upon himself was that of collector of the poor-rates of the parish generally. If the original appointment had been that he was to be collector of rates from owners of the small tenements only, and he had afterwards been made a collector from the other ratepayers, that would have been a change in his office; but it seems to me that his original appointment was collector of the poor-rates generally.

REG. on the prosecution of THE INHABITANTS OF HECKMONDWICK (respondents) v. THE INHABITANTS OF THORNTON (appellants).

Order of removal—Settlement by estate—What a sufficient estate.

The pauper married a woman who at the time was renting a cottage, for which she paid 1s. per week. The pauper and his wife continued to occupy it, he paying the same rent (without any fresh arrangement) for seven years:

Held, that he had thus acquired a settlement by estate.

This was a case stated for the opinion of this court under sect. 11 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, upon an appeal against an order of removal.

It was admitted between the parties that the appellant parish was the parish of settlement, unless they could successfully show that the pauper had acquired a subsequent settlement by estate. The facts connected with this subsequent settlement are these:—The pauper James Walker married a woman of the name of Mary Collins, who at the time of marriage resided in a cellar cottage, for which she paid 1s. per week rent. It did not otherwise appear what were the terms of her holding, but from the time of his marriage the pauper continued to live with her in the same cottage for the period of seven years, there being no fresh arrangement with the landlord, and he paying the weekly rent.

Pickering, Q.C., for the respondents, contended that these facts would not support the settlement of the pauper by estate, for that whether or not such a holding by the wife was such an estate as would confer a settlement, yet the marriage put an end to it: (R. v. Halifax, 24 L. J. 64, M. C.)

Maule, for the appellants, contended that the tenancy of the wife at the time of marriage was such an estate as gave the husband (he having resided under it for forty days) a settlement; that the payment of 1s. per week rent was not even inconsistent with its being a yearly tenancy. [COCKBURN, C.J.—This curious state of things may exist in the case, that whereas the wife could gain no settlement before her marriage in respect of her holding, inasmuch as it was not of sufficient value, yet a man marrying her gets a settlement by estate.] No particular value need exist in the case of an estate settlement. Here the estate of the wife was not determined by any act of the parties.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The real interest of the woman is from week to week until it is determined. That being so on the marriage, the husband comes into the estate. He remains in it forty days. There is no evidence upon which we can say that there was any surrender of the estate. There must be judgment therefore for the appellants.

Poor law—Auditor's disallowances—Rent of house for conducting business—Duplicate appointment of overseers—Jurisdiction of this court.

Bristowe moved for a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order made by the poor-law auditor for the districts of Cheshire and South Lancashire, whereby he had disallowed certain payments in the accounts of the overseers of Spotland in the parish of Rochdale, with a view to such disallowances being quashed. The disallowances complained of were one sum of 8*l.* paid for half-year's rent of a small house taken to facilitate the execution of the office of overseer, and in which the business of the township was transacted, and where the books and papers were deposited, which had been disallowed because the auditor considered that there was no authority in law for such expenditure; and eight shillings for duplicates of appointment of overseers, which he had disallowed because he considered duplicate appointments unnecessary. An appeal had on a former occasion been made to the Poor Law Commissioners, who said they thought the auditor was right, but they allowed the items, and suggested that the appellants should put into operation the provisions of the Act of Parliament; but the ratepayers feeling that that would be a costly proceeding, desired to ascertain the opinion of this court as to whether the disallowances referred to were legal or not: (17 Geo. 2, c. 38; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 101; R. v. Reeves, 17 Q. B. were referred to.) [CROMPTON, J.—Is not this detail? Suppose the auditor objected to and disallowed what he deemed an excess of gruel provided. Are we to say whether too much has been administered or not? BLACKBURN, J.—The Act does not give them authority to hire a place to carry on the business, only to provide a place to deposit books and documents in; they don't want gas and fire for that purpose.

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is for you to show us that there is something illegal in the disallowance. You have made out no case. Rule refused.

QUICK (appellant) v. THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF ST. IVES (respondents.)

Town council—Lighting Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 88—Adoption of Lighting Act by town council—Relinquishing their powers.

Q. B.]

QUICK v. THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF ST. IVES.

[Q. B.]

The Lighting Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, was adopted by the parish of St. Ives. Subsequently the town council of St. Ives took upon themselves the powers of inspectors under that Act. They afterwards relinquished their powers, and the vestry of the parish again adopted the Act and levied a rate under it: Held, that the town council having adopted the Act, they had no power to relinquish it, and that the rate made was bad.

This was a case stated under the provisions of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon an order made by the justices of St. Ives, Cornwall, upon the appellant, for the payment of a lighting rate made under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90.

It appeared that after the passing of the Act it was adopted by the parish of St. Ives, which continued to be lit under its provisions down to the year 1837, when the town council of the borough decided upon taking upon themselves the powers of the Act pursuant to sect. 88 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (Municipal Corporation Act), which section enacts, "That if the council of any borough chosen under this Act shall . . . declare . . . they will take upon themselves the powers given to inspectors named" in the said Act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, "so far as the same relates to the lighting the whole or any part of any borough . . . the council of such borough shall after the day named . . . have the same powers and duties as belong to inspectors under the said last-recited Act, in regard to lighting and to levying rates for the purpose of lighting such part of the borough. . . . Provided also that it shall not be lawful in such case for the inhabitants of such part of the borough at any time to determine that the provisions of the said recited Act shall cease to be acted upon." Subsequently the town council relinquished their powers under the Act, and the vestry accepted such relinquishment, and have since lighted the parish under the first-mentioned Act. A lighting rate having been made by the parish officers pursuant to the Act, the appellant was summoned before justices to show cause why he should not pay the said rate. At the hearing the appellant objected (inter alia) that the rate was unlawful, inasmuch as it was made by parties having no lawful authority to make it; for that, inasmuch as the town council had adopted the Act, they could not afterwards divest themselves of their powers, and that the vestry had no power to accept their relinquishment of their powers with which they had invested themselves. The justices decided against this objection, and ordered payment of the rate.

Karslake appeared for the respondents, and contended that the rate was good as made by a lawful authority, and that it was competent to the town council to relinquish their power to carry out the Lighting Act. [COCKBURN, C.J.—How do you get over the provision at the end of the 88th section, that when the town council adopts the Act, the inhabitants shall have no power to determine that the provisions of the Act shall cease to be acted upon? This shows that the decision of the town council is final.] That proviso has reference to the old Act, there being a provision in sect. 15 enabling the parishioners at the expiration of three years to determine that the Act shall no longer be acted upon. [CROMPTON, J.—When the town council have once taken the Act upon themselves, may they renounce it, and afterwards again adopt it, and so go on continually? Is it not a general rule, that when once a public body makes an election they must abide by it? There are many Acts of Parliament giving inhabitants and others powers to adopt such Acts; can they in any such cases renounce their powers? BLACKBURN, J.—It is a general principle, that if a party makes his election he does so for ever.] The town council, it is submitted, are not bound to continue to be inspectors under the Act for ever.

[CROMPTON, J.—It would be very extraordinary if these bodies could elect and renounce, and elect and renounce, and so go on. This construction has never been adopted.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—If the town council once take upon themselves the office of inspectors under the Act, the optional power of the inhabitants is at an end, and the town council must continue their functions.

HILL, J.—If the town council make their election, it must be taken that they make it with all its legal incidents, one of which is, that they cannot afterwards renounce their powers.

THE CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR MIDDLESEX v. ALL SAINTS, POPLAR.

Pauper lunatic—Order of settlement and maintenance may be made upon the parish at whose instance pauper sent to county asylum.

By the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97 (Lunatic Asylum Act), s. 98, if any lunatic pauper be not settled in the parish by which he is sent to an asylum, and it cannot be ascertained in what parish he is settled, two justices may adjudge the pauper to be chargeable to the county; and by sect. 99, if afterwards such county procure such lunatic to be adjudged to be settled in any parish, it shall be lawful for two justices to make an order of maintenance upon such parish.

A lunatic pauper in the parish of A. was sent by an order of justices under sect. 98 to the lunatic asylum of the county of M. The county of M. subsequently obtained an order adjudging his settlement to be in the said parish of A.:

Held, that the first order was no bar to the making of the second order, and that such second order might well be made in the parish of A., notwithstanding the first order was made upon the supposition that the pauper was not settled in such parish.

This was a case stated under sect. 11 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, upon an order of justices adjudicating the settlement of a lunatic pauper, and ordering payment for his past and future maintenance.

It appeared that the pauper William Baker became chargeable as a lunatic to the parish of All Saints, Poplar, in 1839, whereupon he was sent to Hanwell Asylum. On the 16th Oct. 1858 (ten days' notice having previously been given to the clerk of the peace for Middlesex) an application was made by the parish officers of All Saints for an order adjudging the pauper to be chargeable to the county, on the ground of his parish of settlement being unknown. All parties having attended, the order was accordingly made. On the 8th of the following February, the clerk of the peace applied for an order of settlement and maintenance upon the said parish of All Saints, as being the parish of the pauper's settlement, and the justices accordingly made the order, which is the subject of the present case.

By sect. 98 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97 (Lunatic Asylums Act), it is enacted that "if any pauper lunatic be not settled in the parish by which . . . he is sent to any asylum . . . and it cannot be ascertained in what parish such pauper lunatic is settled," upon ten days' notice being given to the clerk of the county in which such lunatic was found, "it shall be lawful for two justices . . . to inquire into the circumstances of the case, and to adjudge such pauper lunatic to be chargeable to such county, and to order the treasurer of such county to pay," &c., &c.

By sect. 89 it is enacted that "if after any pauper lunatic has been sent to an asylum . . . and has been adjudged to be chargeable to a county, such county procure such lunatic to be adjudged to be settled in any parish, it shall be lawful for any two justices . . . to make an order upon the guardians of the union to which such parish belongs, or of any such parish . . . for payment to the treasurer of the said county of all expenses and moneys paid by such treasurer as hereinbefore is provided," &c.

Poland appeared in support of the order, and argued that the order was rightly made upon the parish of All Saints, notwithstanding the pauper was originally made chargeable to the county, upon the ground that he was not chargeable to All Saints; there being no power of appeal against such former order, and it being merely an interim order until the settlement of the pauper could be finally ascertained.

Metcalf, contra, was called upon, and contended that, although it was competent to the justices to have adjudicated upon the settlement of the pauper in any other parish than All Saints, yet that, as regards that parish, the original order of the 16th Oct. 1858, which could only have been made upon the ground that the pauper was not settled in that parish, was a bar to any subsequent adjudication of settlement in that parish, particularly as the county had an opportunity, when the first order was made, of showing that All Saints was the parish of settlement.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The powers of the 98th section appear to be sufficiently wide to enable us to hold that, notwithstanding the former order, the county may at any time after ascertain in what parish the pauper is settled, and to hold that there is no such power would be an anomaly. I think, therefore, that we ought to decide that the second order was good, and that the first order, being merely an interim order, is not conclusive on the parties.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is quite contrary to rule that an order made without a power of appeal should be conclusive against the parties. The first order was not a final order which would prevent the justices from making another order when the parish of settlement is, in fact, found out.

HILL, J. concurred.

BLACKBURN, J.—If it had been intended that the first order should have been final with reference to the parish, the statute would have given a power of appeal.

Order affirmed.

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF LACKMANSTONE.

Police-rate—2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88—Application to certain liberties and franchises.

The police-rate made and assessed under the provisions of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, is assessable upon the district of Romney Marsh.

This was a case stated for the purpose of taking the opinion of the court as to whether or not the district of Romney Marsh is liable to contribute to the police rate of the county of Kent under sect. 3 of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88.

By the foregoing section, after enacting that so much of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, as provides that the expenses of putting the said Act into execution, shall be paid out of the county rate shall be repealed, it is enacted that "for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the said Act in any county in which, or in any part of which the said Act shall be put in force, the justices of such county in general or quarter sessions assembled, shall make a fair and equal police-rate, and for that purpose shall assess and tax the whole district for which the constables are appointed rateably and equally according to a certain pound rate of the full and fair annual value of all messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments liable to the county rate, or which, if the whole of the said district were, to all intents and purposes, within their county, would be liable to the county rate therein, including all detached parts of other counties, and also all liberties and franchises (except as hereinafter excepted) which are locally situated in such county, or wholly or partly surrounded by such county, and declared by the said Act to be considered as forming part of such county for the purposes of the said Act; but excluding . . . all incorporated boroughs which are or shall be within the provisions" of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, &c. By the former Act, the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, s. 27, it is enacted, "that for the purposes of this Act all detached parts of counties, and also all liberties and franchises (other than such incorporated boroughs as aforesaid) shall be considered as forming part of that county by which they are surrounded," &c.

The district of Romney Marsh was incorporated by a charter of James the First, in the year 1604, and ever since then has been exempt from the jurisdiction of the county justices, having its own rate in the nature of a county rate, maintaining its own constables, and having a gaol and court of quarter sessions.

M. Smith, Q.C. and Russell now appeared in support of the rate, and contended that the district was not exempt from being assessed to the police-rate of the county. [CROMPTON, J.—It certainly appears to be within the enacting clause, and not within any of the exceptions.]

Hayes, Serjt., contra (Deeds with him), was called upon, and contended that the statutes were not intended to apply to such a case as this; that under the first Act, the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93, the funds for the maintenance of the constables were obtained from the county rate, which clearly did not extend to the present district, and it was only when by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, a police-rate was substituted, that it was sought to include the district, and that there could be no reason for applying the Police Acts to the district which was already provided with full powers for police arrangements.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think this case is tolerably clear. The first Act empowers counties to establish a police force, in which are included all liberties and franchises (with certain exceptions) which are situated within the body of the county, and to assess the county to a county rate. But it seems that this did not work satisfactorily, for a county rate could not be assessed in certain liberties. Therefore we have the second Act, and then a police-rate is substituted for the county rate; and by the 6th section a special provision is introduced to obtain contribution from such liberties and franchises. It is clear, I think, that the Legislature intended to include such liberties and franchises. No doubt this is a very extensive liberty, but that shows the necessity of having an efficient police establishment.

CROMPTON, HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

COLE (appellant) v. COULTON (respondent).

Information—Who may lay—Alehouse-keeper harbouring prostitutes—10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 35—Police Clauses Act.

The clerk to the commissioners under a local Act, without any special authority, laid an information for an offence under that Act:

Held, well laid.

The 35th section of the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89 (Police Clauses Act) applies to an alehouse-keeper as well as to other persons.

This was a case stated upon a conviction by justices of the appellant (who was an innkeeper), under the King's Lynn Improvement Act, for harbouring prostitutes.

It appeared that the King's Lynn Improvement Act incorporates the Police Clauses Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, the 35th section of which imposes a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* upon "every person keeping any house, shop, room, or other place of public resort, within the limits of the special Act, for the sale or consumption of refreshments of any kind, who knowingly suffers common prostitutes or reputed thieves to assemble at and continue in his premises."

The information was laid by a person of the name of Coulton, who was clerk to the commissioners, and at the hearing the appellant objected that the informant had no express authority from the commissioners to lay it; but, upon reference being made to a handbill published by him by the direction of the commissioners, giving notice that after a certain day the Act would be strictly enforced, the bill being signed, "By order of the commissioners, John James Coulton," the justices overruled the objection. It was also objected that an alehouse-keeper was not within the 35th section.

Field now appeared for the respondent, and contended that neither objection was sustainable.

Keane was called upon, and argued that both objections were conclusive against the conviction.

COCKBURN, C.J. said he was of opinion that the conviction must be affirmed. The arguments of Mr. Keane had raised considerable doubts in his mind as to whether there was any sufficient authority in the party laying the information to lay it on behalf of the Paving Commissioners. But the authority of the commissioners was not necessary, because the matter was not one which came immediately and necessarily within the scope and power of the Paving Commissioners. It was merely an advantage given to them by the Act of Parliament that they should receive the penalties, and they might act or abstain from acting, as they thought proper. If the authority of the commissioners were a necessary element in deciding this matter, Mr. Coulton had distinctly admitted that he had no express authority, nor any implied authority, except so far as it might be implied from the publication of the printed notice. That notice might have been intended to act merely as a general warning to persons offending against the Act of Parliament. I must acknowledge, therefore, that upon the question, whether there was any authority from the commissioners, express, implied, or understood, I was in doubt. It is not necessary, however, to decide the case upon that ground. It seems to me that, independent of any authority from the commissioners, Mr. Coulton was quite competent to lay the information, so long as the information professed to be based upon the principle that the penalties were for the benefit of the Paving Commissioners. The matter was not one of individual grievance as to which provision was made, for the protection of individual rights by the sanction of penalties imposed by Act of Parliament. It was for the protection of the morals of the public, and the general Act of Parliament gave a general authority to lay an information to whosoever should think proper; the local Act engrafted upon that the special provision that in the case of any information against parties offending the provisions of the general statute, the penalty, instead of being awarded to the informer, should be awarded to one of two sets of commissioners; and that the information should be laid on behalf of one or other of those bodies. And so long as the person laying the information alleged that he claimed the penalty on behalf of one of those bodies, there was nothing to prevent him from doing so. The case is analogous to that of a common informer, where the penalty went half to the informer and half to the Crown, where no authority from the Crown was necessary in order to lay the information. With regard to the contention of Mr. Keane, that beerhouses were under separate legislation, and that this Act did not apply to them, I think possibly that might have been the intention of the Legislature; but they had not guarded their intention by excluding licensed houses from the operation of this local Act, and in the absence of words to that effect it must be held to apply to them. The conviction must, therefore, be affirmed.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. I take this to be an information which this person issues on behalf of this body, and the adjudication is made that the penalties shall be awarded to them. It is said that there was no express authority to lay the information. What we are to look at is, whether it is taken on behalf of either of these bodies, and therefore it is not necessary to show any special authority. But if it were, I am inclined to think there would be sufficient. He is asked, "Have you any express authority?" He says, "No, I have no express authority to lay this particular information, but I am the clerk to the commissioners and suppose myself generally authorised; and here is a handbill published by order, which says that on and after the 11th May these penalties will be strictly enforced." That does appear to me to be some evidence that the commissioners were in earnest and really intended to enforce the penalty. I do not think it is necessary to show authority in every particular case. Therefore upon that point on all grounds the conviction must be affirmed. The other point hardly requires any notice. It appears to me that the clause takes in all houses of refreshment, and upon that ground also the conviction must be affirmed.

BLACKBURN, J. concurred. Conviction affirmed.

OVERSEERS, &c. OF EVERTON (appa.) v. OVERSEERS OF SOUTH STONEHAM (resps.)

Settlement—Payment of poor-rate—Watch-rate.

A. became tenant and occupier of premises in township E. on 28th Sept. 1857, and continued till Nov. 1858, when he left. On the 10th April 1858 the usual annual poor-rate was made, to which A. was assessed at 1l. 4s.; of this sum he only paid 14s., the proportion of the rating year for which he occupied. The premises remained vacant, and there was no one from whom the overseers could recover the remainder of the poor-rate under the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 12.

The township E. is in the municipal borough of L., which also comprises other parishes. The overseers of the township made a watch-rate for it separately, to which A. was charged 5s. 4d., and which he paid. The watch-rate is levied by virtue of the Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4 c. 76, s. 84:

Held, that A. did not acquire a settlement in township E. by payment only of a part of the poor-rate to which he was charged, but that he did acquire such settlement by payment of the watch-rate.

Case for the opinion of this court as to the settlement of Matilda Wadham, wife of Benjamin Broffit Wadham.

The pauper's husband, Benjamin B. Wadham, bona fide rented from Geo. Nicholson a dwelling-house in Clarence-grove, in the township of Everton, a township maintaining its own poor, at 16l. a-year for the term of one whole year, which house was held and occupied under such yearly hiring, and the rent for the same paid for the term of one year at the least by the said B. B. Wadham.

Such renting and occupation commenced on the 28th Sept. 1857, and continued until Nov. 1858.

The overseers of the township are in the habit of making only one rate for the relief of the poor in each year, and they had before the commencement of the above-mentioned renting and occupation, that is to say, on the 27th March 1857, at which time the house in question was in the occupation of Edwd. Hughes, made a rate for the relief of the poor, in which the said E. Hughes was rated; and he on the 7th July 1857 paid the entire amount of the rate, 1l. 2s. 6d.

On the 10th April 1858 the overseers made a rate for the relief of the poor of the said township, in which the said B. B. Wadham was charged with and assessed to the same in respect of the said house in the sum of 14 4s., which sum was duly demanded from him, but of which rate he paid 14s. only, being the proportion for the period during which he was in occupation subsequently to the making of such rate, and being the whole amount which at the time of such payment was demanded of him by or on the behalf of the overseers of the said township.

When B. B. Wadham left his house, it remained empty until after the making of the poor-rate made next after he so left, so that there was no tenant from whom the 10s., being the balance of the rate of the 10th April 1858 which remained unpaid, could be recovered under the provisions of the 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 12.

The township of Everton is wholly within the borough of Liverpool, which also comprises the parish of Liverpool, the township of Kirkdale, and portions of the township of Toxteth-park and West Derby. After the passing of the resolutions, and the making of the order and warrants set out in the several documents hereunto annexed, the overseers of the said township of Everton made and collected a pound rate upon and from the occupiers and possessors of all property assessable to such rate within such township, for the amount of the watch-rate in such documents referred to and chargeable on the said township. Such rate has no title other than the printed heading (as in the extract annexed). "Watch-rate" was at the top of each page.

The declaration and allowance at the foot of such rate are as follows:—"We, Thos. Bird, Geo. McConnell and Joseph Cafferata, the persons specially appointed to act, execute and perform the duties of overseers within and for the township of Everton, for, in and about the making, laying and raising and collecting therein the watch-rate for the year ending on the 31st of March 1859, do declare the several particulars specified in the respective columns of the foregoing rate of the district No. 2 to be true and correct so far as we have been able to ascertain them, to the which end we have used our best endeavours.

"THOS. BIRD, } Overseers
"GEO. MCCONNELL, } of the township
"JOSEPH CAFFERATA, } of Everton."

"We, Richard Shiel and Samuel Holme, Esqrs., two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the borough of Liverpool (one whereof is of the quorum), do consent and allow of this assessment. Witness our hands this 23rd day of Oct. 1858.

"RICHD SHIEL,
"SAML. HOLME."

The rate is made in three parts, or districts, and the foregoing declaration and allowance appear at the foot of the book of each part or district.

The overseers, by whom the said watch-rate was made and levied, were the overseers of the poor of the township of Everton, appointed under 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, and the 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, s. 21, or one of them; and they as such overseers were the proper officers, under the statutes relating to the levying of watch-rates in boroughs, to make and levy the said watch-rate. The statement contained in the declaration, signed by the overseers at the foot of the said watch-rate, that they were overseers specially appointed for the purpose of making, levying and collecting the said rate, was not the fact, but was an incorrect statement. B. B. Wadham is charged and assessed in such watch-rate with and in the sum of 5s. 4d., which sum he paid on the 17th Nov. 1858.

The overseers of the poor of the township authorised and employed the collector of the poor-rates to collect the said watch-rate on their behalf, and which he did. An extract from the poor-rate books for the years 1857 and 1858, and of the watch-rate of 1858, are hereunto annexed, and may be referred to as part of this case. The said B. B. Wadham resided in the said township of Everton, in a house in Conway-street, in the said township, for forty days and upwards after he had paid the said proportionate part of the said poor-rate of the 10th day of April 1858, and the said watch-rate; but his tenancy of the said house in Clarence-grove had expired, and he had ceased to be the occupier thereof prior to the completion of such forty days' residence.

Upon the above grounds, or some of them, the pauper was ordered to be removed from South Stoneham to Everton, and the latter township having appealed against the order, the parties agreed to state this case.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the pauper's husband acquired a settlement in Everton. If he did acquire such settlement, then the order is to be confirmed; if not, it is to be quashed.

Huddleston (Field with him) for the respondents.—The first question is, whether the pauper's husband gained a settlement in Everton by the payment of the poor-rate. The law remains the same as when enacted by the 3 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 6, viz., the inhabiting in a parish and paying his share towards the public taxes or levies of the parish will confer a settlement, with this addition imposed by the 6 Geo. 4. c. 57, that the payment must be in respect of renting a tenement. But one poor-rate for the year is made in Everton, and of that year the pauper's husband remained in the occupation of the tenement seven months only, and the parish officers recognise his occupation by the act of charging him only fourteen shillings out of the twenty-four shillings, being the proportion for the period of his occupation. This is sufficient to gain a settlement: (R. v. St. Marylebone, 15 Q. B. 399; S. C. 19 L. J. 201, M. C.; R. v. Bromley, Burr. S. C. 75.) [CROMPTON, J.—Can we say upon the words of the 3 Will. & M. that he has paid what he was charged with? COCKBURN, C.J.—As to this first point, this poor-rate was payable in præsentia, and the pauper's husband did not pay it, but only a part, and therefore no settlement was acquired by such payment.] The second question is, whether the payment of the watch-rate, with a residence of forty days, is sufficient. The question upon this is, whether the watch-rate is a rate within the meaning of the words "public taxes or levies of the said town or parish," in sect. 6 of the 3 W. & M. c. 11. The watch-rate is levied under sect. 84 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76 (Municipal Corporation Act), and 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 81, and for the purposes of the borough being collected by the parish officers: (R. v. Christchurch, 8 B. & C. 663.)

Aspinall (Temple with him) contended that the payment of the watch-rate did not give a settlement.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that no settlement was gained by the payment of the poor-rate. The rate was one made for an entire year, and was payable by one payment in præsentia. Instead of so paying it the husband of the pauper waited seven months, and then paid a part only by some arrangement with the overseers. Now that will not do under the statute. He must pay the whole rate as his share. But I think that he did gain a settlement by payment of the watch-rate. I do not agree, that if a man is assessed to two rates entirely distinct, and he pays the one and not the other, that he is not entitled to his settlement. The main question is, whether this watch-rate is a parochial tax? After some consideration, I think that it is. The town council are to make a rate on the borough to meet the expense of watching. They make a resolution that such a rate is to be made, and they call upon the overseers to levy it. Then the Act requires that the overseers shall make and levy the rate. Now it seems to be admitted that if that rate, levied by the usual officers, had been to levy over the whole borough, it would have been a parochial tax. It is essentially a parochial tax, to be levied by parochial officers, and is a public tax of the town or parish within the statute of William and Mary. The only difficulty is in the fact that the rate is not to be wholly levied on the whole of the borough. But does this make any difference? I think not. The object of the statute was to prevent a person coming into a parish clandestinely, and gaining a parish settlement. It makes no difference whether the whole borough contributes or only a portion.

REG. v. GEO. PRICE LLOYD AND OTHERS.

Quo warranto—Relator—Question of existence of corporation.

The court will grant a quo warranto information at the instance of a private relator when private rights are interfered with, although the result may be that the existence of the corporation may be called in question.

This was a rule calling upon Geo. Price Lloyd, Owen Richards and John Jones to show cause why an information in the nature of a quo warranto should not be exhibited against them to show by what authority they claimed a right to exercise the offices of mayor and bailiff of Bala, in Merionethshire. The rule had been obtained on the ground that Bala was not a corporation. It appeared by the affidavits that a meeting was held at Bala in 1859, when certain old charters some centuries old were produced and read, and it was then determined to revive the borough, and Geo. P. Lloyd, Owen Richards and John Jones were respectively elected the mayor and bailiffs, and an officer was appointed to collect tolls in the market and public streets.

V. Williams now showed cause against the rule.—The only act alleged in the affidavits is the collecting of tolls, but the payments referred to were in the nature of stallage, not tolls. Notice was given that persons occupying stalls in the public streets would be called upon to pay in proportion to the space they occupied: such a charge is legal: (Mayor of Northampton v. Ward, 2 Strange, 1238.) [COCKBURN, C.J.—The payments were taken as of right of the supposed corporation—is the soil in them?] If a wrong is done to an individual the person injured has his remedy. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The thing is too plain for discussion. They say the right in us is as a corporation.] The relator Price states that he lives within a mile of Bala, and that he is the owner of land in the town, and of land adjoining thereto; he is not a burgess or inhabitant of the town. If his property is affected he has his remedy, but this taking of stallage is in no way detrimental to his property. It is discretionary with the court to grant or withhold a quo warranto information, even where a good objection to the title is shown: (Rex v. Parry, 6 Ad. & Ell. 810.) [CROMPTON, J.—We must be careful we do not let any stranger interfere, but Mr. Price cannot be said to be a stranger. HILL, J.—Are we on a motion for a quo warranto to try disputed facts? They must be put on the record and tried. COCKBURN, C.J.—An old charter may be good, or it may be mere moonshine; surely that is a question to be tried.] Not at the instance of a private individual; it may be the duty of the Attorney-General. [HILL, J. referred to Rex v. Ogden, 10 B. & C. 230. Walsby referred to R. v. Carmarthen, 2 Burr. 869.] An information in the nature of a quo warranto will not lie in a case such as this: (R. v. Marsden, 3 Burr. 1812; 1 W. Bl. 579; R. v. Taylor, 11 Ad. & Ell. 949.) [HILL, J.—The true test is, whether the franchise claimed is purely of a private nature, or of a right which will interfere generally with the public interest: (R. v. Ogden.)] The stat. 9 Anne, c. 20, applies only to corporate offices in corporate places; it must be shown that there is a corporation in existence. Reg. Gen. M. T. 1839; Reg. v. M'Kay, 5 B. & C. 640, were also referred to [COCKBURN, C.J.—May not a corporation be dissolved by the death of the whole of the persons holding office without removal or re-election; and, if so, can any persons come at any time afterwards and say, we are the mayor and burgesses, we are the corporation?]

Walsby, contra, was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—This rule should be made absolute. It is not necessary to decide whether, if a private individual were to come forward to try the right of a corporation as an aggregate body, the court would allow a quo warranto to issue without the intervention of the Attorney-General; but precedent and authority clearly show that the right of individuals may be questioned in a case where private rights are interfered with, although the result may be that the existence of the corporation may be called in question. It is quite enough to say that what we now do is quite in accordance with the cases, which fully authorise us to order the rule to go in this case. Here there had been no corporation for several centuries; suddenly persons come forward and say they will reinstate the corporation, and they proceed to exercise the powers and duties of corporate officers. I can't imagine a more fit case for the information. Rule absolute.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF WARWICKSHIRE.

Poor-rate—Occupation—Beneficial—Matter of appeal.

The question of occupier or non-occupier of premises rated to the poor-rate may be raised before the justices on application for a distress warrant; but if the person who is the visible occupier objects that his occupation is not beneficial, that is matter for appeal to the quarter sessions.

Hayes, Serjt. showed cause against a rule calling on the justices of Warwickshire to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, directing them to issue their warrant of distress to levy a poor-rate assessed upon Mr. Newsome in respect of a house at Leamington, of which he was the occupier. The rule had been obtained at the instance of the overseers of Leamington, the justices having refused to issue a warrant, being of opinion that there was no beneficial occupation. It appeared by the affidavits that Mr. Newsome was the occupier of a house, orchard and garden. He was the executor of a relation, the Rev. Clement Newsome, on whose death the principal part of the furniture was sold in May, but an old servant was left in the house to take care of it, and certain articles of furniture were selected by him and remained on the premises for his use, but they belonged to Mr. Newsome. There were fruit-trees and vegetables in the garden, which appeared to have been cultivated. The question here is, whether the house was empty or not—was there any occupation? The question, whether the occupation is a rateable occupation or not, is always a matter of action: (Milward v. Caffin, 2 W. Black.) The case was heard before the justices, who came to the conclusion that there was no beneficial occupation, and refused their warrant. [COCKBURN, C.J.—This is an occupation surely, whether beneficial or not; the question of rateability is not one for the sessions.] No; the question of amount is only for the sessions. The party rated may show the justices that he is not a rateable occupier: (Amhurst v. Somers, 2 T. R. 372; 1 Nolan's P. L. 4th edit. 256.) This court will not interfere where the justices have heard and exercised their judgment upon the application: (R. v. Morgan, 618; R. v. Benn, 6 T. R. 198.) In such a case the court will not grant a mandamus to compel them to decide differently and issue warrants. If the justices had not heard the case, the proper application would have been that they should hear and adjudicate. [COCKBURN, C.J. referred to Marshall v. Pittman, 9 Bing. 595.]

REG. v. THE MAYOR, &C. OF MANCHESTER.

[Q. B.]

CROMPTON, J.—That case was confirmed by Overseers, &c. of Birmingham v. Shaw, 10 Q.B. 868; both those cases are dead against you.] The question before the justices was rateable occupation or no rateable occupation; they have considered and decided, and the question of rateability can only be raised by action; the amount is the question for the quarter sessions: (R. v. Painter, 3 E. & B. 328; R. v. Denman, 3 E. & B. 672, were also cited.)

Ribton, contra, was not called on.

COCKBURN, C. J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute, although there may be some conflict of authorities. The last decision is The Overseers of Birmingham v. Shaw, which adopts Marshall v. Pittman, and that case established that whenever there is a beneficial occupation the property is to be rated, and whenever one who is the visible occupier objects that his occupation is not beneficial, the objection is a matter which must be inquired into before a court of appeal. It is at the quarter sessions that the owner must seek his remedy, and if he does not do that we cannot help him. If a man lock up his house and go away, he might say he was not in actual occupation; but if there be occupation, and the question is whether it is beneficial or not, that is matter of appeal. The distinction is obvious: a man cannot be rated unless he is an occupier, and when the occupation is doubtful, and there is some occupation, but whether a rateable one or not is disputed, that is a question for the quarter sessions on appeal. Now here there was an occupation; the party occupied by his servant, and there was property liable to be rated. If his answer was, there was an occupation, but not such a one as is liable to be rated, that is a question for the quarter sessions. That is the effect of the late decisions, and I think a very proper one. The courts are anxious to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction, and I think the distinction is very properly taken. It would be inconvenient to give jurisdiction to justices in petty sessions as distinguished from quarter sessions. R. v. Morgan, cited by my brother Hayes, is in his favour; but The Overseers of Birmingham v. Shaw is of later date, and, in my opinion, is a sounder view of the question.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. We have often decided lately that, when justices have acted, we will not allow matter to be set up which is matter of appeal; to that there has been an exception, viz., when there has been no occupation, which question may be raised in an action. R. v. Justices of Birmingham has decided that occupation or no occupation is for the justices, and that is the most correct view, and I should be sorry to disturb it; and the question of rateability or not of the occupation is for the sessions. That is distinctly laid down in that case, which adopts Marshall v. Pittman. I entirely agree with the rule of law as laid down by Lord Denman; he says (10 Q. B. 881): "As soon as the land is shown to be in the parish, and A. B. to be the occupier, the case is prima facie brought within the statute of Elizabeth, the rate on its face is good, and jurisdiction attaches; whether that prima facie case can be answered by any circumstances affecting the character of the occupation is matter to be determined by the court of appeal on appeal made."

REG. v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF MANCHESTER.

Turnpike-road—Non-repair—Indictment—Apportionment of fine—3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 112.

Part of a footway adjoining a turnpike-road was gravel and part paved for convenience of walking, and it was taken as a fact, paved to the necessary extent for practical purposes, although on each side of such pavement a part of the footway remained gravelled:

Held, that it was a question of fact whether this was a pavement or paved footway within the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 112; and it being left to the court, the court held that it was practically such, and that, therefore, the trustees were exempted from liability to repair it by reason of sect. 112.

Rule nisi calling on the trustees of a turnpike road passing through the township of Chorlton-in-Medlock, to show cause why a fine of 49l. 8s. should not be apportioned between the inhabitants of the township and the trustees of such road.

It appeared that an indictment for non-repair of a footway adjoining a turnpike-road leading from Manchester to Buxton had been preferred against the Mayor, &c., of Manchester (the township of Chorlton-in-Medlock being within the borough of Manchester), upon which they had been convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of 49l. 8s., the amount necessary to satisfy the repairs. The footway adjoining varied in breadth, from 2½ yards to 3½ yards, and along the centre a flagged stone pavement, of one yard in width, was laid down for the public convenience. The remainder of the footway on each side of the pavement was gravel.

Welsby showed cause.—The only question is, whether that portion of the footway on which there is a flagged stone pavement was a pavement within the meaning of the Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 112, so as to exempt the trustees from liability, and cast it upon the township. The 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 110, empowers the court to apportion the fine between the inhabitants of the parish, township, or place, and the trustees of the turnpike-road. Sect. 111 empowers the trustees to make and repair causeways for the use of foot passengers upon the side of the turnpike-road. And sect. 112 provides that nothing in the Act contained as to the making or maintaining any causeway or footway shall empower the trustees to lay down, continue, repair, or maintain any pavement, or any paved or pitched causeway or footpath, but every such pavement, paved or pitched causeway or footway shall be made, repaired and maintained at the costs of the inhabitants of the town, &c., or by such other persons as shall be liable to make, maintain and repair the same. It is submitted that this was a paved footway within that section. The parties are desirous of having the opinion of the court.

Monk and Mellish in support of the rule.—This is a footway partly paved and partly gravel, and therefore does not fall within sect. 112. [HILL, J.—Sect. 110 seems only to refer to indictments for non-repair of highways being turnpike-roads, and not to footways or causeways adjoining the roads.] In Loveridge v. Hodson, 2 B. & Ald. 602, it was considered that, by the 111th section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, the footway did form part of the turnpike-road.

COCKBURN, C.J.—This is a question of fact. Is this a pavement or a paved footway or not? A certain portion of the footway is paved, and a certain portion not. It would be extremely inconvenient to divide it into two portions, one of which is to be repairable by the parish or township and the other not; and the better course is to consider the whole as a paved footway, and then it follows that the trustees are not liable to repair it by the 112th section of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126.

CROMPTON, J.—This is a question of degree, and I think that we must take it that it was a paved footway to the extent that was practically necessary for the public to walk upon it. The consequence is, that the burden of repairing it will be thrown on the township, and not on the turnpike trustees.

REG. v. FOX.

Indictment—Certiorari—Costs—Prosecution instituted by town council.

A prosecution was directed to be instituted by the town council of a municipal borough, and two members of the council instructed the attorney who conducted it and rendered themselves liable for the costs to him. The defendant removed the indictment by certiorari, entering into the usual recognisance:

Held, that the two councillors were entitled, by the 5 Will. & M. c. 11, to costs from the defendant on conviction.

Rule nisi calling on the defendant to pay to the prosecutors the costs of the prosecution and proceedings in error.

The defendant, being clerk to the justices of the borough of Newport, was convicted on an indictment under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102, charging him with being interested in certain fees received by his partner, Charles Prothero, the clerk of the peace for the county, on the prosecution of offenders committed from the borough for trial at the quarter sessions for the county. The indictment was removed by certiorari into this court on the usual recognisance required by the 16 Vict. c. 30, s. 5, and the defendant afterwards brought error upon the judgment, and the Court of Ex. Ch. affirmed the judgment. Previous to the indictment a quo warranto was applied for against the defendant, with the view of removing him from his office of clerk to the borough justices, on account of his said partner being interested in the prosecutions, but this court held that a quo warranto would not lie. On that occasion Messrs. Shepherd and Townsend, members of the town council, became the relators, but the costs of the defendant on the quo warranto were paid by the town council. It further appeared that the prosecution of the defendant was directed by the town council, and sanctioned by a public meeting of the burgesses. Messrs. Townsend and Shepherd instructed the attorney for the prosecution, and, no doubt, had rendered themselves liable to him for the costs.

Phipson showed cause. — Messrs. Townsend and Shepherd are merely nominal prosecutors, the town council being the real prosecutors, and the question is, whether mere nominal prosecutors are within the 16 Vict. c. 30, s. 5, which requires the recognisance on removal of an indictment by certiorari to contain a provision that the defendant in case of conviction shall pay to the prosecutor his costs incurred subsequent to the removal of such indictment. Under the 5 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 3, the prosecutor must be some "person aggrieved" to entitle him to the costs; and in R. v. Cook, 1 Man. & Ry. 526, it was held that when the costs are defrayed by subscription, and the nominal prosecutors incur no expense, they are not entitled to costs as prosecutors within 5 Will. & M., c. 11, s. 3: (see also Gray on Costs, 457.) If the town council can legally contract, they have done so in this case with the attorney for the prosecution. In R. v. Wilson, 1 E. & B. 597, the costs of an indictment by order of the Lord Mayor and prosecuted by the city solicitor, and removed by certiorari, were held not recoverable under the 5 Will. & M. c. 11, s. 3.

Welsby, in support of the rule, was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—This case falls within the principle that has been acted upon, and Messrs. Townsend and Shepherd were persons aggrieved within the meaning of the 5 Will. & M. They authorise their names to be used and made themselves responsible for the costs. There is not the slightest reason for saying that they were put forward for the purpose of protecting persons in the background.

CROMPTON, J.—The case of Arnold v. Mayor of Poole, 4 M. & G. 860, shows that the parties who give the instructions to the attorney, make themselves liable to him. This case is similar to R. v. Williams, 6 Q. B. 273. Rule absolute.

Attorney's bill of costs—Taxation—Settlement in account—Application within a month—Taxable items.

Cooke Evans moved to refer the bill of costs of Fredk. Patey Chappel, an attorney, to the master for taxation. An application had been made to Martin, B. at chambers, who made an order giving leave to the attorney to add items; that order was abandoned, and had not been drawn up. It appeared that Chappel had acted as attorney for Hy. Emly Ellis, the applicant, in obtaining a loan, and he sent in a bill of costs to the amount of 30*l*. 13*s*. The attorney on the balance of accounts owed a large sum to Ellis, and he gave him a promissory note for 520*l*., there being a memorandum at the bottom of the account, signed by Chappel, that the settlement of account was without reference to any dispute arising on the question of the amount of the bill of costs. The bill was delivered on the 15th March, the settlement of the account was on the 16th, and the order of Martin, B. was within a month of the delivery. It was now contended that the learned baron had treated this settlement of account as a payment of the bill—that there was no discretion in the judge, but that it was imperative on him to make the order if the application was made within the month of delivery: (6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, ss 37, 41.)

ELLIS v. WOODBRIDGE.

Duty of surveyor of parish—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50—Leaving public bridle and footways.

In an information under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, against the surveyor of a parish for not putting up posts across a public bridleway and footway at its extremities:

Held, that he was not bound by the Act to do so.

This was an information against the surveyor of the parish of Pinner for not putting up posts at the entrance of a bridleway in his parish. The following case was stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, for the opinion of this court.

At a petty session of the peace, holden in and for the division of Gore, in the county of Middlesex, on Wednesday the 17th Aug. 1859, before us the undersigned, being justices acting in and for the said county and division aforesaid, one Jason Woodbridge was charged in and by a certain information, "for that, on the 29th July last, at Pinner, in the said county, he being then and there the surveyor of the highways of Pinner aforesaid, did then and there wilfully neglect his duty as such surveyor by not putting up posts on a certain bridleway and footway leading from Pinner to Eastcott, to secure the same from being passed over and spoiled by waggons, wains, carts, or carriages, the same being a public bridleway and footway only, contrary to the form of the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, whereby he had rendered himself liable to a penalty of not exceeding 5*l*." And the said parties respectively being then present, the said information was duly heard by us, and upon such hearing we adjudged that the said information should be dismissed with costs.

And whereas the said John Ellis hath, pursuant to the provisions of the statute first hereinbefore mentioned, given us notice and required us to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and grounds of our determination upon the hearing of the said information, in order that he might take the opinion of the Court of C. P. thereon.

Now we the said justices, pursuant to such notice and the provisions of the statute aforesaid, do hereby state and sign such case as follows:—

At the hearing of the said information the informant cited the 5th section (the interpretation clause) of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, which enacts, "That the word 'highway' shall be understood to mean all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriage-ways, cartways, horseways, bridleways, footways, causeways, churchways and pavements."

And also the 24th section of the said Act whereby it is enacted, "That the surveyor of every parish shall, with the consent of the inhabitants in vestry assembled, secure horse causeways and foot causeways by posts, blocks, or stones fixed in the ground, or by banks of earth cast up or otherwise, from being passed over and spoiled by waggons, wains, carts or carriages, at the cost of the parish."

And also the 81st section of the same Act, whereby it is further enacted, "That if any gate across any public cartway shall be less than ten feet wide, or any gate across any public horseway shall be less than five feet wide clear between the posts thereof, then and in every such case, upon notice in writing from the surveyor to the person to whom the gate shall belong, left at the dwelling-house of such person or his steward or agent, requiring him to enlarge the same, if such person shall neglect for the space of twenty-one days after such notice shall have been left as aforesaid to remove or enlarge such gate, he shall forfeit a sum not exceeding ten shillings for every day he shall so neglect to remove or enlarge such gate as aforesaid."

He, the said informant, also put in an extract from an award made by certain commissioners appointed in pursuance of the Act 43 Geo. 3, intituled "An Act for dividing, allotting and inclosing the open and common fields, commons and waste grounds within the parish of Harrow, in the county of Middlesex," who thereby set out a roadway in the words following:

"No. 65. Road to Eastcott.—One other private carriage-road and public bridle and footway of the breadth of twenty-five feet, branching out of the last described road (No. 641) and extending in a westward direction over the north side of Pinner-marsh to the extent thereof, and thence southward, and again westward, over Down-field, to a bridleway set out in the parish of Ruislip."

The situation of this private carriage-way and public bridleway and footway is in the hamlet of Pinner, in the parish of Harrow, and is of the width of twenty-five feet between the boundary-hedges of the land, that on the north side being of old inclosures, and that on the south side of land inclosed by the commissioners, and leads from a bye-road in the hamlet of Pinner to a bye-road in the parish of Eastcott.

Some years ago a small quantity of gravel was laid along the centre of it, of the width of six or seven feet, the remainder on each side being green sward. It is used as a cartway by the farmers going to and returning from their land abutting on each side. It meets and is joined at the boundary of the hamlet of Pinner by a public bridleway, duly set out by commissioners appointed by Act of Parliament, 44 Geo. 3, intituled "An Act for inclosing lands in the parish of Ruislip, otherwise Riselip, in the county of Middlesex."

It was also given in evidence by the informant that for the last forty years posts had been placed across the said public bridleway and footway at the end of the said private carriageway and at the boundary of Pinner and Ruislip at the point where it meets the public bridleway belonging to the parish of Ruislip, and that they had been put up from time to time at the cost of the hamlet of Pinner by the surveyor for the time being, and so maintained until about two years ago, since which time, for want of their restoration, the private carriageway and public bridleway and footway had been used as a public highway by persons travelling over them in carriages, to the detriment of the public bridleway and footway. On the part of the defendant it was admitted that posts had been from time to time put up at the boundary of the parish, but that about two years ago the then existing posts were forcibly removed; that they had been reinstated six several times at a considerable expense (on two occasions with iron posts), and as often destroyed; that a reward had been offered for the apprehension of the offenders, and every other step taken by him as the surveyor of the highways of Pinner to sustain the said road as a private carriage road and public bridleway and footway.

And, further, that men had been apprehended in the fact of cutting the iron posts asunder at midnight, and on being taken before the magistrates asserted that they had a right to the free use of the road in question for the whole width of twenty-five feet as a public footway; that they were exercising that right, and that the magistrates had therefore no jurisdiction.

The 80th section of the said Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, enacts "That the said surveyor shall, and he is hereby required to make, support and maintain, or cause to be made, supported and maintained, every public cartway leading to any market-town twenty feet wide at the least, and every public horseway eight feet wide at the least, and to support and maintain every public footway by the side of any carriage-way or cartway three feet wide at the least, if the ground between the fences including the same will admit thereof."

And whereas upon the hearing of the said information, we were of opinion that the 21st section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4 contemplates the erection of posts, &c. against footways, causeways and bridleways by the side of carriage-ways for the purpose of protecting them against injury or damage by waggons, wains, carts or carriages, and does not contemplate the erection of posts, &c. at the extremities of such ways for the purpose of protecting the carriage-ways, bridleways and footways from trespassers.

Secondly, that the said section does not intend the protection by posts of private carriage or other ways against trespassers from adjoining public ways.

Thirdly, that the commissioners acting under the Harrow Inclosure Act having set out a certain space of ground of the width of twenty-five feet as a public bridleway and footway, as well as a private carriage-road, without describing the boundaries of each, it is not competent to the surveyor of highways to determine such respective boundaries by erecting posts at the extremities of such ways.

Fourthly, that the public claiming bonâ fide a right of user of the entire way, it was a question of title, and consequently we had not jurisdiction.

For these reasons we dismissed the complaint.

Whereupon the judgment of the said Court of Common Pleas is required as to whether or not we the said justices were correct in point of law in our determination as aforesaid, or as to what should be done in the premises.

Karslake for the appellant.—By sect. 24 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, the surveyor is bound to secure the public bridleways and footways by posts and stones, which he has not done here.

J. A. Russell, for the respondent, was not called on.

ERLE, C.J.—In this case I am of opinion that the decision of the justices was correct. Where public bridleways and footways have been raised, which is common in various parts of England, the surveyor of the parish is bound to mark them out with posts or stones, so that carts cannot go out of their own road on to them. The Legislature has devoted a part of a road for walking and riding upon, but it never intended that the entrance was to be stopped in the way that the surveyor is here called upon to do; and if any one did enter upon it with a waggon or carriage, an action of trespass would prevent him from doing so again. If the posts were only put up at the end of the road, there would be nothing to prevent any one entering on it at the side; but I do not think that the surveyor is bound to put up anything at the entrance, for if so he might put up a bank at the end, which might to some people be very inconvenient.

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The construction to be put upon the statute must be in reference to what may usually happen, and not in reference to waggons, the owners or drivers of which may choose to commit an act of trespass.

PRICE v. TAYLOR.

Building society—Trustees of—Signing promissory note as such—Personal responsibility.

The defendant gave to the plaintiff a promissory note, heading the note with the name of a building society, and adding after his name thereto subscribed "trustee." In an action against the defendant upon the note, he pleaded that it was made by a certain building society, whereof he was a member with others; that it was not made by him otherwise than as such member; and that divers persons were trustees and liable by virtue of the Acts of Parliament in that behalf to be sued as such upon the contracts of the society. To this plea there was a demurrer: Held, that the plea was bad, and the defendant personally liable on the promissory note he had so signed.

Action by the payee against the maker of a promissory note, of which the following is a copy:—

"Midland Counties Building Society, No. 3.

"Birmingham, March 12, 1858.

"Two months after demand in writing we promise to pay Mr. Thomas Price the sum of one hundred pounds with interest after the rate of six pounds per cent. per annum, for value received.

"100*l*.

"W. R. HEATH, } Trustees.

"JOHN TAYLOR, }

"W. D. FISHER, Secretary."

The declaration also contained counts for money lent, interest, and on account stated.

Plea to the whole declaration, that the several contracts in the declaration, and each and every of them, were made and entered into by a certain building society, whereof the defendant and divers other persons at the time of the making of the contract were and are a Building Society, duly established under and by virtue of the provisions of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, for the regulation of building societies and all the other statutes in that behalf, members; that is to say, the No. 3 Midland Counties, the rules of which society were duly certified, &c., and all other matters and things required by the statutes duly performed in pursuance of the statutes to constitute the society a building society within, and subject in all respects to, the provisions of the Acts; and the contracts were not, nor was any or either of them, made by the defendant otherwise than as a member of the society, together with the other members, and that at the time of the commencement of this suit divers persons were trustees of the society duly appointed in all respects as required by the Acts and by the rules of the society, and liable by virtue of the Acts to be sued as such upon all the contracts of the society.

(a) The point decided by this case is of considerable importance, and may be briefly stated thus. The 24th section of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, directs the surveyor to secure horse causeways and foot causeways by posts, blocks, or stones fixed in the ground, or by banks of earth cast up or otherwise from being spoiled by waggons, wains, &c. The question was, whether this required the surveyor to erect, or to keep erected, posts across a road, asserted to be only a horse causeway, so as to prevent carts and carriages from going over it. The magistrates by whom the case was tried, determined that no such duty was incumbent upon the surveyor, and that the posts, &c., designed by the Act were to be erected by the side of causeways, so as to keep vehicles or horses, &c., from going from their own proper causeway to the other. And the court held this interpretation of the Act to be the right one.

Demurrer to the plea.

Quain for the plaintiff.—The plea is clearly no answer to the action. By the 1st section of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32 (the Building Societies Act), the building society is authorised to make rules and regulations for its government, and by sect. 3 may be made to provide forms of conveyance, &c., or other instruments which may be necessary for carrying the purposes of the society into execution. Sect. 4 incorporates the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40 (the Friendly Societies Acts). The 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 11, enacts that the trustees or treasurer may give bonds, and in the 21st section that the effects of the associations are to be vested in the trustees or trustee for the time being, and they are thereby empowered to bring actions, &c. Yet there is no provision containing any express or implied power to the trustee of a building society to borrow money upon promissory notes, or to bind such societies by issuing them; the very objects to be attained by a building society, if such were the case, would be frustrated, and it is wholly against the intention and spirit of the Acts. On the face of the note, it purports to be made by the defendant personally; it is for value received—money lent, in fact—and there is nothing whatever to exempt him from being personally liable: (Mare v. Charles, 5 E. & B. 978; Healey v. Story, 3 Exch. 3; Pankivill v. Connell, 5 Exch. 381.) There is a count in the declaration upon the account stated, and the plea can be no answer to that.

Gray, contra, for the defendant, in support of the plea.—The question is, whether this plea is not an answer to the action. The plea states in substance that the contracts on which the defendant is sued were made and entered into with the building society, of which the defendant was a mere trustee only. That upon the pleadings must be now taken to be true. Does the law allow such contracts? By the Acts of Parliament referred to the building society is empowered to make rules for its own government, and it may have made a rule enabling the trustees to raise money by promissory notes. Trustees have in conducting the affairs of the society many duties to perform, such as bringing actions, defending suits, and the like—is-suing shares, if considered expedient, before subscriptions are paid up; and for any of these purposes it may be requisite to borrow money to carry on the business of the society. Steward v. Greaves, 10 M. & W. 711, and Forbes v. Marshall, 11 Exch. 166, were referred to.

Quain, in reply, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The judgment of the court must be for the plaintiff. The plea means nothing more than this: that what professes to be the contract between the parties was not so in reality, but something else. The defendant does not deny the form of the contract, as stated in the declaration, but contends that it does not render him personally liable. I think it does, and that it is not competent for him by a plea to say that a written document means something different from what it purports. If there had been any circumstances in the case to show that the defendant had entered into an engagement which he did not intend, or by mistake, it might in former times have given rise to the application for the equitable interference of the court, or form now grounds for an equitable plea; but it is not open to him by plea to say that his contract meant something different to what it professes to mean. He has given his own promissory note for the money borrowed, and it appears to me he is personally liable upon it.

PRICE v. TAYLOR—SHORT v. HUDSON.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. The way to ascertain the meaning of a written document is to read it; and with respect to promissory notes in particular, the following rule, stated by Bayley, B. in his Treatise on Bills of Exchange, 6th edit., p. 79, is the correct rule, and has been so considered ever since I have been connected with the profession:—It is this, "Where a bill or note is drawn by an agent, executor, or trustee, he should take care, if he mean to exempt himself from personal responsibility, to use clear and explicit words to show that intention." The question therefore here is, does the defendant show that he is not personally liable? So far from it, I think he shows that he is personally liable. [The learned Baron read the promissory note.] Every word of the plea may be true, and yet this action maintainable. The plea states that the contracts sued on were made by a building society, whereof the defendant and divers other persons were members—that is to say, the No. 3 Midland Counties Building Society. If that is meant as contradiction to the written document, it is no contradiction to it at all. But the plea goes on:—"The contracts were not, nor was any or either of them, made by the defendants otherwise than as members of the society, together with the other members." I do not see how that makes any difference, and it seems to be a very clear case.

BRAMWELL, B.—I think our judgment should be for the plaintiff on this demurrer, but I do not quite agree that the case is so very clear. The first thing is to ascertain the proper meaning of the document sued on. It says, "Two months after demand in writing we promise to pay Mr. Thomas Price the sum of 100*l.* with interest after the rate of six per cent. per annum, for value received," and is signed by two persons who put against their names that they are trustees, and a third who puts his name that he is secretary. The natural view of the matter is that these persons bind themselves and no one else. It is true they describe their own offices in the company, but do not undertake for any one but themselves. The difficulty I feel is this. I think, on the authority of Aggs v. Nicholson, 1 H. & Nor. 165, that if this promissory note were made by the defendant and taken by the plaintiff on the understanding that it was not to be binding on the defendant, but on some one else, it would bind none but those whom it was meant to bind. The defendant has not shown in his plea that this was a promissory note binding on the society and not on himself. I doubt if he could have said that, or proved it if he had said so, and I agree that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

WILDE, B.—I am of the same opinion. The promissory note on the face of it purports to bind those who signed it; the defence in substance set up is, they did sign it, but only as agents for some one else, that is to say, this building society. I do not think that is a sufficient answer. If any circumstances took place at the time to show that the defendant was not to be personally responsible—that might perhaps be a ground of equitable plea. Judgment for plaintiff.

SHORT (appellant) v. HUDSON (respondent.)

Turnpike tolls—Gatekeeper demanding payment twice on same day—Van carrying goods for pay, hire, or reward.

By the 10 Geo. 4, c. 59, "An Act to amend an Act of the 7 Geo. 4, for consolidating the trusts of the several turnpike roads in the neighbourhood of the metropolis north of the river Thames," it is by sect. 28 provided "that the tolls thereby made payable shall be paid on each of the said districts for every horse or beast drawing any stage coach, van, caravan, waggon or other carriage conveying passengers or goods for pay, hire, or reward, for each time of passing along any of the roads in that district."

A general carman was applied to for a van and two horses to remove some goods from Hammersmith to London. He sent the empty van and horses on their way to Hammersmith, through a side-bar turnpike toll-gate on that trust, to which the above Act of Parliament applied, and the servant man then and there paid the proper legal toll of 9*d.* On the return of the van laden with the goods the same day from Hammersmith to London, the collector of tolls at the Norland-hill turnpike-gate, on the same trust, demanded payment again (notwithstanding the ticket of passing and payment of the toll on the same day was then shown to him), saying a van carrying goods for pay or reward must pay each time of passing. The toll was then again paid, but under protest, and the collector summoned before the police magistrate of the district, who adjudged him to pay a penalty and costs. Upon appeal to this court:

Held, that the conviction of the toll collector was right, as the van employed as stated was not, under the circumstances, a van carrying goods for pay, hire, or reward within the meaning of the 28th section.

This was an appeal from the decision of a police magistrate, who had convicted a turnpike-gate keeper for demanding and being paid a toll which it was said he had no right to receive. Short, the appellant, was a collector of tolls at the Norland turnpike-gate, situate in the third district of the metropolis turnpike-roads, north of the river Thames, in the parish of Hammersmith, Middlesex, and on the 24th Nov. 1859 he demanded of a servant of Hudson the sum of 9*d.* as toll for a van drawn by two horses, the property of Hudson, then passing through the gate, the servant having previously, on the same day, paid the toll due for the same, and when the second sum of 9*d.* was demanded by Short, the servant produced to him a ticket denoting the payment of the toll for the said van and horses, and claimed to be exempt from the payment of any further toll by reason of the previous payment. The police magistrate at Hammersmith convicted Short, and adjudged him to pay a penalty of 2*s.* 6*d.* and costs, 40*s.* The toll collector being dissatisfied with such decision, gave due notice of appeal, and the following case was stated for the opinion of the court:—

The respondent is a bonded and general carman, and proprietor of vans and carts on contract or job.

The appellant is the collector of the tolls at the Norland toll-gate.

On the day named in the summons the respondent's van and two horses were hired to remove some household furniture from Hammersmith to London.

John Kinton, a carman in the employ of the respondent, was sent from London with the van to remove the said furniture from Hammersmith, and upon his arrival at the Black Lion toll-gate (which is in the same district as the Norland gate) with the said van empty, the collector there demanded and received the sum of ninepence, being the toll payable for a van drawn by two horses. A ticket was given to Kinton, denoting the payment of the said toll, who then proceeded on his journey, and subsequently on the same day returned with the same van and horses through the Norland gate, the van being then laden with the said furniture, and at the same time produced to the appellant the ticket which he had previously received, and claimed to be exempt by reason of such previous payment; but the appellant insisted upon the toll being again paid. The appellant having appeared upon summons before me to answer to the respondent, admitted that he demanded and took the toll upon the return of the van, but that he was justified in doing so under the provisions of the Acts regulating the metropolis turnpike-roads north of the river Thames.

The said roads are regulated and governed by two Acts of Parliament; the one passed in the seventh year of the reign of Geo. 4, intituled "An Act for consolidating the trusts of the several turnpike-roads in the neighbourhood of the metropolis north of the river Thames;" and the other passed in the 10th year of the same reign, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the seventh year of his present Majesty for consolidating the trusts of the several turnpike-roads north of the river Thames, and to make and maintain two new or branch roads to communicate with the said metropolis roads."

The tolls payable on the said roads upon their first formation, under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 142, were those contained in the second schedule to that Act; but by the 17th section of 10 Geo. 4, c. 59, such tolls were to cease to be payable from and after the 1st Jan. 1830, a fresh scale being provided by the 19th and subsequent sections of the last-mentioned statute; the 18th section of which divides the roads into districts for the purpose of collecting tolls. It is admitted that 9*d.* is the legal toll payable for a van and two horses in the district in question.

By the 25th section 10 Geo. 4, c. 59, it is enacted as follows:—"Provided always, and be it further enacted, that when the toll by this Act authorised to be taken shall have been once paid in either of the aforesaid districts for or in respect of any horse or other beast, cattle, or other stock, no further toll shall be demanded or taken during the same day (except in the cases hereinafter mentioned) for or in respect of the same horse or other beast, cattle, or other stock, at any other gate or bar within the same district, or on returning or repassing through the same gate or bar."

By the 28th section it is enacted, "Provided also and be it further enacted, that the tolls hereby made payable shall be paid on each of the said districts for every horse or beast drawing any stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon, or other carriage conveying passengers or goods for pay, hire, or reward, for each time of passing along any of the roads in that district."

The 6th section of the 7 Geo. 4 extends the powers and provisions of the General Turnpike Acts (except as the same are by that statute expressly varied, altered, or repealed) to all the roads mentioned and described in the first schedule annexed to the said statute of 7 Geo. 4.

The respondent contended that toll having been paid for the van at the Black Lion gate on its journey to remove the furniture, he was exempt under said 25th section from the payment of any further toll on that day at any toll-gate situate within the district in question.

The appellant contended that he was justified in demanding and taking a second toll upon the return of the van, on which occasion the horses came within the 28th section as drawing any "van conveying goods for pay, hire, or reward," to which mode of employment there is attached a liability to pay every time of passing along the road.

Whereupon I determined that the appellant was guilty of the said offence, and convicted him as aforesaid, upon the ground that he was not justified in demanding a second toll on the same day for the said van and horses, the said van employed as aforesaid not being a stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon, or other carriage carrying goods for pay, hire, or reward, within the meaning of the said 28th section.

If the court be of opinion that the appellant was not legally entitled to demand or take the second toll, then the conviction to be confirmed. But if the court be of a contrary opinion, then the conviction to be quashed.

Given under my hand this 26th day of March, at the police-court aforesaid.

(Signed) C. O. DAYMAN.

Huddleston, Q. C. appeared in support of the order of the magistrate.—This is an appeal under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and the question is, whether a collector of turnpike tolls is justified in demanding a second toll of a man who had gone through the toll-gate, or a side-bar toll-gate within that turnpike trust, before on the same day when he paid the toll, with two horses and an empty van, should he pay a second time, when he afterwards, and on that day, returned with the van laden. It depends upon the construction to be put on the 10 Geo. 4, c. 59. Sect. 25 says that when the toll, by this Act authorised to be taken, shall have been once paid in either of the aforesaid districts for, &c., no further toll shall be demanded or taken during the same day (except in the cases hereinafter mentioned), for or in respect of the same horse, &c., at any other gate or bar within the same district, or on returning or repassing through the same gate or bar, &c.; and by sect. 28, "that the tolls hereby made payable shall be paid on each of the said districts for every horse or beast drawing any stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon or other carriage, conveying passengers or goods for pay, hire, or reward, for each time of passing along any of the roads in that district." The principle throughout the Acts appears to be, that if a party has paid once in the day he is not to be called upon to pay again except in the case of stage-coaches, or other like carriages plying for hire, and conveying passengers each way. The learned police magistrate, Mr. Dayman, determined that the appellant was guilty, and convicted him upon the ground that he was not justified in demanding a second toll on the same day for the van and two horses, the van so employed not being a stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon, or other carriage carrying goods for pay, hire or reward, within the meaning of the said 28th section; and the toll having been paid at the Black Lion gate for the van (when going empty) and horses on the journey to remove the furniture, the respondent was exempt, under the 25th section, from the payment of any further toll, on that day at any toll-gate situate within the same trust or district, because he does not come within the terms of the exception afterwards referred to in the 28th section of that Act. (He was then stopped.)

Joyce (Lery with him), contra, for the appellant, was called upon.—The toll collector was justified in demanding and taking a second toll upon the return of the van, on which occasion the horses came within the 28th section, as drawing a van conveying goods for pay, hire, or reward, to which mode of employment there is attached a liability to pay every time of passing along the road: in fact it comes within the very words of the section. It was a van conveying goods for pay and reward, and the 28th section says the tolls thereby made payable shall be paid for every van conveying goods for pay or reward for each time of passing along such roads. The van and horses were hired for the express purpose of conveying the owner's goods from Hammersmith to London. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The hire was for the use of the waggon, not for the carriage of goods.] Any carriage hired to convey goods, and going empty to fetch such goods, is liable to the payment of the toll when so going upon these roads, and upon the return of such carriage laden a second toll is payable. The van of the respondent was a carriage employed in conveying goods for hire, within the meaning of the 28th section, and therefore liable to the payment of toll both upon going and upon returning. The 27th and 29th sections were also referred to, showing that hackney coaches and post-chaises are to pay each time of passing with a fresh hiring.

BENNETT v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that the decision of the police magistrate in this case was quite right, and that the conviction should be confirmed. This conveyance does not come within the terms of the 28th section of the Act of Parliament 10 Geo. 4, c. 59. The word "stage" used there shows, to my mind, very clearly what the clause means. Stage-coaches, &c. conveying passengers for hire shall pay for each time of passing along any of the roads; but I do not think it was the intention of the Legislature, or the object of the Act, that an empty cart paying once for going through the gate should be compelled to pay again returning laden on the same day: it was not a stage van or waggon within the terms of the Act. The pay was for the use of the waggon, in respect of that particular owner, not for the carriage of the goods. The owner of the vehicle was not a carrier of goods, he was the letter out of a van. The Act applies to carriages conveying goods for hire, and not as here, where this vehicle was expressly engaged for the carriage of the goods.

MARTIN, B.—I also think it is clear that the respondent was not subject to pay this double toll, for when the 10 Geo. 4 is looked at, it shows very plainly what was intended. The 26th section says that horses drawing different carriages on the same day through the gate shall pay each time of passing. Sect. 27, that any postchaise or other carriage is to pay each time of passing with a fresh hiring. Sect. 29, the same as to hackney coaches, chariot, or cabriolet, that they shall pay each time of passing with a fresh hiring. And the 28th section, upon which reliance is placed for imposing the tolls, was, that the toll shall be paid for every horse, &c. drawing any stage-coach, van, caravan, waggon, or other carriage conveying passengers or goods for pay, hire, or reward, for each time of passing; but this does not come within the terms of that clause, for it was nothing more than sending a van and two horses out to Hammersmith to bring a load of goods from there into London. The goods being at Hammersmith, a van was sent out there to bring them in. The contract was for the removal of the goods with the van, and this was not a van conveying goods for hire as intended by the 28th section.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am also of opinion that the police magistrate, Mr. Dayman, was right, and right for the reasons he has himself given in the case stated for us to determine.

WILDE, B.—I am of the same opinion. On the words of the Act, I think the van and horses employed for the removal of this furniture were not liable to the double toll; and I agree with the Lord Chief Baron to render them so it should be a stage-coach, van, or carriage conveying passengers or goods for hire, which this was not; it was a contract or an engagement on the part of the owner for the removal of a certain quantity of furniture.

Judgment for the respondent, with costs.

April 27 and 30.

BENNETT v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Plaintiff convicted of felony after action—Defendant paying money into court—Plaintiff discontinuing and accepting sum paid into court—Right to costs after conviction for felony.

The plaintiff brought an action to recover the value of goods alleged to have been sent by him to the defendants to be safely carried and delivered, but which were lost by the defendants, or never delivered by them. The defendants paid 10s. into court in satisfaction for the hampers in which the goods were said to have been sent, and pleaded the general issue to the residue of the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff was afterwards convicted of felony. The defendants then pleaded this by a plea puis darrien continuance. The plaintiff confessed it, accepted the 10s. paid into court, and took it out in satisfaction of his claim, and signed judgment for the costs of the action.

Upon motion to set aside the judgment so signed, or to stay all further proceedings in the suit:

Held, that the plaintiff was by the 23rd rule of Hilary Term Rules 1853, and the 22nd and 23rd rules of pleading under the C. L. P. A., entitled to sign judgment for the costs.

This was an action brought to recover from the railway company the value of certain hampers of boots and shoes represented to have been sent by the plaintiff on the defendants' line of railway, and by them lost. The defendants believing that no such goods had been sent at all by the plaintiff, applied for and obtained an order of a learned judge for particulars of such goods, with the invoices for same, &c. After a good deal of delay and much trouble, some kind of particulars were supplied. The defendants subsequently pleaded, first, the general issue; and, secondly, payment of a sum of 10s. into court for the hampers. Afterwards the plaintiff was indicted for receiving stolen goods, tried and convicted, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour. Defendants then pleaded puis darrien continuance, a plea stating the conviction, &c. The defendant or his attorney confessed that, then accepted the 10s. out of court in satisfaction of the cause of action, and entered a nolle prosequi to the rest of the claim, and signed judgment for the costs of the action. A rule nisi was then obtained by the defendants to set aside the judgment, or to stay all further proceedings in the cause.

Geo. Brown showed cause. — The plaintiff was entitled to take the 10s. out of court, and sign judgment for the costs of the action. The 23rd rule of Hilary Term 1853 says in reference to "discontinuance," "to entitle a plaintiff to discontinue after plea pleaded, it shall not be necessary to obtain the defendant's consent, but the rule shall contain an undertaking on the part of the plaintiff to pay the costs, and a consent that if they are not paid within four days after taxation defendant shall be at liberty to sign judgment of non pros.;" and by the 22nd rule of pleading under the C.L.P.A., "a plea containing a defence arising after the commencement of the action may be pleaded, together with pleas of defence arising before the commencement of the action, provided that the plaintiff may confess such plea, and thereupon shall be entitled to the costs of the cause up to the time of the pleading of such first-mentioned plea." 23rd. When a plea is pleaded with an allegation that the matter of defence arose after the last pleading, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to confess such plea, and shall be entitled to the costs of the cause up to the time of pleading such plea. [POLLOCK, C.B.—The plaintiff has been convicted of felony since the money was paid into court. Has it not now become the money of the Queen? His rights are forfeited to the Crown.] It is submitted not; besides the attorney might have a lien for his costs.

Phipson in support of the rule. — It is not shown here that the plaintiff's attorney has or claims any lien, and it must be taken, therefore, that none exists. The rule of court must have a reasonable construction. In Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown it is said that after a conviction of felony all choses in action go to the Crown, with the exception of the rights, perhaps, in respect of personal injury. Here the plaintiff was convicted after the defendants had pleaded in the action.

REG. v. JOHN DAUBENEY HIND.

[C. CAS. R.]

This was an action originally brought by the plaintiff against the railway company to recover the value of certain goods alleged to be in certain packages delivered to the railway company; the company pleaded to the action. They pleaded, first, that they were not guilty, and they paid 10s. into court, with reference probably to the baskets or hampers that were supposed to contain goods. The real defence was, that the whole affair was an imposition, the object of the plaintiff being to recover the value of goods which in fact were never sent. After the 10s. was paid into court, it appears that the plaintiff was indicted and found guilty of receiving goods knowing them to be stolen, and having been convicted and sentence passed upon him, the attorney who conducted the cause, with or without the assent of the plaintiff (and it does not matter which), stayed the action; that is, he took the money out of court, and then an application was made by Mr. Phipson to plead puis darrien continuance the conviction of the plaintiff, whereupon, the plea being perfectly true, the defence arising after the commencement of the action being so pleaded, and being perfectly true, the plaintiff confessed the plea, and then applied for the costs of the cause up to the time of pleading the plea puis darrien continuance under the 22nd rule of the pleading rules, under the authority of the C. L. P. A. Mr. Phipson then moved for a rule to show cause why the action should not be stayed, and judgment had been signed, and he moved to set it aside and stay the proceedings. We are of opinion that the 22nd rule clearly contains this case in its expressions, and it is impossible for us to deal with it otherwise. I believe the judgment of all my learned brothers is to discharge Mr. Phipson's rule, the 22nd rule, is this: "A plea containing a defence arising after the commencement of the action may be pleaded together with the pleas and defences arising before the commencement of the action: provided that the plaintiff may confess such plea, and thereupon shall be entitled to the costs of the cause up to the time of pleading such first-mentioned plea." The course which the defendants have taken in this case seems to all of us to make this rule applicable. It may be possible, it is even probable, that there may be some foundation for the defence which was suggested on the part of the railway company. Perhaps there is not much injury done to a man who is now suffering punishment after a conviction for receiving goods knowing them to be stolen; there is not much injustice done to him in supposing that it is possible that the demand on the part of the plaintiff may have been a fraud upon the company; but if that were so, the course that the company should have taken would have been to persist in their defence, and to show that the fact was so; instead of which they retire behind the plea, merely saying that the man was convicted, and therefore the right of action, though the action itself does not go to the ground, the right of action does. If he has a title to claim from the company damages in respect of these goods supposed to have belonged to him, there is no doubt it belongs to the Crown. The company, instead of meeting the matter upon the merits, get rid of the action by saying, "Well, now, you are a felon convict, and your interest in those goods has passed to the Crown, and you can no longer support the action." If the company will resort to that plea, puis darrien continuance, which is no doubt perfectly true, the plaintiff has a right to say "It is true, I cannot longer maintain it," but if you plead a plea which does not actually go to the merits, but merely says I cannot longer sustain it, there is no injustice in saying, if that be so you must pay the costs up to the time of pleading that plea. We therefore think Mr. Phipson's rule must be discharged.

MARTIN, B.—I think it would be wrong if we de- from the plain words of the rule because we may suspect there has been fraud in the matter; and it is much better to act upon the rule.

Rule discharged with costs.

REG. v. JOHN DAUBENEY HIND.

Evidence—Dying declaration—Admissibility.

Upon an indictment for feloniously using certain instruments upon the person of a woman, with intent to procure a miscarriage, the dying declaration of the woman is inadmissible.

The rule laid down in Mead's case, 2 Barn. & Cres. 608, "that evidence of this description is only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death the subject of the dying declaration," recognised and adopted.

Case reserved by Keating, J. for the opinion of this court.

John Daubenev Hind was tried before me at the last assizes for the county of Gloucester, and convicted upon an indictment charging him with feloniously and unlawfully using certain instruments upon the person of one Mary Woolford, deceased, with intent to procure the miscarriage of the said Mary Woolford.

On the trial, a dying declaration of the said Mary Woolford was tendered in evidence on the part of the prosecution, and objected to on the part of the prisoner, upon the ground that the death of Mary Woolford was not the subject of the inquiry.

I received the evidence, but reserved the question as to its admissibility, and respite the execution of the sentence until the Court of Criminal Appeal should pronounce its decision upon the point: (see R. v. Baker, 2 M. & Rob.)

If the court should be of opinion that the evidence was not admissible, then the judgment is to be reversed, inasmuch as without the evidence of the dying declaration of Mary Woolford the prisoner could not have been convicted.

If the court should think the evidence admissible, then the judgment is to stand.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Carrington for the prosecution.—The only question is, as to the admissibility of a dying declaration upon a charge of using instruments upon the person of a woman, to procure a miscarriage. On the part of the prosecution it is submitted that such declarations are admissible in all cases where personal injury has been sustained. In Rex v. Hutchinson, 2 Barn. & Cres. 608, n., where the prisoner was indicted for administering poison to a pregnant woman with intent to procure abortion, evidence of her dying declaration was rejected (Bayley, J.), because the woman's death was not the subject of inquiry. In Rex v. Baker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 53, where the prisoner was indicted for the murder of A., by eating poisoned cake, Coltman, J., after consulting Parke, B., admitted the dying declarations of another party who also died in consequence of eating some of the cake, but whose death was not the subject of the indictment. McGregor's case in the Court of Session, Scotland, 16 State Trials, 29, was also cited.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In this case we are all of opinion that the dying declaration of the woman was improperly received in evidence. The rule we are disposed to adhere to, is to be found laid down in Rex v. Mead, 2 Barn. & Cres. 608. There Abbott, C.J. said, "The general rule is, that evidence of this description is only admissible where the death of the deceased is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death the subject of the dying declaration." Speaking for myself, I must say that the reception of this kind of evidence is clearly an anomalous exception in the law of England, which I think ought not to be extended.

Conviction quashed.

REG. v. CHARLES HALLIDAY.

Evidence—Husband and wife—Wife implicated but not charged—Admissibility of husband.

The prisoner was indicted for obtaining money from the trustees of a savings bank, by falsely pretending that a document produced by the wife of D. had been filled up by D.'s authority; and in another count for conspiring with the wife of D. to cheat the bank. D.'s wife presented the document, which had been fraudulently filled up at the instance of the prisoner, and obtained the money, and afterwards eloped with the prisoner. D.'s evidence was necessary to show that he had given no authority, but it was objected to, on the ground that it implicated his wife:

Held, that D.'s evidence was admissible, as the wife was not charged upon the indictment.

Case reserved for the opinion of this court by Byles, J.

The prisoner was indicted for obtaining from the trustees of the Swansea Savings Bank a sum of 60*l.*, by falsely pretending that a certain document produced to the bank by Eliza Thomas, the wife of Daniel Thomas, had been filled up by the authority of D. Thomas, the depositor, and was a genuine document.

There was a second count founded on another false pretence, by which the prisoner was alleged to have obtained by another document, produced by the said E. Thomas, a further sum of money.

There was a third count for a conspiracy between the prisoner and E. Thomas to cheat the savings bank.

It appeared that an authority to receive the money had been filled up by another witness at the instance of the prisoner; that E. Thomas, the wife of the depositor, had presented it and obtained the money; and that the prisoner had afterwards eloped with E. Thomas. On the apprehension of the prisoner a large sum of money was found in his possession.

The evidence of D. Thomas, the depositor, was essential to the prosecution, in order to show that he had given no authority to fill up the document, or to withdraw the deposit.

It was objected, on behalf of the prisoner, that, although the wife of D. Thomas was not included in the charge, yet he was not an admissible witness to prove her guilty of a conspiracy, nor even to prove the counts for false pretences: (see Reg. v. Gleed, 2 Russell on Crimes, 983.)

I thought his evidence admissible on all the counts.

In deference, however, of the high authority of Littledale and Taunton, JJ., I reserved the point and suggested that the counsel for the prosecution should consent to a verdict of acquittal on the last count.

The counsel for the prisoner then objected that an acquittal on the last count was inconsistent with a verdict of guilty on the first count.

The jury, however, found the prisoner guilty on the first count, and not guilty on the second and third counts.

I reserved these questions:—First, whether the husband's evidence was properly received in proof of the first count; secondly, whether there is any necessary inconsistency in the finding on the first and third counts.

The prisoner's sentence was deferred, but the prisoner remains in custody.

No counsel appeared either on the part of the prosecution, or the prisoner.

The judges retired to consider the case, and on their return into court,

POLLOCK, C.B. said:—The question is, whether the evidence of the husband was admissible, his evidence tending to show that his wife was acting unlawfully and criminally. On this indictment the wife was not charged at all, but she was involved in the conspiracy charged in the third count. Though that is so, it does not prevent the husband's evidence from being admissible. We are also of opinion that the acquittal of the prisoner on the third count, does not necessarily involve any inconsistency with the conviction on the first count.

Conviction affirmed.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE CORPORATION OF THETFORD.

Costs—Borough fund—Charging order.

By a decree, made on the hearing of an information against a corporation, the defendants were ordered to pay the relator his costs of such information. An advowson belonging to the corporation had been sold, under the powers of the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and the amount of the proceeds stood to the credit of the corporation at the Bank of England:

Held, that the relator was entitled to have a charging order for the amount of these costs upon this fund.

In the year 1859 an information had been filed by a relator against the corporation of Thetford, for the purpose of having the proper application of certain sums arising from the navigation funds and tolls of the borough, levied by the corporation in aid of the borough fund, and to pay off a mortgage-debt which had been secured upon certain properties belonging to the corporation. In November of that year a decree had been made, making certain declarations, and amongst other things ordering that the relator should be paid his costs of the information. A fund was now in the bank to the credit of the corporation, and in the names of four of the town council, arising from the sale of an advowson belonging to the corporation under the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.

In April last the relator had obtained from this court an order nisi, charging the fund in court to the extent of a sum of 66*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, the amount of the relator's taxed costs.

This was an application to have such order nisi made absolute.

C. J. Shebbeare, for the relator, contended that, under the 2nd section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, he was entitled to have the fund so standing to the credit of the corporation charged with the amount of his costs, which had been so taxed in pursuance of the decree.

Bevir, for the corporation, contra, urged that the remedy of the relator for his costs was by bill in equity against the corporation, and as the fund was standing in the names of the four town council as trustees for the navigation belonging to the corporation, and not specifically to the credit of the corporation in their corporate capacity, the 92nd section of the Municipal Corporation Act applied. The claim of the relator was not therefore "upon the real and personal estate of the body corporate by virtue of a proceeding in equity" as mentioned in that clause. He cited Reg. v. Bridgewater, 10 Ad. & Ell. 282; Reg. v. Mayor of Leeds, 4 Q. B. Rep. 790; Reg. v. Passmore, 10 Ad. & Ell. 281; Ex parte Corporation of Hythe, 4 Yo. & Coll. 55.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said he could make the order absolute. The proceeds of the advowson sold by the corporation was clearly the property of that corporation. In his opinion the saving clause in the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 92, was intended to reserve any rights which could have attached against the real or personal estate of the corporation by virtue of any proceedings at law or in equity. The trust created by the Act would, as to the borough fund, prevent any such application but for such saving clause. It had been contended that the proper construction of this clause required the relator to file his bill in equity against the corporation in their corporate capacity, but he could not assent to this narrow construction of the clause. For the purposes to which, according to that construction, the clause was alone intended to be applied, no saving clause would have been necessary. The Legislature could not have intended that no claims which would have been lawful before the passing of the Act, and would have prevented the property being handed over and added to the borough fund, should be saved by this clause unless enforced by a suit in equity for that purpose. The decree having declared that the relator was entitled to the costs of the information, the property of the corporation was immediately attachable upon the amount of such costs being ascertained, and it was liable to satisfy such a demand. Here there had been a suit against the corporation in which they had appeared to defend their corporate rights. This case, therefore, was exactly within the saving clause, and the relator was entitled to have his claim for costs satisfied out of this fund, before it was added to the borough fund for the general purposes of such fund.

Charging order made absolute.

KNOX AND ANOTHER v. SHEPHERD.

Building society—Administrator of deceased member—Liability for fines—Prohibition.

A building society's rules provided for the settlement of disputes by arbitration. After the death of a member of the society, certain fines and subscriptions became due, for which the trustees sued his administrator in the County Court.

Held, that the administrator was a member of the society, and had been so treated by them, and this court made absolute a rule for a prohibition to the County Court to restrain proceedings, that the dispute might be settled by arbitration under the rules.

Hayes, Serjt. showed cause against a rule for a prohibition directed to the County Court judge of Clerkenwell to restrain him from proceeding further in this case. It appeared that the plaintiffs were trustees of the North London Benefit Building Society, and in that capacity had issued a plaint against the defendant as administrator of his father, a deceased member of the society. The 14th rule of the society provided that, "in case of the death of any member, his executors or administrators shall be entitled to his share or shares, and may vote and act in all cases whatever as fully as the deceased member, whom they represent, might have done if living." The deceased T. Shepherd was an original member of the society, and holder of two shares; he died in Jan. 1855, and some time after the defendant called at the office of the society and produced letters of administration granted to himself, and the deceased's club-book, showing his payments to the society, in support of his title as administrator under the above rule, and from thenceforth he acted and was treated by the society as the legal representative of the deceased. At the death of the father there was nothing due from him to the society in respect of his subscription or fines; his payments covered his liability and left a few shillings over. Defendant had received no money from the society, but he might have done so had he pleased. On the 8th

Aug. 1859 defendant gave notice to withdraw the shares held in the society by his late father. The sum sought to be recovered was for subscriptions and fines due between the death of the deceased member and the notice of withdrawal. By the 22nd rule of the society it was provided, that "in case of any dispute between any members of the society, or the trustees or the board thereof, such dispute shall be referred to arbitration, pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27." The County Court judge had given judgment for the plaintiffs. It was now contended that this was not a dispute between the members of the society; the defendant is not sued as a member." The 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, incorporates the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and applies the provisions of Friendly Society Acts to building societies; and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27, provides that rules shall be made directing how disputes shall be settled. This society had made a rule, No. 22, that "in case of any dispute between any members of the society, or the trustees or the board thereof, such dispute shall be referred to arbitration, pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27." A particular tribunal is thereby established, no doubt; but this is not such a dispute as the rule refers to. Here the defendant is sued as administrator for certain liabilities of a deceased member, and he denies that he is a member; the father of the defendant was an original member of the society, and was liable to pay contributions. There is a rule that the administrator may take the shares of a deceased party; and the claim is for subscriptions and fines due, and credit has been given for sums received. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Must not the rule be held to embrace members and persons claiming under them?] The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, does not treat of these societies; it does not repeal the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32. The mere repeal of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, by 18 & 19 Vict. does not take that statute out of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, into which it was incorporated: (Cutbill v. Kingdom, 494.) If there is no rule made under the Act which is applicable to the case, the common law jurisdiction is not taken away. [BLACKBURN, J.—This is not quite the case of a man claiming under a member.] Kelsall v. Tyler and others, 25 L. J. 153, Ex.; Reg. v. Trafford, 26 L. J. 95, Q. B. were cited.]

Collier, Q. C. (Hance with him).—The trustees of the society have treated the defendant as a member, and he has so acted. The defendant claimed to withdraw; these payments had accrued due since the deceased's death.

COCKBURN, C. J.—The society have adopted the defendant as a member, and they so treated him, for they fined him. The father paid everything up to his death, and this action is for sums accrued due since. The rule makes the administrator liable, but fines and subscriptions can be claimed from him only as a member. As an administrator he is not subject to the rules, but he has availed himself of them to come in and become a member, and if he is a member the dispute must be settled by arbitration. Rule absolute.

Commons Inclosure Acts—8 & 9 Vict. c. 118—15 & 16 Vict. c. 79, s. 13—1 & 2 Vict. c. 71—Ancient inclosures—Rights of parties interested in—When such rights not barred.

Land which has been inclosed by a party more than twenty years before the day of the first meeting for the examination of claims under an inclosure award is not liable to be dealt with by such award without the consent of the party interested; and the rights of such party are not affected by the fact of such inclosed land being included in the map and the award of the commissioners, and by his not having taken any steps upon the subject.

Where, therefore, such land was so included in the map and award, and the party interested took no steps upon the subject, but refused to give up possession, and the valuer applied to justices for a warrant of possession, and the justices refused to grant such warrant upon the ground that the land in question was "ancient inclosure," and was not subject to be inclosed without consent:

Held, that the justices were right, and that the party interested might effectually object at that stage of the proceedings.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, as follows:—

"At an adjourned petty sessions of her Majesty's justices of the peace, held in and for the division of Paignton, in the county of Devon, on the 19th Jan. 1860, a complaint in writing was made under the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79, s. 13, by the appellant, the valuer appointed and acting in the matter of the inclosure of the commons and waste lands in the manor of Brixham, situate in the parish of Brixham, in the county of Devon, against the respondent, an occupier holding over and detaining a portion of land used as garden ground, and alleged to be within the limits of the said common. On the part of the appellant, evidence was given of his appointment as valuer, and that the piece of ground occupied and held over by the respondent was originally an encroachment on the said commons, and included in the map of the commons annexed to the provisional order for the said inclosure, under the seal of the Inclosure Commissioners; that no claim in respect thereof, or in reference thereto, was made by the respondent before or delivered to the appellant as such valuer or otherwise, at the several times or places by him appointed and notified for such purpose; that the valuer had duly allowed the majority of the claims that were so made by other parties, and that the land occupied by the respondent was included and allowed in such claims; and it was thereupon argued, on behalf of the said appellant, that the land so occupied and held over was an encroachment which, by being included in the provisional order, must thereby be "deemed to be parcel of the land subject to be inclosed," and therefore such as he was empowered to recover under the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79, s. 13. On the part of the respondent, the above facts were not disputed, but it was proved in addition thereto, that the said piece of ground had been inclosed for more than twenty years next preceding the day of the first meeting for the examination of claims, but that the fences thereof were during portions of such time in an imperfect condition, and that it had been so occupied by different persons not claiming directly from each other, or setting up any special title thereto; and it was therefore urged that the said inclosure was an ancient inclosure under the provisions of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, s. 52, and therefore such as by sect. 86 of the last-named Act, the valuer was not empowered to order to be inclosed without the consent in writing of the person interested therein, which said consent had not been given. We the said justices thereupon considered that the fact so proved before us, that the inclosure was an ancient one, was a sufficient answer to the complaint, and that it was not necessary that any claim thereto should have been set up before the valuer, but might be pleaded notwithstanding as a justification for so holding over, and that the respondent could not be dispossessed of the said piece of ground without his consent in writing first had and obtained. And we dismissed the said complaint. The appellant therefore applied to us the said justices to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Q. B. thereon on the grounds following:—

First, that the acts of the valuer were conclusive, and could not be questioned before the justices.

Secondly, that the said encroachment being included in the map annexed to the provisional order for inclosure by the commissioners, was thereby conclusively "deemed to be parcel of the land subject to be inclosed" within the meaning of the 13th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79.

Thirdly, that such provisional order being conclusive as to what land should be deemed to be subject to be inclosed, it was beyond the jurisdiction of the justices to hear any evidence as to the fact of its being an ancient inclosure, or any evidence in relation to such encroachment other than was required to prove the allegations contained in the said complaint.

Fourthly, that as the encroachment in question was included in the map annexed to the provisional order, the respondent was bound to have delivered a claim in writing to the valuer for any "right or interest he may have had or claimed in any land proposed to be inclosed" under sect. 47 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, or to have appealed against the decision of the valuer (appellant) in respect of such claims as were delivered to, determined on and allowed by the valuer under the 84th section of the last-named Act.

Fifthly, that the fences of the said piece of land having been kept in an imperfect condition during the twenty years next preceding the first examination of claims, and the said piece of ground having been occupied during the last-mentioned term by different persons not claiming directly from each other or setting up any special title thereto, the said piece of ground was not, therefore, an ancient inclosure within the meaning of sects. 52 and 86 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, but an "encroachment" within the meaning of sect. 50 of the said Act."

By sect. 25 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118 (the Commons Inclosure Act), upon application to the commissioners, they may direct an assistant commissioner to inquire into the expediency of the proposed inclosure, who by sect. 26 is to report upon the expediency, &c. of the proposed inclosure, whereupon by sect. 27 the commissioners may make a provisional order for the inclosure of the land. By sect. 33 a valuer is to be appointed to divide, set out and allot such land. Sect. 34 provides for the duties, &c. of the valuer. By sect. 47 any person claiming any common or other right or interest in any land proposed to be inclosed is to deliver such claim in writing to the valuer stating the particulars, and by sect. 48 such claim is to be heard by the valuer, who may allow or disallow the same, &c., and he is to make an order thereupon, which is to be final, unless the party dissatisfied shall give notice of his desire to have his claim determined by the commissioner or an assistant commissioner. By sect. 50 it is enacted that all encroachments and inclosures other than inclosures duly authorised by the custom of the manor which shall have been made by any person from or upon any part of the land proposed to be inclosed within twenty years next before the first meeting for the examination of claims shall be deemed parcel of the land subject to be inclosed, and shall be divided, allotted and inclosed accordingly. By sect. 52 it is enacted "that all lands which shall have been inclosed from any land subject to be inclosed under this Act for more than twenty years next preceding the day of the first meeting for the examination of claims in the matter of such inclosure, shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed and taken to be ancient inclosures, but not so as to carry any right of common," &c. By sect. 55 the valuer is to make a schedule of all claims and objections for public inspection, and there is provision for the rehearing of the claimants, and after that the rights of the parties may be tried by a feigned issue. By sect. 57 the determination of the commissioners is to be final if not disputed. The 11th section points out what kind of land is subject to be inclosed. By sect. 86 old inclosures may be allotted with the consent of the persons interested.

By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79 (Commons Inclosure Acts Extension Act) it is enacted that "when any person by whom any encroachment or inclosure of whatever value, which under the firstly recited Act shall be deemed to be parcel of the land subject to be inclosed, shall be actually occupied, shall neglect or refuse to quit and deliver up possession of the same, or any part thereof to the valuer," the possession of the same may be recovered by the valuer under the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74 ("An Act to facilitate the recovery of possession of tenements after due determination of the tenancy").

Coleridge appeared for the appellant (the valuer), and contended that the justices were wrong in their decision, upon the grounds severally set out in the case as stated: (Turner v. Blamire, 1 Dru. 402.)

Karslake for the respondent.—The question turns on, whether this encroachment was part of the land subject to be inclosed within the meaning of sect. 11 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118. Now, sect. 13 enacts that no part of the New Forest or of the Forest of Dean shall be land subject to be inclosed under that Act; and it is therefore, as it must be, admitted by the appellant, that if the map had included land which was part of those forests it would have been conclusive, and would have been binding; and the argument must go so far as to say that if private property had been included in the map, it would have been binding. It is urged that although this was an ancient encroachment, yet being included in the map, and the respondent not having appealed against its insertion, it must now be taken to be land subject to be inclosed. Sect. 52, however, takes ancient encroachments out of the jurisdiction of the commissioners, and it is only in respect of lands that the commissioners are authorised to deal with that an appeal is given. It lies on the commissioners to make out that this encroachment is part of the lands to be inclosed, and they cannot give themselves jurisdiction. The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, ss. 11, 12, 13, 16, 25, 27, 29, 39, 47, 48, 50, 52, 56, were referred to, and the case of Turner v. Bemaire, 1 Drew, 402, cited.

Coleridge, in reply, referred to Rees v. Davies, 4 C. B., N. S., 56.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment ought to be for the respondent. The question is, whether a party who has obtained by encroachment on land subject to be inclosed a right to the possession and property in the land at the time when the inclosure takes place, by not appealing against the award is bound by the award of the commissioners in consequence of his omission to appeal. It is admitted that there is no distinction between the case of land gained by encroachment and of an ordinary freehold obtained in a legal manner. When the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, is looked at, it is apparent that all the provisions of the Act relate to land not merely proposed to be inclosed, but subject to be inclosed, and it never could have been the intention of the Legislature to interfere with private property held by individuals, and not subject to rights of common. The Act first by sect. 11 sets forth the descriptions of land subject to be inclosed, and then the scheme by which they are to be inclosed. The parties interested in the lands subject to be inclosed and desirous of having them inclosed are to put the commissioners in motion, who are then to draw up the conditions of the proposed inclosure in an order, and to hear what may be alleged in favour of the inclosure, and any objections that may be urged against it. Having determined on the expediency of the inclosure a valuer is to be appointed and the claims are to be sent in, and the allotments are to be determined in respect of those claims. And then comes the provision as to appeals (sect. 48) by any person dissatisfied with the decision on his claim or on his objection to the claims of others. Sect. 52 enacts that all lands which shall have been inclosed from any land subject to be inclosed under the Act for more than twenty years, shall be deemed and taken to be ancient inclosures, and not part of the land to be inclosed under that Act. Sect. 56, is, I think, merely a sequel to the former section, which gave an appeal from the valuer to the commissioners, giving a further appeal from their decision. But this does not apply to the case of a person not in a position to prefer a claim, and who has not made any claim. There is no express provision, or anything by implication which touches this case, which does not properly fall within the Act. A man's private freehold, or land gained by twenty years' possession, is not within the list. Nothing short of a clear enactment will justify any interference with private rights, and if the encroachment has not been made within twenty years, the commissioners, by their acts, cannot give themselves jurisdiction. Our judgment must therefore be for the respondent.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question arises on a proceeding under sect. 13 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79, by the valuer to gain possession of an encroachment in the same manner as a landlord against a tenant holding over. The magistrates have jurisdiction under that Act in case only the encroachment is part of the land subject to be inclosed. There is a preliminary inquiry whether the encroachment is to be deemed part of the land to be inclosed, and unless it is, the valuer has no right to proceed under that section. Now, it has been argued that this has been conclusively determined by the map of the inclosure, and by no objection being raised by the respondent to the valuer's including the encroachment in the map. But it appeared to the magistrates that this was an encroachment more than twenty years before, and therefore, by sect 52 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, it is to be deemed an ancient inclosure, and not part of the lands to be allotted under that Act. The question then is, whether mere neglect to make the objection before the valuer will disentitle the respondent to object afterwards that this was not land subject to be allotted. It is only in case of encroachments within twenty years that the valuer would seem to have any jurisdiction. Here the whole encroachment was more than twenty years previously. It seems, therefore, to me that our judgment should be for the respondent.

BLACKBURN, J.—The commissioners must make the inquiry whether the encroachment was or was not within twenty years, but their decision will not give them jurisdiction in case the encroachment was really more than twenty years before.

Judgment for the respondent.

THE JUSTICES OF KENT (appellants) v. THE MAIDSTONE COMMISSIONERS (respondents).

Gaols—Rate—"Parliamentary or parochial"—Construction of words—When these words are words of limitation and when of amplification.

By a local Act for the town of Maidstone, commissioners were empowered to assess the property in the borough to a certain rate for the purposes of the Act, and all gaols and some other public establishments were also to be rated according to a yard running measure. By a section in a subsequent Act (54 Geo. 3, c. 104, s. 18), after reciting that it is expedient that the said county of Kent should be relieved and exonerated from any taxes in respect of any of the gaols, &c. of the said county, it is enacted that "no rate, tax, or assessment whatsoever, parliamentary or otherwise, shall be raised, assessed, or levied on or be payable by the said county of Kent for or on account of the said gaols, houses of correction and court houses, or any or either of them or any part thereof." The county gaol of Kent is within the borough of Maidstone, and the commissioners under the local Act assessed it as provided for by their Act. Upon a case stated for the opinion of this court, as to whether or not the gaol was liable to be assessed:

Held, that it was exempt, and that taking the whole of sect. 18 of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 104, together, the words "parliamentary and parochial" are not to be taken as words of limitation, but as words making the exemption as complete as possible.

This was a case stated by consent for the opinion of this court, as to the liability of the county gaol at Maidstone to be assessed to the local rate for the borough of Maidstone under the 31 Geo. 3, c. lxii. (local). By this statute ("An Act for regulating, &c. the town of Maidstone), it is enacted by sect. 8 that, for raising money for the purposes of the Act, the commissioners therein named are authorised to levy certain rates; and by sect. 13 the gaol at Maidstone and other public buildings are to be assessed at the rate of one shilling by the running yard.

By the 54 Geo. 3, c. 104, s. 18, it is enacted, "And whereas it is expedient that the said county" (of Kent) "should be relieved and exonerated from any taxes in respect of any of the gaols, houses of correction, and court houses of the said county. Be it therefore enacted that from and after the passing of this Act no rate, tax, or assessment whatsoever, parliamentary or parochial, shall be raised, assessed, or levied on or be payable by the said county of Kent, for or on account of the said gaols, houses of correction and court houses, or any or either of them, or any part thereof."

Under the first of the foregoing Acts the Kent county gaol at Maidstone was assessed to the local rate in the sum of 52*l.* 16*s.*, at the rate of 1*s.* per yard running measure, against which assessment notice of appeal was given on the ground of the contended exemption from rating contained in sect. 18 of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 104.

Deeds (Bovill, Q.C. with him) appeared for the respondents, and contended that the rate in question is neither a parliamentary or parochial assessment, and that, as the exemption in stat. 54 Geo. 3, c. 104, s. 18, is confined to assessments of those particular descriptions, the assessment in question upon the gaol is good: (Palmer v. Earith, 14 M. & W. 428; The Bedford Commissioners v. The Bedford Union, 21 L. J. 229, M.C.; Baker v. Greenhill, 3 Q. B. 148.) [CROMPTON, J.—The words "no rate, tax, or assessment whatsoever," these are very strong words, and if they had stopped there, no doubt could have arisen. You read the words "parliamentary or parochial" as words of limitation; they may, however, be used as words of amplification?—they may have been thrown in to show that the exemption is intended to apply to any kind of rate or assessment.] If the words had been "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever," the case would have been free from doubt: (R. v. Inhabitants of Christchurch, 8 B. & C. 660; Company of Proprietors of Waterloo Bridge v. Cull, 28 L. J. 70, Q.B.; 29 L. J. 10, Q.B.).

Barrow, for the appellants, argued that the gaol was exempt under the provisions of sect. 18 of the 54 Geo. 3, c. 104, for that the rate in question was sufficiently within the words and the intention of the Legislature, which clearly intended the exemption to be general, the words "parliamentary or parochial" being words of augmentation (Waller v. Andrews, 3 M. & W. 312), and that they should be taken in their proper and enlarged sense.

Deeds in reply. [CROMPTON, J.—The preamble to the section clearly shows that it was intended to relieve the gaol of all liabilities.]

COCKBURN, C. J.—I think judgment should be given for the appellants. If we were called upon to decide this case independent of authorities, we should have no doubt whatever as to the meaning of the 18th section, which seems to be entirely to exempt the gaol from any rates or taxes whatever, whether public or local. [His Lordship here read the section.] Mr. Deeds endeavoured to put on the words "parliamentary or parochial" such a construction as to make them words of limitation, and as, according to his view, this is neither a parliamentary nor a parochial tax, the gaol is not exempt. There are certainly some taxes which have not been deemed parliamentary, but these cases have turned upon the particular phraseology used by the Legislature. I think that this is a parliamentary tax; but, independently of this, the language of the section shows that the intention of the Legislature was to relieve such buildings as are erected for public purposes. The words are very large, and I cannot bring myself to doubt what was really the intention of the Legislature. Looking at the preamble of the section, and the words made use of, I think that the exemption is established.

WIGHTMAN, J.—If the words had stopped with the words "no rate, tax, or assessment whatsoever," there could have been no doubt; but the words "parliamentary or parochial" are introduced, and the question is, whether or not these words are words of restraint? It seems to me that they are not intended as words of limitation, but are introduced with the view of making the exemption as complete as possible. The object of the Legislature was an exemption from all rates whatever. The cases cited are not to be taken as authorities unless the facts are precisely the same, and the object of the Legislature obviously the same.

CROMPTON, J.—It is clear that the meaning of the Legislature was to relieve the county from all taxes of this nature. I think that, upon examining the cases cited, it will appear that they were decided upon the peculiar words in each, and without impugning any of them, I think, in this case, that the exemption has been shown to exist. The preamble shows what was the meaning of the Legislature, and we may fairly construe the subsequent words by that preamble.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The case turns entirely upon the construction to be put upon the words in the 18th section. Taking the object the Legislature had in view into account, I think the words sufficiently show that object.

Judgment for the appellants.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF THE COUNTY OF DURHAM, ex parte THE JUSTICES OF SUNDERLAND.

Quo warranto—Interference by justices in the exclusive jurisdiction of other justices.

A quo warranto information is not the proper proceeding whereby to try the right of one set of justices to interfere with the duties of another.

The justices of the county of Durham granted alehouse licences for alehouse keepers in the borough of Sunderland. The justices of the said borough claimed to have the exclusive right to grant such licences:

Held, that a quo warranto information was not the proper process whereby to try the right.

Manisty, Q.C. moved for a rule calling upon the justices of the county of Durham to show cause by what authority they claimed to grant licences to alehouse keepers in the borough of Sunderland. It appeared that both the justices of the borough of Sunderland and those of the county of Durham claimed to have the right of granting these licences, and licences for the town of Sunderland had been granted by the county justices. Both sets of justices were ready to have the question settled by this form of proceeding. [CROMPTON, J.—What do they usurp. Could you not try the question in an action? BLACKBURN, J.—Is your object merely to have the opinion of this court, or to take the question to a court of error?] It is to take it to a court of error. [WIGHTMAN, J.—All that it can be said the justices have done is, some act out of their local jurisdiction. Suppose under the Bastardy Act a justice not acting in the division in which the woman was residing were to grant a summons, could you have a quo warranto against him for it?] The justices are usurping an office by granting a licence for a place in which they have no jurisdiction. They grant the licence not as borough, but as county justices. [CROMPTON, J.—How upon such a proceeding can there be any judgment of seizure into the Queen's hands?]

COCKBURN, C.J.—We cannot apply a quo warranto to such a case. If it came to a plea, we could not give you judgment even if you are right, since there could be no judgment of ouster. You must try the question in some other form. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF RICHMOND, SURREY.

Justices—Interested—Waiver of objection—Malicious trespass—Assertion of a right.

The surveyor of the roads directed trestles to be put at intervals on either side of a road, on which fresh granite had been laid, to confine the traffic to a particular part of it. A. drove his carriage against the trestles to knock them down, in alleged assertion of a right, he deeming the surveyor to have no power so to put the trestles for this object. One of the trestles was injured, and on a summons against A., under the Malicious Trespass Act, the justices convicted and fined A. 1s.

By a local Act the justices were made vestrymen, and so became interested in the property in the trestles, and also in the fine:

Held, first, that the justices had jurisdiction to convict: and secondly, that in order to obtain a certiorari to quash the conviction on the ground of the justices being interested, the party should show on the face of his affidavits that neither he, nor his advocate before the justices, knew of the objection at the time of the hearing.

This was an application for a certiorari to remove a conviction of justices, whereby the applicant was convicted of wilfully injuring certain trestles on a highway near Richmond, Surrey.

The applicant resided at Richmond, and had frequent occasion to drive along the highway towards Petersham. On the occasion in question he was driving along the lower road, Richmond, when he found certain wooden stools or trestles put upon the road at intervals, on alternate sides, by direction of the surveyor of highways, the object of which was to compel those who drove to keep in the middle of the road, on which fresh granite had been laid down. Lord Huntingtower being under the belief that such obstructions on the highway were illegal, and being anxious to try the question how far they were justifiable, purposely drove against the trestles, and overthrew several of them. He did not intend to do any damage to them, but in one instance damage was caused by the trestle falling over. Lord Huntingtower afterwards went and informed the police of what he had done, and the object with which he had done it. The inspector summoned him before the justices, charging him with wilfully damaging certain trestles, the property of the vestrymen of Richmond. Having acted with the view of raising the legal question, his Lordship attended by his family solicitor before the justices, and stated the reasons of his conduct, and contended they had no jurisdiction, as his Lordship acted under a fair and reasonable supposition of a right.

The Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 24, enacts, that "if any person shall wilfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil, to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever, either of a public or private nature, &c., being convicted thereof before a justice of the peace, shall forfeit and pay such sum of money, &c.; provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party trespassing acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, but that every such trespass shall be punishable in the same manner as before the passing of this Act."

The justices, however, did not think the case came within this proviso, and convicted Lord Huntingtower of maliciously damaging and injuring the trestle, and ordered him to pay a fine of 1s.

Hansen, in moving for the rule, contended that Lord Huntingtower had acted only with a view to raise an important question, and that the slight damage that had occurred to the trestle was not done wilfully, but accidentally. The case fell within the proviso, and the justices had no jurisdiction. [CROMPTON, J.—The word "reasonable" is put in the proviso. Can you contend that there was a reasonable supposition of a right? This regulation of roads newly repaired is well known and generally understood, and it was not reasonable to disturb it. If there was an obstruction, the parties might have been indicted. Every person is not to be allowed to take the law into his own hands in this way.] There was no intention to damage the trestle. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Lord Huntingtower drove against the trestle, and so did unnecessary damage. The justices may have thought that not a right thing to do.] There is another objection; three of the justices present, and acting, were vestrymen of the parish, and so owners of the property injured. The fine also goes to the vestrymen. Under an old local Act the vestrymen are intrusted with the care and repair of the road. Lord Huntingtower was not aware of this disqualification of the justices at the hearing of the summons.

By the COURT.—On the ground of the three justices being interested, you may take a rule; but as to the other objection to the conviction there was some evidence that the applicant had not a fair and reasonable supposition of a right, and the justices had jurisdiction.

Cohen showed cause against the rule.—As to the objection of the justices being interested, I have an affidavit which states the belief of the justices that Lord Huntingtower knew that the justices resided in the parish of Richmond; and if so, it was not open to him to take the objection, for every one is presumed to know the law, and the local Act makes the resident justices, vestrymen ex officio. Dimes v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 3 H. of L. 759; Paley on Conv. 38; Reg. v. The Cheltenham Commissioners, 1 Q. B. 467. The maxim Consensus tollit errorem applies. [CROMPTON, J.—The maxim cannot apply to such a case as this, where the party does not really know of the existence of the disqualification, but only by a legal fiction.] Then it appears that the defence at the hearing of the summons was conducted by the family solicitor; and, although the solicitor, who resides in Richmond, makes an affidavit in support of the rule, it does not appear that he did not know of the objection.

Lusk and Hansen in support of the rule.—Although the solicitor resides in Richmond, his practice is in London; and if permission is granted, an additional affidavit will be filed, according to the fact, that he was not aware of the objection at the time of the hearing. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The objection taken is of a very technical nature, as it cannot be supposed that the justices could have been influenced by their infinitesimal

HILDRETH v. ADAMSON.

interest in this one shilling fine. The justices properly convicted Lord Huntingtower, for it was not necessary for him to drive against the trestle and knock it down in order to raise the question.] Then the question is, did Lord Huntingtower at the hearing consent to the interested justices acting? There is no evidence that either Lord Huntingtower, or his attorney, knew of the objection. The local Act was an old one, and is out of print. [CROMPTON, J.—It is quite consistent with the materials before us, that his attorney knew all about the Act.] Even if the attorney knew of the objection and said nothing, still that does not amount to acquiescence in the interested justices deciding the case. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Acquiescence by the advocate is acquiescence by the principal.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the objection cannot be sustained, and that this rule must be discharged. The party now objecting is bound to show that at the time of the hearing of the summons neither he, nor his representative who conducted his defence, knew that the justices were interested. It was not necessary that the attorney should deny knowledge of the fact, if the party's non-affidavit stated it. But in the present case Lord Huntingtower makes an affidavit, and denies knowledge on his part, and the attorney also makes a long affidavit; and it nowhere appears that the attorney was ignorant of the objection at the time of the hearing of the summons, though it might well be that he, an attorney residing in Richmond, knew of the local Act affecting its management, by which the justices were made vestrymen and became interested in the fine. The objection is strictissimi juris, and as there is no objection to the conviction on the merits, this rule must be discharged.

The rest of the Court concurred. Rule discharged.

HILDRETH (appellant) v. ADAMSON (respondent).

Waterworks Clauses Act, s. 59—Public fountains.

A local board of health, being proprietors of waterworks, may supply a public fountain gratuitously for a limited purpose, and a person taking the water for another purpose is liable to a penalty under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 59.

Although a fountain erected on a highway may be a nuisance, the water with which it is gratuitously supplied remains the property of the person supplying it, and cannot be taken for any other purpose than that for which it was supplied.

The appellant in this case was the secretary to the local board of health of Darlington. He had laid an information against the respondent, that he, the respondent, on the 23rd Nov. 1859, did unlawfully take water from a certain fountain belonging to the local board, he not having agreed to be supplied with water by the said board, contrary to the Darlington Local Board Act 1854. A gentleman had presented two fountains to the town of Darlington, one of which was erected in a public street, and was gratuitously supplied with water by the local board as owners of the waterworks, for the use of cattle in the cattle market on market days, and for horses, if yoked, when passing to and fro. The respondent, a horsekeeper, had a stable in the town, but instead of having water laid on and supplied to the stable and paying the water-rate to the local board, he was in the habit of driving his horses to the fountain in question to drink, and for this the present information was laid against him by the direction of the local board. Other persons had taken water from the fountain for other purposes than those for which it was supplied, and a notice was in consequence published for them to desist from doing so. To this notice the attention of the respondent had been called, but he persisted in taking the water. The justices dismissed the information, on the ground that the erection of the fountain on the public highway was an obstruction of the road and a nuisance, and that they could not limit the supply to the purposes mentioned.

Keane for the appellant.—The private Act by which the Darlington Local Board of Health is constituted, incorporates the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), of which the 59th section enacts that "every person who, not having agreed to be supplied with water by the undertakers, shall take any water from any reservoir, watercourse, or conduit belonging to the undertakers, or from any cistern or other like place containing water belonging to the undertakers, other than such as may have been provided for the gratuitous use of the public, shall forfeit to the undertakers for every such offence a sum not exceeding ten pounds." The respondent is liable to a penalty under this section. The magistrates say that the local board has no right to erect a fountain in the public streets, and that if they do, it must be for the gratuitous use of all mankind, so as to bring the case of the respondent within the words "other than for the gratuitous use of the public." The 78th section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (the Public Health Act 1848), referred to by the magistrates, has nothing to do with the question. It makes no difference whether the fountain is a nuisance to the highway or not.

ERLE, C. J.—I am of opinion that this appeal ought to succeed, and that the ground of objection taken by the magistrates fails. I think the board gave the water limited in its quantity and in its object. The purpose for which it was given was, that the cattle in the market, and horses on their journey, might drink. They have limited the right to take water for the two purposes mentioned. The person convicted would be liable, if he was supplied with water by the board, to pay so much for each horse kept by him. He determined to avail himself of this fountain, and to bring his horses from the stable to the fountain, and so evade the rate. Section 39 enacts [his Lordship read the words of the section], and the magistrates think the water was for the gratuitous use of the public, because the fountain was in the highway, and an indictable nuisance. I do not mean to give an opinion whether their construction of the section as to that is right or not. But that is a question entirely distinct from the question whether the water is the property of the company. The fountain may be a nuisance, and yet the water may be the property of the company. A charitable man may put buckets of water on the highway for the purpose of gratuitously supplying passers by, and those buckets might be an obstruction to the highway, yet he would not have dedicated the water to the public. Sect. 32 of the Waterworks Clauses Act gives the company, in my opinion, a power to supply water gratuitously to a limited portion of the public; and it enables them to deal with the water supplied, and to make agreements respecting it as private property. I think, therefore, this person ought to have been convicted.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is clear the company did not intend to dedicate the water to the public at large, and the question is whether, in spite of their intention, the dedication is to be enlarged. A highway may be dedicated to the public for a limited purpose, though not to a limited portion of the public: (Poole v. Huskisson, 11 M. & W. 827.) So the company might dedicate this water to the public for a limited purpose.

BYLES, J.—The reason given by the magistrates cannot be sustained. The water would be for the public use, although limited to certain hours of the day. I think it may be so limited, and that the magistrates should have convicted.

THE LIVERPOOL LIBRARY v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN AND BURGESSES OF LIVERPOOL.

Library—Exemption from rateability—Society for purposes of literature—6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1.A society called the Liverpool Library were occupiers of premises which were exclusively used for the objects stated in their rules, and the funds by which the institution was supported were derived from purchase-money of shares, from subscriptions of the members, from payments received as fines from such members as became subject thereto under the regulations of the institution, by sale of such shares as became by forfeiture the property of the institution, from the sale of such periodical publications as were required to be removed by later editions, and from the sale at cost price to the subscribers of the catalogues. No dividend, gift, division, or bonus was ever made, but was prohibited by their rules. Newspapers were not supplied to the institution:Held, that the society was for the purposes of science, literature and the fine arts exclusively, and, as such, exempt from rates, as coming within the exemption in the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, similar to the Bradford Library case, 28 L. J. 73, M.C.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, on appeal against the lighting rate, the fire police rate, the paving, sewer, water and general rates, and the improvement rate for the borough of Liverpool. The case was as follows:—

The Liverpool Library was, on the 4th May 1859, rated at 2½d. in the pound to the lighting rate, at ¼d. in the pound to the fire police rate, at 8d. in the pound to the paving rate, at 3d. in the pound to the sewer rate, at 2d. in the pound to the water rate, at 3d. in the pound to the general rate, and at 1½d. in the pound to the improvement rate, which was made on the same day by two assessors duly appointed.

The shareholders of the institution claim exemption under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1. The lighting rate was made under the 21 Geo. 2, c. xxiv. (local Act), and a resolution of the town council of Liverpool of 7th Sept. 1836, for applying the Act by the corporation of Liverpool to the borough, the fire police rate, under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. cvi. (local Act). The paving, sewer, water and general rates, were made under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. cxxvii. (local Act). The improvement rate was under the Liverpool Improvement Act 1858. All the above Acts of Parliament are to be referred to and taken as part of this case. The institution to which the rated property belongs is called the Liverpool Library, and is governed by rules and regulations duly made at a meeting of the shareholders, a copy of which rules is annexed hereto, and is to be referred to by either party and taken as a part of the present case. The institution exists under the above rules and regulations, and is managed and conducted under their provisions, and is devoted to the purposes therein declared, and was so at the time when the rules in question were made. The rated premises in the occupation of the institution are exclusively used for the objects stated in the said rules and regulations, and the funds by which the institution is supported are derived from the undermentioned sources, which are exclusively so applied: First, from the purchase-money of the shares; secondly, from the subscriptions of the members raised and levied as stated in the said rules and regulations; thirdly, from payment received as fines from such members as become subject thereto under the rules and regulations of the institution, and by the sale of such shares as become by forfeiture the property of the institution; and fourthly, from the sale of such periodical publications as are required to be renewed by later editions, and from the sale, at cost price, to the subscribers, of the catalogues occasionally published.

By rule 35 it is declared, "That it shall not be lawful to make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus, in money or otherwise, unto or between any of the members of the institution."

The selling price of the shares for many years past has been 9l. 10s.; for the last six months, after payment of the annual subscription, 9l.; for the last six months of the current year, subscription paid up in either case.

No newspapers are in fact supplied to or introduced into the establishment. The books and other library property of the library are circulated solely among the shareholders and such strangers as are gratuitously introduced by the proprietors according to the rules and regulations.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the said Liverpool Library is entitled to the benefit of stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, and under the provisions of that Act is exempt from the whole of the before-mentioned rates, or from any of them. If any of the said rates can be maintained, they are to be confirmed; but if the exemption is maintained as to all or any of them, they are to be amended according to the judgment of this court. The costs of the appeal and of this case shall abide the event; that is to say, if either party succeeds as to the whole, the whole of the costs are to be paid by the unsuccessful party. If some or one only of the rates should be maintained, the costs to be arranged and paid according to the decision of the clerk of the peace of the borough of Liverpool.

Milward for the respondents.—The library is not exempt from the rates in question. It is not a society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, within the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, which exempts from rates "any building belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions, and shall not, and by its laws may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus, in money, unto or between any of its members," &c. This society is not exclusively for literature—the primary purpose of the society is not the promotion of science and literature exclusively—it is substantially a circulating library. The shares are sold in the market at various prices. [POLLOCK, C.B.—There is no dividend. MARTIN, B.—What could you suggest to be within the Act if this society is not?] A society where the whole of the funds are spent for the benefit of the institution. The rules of the society were then referred to, as also the sections of the local Acts, and it was submitted that the local Acts repealed the exemption clause of the public general Act: (The Bradford Library case, 28 L.J. 73, M.C.; The Marylebone Vestry v. The Zoological Society, 3 E. & B. 807; R. v. Manchester, 16 Q.B. 449; R. v. Brandt, 16 Q.B. 462; R. v. Goskell, 16 Q.B. 472; and The Russell Institution v. St. Giles', 3 E. & B. 416, were cited.)

Mellish, contra, not called upon.

The COURT was clearly of opinion that this society was exempt from rateability, and that it was strictly within the language of the statute, that the local Act did not repeal the exemption clause of the public Act, and that the facts of the present case appeared to bring it entirely within the principle of the decision of The Bradford Library case, 28 L.J. 73, M.C.,

A shareholder of a benefit building society established under the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 42, having obtained an advance, mortgaged the property purchased therewith to the trustees as security for the advances, and by the deed covenanted to pay the subscriptions which should become due on his shares. The defendant subsequently redeemed by paying, under the provisions of one of the rules, all subscriptions which would become due up to the end of the thirteenth year, of the society, at the expiration of which period it was calculated all the objects of the society would be accomplished. That turned out not to be so, and the trustees brought an action on the defendant's covenant for subscriptions subsequently becoming due:

Held, that (following Farmer v. Smith, 4 H. & N. 196, 32 L. T. Rep. 371), the defendant had not ceased to be a holder of the shares.

That the question as to the defendant's liability on his covenant was not "a matter in dispute arising concerning the affairs of the said company and benefit building society, and between the said society and the defendant as holder of the shares, and between the other shareholders of the new company and society and the defendant," within the meaning of the rule of the society, which required all such disputes to be referred to arbitration, pursuant to the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27.

The plaintiffs sued as trustees of the British Building and Investment Company.

The declaration stated that by an indenture of the 20th Nov. 1845, made between the defendant of one part and the then trustees of the society on the other part, after reciting, as the facts were, that the said society had been formed for the purpose of raising by subscription a fund to assist the members thereof in obtaining freehold or leasehold property pursuant to the said Act, and that rules had been made for the government of the said society, certified, allowed and enrolled, and that the sums of money to be contributed by subscription in respect of each share in the funds of the said society amount to 120*l.*, and that the defendant was, according to the said rules, entitled to receive out of the said fund thereof, by way of anticipation, the sum of 600*l.* in respect of his shares numbered as in the said indenture mentioned, upon his entering into the security thereafter mentioned, the defendant covenanted with the said trustees, parties to the said indenture, and their successors, trustees for the time being of the said society, that he the defendant should and would pay the subscriptions and interest payable on his said shares, according to the rules of the said society, on the days and in manner therein mentioned, and abide by and perform the rules thereof in respect of the said shares; and the plaintiffs aver that after the making the said indenture, a large sum of money, to wit, 80*l.*, became due and payable from the defendant to the said society for and in respect of the subscriptions payable on his said shares according to the rules of the said society, and that all things have been done on the part of the said society, and of the plaintiffs as trustees as aforesaid, to entitle them to have the said money paid by the defendant, yet the defendant has not as yet paid the same; and for money payable by the defendant to the said society for subscriptions and moneys due and payable by the defendant to the said society under the rules of the said society in the shares of the defendant in the said society, and in respect of the defendant being and continuing a member thereof.

Pleas:—Third to first count.—That before and at the time when the said sum of 80*l.*, and every part thereof, is alleged to have accrued and become due and payable from the defendant to the said society, and before and at the time when the said subscriptions in the first count, alleged to have been payable on the said shares according to the rules of the said society, and each and every of them, accrued and became payable, he the defendant had wholly and finally ceased to be, and was no longer, a holder of the said shares, or any or either of them, or of any shares in the said society, or a member thereof, or subject to the rules or liable to pay the subscriptions in the first count mentioned.

Fourth to first count.—That one of the said rules in the first count mentioned (which before and at the time of the making of the said indenture and of the defendant becoming a holder of the said shares in the said society in the first count mentioned and the commencement of this suit, and hitherto was and is in full force and binding upon the said society and upon the plaintiffs as trustees thereof, and upon the defendant as such shareholder) was and is in the words and figures following, that is to say: "Reference of disputes to arbitration. The board for the time being, or the major part of them, shall determine all disputes which may arise concerning the affairs of the company, or respecting the construction of these rules, or any of the clauses or things herein contained, and also of any bye-laws, additions, alterations, or amendments which shall or may hereafter arise between the trustees, officers, or other shareholders of this company; and the decision of the board, if satisfactory, shall be conclusive; but, if not satisfactory, reference shall be made to arbitration pursuant to the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27. And at the first meeting of the company after the enrolment of these rules five arbitrators shall be elected, none of the said arbitrators being beneficially interested directly or indirectly in the funds of the company, and in each case of dispute the names of the arbitrators shall be written on pieces of paper and placed in a box, and the three whose names are first drawn by the complaining party, or by some one appointed by him or her, shall be arbitrators to decide the matters in difference, whose decision shall be final and binding on all parties, and each of the three arbitrators so drawn and attending shall receive five shillings remuneration; the costs of the reference shall be paid by such party as the arbitrators shall direct; the party requiring the arbitration shall deposit with the manager fifteen shillings." And the defendant avers that the word "board" in the said rule means the persons appointed to and holding the office of directors in the said benefit building society in the first count mentioned, and that the word "company" in the said rule means the said benefit building society; and the defendant further saith that the claims and causes of action in the declaration mentioned, so far as the same relate to the first count, at the commencement of the suit and always were and still are matters in dispute arisen concerning the affairs of the said company and benefit building society and between the said society and the defendant as the holder of the said shares in the first count mentioned, and between the other shareholders of the said company and society and the defendant as the holder of the said shares in the first count mentioned, and between the plaintiffs as the trustees of the said company and society and the defendant as the holder of the said shares in the said first count mentioned; that is to say, the defendant, as such holder of the said shares, hath always disputed and denied, and still doth dispute and deny, his liability to pay the said sum of 80*l.* in the first count mentioned to the said society or to the plaintiffs as trustees thereof, and the right of the said society and the plaintiffs as trustees thereof, or either of them, to bring or maintain any action for the alleged breach of covenant in the first count mentioned, and hath always disputed and denied, and still disputes and denies, that any breach of covenant ever was committed by him the defendant, as alleged in the first count: of all which the plaintiffs, as such trustees as aforesaid, and the said society have always had notice, and the defendant avers that all conditions precedent, matters and things requiring to have been performed and to have happened and existed to enable the defendant to have the said matters in dispute adjudicated upon, decided and settled as pointed out and provided for in and by the said rules, and to further prevent the accruing of any right of action in respect of the plaintiffs' claim, so far as the same relates to the first count, and to oust this court of all jurisdiction over the said claim, were performed and did happen and exist before the commencement of the suit.

Sixth to the second count, the same as the fourth.

Demurrer to the third, fourth and sixth pleas, and joinder.

The plaintiffs also joined issue on the pleas and replied.

Secondly, to the fourth plea, that before the matter in dispute therein mentioned arose, the arbitrators appointed in pursuance of the rule had refused to act; that no others were appointed to act in their place, and that when the matter in dispute arose there was no arbitrator to whom it could be referred.

Thirdly, also to the fourth plea, that the board had decided the defendant's liability to pay, and that the defendant had never requested the plaintiffs to refer the said dispute to arbitration, or taken any steps to appoint arbitrators according to the rules.

There were similar replications to the next plea.

The defendant demurred to these four replications.

The demurrers to the pleas and replications now came on for argument together.

Knowles, Q.C. (with him Beasley) for the plaintiffs.—There are two questions raised on the demurrers. The first on the third plea is, whether the covenant in the mortgage-deed is not binding until the society is finally at an end, notwithstanding the defendant has paid up the entire amount of his subscription as originally fixed; that point is decided in favour of the plaintiffs by a case in this court, Farmer and others v. Smith, 4 H. & N. 196; 32 L. T. Rep. 371. The second question arises on the fourth plea; the rule of the society relied on in it requires "the board to decide all disputes which may arise concerning the affairs or respecting the construction of the rules or any of the clauses therein contained, and also of any bye-law, additions, alterations, or amendments which shall or may arise between the trustees, officers, and other shareholders of the company, and if the decision of the board is not satisfactory, arbitration shall be had pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 27." This is not a dispute concerning the construction of that section. In Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394, the wording of the rule was different, and the society was of a different kind. Cutbill v. Kingdon, 1 Ex. 494, is more like the present case; that was also a building society, and the words of the rule as to arbitration were almost exactly the same as in this case, yet the Court of Ex. held the trustees might notwithstanding maintain an action on the covenant. Morrison v. Glover, 4 Ex. 430, decides that the rule applies only to disputes with a member as a member. This is not a dispute with the defendant as a member: (Reg. v. Trafford, 24 L. J. 20, M.C.; Kelsall v. Tyler, 25 L. J. 153, Ex; Fleming v. Self, 1 Kaye, 518.)

Lush, Q.C. (with him M'Lachlan).—The cases cited do not apply. In Cutbill v. Kingdon the rule provided only for the reference of "all disputes respecting the construction of the rules;" in the present case the rules applies to "all disputes concerning the affairs of the company." In Morrison v. Glover the question arose on a mortgage of a lease and a covenant by the shareholder to pay the ground-rent. In Reg. v. Trafford the rule applied only to disputes as to money matters; so also in Fleming v. Self.

Knowles, Q.C., in reply, referred to Reeves v. White, 17 Q. B. 995.

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to our judgment on the demurrers to the third and fourth pleas. As to the third plea, which alleges that the defendant was not a member of the society, I think the case of Farmer v. Smith, lately decided in this court, is conclusive. As to the fourth and sixth pleas, the question raised by them is substantially the same; they amount to this, that by the rules of the society, and the Act to which they refer, such a question as is raised here cannot be brought before the ordinary legal tribunals, but must be made matter of reference. It appears to me clear that, according to the cases decided, a mortgage and a covenant connected with it cannot be considered as within the rule or the Acts of Parliament to which it refers. If we were to hold that a mortgagor was within the rule, how would it be possible to enforce the rights of the parties? Under the statute, if a member refuses to obey the award, recourse must be had to a justice of the peace to compel him; but could a justice of the peace honestly do justice between the parties in such a case as this? The power of the justice is not co-extensive with the rights of the parties. The Act could not be intended to introduce a remedy which would not be competent to do justice between the parties, and this case must be excluded from the class of cases in which the aid of the justice is to be called in. He could not do justice here; and the Act of Parliament cannot have been intended to give him jurisdiction. As to the decided cases, I think they clearly go the length of deciding that in the case of a mortgage the rule of reference does not apply. This is not so much a question between a member and the society as between a mortgagor and his mortgagee. The deed is a distinct security, and creates an obligation quite apart from the member's liability to pay on his shares. As our judgment is for the plaintiff on the demurrers to the plea, it is unnecessary to say anything about the replications and the demurrers to them: they fall to the ground.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am of the same opinion. As to the third plea, it seems to amount to this, that the defendant, having paid up his subscription, has ceased to be member. There is nothing in the rules as to ceasing to be a member in that case; but supposing, in fact, that by paying up he has ceased to be a member because he has paid up all he had to pay, or all it was supposed he would have to pay, yet his covenant remains, and he is liable on that. As to the other pleas, I agree with my Lord. I think the matter is substantially decided by the former cases. The point arises thus: The statute says that provision shall be made by the rules for referring disputes to arbitration; it does not say all disputes, but only such disputes as the members of the society think fit. What disputes does the rule in this case say shall be referred? [His Lordship read the rule.] It seems to me this dispute is not within that rule. It refers only to such disputes as arise between the trustees and the shareholders generally, and not particular disputes. This is not a dispute as to the construction of any rule of the society, as is a question between mortgagor and mortgagee, arising on a covenant in a mortgage-deed.

CHANNELL, B.—I also am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment on the demurrer to the pleas. As to the third plea the declaration, which is good on the face of it, charges the defendant on an absolute covenant to pay money. The defendant pleads he has ceased to be a shareholder: it is not very clear what he means, but the plea is clearly no answer to the declaration, which charges him on an absolute covenant. As to the fourth and sixth pleas also, I think the plaintiffs are entitled to our judgment. The fourth plea is to the special count, and the sixth, substantially the same, is to the money counts. As to these the plaintiffs are prima facie entitled to sue. They declare on a covenant by the defendant with certain trustees and their successors to pay the subscription on his shares. They aver that 80*l.* has become due in respect of his shares; that all things have been done to entitle them to have the money paid, yet the defendant has not paid it. They show that prima facie they are entitled to sue. The defendant, however, by his plea sets up that the right which these plaintiffs would otherwise have to sue in this court is taken away from them by the operation of the 10 Geo. 4, s. 56, s. 27, as applied to the rules of the society, which is enrolled under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32. The question therefore is, whether or not is the jurisdiction of the court ousted by those statutes and by the rules. I am of opinion that it is not. I think the rule applies only to disputes between the trustees or officers and the shareholders, that is to disputes between them and the shareholder or shareholders. In this case defendant, by becoming a mortgagor and executing the mortgage-deed, has acquired a new character, and the trustees have acquired a new remedy on the security in the event of his nonpayment. I cannot but think the rule as to arbitration was intended to apply to such a case as this. The 27th section of the statute gives a remedy which is apt for the exigencies of the case to which I think it is intended to apply, but which is totally inapplicable to such a case as this. The defendant has assumed a new character, and new relations have arisen between him and the trustees to which, when disputes arise, new remedies are applicable. I think this is not a dispute between the trustees and the defendant as a shareholder, to which alone I think the rule applies, and therefore the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

Judgment for the plaintiffs on the demurrers to the third and fourth pleas; the second count and all pleadings on it to be struck out.

THAMES POLICE COURT.

Monday, May 7.

(Before Mr. SELFE.)

THE VICTORY STEAM-TUG.

(Mitchell's Register, March)

Penalty for steam-tug not consuming its own smoke.

This was a prosecution against Mr. B. T. Harris, the master of a steam-tug called the Victory, belonging to the Steam-towing Company, for a penalty on account of using on board the tug furnaces so constructed as not to consume their own smoke.

The superintendent of the company appeared in place of the defendant. He expressed a doubt whether smoke-consuming furnaces could be applied to steam-tugs, the power of which, in proportion to their size, so greatly exceeds that of other steam-vessels; but he offered to carry out anything practicable which the Government surveyor could suggest.

The Government inspector stated that there would be no difficulty in finding effectual means to consume the smoke on board of the Victory, although the means hitherto adopted on that vessel were of little use.

Mr. SELFE, referring to the case of Walker v. Evans, 35 L. T. Rep. 59, Q.B., relative to a steamer, the Tam O'Shanter, belonging to the same company, where it was held that a steam-vessel plying between London-bridge and the Nore is within the meaning of the Act, fined the company 5*l.*, and intimated that on a second conviction the fine would be increased to 10*l.*

REG. v. FRANCIS LOOSE.

Friendly Society—Trustee—Larceny by—Treasurer—In whom property vested—18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 18.

The prisoner was a trustee of a friendly society (a lodge of Odd Fellows) and appointed, by resolution of the society to receive money from the treasurer and carry it to the bank. He received the money, but instead of taking it to the bank he applied it to his own purposes. He was indicted as a bailee of the moneys of the treasurer R. C., feloniously converting the money to his own use; and also for a common law larceny of the money of R. C.

The Friendly Societies Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 18, vests the property of such societies in the trustees and directs the property to be laid in the names of the trustees in indictments:

Held, that the prisoner could not be convicted of feloniously converting or stealing the moneys of R. C. as charged in the indictment.

Case reserved by Williams, J. for the opinion of this court.

In this case the indictment alleged that on the 20th July 1859 the prisoner became and was bailee of moneys of Richard Carraway, deceased, to the amount of 40*l.*, and that being such bailee he fraudulently and feloniously did take and convert the said moneys to his own use, and that the prisoner in manner and form aforesaid feloniously did steal, &c. the said moneys.

There was another count for a common law larceny.

The deceased R. Carraway, whose money the 40*l.* was alleged to be, was at the time in question the treasurer of a lodge of Odd Fellows, which was a friendly society duly enrolled.

The prisoner was one of its trustees.

On the 20th July 1859, at a lodge meeting, it was proposed and resolved that 40*l.* should be sent to the bank of Messrs. Gurney at Fakenham, and that the prisoner should take it there. The 40*l.* in gold and silver was taken from a box which was in Carraway's keeping as treasurer, by a person who acted for him, and having been counted, was put into a bag and carried away by the prisoner. Instead of taking it to the bank, he dishonestly applied it to his own purposes, and no such sum was ever placed to the credit of the society.

On these facts it was submitted by the counsel for the prisoner, that the money was not shown to be the property of R. Carraway as alleged in the indictment. Cain's case, 2 Mood. C. C. 204, it was argued, did not apply, because that case was decided on the construction of the stat. 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, by which the property of a friendly society was vested in the treasurer or trustee for the time being: whereas by the Act now in operation (stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 18) the property is vested in the trustee or trustees of the society. And that supposing the treasurer to have a special property in the 40*l.*, such property ceased as soon as the resolution of the lodge meeting was acted upon by payment of the money into the hands of the prisoner who was nominated by the lodge, and not the treasurer, to carry it to the bank. It was further urged that, independently of the statutes, assuming the treasurer to be the owner, the prisoner received the money not as the servant of the treasurer, but as a person not bound to take it, and he was therefore only guilty of a breach of trust. Lastly, it was argued that the prisoner was not bound to pay in that particular 40*l.*, but that any sum of 40*l.* would have sufficed, whereas by the statute he must hold something specific.

The prisoner was convicted, but I respited the judgment until the opinion of this court should be taken whether the above objections were well founded.

Metcalfe (Drake with him) for the prisoner.—It is submitted that the property is not well laid in Richard Carraway's name, in any of the counts of the indictment. The case of Rex v. Cain, 2 Mood. C. C. 204; S. C. 1 Car. & M. 309, relied upon on the part of the prosecution, is not applicable; for that was the case of a benefit society enrolled under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, and it was held that the property of the society might in an indictment be laid to be in the treasurer by his proper name, for sect. 21 of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, provided expressly that the property in such societies "for all purposes of suit, as well civil as criminal," should be deemed and taken to be, and in every such proceeding where necessary, stated to be the property of the treasurer or trustee of the society for the time being, in his or her proper name, without further description. The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 (the Act now in force relating to friendly societies), sect. 18, vests the property of such societies in the trustees, and directs that in all actions, or suits, or indictments, or summary proceedings before magistrates, touching or concerning any such property, the same shall be stated to be the property of the persons for the time being holding the office of trustees in their proper names as trustees of such society, without any further description. So that Richard Carraway being treasurer only, and not a trustee, had no property vested in him by virtue of the statute, and the property ought to have been laid in the indictment as the property of the trustees. Then, as to R. Carraway's having any special possession of the money stolen, it is found as a fact that it was the duty of Carraway to pay over the money to the prisoner, whose duty it was to take it to the bank. There could not therefore be a felonious taking by the prisoner, who was a trustee and legal owner of the money, as well as being the person specially appointed by the resolution of the society to receive the money from Carraway and take it to the bank. It does not appear by the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, how a trustee is to be made liable to the criminal law for his felonious acts.

No counsel appeared for the prosecution.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that the indictment in this form cannot be sustained. In Cain's case the prisoner had obtained the money wrongfully, and the property in it was vested by the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, in the treasurer of the society; but in this case the property was not vested in the treasurer, but in the trustees. Moreover, as the prisoner was specially appointed by resolution to take the money to the bank, how can it be said that he stole the money of Richard Carraway as charged in the indictment? For as soon as Carraway parted with the money he had nothing more to do with it. The prisoner may have been guilty of a breach of trust as against the other trustees; but it cannot be said that he stole the money of Carraway. The conviction therefore cannot be sustained.

Conviction quashed. (a)

REG. v. SAMUEL HUDSON, JOHN SMITH AND JOHN DEWHIRST.

Conspiracy to cheat—False pretences—Gaming and wagering—8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17.

The prisoners were at a public-house in the same room with the prosecutor; one of them placed a pence on the table and left the room to get writing paper.

(a) The explanation of this decision is, that the prisoner, as the trustee of the society, was the legal owner of the property, and not merely in legal possession of it. He could not, therefore, be guilty of larceny of his own money. It was a breach of trust as against his co-trustees, and possibly as against the secretary, for which the remedy was a civil one; but it was not criminal.

Whilst he was absent, one of the two who remained took the pen out of the case and put a pin in its place. The two remaining prisoners then induced the prosecutor to bet the other prisoner when he returned, 50s. that there was no pen in the case. The prosecutor put his money down, and one of the prisoners snatched it up to hold. The pence was then turned up into the prosecutor's hand, and another pen, with the pin, fell into his hand, and then the prisoners took the money:

Held, that the evidence was sufficient to support a count for conspiracy, by divers unlawful and fraudulent devices and contrivances, and by divers false pretences, unlawfully to cheat, &c.

Case reserved for the opinion of this court, by J. B. Maule, Esq., barrister-at-law, sitting as deputy for the Recorder of York.

At the Epiphany sessions 1860, held for the city of York, the prisoners were jointly indicted and tried before me upon an indictment, the two first counts of which charged them with an offence under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, as follows:—

First count charged, "That on the 18th Nov. 1859, by fraud, unlawful device and ill practice in playing at a certain game or sport, to wit, in and by a wager with one Abraham Rhodes, whether a certain pence case had a pen in it or not, unlawfully and fraudulently they did win from the said Abraham Rhodes, to a certain person to the jurors unknown, a certain sum of money, to wit, 2l. 10s. of the money of the said A. Rhodes, and so did then and thereby unlawfully obtain such money from the said A. Rhodes by a false pretence, to wit, by the fraud, unlawful device and ill practice aforesaid, with intent then to cheat and defraud the said A. Rhodes of the same, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided," &c.

The second count charged the prisoners that they unlawfully and fraudulently did combine, confederate and conspire together, and with divers other persons to the jurors unknown, by fraud, unlawful device and ill practice in playing at a certain game or sport, and by divers other fraudulent devices and false pretences, unlawfully to win from the said A. Rhodes a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of 2l. 10s., of the money of the said A. Rhodes, and so then and thereby unlawfully to obtain from the said A. Rhodes the said sum of money in this count mentioned, by a false pretence, with intent then to cheat and defraud the said A. Rhodes of the same, against the form of the statute, &c.

Third count.—The prisoners were charged with a conspiracy to cheat in the following form:—"That they unlawfully and fraudulently did combine, confederate and conspire together with divers other persons to the jurors unknown, by divers unlawful and fraudulent devices and contrivances, and by divers false pretences, unlawfully to obtain from the said A. Rhodes the sum of 2l. 10s. of the money of the said A. Rhodes, and unlawfully to cheat and defraud the said A. Rhodes of the same, against the peace, &c.

The evidence disclosed that the three prisoners were in a public-house together with the prosecutor A. Rhodes, and that, in concert with the two prisoners, the prisoner John Dewhirst placed a pence on the table of the room where they were assembled, and left the room to get writing-paper; whilst he was absent the other two prisoners, Samuel Hudson and John Smith, were the only persons left drinking with the prosecutor, and Hudson then took up the pence, and took out the pen from it, placing a pin in the place of it, and put the pen that he had taken out under the bottom of the prosecutor's drinking-glass, and Hudson then proposed to the prosecutor to bet the prisoner Dewhirst, when he returned, that there was no pen in the pence. The prosecutor was induced by Hudson and Smith to stake 50s. in a bet with Dewhirst upon his returning into the room that there was no pen in the pencase, which money the prosecutor placed on the table, and Hudson snatched up to hold. The pencase was then turned up into the prosecutor's hand, and another pen, with the pin, fell into his hand, and then prisoners took his money.

Upon this evidence it was objected, on behalf of the prisoners, that no offence within the meaning of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, was proved by it, and that the facts proved in evidence did not amount to the offence charged in the third count.

I thought the objection well founded as to the offence under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, but held that the facts in evidence amounted to the offence charged in the third count, and directed the jury to return a separate verdict on each count, a case having been asked for by the prisoners' counsel, for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty on each of the three counts.

The prisoners were sentenced to eight months' imprisonment, and committed to prison for want of sufficient sureties.

If the Court for the consideration of Crown Cases Reserved shall be of opinion, that the above facts in evidence constituted in law any one of the offences charged in the indictment, and was evidence to go to the jury in support thereof, the verdict is to stand for such of the counts in which the offence is laid to which the evidence applies.

Price for the prisoners.—It is submitted that the prisoners have not been guilty of any of the offences charged in the several counts of the indictment. The first two counts of the indictment are framed upon the Games and Wagers Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, which enacts "that every person who shall by any fraud or unlawful device or ill practice in playing at or with cards, dice, tables, or other game, or in bearing a part in the stakes, wagers, or adventures, or in betting on the sides or hands of them that do play, or in wagering on the event of any game, sport, pastime, or exercise, win from any other person to himself, or any other or others, any sum of money or valuable thing, shall be deemed guilty of obtaining such money or valuable thing from such other person by a false pretence with intent to cheat or defraud such person of the same, and being convicted thereof shall be punished accordingly." The object of that provision was not to meet a case like the present. Sects. 8 and 15 show that the provision was directed to the ordinary games played at common gaming houses, and not against tricks like the one in this case.

POLLOCK, C.B.—You may confine your argument to the offence charged in the third count.

Price.—As to the third count. To sustain that, the evidence should have shown such a false pretence as per se would constitute the ordinary misdemeanor of false pretences.

POLLOCK, C.B.—Why so? This is a count for conspiracy to cheat.

Price.—Yea, by false pretences.

CHANNELL, B.—If the count had said merely to conspire, and had omitted the words "by false pretences," it would have been good.

BLACKBURN, J.—Here the prisoners cheated the prosecutor into the belief that he was going to cheat, when in fact he was to be cheated.

Price.—This is a mere private deceit not concerning the public, which the criminal law does not regard, but is a deceit against which common prudence might have guarded. There is no evidence of any indictable combination to cheat and defraud.

CHANNELL, B.—If two persons conspire to puff up the qualities of a horse, and thereby secure an exorbitant price for it, that is a criminal offence.

Price.—That affects the public. At the trial the present case was likened to that of Rex v. Barnard, 7 Car. & P. 784, where a person at Oxford, who was not a member of the university, went for the purpose of fraud, wearing a commoner's gown and cap, and obtained goods. This was held a sufficient false pretence. The present case, however, was nothing more than a bet on a question of fact, which the prosecutor might have satisfied himself of by looking at the pencil-case. It is more like an ordinary conjuring trick. Besides, here the prosecutor himself intended to cheat one of the prisoners by the bet.

No counsel appeared for the prosecution.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are all of opinion that the conviction on the third count is good, and ought to be supported. The count is in the usual form, and it is not necessary that the words "false pretences" stated in it should be understood in the technical sense contended for by Mr. Price. There is abundant evidence of a conspiracy by the prisoners to cheat the prosecutor, and though one of the ingredients in the case is that the prosecutor himself intended to cheat one of the prisoners, that does not prevent the prisoners from liability to be prosecuted upon this indictment.

Conviction affirmed. (a)

REG. v. JUSTICES OF MACCLESFIELD.

20 & 21 Vict. c. 43—Order to justices to state special case—Jurisdiction—Error in point of law—Determination.

The court refused a rule to justices, ordering them to state a special case for the opinion of the court, where the objection was that they had improperly received evidence.

To enable the court to interfere it must appear that the determination of the justices was wrong.

Keneley moved for a certiorari to bring up the conviction of John Holland, with a view to its being quashed. The conviction was under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, ss. 10 & 14, for having materials suspected to be purloined or embezzled concealed in his dwelling-house, outhouse, yard, garden, or other place, for which offence the justices had imposed a penalty of 20*l*. The objections to the conviction were, first, that the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, was repealed by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40; that the justices who heard the complaint were interested, being connected with the silk trade, and members of the Macclesfield Silk Throwers' Association, and that the attorney for that association conducted the complaint, to whom a portion of the penalty was ordered to be paid as informer; but these two latter were waived. There was a further objection, that the justices had improperly refused to grant a special case for the opinion of this court. He therefore moved for a rule under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 5, ordering a case to be stated. It appeared from the affidavits that during the hearing of the case a witness of the name of David Welch, one of the constables who made the search, used a certain paper or memorandum for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to certain material facts, and as to the silk seized, and where it was found, and other material circumstances, and on cross-examination as to whether the paper was the original memorandum, or a copy, he admitted that it was a copy made by himself on the morning of the trial, and offered it to the defendant's counsel, who put out his hand for it, when Norris, the attorney for the prosecution, ordered the witness to stop, and not to show the paper, but to put it in his pocket, which he did. Norris then objected that no notice to produce it had been given; notice was at once given, and on the magistrates being appealed to they held he should not be bound to produce it, but permitted the witness to continue to refresh his memory by referring to the memorandum, although the defendant and his counsel were prevented seeing it; this, it was contended, was contrary to law, and that, therefore, the defendant was entitled to have a special case stated under the power given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. [WIGHTMAN, J.—You must show how the conviction is wrong in point of law. CROMPTON, J.—It is consistent with your affidavit that the termination of the justices was right. The court cannot interfere in every case where justices have admitted improper evidence as it does in granting rules for new trials; although that determination might be wrong, there may have been other evidence justifying the conviction.]

COCKBURN, C. J.—We are not of opinion that the Legislature has given us power to do as you ask; we think we are confined in our consideration of the case to the determination of the justices.

PATTEN (appellant) v. RHYMER (respondent).

Innkeeper—Conviction—Offence against the tenor of his licence—Suffering gaming—Private friends—9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21—Terms of licence.

It is an offence against the term of an innkeeper's licence (under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21), punishable upon summary conviction, for him to permit even his personal friends privately to game for money in his house; and this though they were merely playing cards there in pursuance of a friendly arrangement by which they all (including the innkeeper) in turns played a friendly game at the houses of each other.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction by justices at Chelmsford of the defendant, an innkeeper, for an offence against the tenor of his licence, for knowingly suffering several persons to play at cards for money.

The case stated that this was an information under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21, against the appellant, who is an innkeeper and builder at Great Baddow, in the county of Essex. It was proved by the evidence of two police officers that about twelve o'clock on the night of the 10th Jan. 1860, they entered the inn kept by the appellant at Great Baddow, as a party then in the house were in the act of breaking up and leaving; that they found cards and also money upon the table in the bar-parlour, where five persons had been assembled, and four of whom were in the room, the landlord (the appellant) being one of them. The appellant admitted that they had all been playing cards together for money at a very low stake, and that the other four persons had come there by his invitation. On behalf of the defendant (appellant) it was satisfactorily proved that the parties present were respectable tradesmen of the parish, moving in the same sphere of life as himself, and that they had come to his house upon the occasion in question as his private friends, and by his special invitation; that they had all been in the habit of visiting each other's houses for the purpose of playing a friendly game of cards, and it had arrived at the appellant's turn to invite them to his house; that the room where they assembled was a private room of the appellant, and that there were no other persons in the house but the five persons before mentioned. It was contended before the justices on behalf of the appellant that the law was never intended to deprive the innkeeper of his right to invite his private friends to his house for the purpose and under the circumstances proved. The justices were of a contrary opinion, and held that, under the words of the Act of Parliament and the tenor of his licence, an innkeeper was not entitled knowingly to permit cards to be played for money in any part of his licensed house and premises; they therefore convicted the appellant in a mitigated penalty and costs. The justices, however, considered the case one of great importance to the innkeeper, as well as to the public, and upon application made in due time by the appellant, who was advised that the decision of the justices was erroneous in point of law, granted a case.

By sect. 21 of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, it is enacted that "Every person licensed under this Act who shall be convicted before two justices . . . of any offence against the tenor of the licence to him granted shall . . . be adjudged by such justices to be guilty of a first offence against the provisions of this Act," &c.

The form of the licence as provided by the statute contains the prohibition as follows: "And do not knowingly suffer any unlawful games or any gaming whatsoever therein."

Barrow appeared for the appellant, and contended that he was not within the meaning of the statute, which applies only to an innkeeper permitting gaming in his house in his character of an innkeeper, and not to him in his character of a private individual, for that if this were not so he might be finable if he had a christening party at his house, and he were to suffer the young people to game: (Overton v. Hunter, 1 L. T. Rep. N.S. 366.) There are some games at cards which are not unlawful. [CROMPTON, J.—The words are, "or any gaming whatsoever;" the statute does not merely prohibit unlawful games.] There may be some games at cards the playing of which does not amount to gaming under the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The question submitted is, whether this is less a gaming against the tenor of the licence because the innkeeper asks his private friends to a friendly game?] It is not an offence as an innkeeper; his house at such a time becomes his private dwelling. [CROMPTON, J.—It is the house which is to be kept without any gaming in it.]

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The words are certainly large enough to embrace the case and justify the conviction. I own that I was very much struck with the distinction as to what a man may do as a private individual and not as a publican. Still the Legislature

(a) It may be gathered from this that an appeal does not lie against the decision of magistrates on the ground of reception of improper evidence. The court conceives that its jurisdiction extends only to the determination of the justices, and not to the means by which they arrived at their conclusion. There is, in truth, but one question. Assuming the facts to have been proved, was the law correctly applied to them. It is, however, difficult to understand the principle of the decision. Crompton, J. said: "There might have been other evidence justifying the conviction." But that argument would be equally applicable to new trials and to criminal appeals. The ground upon which the courts act in cases of reception of improper evidence is, that it is impossible to determine what amount of influence that bit of evidence may have produced upon the minds of the jury. Justices are both judges and juries, and being equally liable to be misled by improper evidence, the objection should be equally applicable to their decisions.

may have intended to have put a restraint upon a man keeping a house of public entertainment in respect of anything that might act as a bad example to others frequenting such a house as to lead them into practices which the statute intended to prevent. I own I am not quite satisfied with this construction, but as my learned brothers are in favour of it I will not dissent. The words are certainly capable of this construction, and though perhaps a somewhat severe one, it is in all probability that which was intended by the Legislature.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think the words are sufficient to fulfil what I consider to have been the intention of the Legislature. Now, although the appellant invited his private friends, yet it is within the meaning of the Legislature, which is not to allow gaming in the house. It would be exceedingly easy, under pretence of inviting private friends, to allow gaming. It certainly appears to me that it was the intention of the Legislature not to allow any gaming in a licensed house.

CROMPTON, J.—The real point is, whether, when an innkeeper invites his friends to a friendly game at cards, it is within the words of the licence? I think that it is, and that the meaning of the Legislature is, that in this house, which is licensed, there shall be no gaming whatever. I think the conduct of the appellant is within the mischief of the Act. He clearly, according to the facts, committed no intentional misdemeanor; but nevertheless it was against the tenor of his licence.

BLACKBURN, J.—I do not think that the offence is dependent upon whether or not the gaming was by friends, the object of the Legislature being that the house should be quietly conducted; and whether, therefore, the gaming was by private friends or not, it is still gaming. I think the justices were right.

PEDGRIFT (appellant) v. CHEVALIER (respondent).

Appeal from justices—The Medical Act—Surgeon—Statute 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90.

Sec. 40 enacts that any person who shall wilfully and falsely pretend to be or take or use the name or title of a physician, doctor of medicine, licentiate in medicine and surgery, bachelor of medicine, surgeon, general practitioner, or apothecary, or any name, title, addition, or description implying that he is registered under this Act, or that he is recognised by law as a physician or surgeon, or licentiate in medicine and surgery, or a practitioner in medicine, or an apothecary, shall, upon a summary conviction for any such offence, pay a sum not exceeding 20l. P. had a plate on the door of his house, with "P. surgeon" thereon. He was not registered under the Act as a surgeon:

Held, that the facts stated were not sufficient to support a conviction under the above section, for wilfully and falsely pretending to be a surgeon.

This was an appeal from the decision of justices.

A case being stated for the opinion of the court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. Halesworth (Suffolk) Petty Sessions, Oct. 26th, 1859. Informant, Barrington Chevalier; defendant, Frederick Woodcock Pedgrift. Alleged offence, for that the defendant did on the 12th day of October 1859, at Halesworth, in the said county, wilfully and falsely pretend to be a surgeon, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided.

On the hearing of this case a book was produced, which was stated to be a copy of a medical register, published in pursuance of the Medical Act. On the cover of this book are the words "By authority;" and the following is a copy of the title-page:—"The Medical Register, pursuant to an Act passed in the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, to regulate the qualifications of Practitioners in Medicine and Surgery. 1859. London: Published and sold at the Office of the General Council of Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom, 32, Soho-square. Price 7s. 6d." The book then contains an account of the fees for registration, the names of the members and officers of the general council of medical education and registration, in which Dr. Francis Hawkins is stated to be registrar of the general council, some explanatory notes by Dr. Hawkins, the Medical Acts of 1858 and 1859, a table of abbreviations; and then follows the names of medical men, with date of registration, residences, and qualifications, extending over 355 pages, and headed with the words and figures, "The Medical Register 1859." It was also proved that on a door of the house in which the defendant and Mr. Richard Phibbs Irwin, a registered surgeon, lived, and for which they were jointly assessed to the rates, was a plate in a wooden frame, on which was engraved "Mr. Pedgrift, Mr. Irwin, surgeon accoucheur, &c." It appeared that the name of Mr. Pedgrift was on a separate piece of plate from the rest, but there was no division between the names of Mr. Pedgrift and Mr. Irwin, except the line which was necessarily apparent where the two pieces of plate joined. It also appeared that "Surgery" was written on another door, and "Surgeon accoucheur" on the lamp over the door.

Nathaniel Palmer, as counsel for the defendant, objected—first, that the book produced was not a copy of the register within the meaning of the 27th section of the Medical Act, and was therefore improperly admitted in evidence; secondly, that there was no evidence that the defendant pretended to be a surgeon; thirdly, that there was no evidence that he was not a surgeon.

We considered that the words surgeon and accoucheur on the plate were intended to apply equally to Mr. Pedgrift and Mr. Irwin; we therefore considered that the defendant did, on the 12th Oct. wilfully and falsely pretend to be a surgeon, and we convicted him of the offence with which he was charged in the penalty of 10l., and 1l. 13s. 8d. costs; and he having served us with a notice that he was dissatisfied at our determination as being erroneous in point of law, and made application for a case for the opinion of her Majesty's court of Common Pleas at Westminster, we submit the case for the opinion of the court, in order that, if our determination be right, the conviction may be affirmed, or, if wrong, may be reversed.

THOMAS RANT, } Justices of the Peace
HENRY OWEN, } of the County of ANDREW JOHNSTON, } Suffolk.

This case was last term sent back to the justices, and was returned with the following answer:—

"We the undersigned, two of the above-named justices (the Rev. Henry Owen the third justice being in Africa), in accordance with an order dated 23rd April instant, state that we had no other grounds for holding the appellant to have falsely pretended to be a surgeon than those stated in the case, namely, that his name did not appear in the medical register, from which we assumed he was not a surgeon, and there was a plate on the door mentioned in our case with the word 'surgeon' upon it, from which we considered he

(a) This important case decides in effect that an innkeeper cannot, without liability to the penalty, permit his friends to play cards in his private apartment, if they play for money. pretended he was a surgeon. Dated this 28th April 1860.

"THOS. RANT,

"ANDREW JOHNSTON."

Lush, Q.C. (with whom was Bulwer) for the appellant.—In the absence of any statement to the contrary, I have a right to assume that at the time of the passing of the Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, the appellant was in practice as a surgeon. If he was, there being at that time no qualification necessary to constitute a surgeon, he was a person "recognised by law as a surgeon" within the meaning of the 40th section, and cannot be convicted of wilfully and falsely pretending to be so. Those who practised before may practise now. The only effect which the Act has upon them is, that by reason of the 32nd section they cannot recover their fees in a court of law, and by reason of the 36th section they cannot hold certain appointments. The 31st section enacts that "every person registered under this Act shall be entitled according to his qualification or qualifications to practise medicine or surgery, or medicine and surgery as the case may be, in any part of her Majesty's dominions, and to demand and recover in any court of law, with full costs of suit, reasonable charges for professional aid, advice and visits, and the cost of any medicines or other medical or surgical appliances rendered or supplied by him to his patients; provided always, that it shall be lawful for any college of physicians to pass a bye-law to the effect that no one of their fellows or members shall be entitled to sue in manner aforesaid in any court of law; and thereupon such bye-law may be pleaded in bar to any action for the purposes aforesaid commenced by any fellow or member of such college." The only effect of that is, that registered persons may now practise in any part of her Majesty's dominions, no matter where the diploma was granted, and may recover their fees. It gives an additional privilege to registered persons, but does not affect persons who are not registered. [WILLIAMS, J.—If the Act had said no person without being registered shall be a surgeon, the conviction would be right.] Yes, but it does not say so.

No counsel appeared in support of the conviction.

ERLE, C. J.—This is a question raised upon an Act of a very widely extended application. We are bound not to confirm the conviction unless we find the statement of facts sufficient. The statement here is very scanty. There is nothing to show that the appellant was not in practice before Act passed, or had not a diploma, or was not recognised as a surgeon. It shows only that he called himself a surgeon, and was not registered. I don't think that is enough. I don't think that every one who calls himself a surgeon without being registered can be convicted. As to the objection that the words "by authority" upon the books were not sufficient to make it evidence, I am against that.

WILLIAMS and BYLES, JJ., concurred.

Railway—Obstruction of line—Line in course of con-

(a) It is difficult to discover what it is that this case decides. Was the conviction quashed on the ground of there being no sufficient evidence that the defendant had assumed the title of "surgeon," or that, having done so before the passing of the Act, he was entitled to do so ever afterwards, however falsely in fact? It appears to me that the question is still open, whether the 46th section of the Medical Act does or does not prohibit, under penalty, the using of the titles of doctor, surgeon, &c., im-struction—Not completed—3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, ss. 15-21.

A line of railway was constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament, and was intended for the conveyance of passengers in carriages drawn by steam-engines, but at the time of the alleged offence the conveyance of passengers for hire had not commenced, and the traffic was confined to the carriage of workmen and materials. A railway truck was placed by the prisoners across the line so as to obstruct the passage of any carriage and to endanger the safety of the persons therein, but its position was discovered, and the truck removed before any collision occurred:

Held, that the so placing the truck across the line was an offence within the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 15, although the line was not completed and opened, and no actual obstruction took place.

Case reserved by the assistant judge of the justices for the county of Middlesex.

John Bradford, Joseph Dimart, Frederick Cleaver, Richard James Bradford, John Butler, Henry Durban, and George Dimart, were tried before me at the general sessions of the peace for the county of Middlesex, holden at Westminster on the 7th May 1860, upon an indictment, of which the following is a copy:—

Middlesex.—The jurors for our lady the Queen, upon their oath present, that John Bradford, Richard James Bradford, John Butler, Henry Durban, George Dimart, Joseph Dimart, and Frederick Cleaver, on the 8th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1860, at the precinct of Norwood, in the county of Middlesex, unlawfully and wilfully did do a certain thing, that is to say, unlawfully and wilfully did then and there put and place a certain truck, called a trolley, upon and across a certain railway, there called the Great Western and Brentford Railway, in such a manner as to obstruct a certain engine, to wit, a locomotive steam-engine, then and there using the said railway, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Second count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present, that the said John Bradford, James Bradford, John Butler, Henry Durban, George Dimart, Joseph Dimart, and Frederick Cleaver, afterwards, to wit, on the same day and in the year aforesaid, at the precinct aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, unlawfully and wilfully did do a certain thing, that is to say, unlawfully and wilfully did then and there put and place a certain truck, called a trolley, upon and across the said railway, called the Great Western and Brentford Railway, in such manner as to obstruct a certain carriage, to wit, a railway carriage, then and there using the said railway, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Third count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath, do further present, that the said John Bradford, James Bradford, John Butler, Henry Durban, George Dimart, Joseph Dimart, and Frederick Cleaver, on the said 8th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1860, at the precinct aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, unlawfully and wilfully did do a certain thing, that is to say, unlawfully and wilfully did then and there put and place a certain truck, called a trolley, upon and across the said railway, called the Great Western and Brentford Railway, in such manner as to endanger the safety of persons conveyed in the said carriage against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Fourth count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath, do further present, that the said John Bradford, James Bradford, John Butler, Henry Durban, George Dimart, Joseph Dimart, and Frederick Cleaver, afterwards, to wit, on the same day and in the year aforesaid, at the precinct aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, unlawfully and wilfully did do a certain thing, that is to say, unlawfully and wilfully did then and there put and place a certain truck, called a trolly, upon and across the said railway, called the Great Western and Brentford Railway, in such manner as to endanger the safety of persons conveyed upon the said railway, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

The prisoners severally pleaded guilty, and judgment was respite until the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal was obtained upon the case hereinafter stated.

Jno. Bradford, Josh. Dimart and Fredk. Cleaver were committed to the House of Correction for the county of Middlesex, and the other prisoners were discharged on recognisance of bail to appear and receive judgment at a future sessions.

The indictment was framed on the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, by the 13th section of which it is enacted, "That every person who shall wilfully do or cause to be done anything in such manner as to obstruct any engine or carriage using any railway, or to endanger the safety of persons conveyed in or upon the same, or shall aid or assist therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

By the 21st section of the same Act, it is enacted, "That whenever the word 'railway' is used in this Act, it shall be construed to extend to all railways constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament, and intended for the conveyance of passengers in or upon carriages drawn or impelled by the power of steam, or by any other mechanical power."

The railway in question was constructed under an Act of Parliament, and was intended for the conveyance of passengers in carriages drawn by the power of steam, but at the time of the committing the alleged offence the conveyance of passengers for hire had not commenced, and the traffic was confined to the carriage of materials and of workmen who were from time to time conveyed upon the railway by carriages drawn by the power of steam.

A railway truck was placed by the prisoners across the railway, and was so placed as to obstruct the passage of any carriage, and to endanger the safety of persons conveyed therein, but its position was discovered, and the truck removed before any collision occurred.

It was objected that upon these facts the case was not within the statute, because, first, the railway was not used for the conveyance of passengers for hire; and secondly, because no actual obstruction took place.

I overruled both objections, and I have now to submit to the justices of either bench and barons of Exchequer whether I was right in so doing.

W. H. BODKIN, Assistant Judge.

Ribton for the prisoners. — There was no offence committed within the meaning of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, which expressly states that the railway must be one intended for the conveyance of passengers. In the present case the railway at the time of the commission of the alleged offence was not used for the conveyance of passengers. This statute was passed for the protection of the public, and the provisions were all aimed at the prevention of accidents to the public, and for this simple reason, because the Legislature could not control a railway not yet made. Until the railway was completed and opened, the works remained a mere private enterprise, and private property as much as if they were in a private garden. The only words which could bring the case within the Act are to be found in the interpretation clause, that the word "railway" is to mean a railway intended for the conveyance of passengers. But the word "intended" does not necessarily mean in futuro, but merely means intended at the time when the railway is constructed and finished; and this view is consistent with the preamble: (Dwarris on Stat. 705.) If the word "intended" meant in futuro from the date of the first step, then it would lead to absurd consequences, for it might be held that after the first sod was turned, and though no line was yet laid down, this stringent penal statute would apply to every obstruction put upon the line. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Suppose a railway finally completed, and not opened, but ready to be opened, and that a trial trip was taken, and some one wilfully put some obstruction on the line, would that be within the statute?] That would be nearer than this case, but it would not be within the statute. [CROMPTON, J.—If the works had only been partly laid down, it might not be within the statute, which speaks of it as a railway.] In this case it was not a complete railway. It could not be opened, for the Government inspector had to examine it previously. [BRAMWELL, B.—Suppose there had been a goods train only, and an obstruction had been put. Would that be within the Act?] I think not. That however assumes that there is a complete railway opened and used. Here there were no passengers to be endangered, and no railway opened. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Still there was one carriage and engine upon the line. It has been constructed and is intended to be used, though not actually opened. This is within the mischief of the Act.] This is a highly penal statute, and the court will not give a construction to the word "intended" which would bring within the Act all those who put anything on the line after the first sod had been taken up. There is another objection: there must be an actual obstruction—that is, some train or engine must be actually obstructed. [MARTIN, B.—You say that if a person put a stone or piece of iron on a line of railway, it is no offence within the Act, unless and until some engine is actually obstructed. CROMPTON, J.—The statute says—"Shall wilfully do or cause to be done anything in such manner as to obstruct." Does not that mean if the obstruction is put in such a place and such a manner that any engine coming along may be obstructed?] That is not the plain meaning of the words. It would be a question for the jury whether the thing put did endanger the safety of passengers. The Act merely means where the person shall actually obstruct an engine. [BRAMWELL, B.—Suppose the Act provided against throwing things out of a window in such a manner as to endanger the passengers. Would not the act of throwing out of the window in such a manner be an offence, though no passenger was actually hurt?] I think not. Again, there were no passengers in the sense of the statute. They were merely workmen carried along the line for the private convenience of the railway contractor. They were not passengers or persons conveyed for hire. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Surely, the workmen are "persons conveyed." The meaning of those words seems to be "passengers for hire." It could not be said, where there is a train of goods and nobody but the guard or driver is with it and there is an obstruction, that that would be within the Act. [COCKBURN, C.J.—If there are a guard and stoker only on the train, would they not be passengers within the statute? They are "persons conveyed."]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that there is really no difficulty in this case. We must assume as a fact that the railway was completed, and all that was required to be done was to open it for the public traffic. In the mean time, and before this final stage, the workmen were occasionally conveyed to and from particular spots of the line where their presence was necessary in order to complete it and make all ready for the purpose of the line being thrown open. The question is, whether persons who placed obstructions on the line under these circumstances committed an offence within the 15th section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97? It appears the parties were mere boys, and it might be a question whether it was worth while to prosecute them; still the prosecution was instituted, and we are to take the facts as they are stated. The prisoners did put an obstruction on the line, and they put it in such a position as to endanger the safety of the persons conveyed. I am of opinion that such a case comes within both branches of the alternative stated in the section. There was an obstruction put on the line, and it was put so as to endanger the safety of the persons conveyed. It was contended by the counsel for the prisoner that there can be no obstruction until some train be actually obstructed; but such a construction cannot be maintained. The object of the Legislature was obviously to prevent any disaster to those using the railway, and to punish those who put obstructions in such manner as was likely to cause such disaster. This case is, therefore, within the intention of the statute, and, though in the ordinary course of things it would generally be after the railway was fully opened that the public required to be protected, yet an obstruction put before that time is within the mischief as well as the words of the statute. The conviction will therefore be affirmed.

MARTIN, B., CROMPTON and WILLES, JJ. and BRAMWELL, B. concurred. Conviction affirmed.

(Before HILL, J.)

REG. v. SHAW (Poor Law Auditor).

Poor-law—Unions formed under Gilbert's Act—22 Geo. 3, c. 83—One union supporting in its workhouse the poor of another union.

One union of parishes formed under the 22 Geo. 3, c. 83 (Gilbert's Act), cannot unite with another such union, so that there shall be a joint occupation of one poorhouse for the paupers of two unions.

The union of A. was formed under the above Act, and the union of B. was afterwards similarly formed. The latter union not having any poorhouse, arranged with union A. that its paupers should be received into the workhouse of union A., and the charges and expenses of maintenance be paid by union B. The workhouse was enlarged to afford this additional accommodation, and union B. was charged with the interest upon the money borrowed. The auditor of the district, in auditing the accounts of one of the townships in union B., disallowed certain items as paid to the treasurer of union A., on account of the paupers of the said parish and the before-mentioned debt:

Held, that he was right in his disallowance, for that the arrangement between the two unions was unlawful.

In this case a rule had on a former day been obtained by Maule, calling upon William Shaw, Esq., the auditor of the West Yorkshire audit district, to show cause why a certiorari should not issue, to remove into this court the certificate of disallowance made by him on the 10th Nov. 1859, of the sum of 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* in the accounts of the overseers of the township of Horsforth, in the West Riding of Yorkshire.

The township of Horsforth was one of three townships of Horsforth, Silsden and Rigton, which in the year 1826 were duly formed into a union, called the Horsforth Incorporation, under Gilbert's Act, the 22 Geo. 3, c. 83. Previously to this, in the year 1819, thirty-one townships were formed into a similar union, called the Carlton Incorporation. Horsforth Union not having any poorhouse, it was arranged that its paupers should be sent to, and maintained in, Carlton poorhouse, and the same being enlarged to afford the increased accommodation, Horsforth was charged with the interest upon money borrowed for the purpose. The charges due from Horsforth to Carlton were periodically paid to the treasurer of the Carlton incorporation. The auditor, in auditing the accounts of the township of Horsforth, disallowed items amounting to 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* in respect of payments made by the overseers to the treasurer of the Carlton incorporation in respect of the interest so as aforesaid due upon the debt, and for the maintenance of the paupers of Horsforth in such workhouse, and also in respect of certain of their lunatics sent to Wakefield Asylum from such poorhouse, the cost of whom was in the first instance charged to the treasurer of the Carlton incorporation.

Bliss, Q.C. and Tomlinson showed cause.

Pickering, Q.C. and Maule contra.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear in the following judgment.

HILL, J.—This is a rule calling upon the poor-law auditor to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to remove into this court his certificate of disallowance of certain items in the overseers' accounts; and I am of opinion that the rule should be discharged. According to the facts of the case, it appears that in 1819 a union was formed under Gilbert's Act, the 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, of thirty-one townships; that another similar union of six townships was formed in 1824, and a third union was formed in 1826, called the Horsforth Union. Now, it seems that neither of the two latter unions had any poorhouse, and that each used the poorhouse belonging to Carlton Union. The Horsforth Union had agreed in some way or other, the exact manner being kept back, to pay a sum of money in enlarging the Carlton workhouse so as to obtain increased accommodation, and down to the present year they acted as though they were a part of the Carlton Union, and as though the workhouse had been that of the three incorporations. The sum of 12*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* consists of three classes of payments. First, charges of the poorhouse; secondly, proportion of arrears of the debt; thirdly, sums paid to the Wakefield Asylum in respect of lunatic paupers belonging to Horsforth township, all of which the auditor disallowed, on the ground that the said township is not included in the agreement of incorporation of the Carlton Union in 1819, and is not a part of the Carlton incorporation. I think the auditor was right in making this disallowance, and that there was no power in Horsforth to unite with Carlton. If Horsforth desired to have a workhouse, power is given to them for the purpose by Gilbert's Act; but there is no power to join with Carlton for such a purpose. The case is not like that where a workhouse of a union has more space than it occupies, and another union rents such space for its paupers, for here all the machinery and the management belong entirely to Carlton Union, and the Horsforth union has been admitted as though they were a portion of the Carlton Union, and the payments to the treasurer have been as treasurer of the Carlton Union, and not as treasurer of the Horsforth Union. It is the same as regards the debt and the lunatics who were sent to Wakefield Asylum, in which case it is the Carlton treasurer who is charged in the first instance. I am of opinion that all this is illegal, and could not be lawfully done; it is not sanctioned by the Act of Parliament, and the charges were properly disallowed. I have been asked, what is to be done? My answer is, that Horsforth Union must comply with the Act of Parliament. They cannot make a new Act. I cannot assist them in their difficulties, and they must therefore take the consequences on themselves. Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LEICESTERSHIRE, ex parte GEORGE COMPTON.

Church-rate—Summons for nonpayment—Bonâ fide objection—53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7.

If upon an application to justices for a warrant to levy the amount of a church-rate, the defendant makes it appear that he bonâ fide disputes the validity of the rate, though he does not in express terms object to their jurisdiction, the justices ought to forbear to give judgment.

In this case a rule had been obtained calling upon the Rev. J. M. Echallaz and Thomas Mowbray, Esq., two justices of Leicestershire, and George Compton, to show cause why the said justices should not issue their warrant to levy by distress and sale of the goods of the said George Compton, the sum of fourpence being the sum rated and assessed upon him in the churchwarden's rate for the parish of Swepstone, in the said county, and also the sum of 12s. 6d. for costs.

It appeared that Mr. Compton was summoned for the nonpayment of a church-rate, and he objected to pay on the ground that the rate was excessive, and that the overseers ought to have made an application to the parishioners for voluntary contributions, as had been agreed upon at a former vestry. The affidavits were conflicting, as to whether any formal objection was taken to the jurisdiction of the justices; but it appeared that the defendant's attorney told the justices that if they made an order they would expose themselves to legal proceedings.

By the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, s. 7, after giving justices power to enforce church-rates under a certain amount, it is provided "That if the validity of such rate, or the liability of the person from whom it is demanded to pay the same, be disputed, and the party disputing the same give notice thereof to the justices, the justices shall forbear giving judgment thereupon."

Wills now showed cause against the rule, on the ground that it sufficiently appeared that Mr. Compton disputed the validity of the rate: (Reg. v. Milnrow, 5 M. & S. 248; Dale v. Pollard, 10 Q. B. 504.)

Hayes, Serjt. and Manly Smith, in support of the rule, argued that the defendant had no right to lead the justices on to hear the case, take the chance of a decision in his favour, and then turn round and deny their jurisdiction: (Reg. v. The Justices of Salop, 29 L. J. 39, M. C.; Reg. v. Colling, 17 Q. B. 816.)

R. H. Palmer appeared for the justices.

HILL, J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged. This case is distinguishable from Reg. v. The Justices of Salop. In that case an order had been made, and an application was made for a certiorari to bring it up that it might be quashed, with the view of bringing an action against the justices. The power to grant a certiorari is always in the discretion of the court, and this court will not grant it where the party has assented to the act which he desires to be quashed, and there the court thought that he had invited the justices to make the order, and they would not allow him to turn round and seek to quash such order. But this case is different. Now, according to the rule laid down in Reg. v. Colling, my brother Crompton says, in his judgment, "Before we make the rule absolute we must see reasonable ground to believe that the act we call upon the justices to do will be lawful." I must do the same thing here. Now the application to the justices was to enforce a church rate, and the statute enacts "that if the validity of such rate, or the liability of the person from whom it is demanded to pay the same be disputed, and the party disputing the same give notice thereof to the justices, the justices shall forbear giving judgment thereupon." Now, was the validity of this rate bonâ fide disputed, and had the justices notice of that fact? If so, they ought to have forbore. Now upon the affidavits it is said that no notice was given to the justices. The affidavits in showing cause distinctly show that, although in the first instance the validity of the rate was not disputed, yet the cross-examination shows that it was, and the attorney, in addressing the justices, urged that the rate was invalid, and he stated that any attempt to enforce it would subject them to legal proceedings. The conclusion I come to is, that the validity of the rate was bonâ fide disputed, and that notice was given to the justices. If so, it is directly within the statute, and inasmuch as mere acquiescence will not give jurisdiction, the rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

REG. v. SMITH.

Appeal—Costs—Order upon informant for the costs though not a party—13 & 14 Vict. c. 45, s. 5.

By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, the quarter sessions may, upon an appeal, order and direct the party or parties against whom the same shall be decided to pay to the other party or parties such costs and charges as may to such court appear just and reasonable:

Held, that, under this provision, the sessions upon quashing a conviction may order the informant to pay the costs, notwithstanding he is not nominally a party to the appeal; the nominal parties being the convicting justices.

On a former day in this term T. C. Foster obtained a rule calling upon William Smith, Esq., one of the justices for the borough of Sheffield, to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, commanding him to issue a warrant of distress, pursuant to the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, to levy upon the goods and chattels of James Ellis the sum of 30l. 19s., the amount of costs and charges, by an order made at the general quarter sessions of the peace, holden at Pontefract, for the West Riding of Yorkshire, upon the 2nd April last, upon the appeal of Henry Whittington against a conviction, ordered to be paid by the said James Ellis to the clerk of the peace for the said riding, to be by him paid over to the said Henry Whittington.

It appeared that on the 27th Jan. last the said Henry Whittington was summoned before certain justices of Sheffield, to answer a complaint laid by the said James Ellis, assistant overseer of the poor for the township of Sheffield, for wilfully refusing and neglecting to support his wife, whereby she became chargeable to the said township, upon which occasion the complaint was dismissed. That on the 5th March following another information upon the same charge was again laid by the same party, and was again heard before other justices, when he was convicted as an idle and disorderly person under the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, and ordered to be committed to the Wakefield House of Correction for one month with hard labour. That he thereupon gave the convicting justices notice of appeal for the next quarter sessions, at which his appeal accordingly came on, and that the said James Ellis also attended and gave evidence, and admitted that he was the informant against the said Henry Whittington. That the sessions quashed the conviction, and by their order directed "that James Ellis, the assistant overseer of the poor of the said township of Sheffield, the complainant before the said justices and the real respondent in the said appeal, do on notice of this order within one week pay or cause to be paid unto Charles Heneage Elsley, the clerk of the peace of the said court, the sum of 30l. 19s., to be by him the said Charles Heneage Elsley paid over unto the said Henry Whittington, the appellant, the party entitled to the same, for his costs and charges in attending at this sessions to appeal against the said conviction." This order having been disobeyed by the said James Ellis, an application was made to a justice of Sheffield for a warrant to enforce the said order for costs. This application was adjourned, and upon a subsequent occasion another application was made to Mr. William Smith (the present defendant), who ultimately, upon being indemnified by the attorney for the said James Ellis, declined to issue his warrant unless commanded to do so by this court. It further appeared that the said James Ellis had been bound over by the convicting justices to appear at the quarter sessions to give evidence in support of the conviction, and that no notice of appeal was given to him.

By the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 14 (Vagrant Act), a power of appeal is given against a conviction, the appellant "giving to the justice or justices of the peace whose act or determination shall be appealed against, notice in writing of such appeal, and of the grounds thereof, within seven days," &c.

By the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, it is enacted that "upon any appeal to any court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, the court before whom the same shall be brought may, if it think fit, order and direct the party or parties against whom the same shall be decided, to pay to the other party or parties such costs and charges as may to such court appear just and reasonable, such costs to be recoverable in the manner provided for the recovery of costs upon an appeal against an order or conviction by an Act passed" in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 27, it is enacted that "if upon any such appeal the court of quarter sessions shall order either party to pay costs, such order shall direct such costs to be paid to the clerk of the peace of such court, to be by him paid over to the party entitled to the same, and shall state within what time such costs shall be paid;" and if the same shall not be paid within such time, then upon application to a justice he may enforce payment by a warrant of distress.

Bliss, Q.C. and Mauls now showed cause against the rule, and contended that the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to make any order for the costs against Ellis, who was not a party to the appeal, no notice of appeal having been given to him, and his name in no way appearing as a respondent; that the statute of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, only applies to the parties in the position of either appellant or respondents, and not to a stranger, however much he may be interested in the result.

T. C. Foster, in support of the rule, argued that the order upon James Ellis was good, for that he was the party really interested in resisting the appeal, the information in the court below having been laid by him, the convicting justices having no interest whatever in the result, and that the words of the Act of Parliament were sufficient to include him: (Venables v. Hardman, 28 L.J. 33, M.C.).

HILL, J.—This is a rule for a mandamus to a justice, commanding him to issue his warrant of distress to levy on the goods of James Ellis the sum of 30*l.* 19*s.*, the costs of an appeal against a conviction, and the question is this, whether the court had or had not power to award costs to be paid by Ellis. That depends on the construction of the 5th section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. [His Lordship read the section.] Now it is argued in support of the rule that the words "party or parties" bear the same meaning as respondent or respondents. It appears in this case that a complaint and information were laid by Ellis before justices at Sheffield, charging Whittington with an act of vagrancy, and upon that he was convicted. He appealed to the sessions, and under the Vagrant Act he properly served the justices alone. Ellis, who was the complainant, was bound over to give evidence. The appeal was entered as Whittington appellant and the justices respondents, but the party who appeared and really defended was Ellis. The merits of the appeal were gone into, and the court quashed the conviction, and ordered Ellis to pay the costs, and I think properly.

I was at first struck with the argument of Mr. Bliss, because the notice of appeal is directed to be given to the justices. But there is an authority directly in point, namely, Rez v. The Justices of Hants, 1 B. & Ad. 654, where a party was convicted under the Turnpike Act, which gives an appeal, first giving notice to the justice by whose act the party is aggrieved. The party appealed, and the sessions quashed the conviction, and ordered the informer to pay the costs, the justice being the formal party. The words in that case were, that the justices should award costs "to the party appealing or appealed against." The argument of Sir William Follett was, that the costs ought to have been awarded against the convicting justices, as they were the parties to the appeal; but Lord Tenterden in his judgment says, "The next question is, whether the justices had power to charge the prosecutor with costs? It is true the Act directs notice to be given to the justices, not to the party prosecuting or defending. But it would be a great anomaly to cause a justice who acts bona fide in the discharge of his judicial duty to pay costs. The question is, what is the meaning of the words "the party appealing or appealed against?" The party appealing here is manifestly the party convicted; and if that be so, the informer is the only person who can satisfy the words "party appealed against." He must therefore pay the costs if such costs be adjudged. Now I think that I am not straining the words of the section of the statute if I give them the same meaning as in the case I have referred to. If this were not so, it would follow that in all cases in which notice of appeal is given to the justices, an exemption would be given to the real party, which would be unjust to the justices. I am of opinion, therefore, that the rule should be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

ERROR FROM THE EXCHEQUER.

Friday, May 11.

SULLEY v. THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

(Before COCKBURN, C.J., and WILLIAMS, CROMPTON, WILLES, BYLES and BLACKBURN, JJ.)

Income-tax—Some partners of a firm resident in England and others in the United States—What returns should be made—What income-tax paid.

A partnership firm consisting of seven members carried on business together in copartnership. One of them lived at Nottingham, where there was a counting-house, warehouse, &c. The other six partners resided in the United States of America. The partner at Nottingham did all the business required by the firm in England, which was to buy goods and ship them to America for sale, and where they were always sold. Sometimes goods were bought by the firm in America, France and Germany, but all goods bought, whether in England or elsewhere, were sold only in America, which was their principal house or place of business. No money was ever received in England except from America. The partner residing in England made a return upon his own share of the profits of the partnership business, and paid the income-tax thereon. An information was filed by the Attorney-General for a return by the partner resident in England of the whole profits of the entire firm, and that income-tax be paid thereon:

Held (reversing the judgment of the Court of Ex.), that the partner resident in England was not bound to make a return of the entire profits of the whole firm, nor were the other six members of the firm, by their partner in England, or themselves, liable to pay income-tax upon their portions of profit.

The defendant Mr. Edward Sulley is a partner in the firm of Messrs. Lottimer, Large and Co., of Nottingham, and of New York, in the United States of America, and the proceedings in which the special verdict now argued was entered were commenced against him for recovery of the penalty of 50*l.*, imposed by the Income-tax Act on persons who, being chargeable to that duty, neglect to make return of their profits, in order to obtain the opinion of the court, whether or not the mode in which the firm transacted business in this country is such as renders it chargeable under the Income-tax Act in respect of profits.

SULLEY v. THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The Act which grants the duty now levied imposes under schedule D the tax—1. On the profits accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any trade wherever carried on. 2. On the profit accruing to any person, whether a British subject or not, and wheresoever he may reside, from any trade exercised within the United Kingdom. 3. On interest of money, annuities, and other annual profits not charged by virtue of any other schedule of this Act.

The facts to which these rules are to be applied are as follows:—

The firm of Messrs. Lottimer, Large and Co. consists of seven persons, six of whom reside at New York, in the United States of America, and one Mr. Sulley, the defendant, at Nottingham.

The firm has an establishment at Nottingham, consisting of a counting-house and warehouses, with the name of "Lottimer, Large and Co." on the door. The defendant, together with clerks and servants employed by him on behalf of the firm, occupy these premises, books of account are there kept, and the firm have an account with a banker at Nottingham.

The business of the firm in England is carried on by the defendant and other persons purchasing goods at Nottingham and elsewhere, in England, and shipping them for exportation. The goods so purchased are in some cases sent direct by the vendors to the nearest port and then shipped; in other instances they are sent to Nottingham, and are there packed, and afterwards exported.

The goods purchased are in no case manufactured or resold in England, nor is any profit made by the firm by means of any manufacture or resale of goods in England, the profit on such goods consists of the increase in price obtained by the resale in America—a large part of the profit of the business carried on by the firm at New York is obtained from goods purchased in France, Germany and America.

Remittances are made by the firm from New York to defendant, and by him paid to the bankers at Nottingham to the credit of the firm, and payment for the goods purchased in England, and for the cost of packing, shipping, &c., and for the current expenses of the business premises of the firm at Nottingham, and of carrying on so much of the said business as is carried on in England, is made by means of cheques drawn by defendant for and in the name of the firm on the bankers.

The books kept at Nottingham merely show the purchases and warehouse expenses, and the remittances made from New York to pay those items, and no moneys are ever received in England except from New York.

The information stated that defendant, before and at the several times hereinafter mentioned, was one of several persons carrying on jointly and in copartnership a certain trade and business, to wit, of general merchants and dealers in Great Britain, to wit, at the North Ward South, in the county of the town of Nottingham, to wit, at Westminster, &c., to wit, under the name, style and firm of Lottimer, Large and Co. And that the defendant, before and at the several times hereinafter mentioned, resided in the North Ward South, in the county of the town of Nottingham aforesaid, to wit, at Westminster, &c. And that the other persons so carrying on the said trade and business, and whose names are unknown, before and at the several times hereinafter mentioned, resided in parts beyond the seas, and not within or in any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to wit, at New York, in the United States of America, to wit, at Westminster, &c.

That the said copartnership before and at the several times hereinafter mentioned were chargeable and liable for and in respect of certain of the duties imposed by certain Acts of Parliament made and passed A.D. 1853, and intituled "An Act for granting to her Majesty duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices," and made and passed A.D. 1854, for granting to her Majesty an increased rate of duty on profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices, and made and passed A.D. 1855, for granting to her Majesty an increased rate of duty on profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices, to wit, for the year ending on the 5th April 1856, to wit, in respect of certain profits and gains arising to them as such copartnership as aforesaid, to wit, according to schedule D of the first-mentioned Act, the said trade having been so carried on in manner aforesaid for more than three years next before, and ending on the said 5th April 1856. And that after the passing of the said several Acts within the time directed by the precept of the commissioners in that behalf, to wit, on the 1st May 1855, one Thomas Underwood, then being an assessor of the duties by the said Acts imposed in and for the said ward within which the said Ed. Sulley so resided as aforesaid, to wit, for the year ending on the 5th April 1856, did as such assessor leave at the dwelling-house and place of residence of the said Ed. Sulley within the said ward, to wit, at Westminster, &c., a certain notice such as by the said Acts and the Acts incorporated therewith or referred to therein is required, signed by him, the said assessor, and requiring the said Edward Sulley to prepare and deliver to him, the said assessor, or at the office of the commissioners or the district, situate at King's-place, Peter-gate, in the county of the town of Nottingham aforesaid, in manner by the said Acts directed, such a list, declaration and statement as he, the said Edward Sulley, was required to deliver by the said Acts within a certain time in the said notice mentioned in that behalf. And although he, the said Edward Sulley, according to the said Acts, was liable to prepare, make out and deliver, and could and might and ought to have prepared, made out and delivered to the said assessor, or at the office of the said commissioners, a true and correct statement such as by the said Acts is required, stating, amongst other things, the balance of the profits and gains arising to the said copartnership from the said trade and business so by them carried on as aforesaid, and in respect of which said balance of profits and gains certain of the duties by the said Acts imposed, to wit, for the said year ending on the 5th April 1856, to wit, under schedule D of the said first-mentioned Act, were then and there chargeable and payable to her Majesty. And although the time in the said notice mentioned has long since elapsed, of all which said several premises he, the said Edward Sulley, afterwards and before the day of exhibiting this information, to wit, on the 1st Jan. 1858, to wit, at Westminster, &c., had due notice, yet the said Edward Sulley did not nor would prepare, make out and deliver to the said assessor or commissioners, duly authorised to receive the same, or to their clerk at their respective offices, described in the said notice and as therein directed, or to any other assessor appointed under or by virtue of the said Acts, or either of them, or to any other person, or at any other place whatever, such a statement as aforesaid, or any list, declaration, or statement whatsoever, such as by the said Acts in that behalf is required, but so to do, and to obey the provisions of the said Act in that respect, he the said Edward Sulley has at all times hitherto wholly neglected and refused, and still doth neglect and refuse, contrary to the said Acts. Whereby and by force of the statutes in that case made and provided, the said Edward Sulley not having been assessed in treble the duty at which he ought to be charged according to the statutes in such case made and provided, has for his said offence forfeited the sum of 50*l*. Wherefore the said Attorney-General prays judgment in the premises.

Plea, the general issue.

The special verdict stated:—That after the passing of a certain Act of Parliament made and passed A.D. 1853, and intituled "An Act for granting to her Majesty duties on profits arising from property, professions, trades and offices," and of two other Acts of Parliament made and passed respectively A.D. 1854, and in A.D. 1855, and intituled respectively, "An Act for granting to her Majesty an increased rate of duty on profit arising from property, professions, trades and offices," that is to say on the 6th April 1855, and from thence continually until the day of exhibiting the information herein, the defendant resided in Great Britain, that is to say, in the parish of Lenton, in the county of Nottingham, and did during all that time, under the name, style, and firm of Lottimer, Large and Co., carry on business in manner hereinafter mentioned in copartnership with six other persons, all of whom did during all that time reside, and always have resided, at New York in the United States of America, and not within the United Kingdom; and the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, further say, that the said copartnership as aforesaid, consisting of the defendant and the said six other persons, have always carried on, and do carry on, their business aforesaid in manner following. They have a place of business at New York in the United States of America, where they carry on business under the above-mentioned name of Lottimer, Large and Co., and they have also a place of business within the ward, called the North Ward South, in the county of the town of Nottingham, in which neighbourhood the defendant dwells and resides, consisting of a counting-house and warehouses, with the said name of Lottimer, Large and Co. on the door, and which are occupied by the defendant and by clerks and servants employed by him on behalf of the said copartnership for the purpose of carrying on the business of the said copartnership in England as hereinafter mentioned. Books of account for the same purpose are also kept at the said place of business of the said copartnership at Nottingham, which merely show the purchases and warehouse expenses, and the remittances made from New York to pay those items, and no moneys are ever received in England except from New York, and the said copartnership has a banking account in their said name of Lottimer, Large and Co. with the Nottingham and Notts Banking Company at Nottingham aforesaid. The business of the said copartnership in England is carried on by the defendant and other persons purchasing for the said firm goods at Nottingham and elsewhere in England, and shipping them for exportation. All goods are sent direct to the port except Nottingham goods, and small quantities insufficient themselves for a package. The goods so purchased are in some cases sent direct by the vendors in behalf of the said copartnership to the nearest port in England, and are then shipped for exportation, and in other cases are sent by the vendors to Nottingham to the said place of business there of the said copartnership, and are there packed, and afterwards exported by the defendant on account of the said copartnership; the goods so purchased are in no case manufactured or resold in England prior to their shipment and exportation, nor is any profit made by the said copartnership by means of any manufacture or resale of goods in England, the profits of the said copartnership in respect of goods purchased in England consisting entirely of the increase in price or value obtained by the resale in America of such goods so purchased by them in England and exported as above mentioned. A large part of the profits of the business carried on by the said copartnership at New York aforesaid is obtained from goods purchased in France, Germany and America. Remittances are from time to time made by the copartnership at New York to defendant, and by him paid to the said bankers at Nottingham to the credit of the copartnership, and payment for the goods purchased in England, and for the cost of packing, shipping and exporting such goods, and for the current expenses of the said business premises of the copartnership at Nottingham, and of carrying on so much of the said business as is carried on in England, is made by means of the cheques drawn by the defendant for and in the name of the said copartnership on the said bankers at Nottingham. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, further say, that profits and gains have arisen and accrued to the said copartnership from the said trade so by them carried on as aforesaid for and during the said year ending on the 5th April 1856, and for and during each of the said two preceding years, the said trade having been during all that time so carried on in manner aforesaid to a large value and amount, that is to say, 10,000*l*. And that if all the persons of whom the said copartnership so consisted as aforesaid had resided in the United Kingdom, or if the said business of the said copartnership had been wholly exercised within the United Kingdom, the said copartnership would have been chargeable and liable jointly and in one sum for and in respect of certain of the duties by the said Acts imposed, that is to say, of the duties mentioned in schedule D of the said first-mentioned Act for the year ending on the 5th April 1856, in respect of their said profits and gains. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, further say, that after the passing of the said Acts, and within the time limited by the precept of the commissioners in that behalf, that is to say, on the 1st May 1855, one Thomas Underwood, then being an assessor of the duties by the said Acts imposed in and for the said ward within which the defendant so carried on the said business as aforesaid, for the said year ending on the 5th April 1856, did, as such assessor, leave at the said place of business of the defendant, and personally deliver to him within the said ward, a notice such as by the said first-mentioned Act and the Acts incorporated therewith is required in that behalf, signed by him, the said assessor, and requiring the defendant to prepare and deliver to him, the said assessor, or at the office of the commissioners of the district, situate at King's-place, Peter-gate, in the said county of the town of Nottingham, within a certain time therein specified, in manner directed by the said Acts, a list, declaration and statement of the profits and gains arising to the said copartnership of Lottimer, Large and Co., in respect of the said business so by them jointly carried on as aforesaid made and stated by and on behalf of him, the defendant, and the several other persons so as aforesaid forming and constituting the same copartnership, jointly and in one sum, and separately and distiuctly from any other duty chargeable on the same persons, or either or any of them. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, further say that, although the time for the defendant's complying with the said notice, and for his preparing and delivering such an account and return as aforesaid, elapsed before the exhibiting of this information, yet to prepare and deliver such return he, the defendant, has always neglected and refused; that the defendant had not been assessed in treble the duty at which he ought to be charged by virtue of the said Act or any of them in respect of the premises in case he ought by law to have prepared and delivered such an account and return as aforesaid. But whether or not, upon the whole matter aforesaid, the defendant has by reason of the several premises, by the jurors aforesaid in form aforesaid found, and of such his neglect and refusal as aforesaid, forfeited the sum of 50*l.* in manner and form as in the said information is alleged, the jurors aforesaid are altogether ignorant, and they pray the advice of the barons of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in the premises. And if upon the whole matter aforesaid it shall appear to the barons aforesaid that the defendant has by reason of the several premises, and of his said neglect and refusal by the jurors aforesaid in form aforesaid found, forfeited the sum of 50*l.*, then the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, say that the defendant has forfeited to her Majesty the sum of 50*l.*, in manner and form as in the said information in that behalf is alleged. But if, upon the whole matter aforesaid, it shall appear to the barons aforesaid, that the defendant has not, by reason of the several premises in form aforesaid found, and of his said neglect and refusal, forfeited the sum of 50*l.*; the jurors, upon their oath aforesaid, say that the defendant has not forfeited, nor does he owe, or is he liable to pay to her Majesty the said sum of 50*l.* in manner and form as in the said information is alleged. Therefore, &c.

Sect. 106. Every person engaged in any trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, shall be charged by the respective commissioners acting for the parish where such trade, &c., shall be carried on, whether such trade, &c., shall be exercised wholly or in part only in the United Kingdom.

The case was argued in the Court of Ex. The court took time to consider its judgment, and Martin, B. subsequently delivered the judgment of the court as follows:—The learned counsel on both sides in this case have stated to us in writing the question upon which they desire our judgment, namely, whether the defendant is liable to make a return of the whole of the profits earned by the firm of which he is partner, by the exportation of goods from England and the sale of them in the United States, for the purpose of assessing the whole firm to the income-tax. The material facts stated in the special verdict are these:—The defendant was a partner in a firm of Lottimer, Large and Co. He resided near Nottingham, the other partners resided at New York in the United States of America. The firm had a place of business there, and also a place of business at Nottingham, namely, a counting-house and warehouse. The name of the firm was over the door, and they had clerks and servants to carry on the business, and had a banking account with the Nottingham and Notts Banking Company. Books were kept at Nottingham, but they merely showed the purchases in England, the warehouse expenses and the remittances from New York. No money was ever received in England except from New York. The business of the firm in England was carried on by the defendant and others purchasing and shipping goods for exportation. All the goods were shipped, and none were manufactured or resold in England. No profits were made in England; the profits arose from the increased prices obtained on the resale of the goods in America. A large part of the profits of the firm was obtained by the resale of goods in America, purchased there and in France and Germany. Remittances were from time to time made from New York, and were paid to the Nottingham and Notts Banking Company. The payments for the goods and the expenses of the establishment incurred in England were paid by cheques drawn by the defendant in the copartnership name. The substantive question is, whether the firm are liable to pay income-tax upon the profits earned by them on the sale of the goods in America bought in and exported from England in the manner above mentioned. In the writing signed by the learned counsel it is admitted that the defendant is liable to pay income-tax upon the whole of the profits which he received from the business of the firm, and the first part of schedule D, in the 2nd section of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, is conclusive upon the point. The point in controversy depends upon the second part of the same schedule. By it the duty is granted for and in respect of the annual profits accruing to any person whatsoever, whether a subject of her Majesty or not, and although not residing within the United Kingdom, from any trade exercised within the United Kingdom, and to be charged for every twenty shillings of the annual amount of such profits. Now, supposing the firm in question was composed of a single individual, and he resided in New York and employed an agent in England, who acted in the same manner in the purchase of goods as the defendant did, we think there is no doubt that he would exercise a trade within the United Kingdom. He would exercise in England the trade of buying goods for exportation and resale, though the resale was out of England—a well-known and extensive trade—and there is a provision made in the 100th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, for the return or statement to be made under such circumstances. In the present case a partner was the acting manager, and we think it quite clear that every exercise of the trade by him is an exercise of it by the whole firm of which he is a member, and that they all exercise it within the United Kingdom. This is corroborated by sect. 106 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, by which it appears that there may be a trade carried on jointly, partly in and partly out of the United Kingdom, and be within the enactment. It was said that the buying without selling was not trading, but we think buying in the manner stated in the special verdict, with the intention of selling, was trading. The cases cited in the argument show that the defendant was subject to the bankrupt laws as a trader. Suppose the question asked, "Did the defendant carry on trade?" the obvious answer would be in the affirmative, that he carried on the trade of buying goods for exportation. The third rule of the third set of rules, and the 100th section of the same statute, shows how the return or statement is to be made; it must be made by the defendant being the partner resident in Great Britain, and in one sum, but upon payment credit should be given for the payment made by the defendant in respect of his part of the profits in the English trade, he being charged with that in the amount of duty imposed upon himself by the first part of the schedule D. Or perhaps the better way would be, the firm should be assessed for the profits of the English trade, and the defendant separately for his share of the German, French and American profits. For these reasons we are of opinion, in answer to the question submitted to us, that defendant is liable to make a return of the whole of the profits earned by the firm of which he is a partner, by the exportation of goods from England, on the sale of them in the United States, for the purpose of assessing the whole firm to the income-tax.

From this decision the defendant appealed.

Points of argument for the Crown.—That under the circumstances stated in the special verdict, the defendant is chargeable with income-tax on the profits and gains which have accrued to the copartnership of Lottimer, Large and Co. for the trade carried on by them as stated in the special verdict.

That under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, it was the duty of the defendant to prepare and deliver to the assessor an account and return of the profits and gains arising to the said copartnership in respect of the business so carried on by them as stated in the special verdict.

For the defendant.—That under the circumstances stated in the special verdict, the defendants, partners, resident in New York, do not exercise any trade within the United Kingdom so as to be liable to be assessed to the income-tax under the 1st section and the 2nd clause of schedule D in the 2nd section of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34.

That a person resident in a foreign country does not, by exporting goods from the United Kingdom to such foreign country, exercise a trade within the United Kingdom, although one of his partners may reside in the United Kingdom for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of such goods, and that a person resident abroad is not liable to pay income-tax as a person exercising a trade within the United Kingdom, unless such trade is carried on wholly, or at any rate principally, within the United Kingdom.

Mellish for the appellant.—This is a question of very great importance, and which prior to this case has never been raised for the opinion of any court. The court must lay down the rule by which partnership firms consisting mainly of persons resident abroad and having their principal place of business abroad, but trading with this country are to be assessed, how far their profit by carrying on of trade partly in England and partly abroad by a firm principally resident abroad, but having one partner or having an agent in this country, is assessable to the income-tax. The partner resident in England, it is admitted, is liable to make a return and to pay income-tax on the entire of his own share. All the goods, wherever they are bought, are sold in the United States. This firm buy goods in England, Belgium, Germany and in the United States, but wherever they buy they sell them only in the United States. The income-tax is a tax on profits—not a tax on carrying on a trade, nor on exporting goods from England to foreign countries. A person may carry on business to the largest possible extent, but if no profits are earned he pays no income-tax. The other side say the Legislature has taxed the profits of American citizens situate exclusively in New York, the profits never having been in England at all; the Crown does not distinguish or separate the profits of that portion of the trade derived from carrying on the business in England from that derived from their sale at New York. There is but one profit, that is an entire profit, and does not exist till the goods are resold at New York. A person resident in the United Kingdom is responsible for any profit, no matter where it is derived. As to persons resident abroad, the profit must be received in the United Kingdom in one of two ways—by being earned here; or that the principal house of business is here, and the profits, wherever earned, returned here to be distributed amongst the partners. If a foreigner were to become a member of the well-known firm of Barings or Rothschild, or Brown, Shipley and Co., or any of those great firms where the principal portion of the house of business is in England, where the books are kept, the profits returned and distributed among the partners from here, there would be the existence of gains and profits in England, on which the Crown may be entitled to ask for a share of these profits for income-tax; but if the profits and gains never exist here at all, they are not liable. It never was the intention of the Legislature to violate the rights of the citizens and subjects of foreign countries, nor to tax a person who is not a subject of the Queen. A person resident in the United Kingdom is clearly made liable to pay in respect of the profits derived by him from any trade, whether exercised in the United Kingdom or elsewhere; but a person not resident in the United Kingdom is only made liable to pay from any trade, profession, or vocation exercised in the United Kingdom. Can it have been the meaning of Parliament that every foreign firm which trades with the United Kingdom, and a portion of whose trade is carried on here, should be liable to income-tax? The Court of Ex. say that it does not depend upon one of the partners being resident in the United Kingdom, but that the rule would be the same if, instead of having a partner in the United Kingdom, their business here was carried on through an agent. There are many shipping companies which carry on business by running ships between England and the United States, and between the United States and England, carrying passengers and goods both ways—there are American companies carrying on precisely the same trade and competition. The English company has a partner resident in New York, and the American company either a partner or an agent resident at Liverpool or Southampton. Can it be doubted that the entire proceeds of the English firm, including the profits of the partner resident at New York, are assessable to the income-tax, but that the profits of the American company, unless it be the profits belonging to the partner resident here, are not assessable to the income-tax? The Legislature did not mean to impose a tax on the profits derived by the American shipping company for running ships to England and back, a simple trading with the United Kingdom. The English company is a company established in England; its principal place of business is here—books, profits, whether earned here or in America, are returned here for distribution, and the partners, whether they live in England or anywhere else, draw out their profits from here; the profits are here, and may be assessed here. But in the American company it is the reverse, and therefore the partners are not subject to income-tax. It was never intended by the Legislature to put such an impediment on the trade of the country as to say that no foreigner shall trade with England without being subject to income-tax. He then referred to the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 5; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, schedule D., ss. 1, 39, 41, 42, 44, 48, 51, 52, 53, 55, 100; Allan v. Cannon, 4 B. & A. 418; *Alexander v. Sir Fitzroy Kelly (Beavan with him) for the Crown.

SULLEY v. THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

—The question presented to the court is one, no doubt, of very great importance; perhaps at certain points it may be thought also a case of very great difficulty, and the result may perhaps be to show that it is a case of considerable hardship; but, if these Income-tax Acts are to be construed upon any principle depending upon hardship, either of this case or hypothetical cases, which may not unreasonably be suggested, it would be impossible to give effect to these Acts at all. It is necessary to consider separately the two elements which are to be found in this question—the person to be taxed and the trade in respect of which the tax is imposed.

[MAG. CAS.]

It will be necessary to refer to the two provisions in 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 1, sched. D, beginning "for and in respect of the annual profits," &c., and then the next article of provision "and for and in respect of the annual profits or gains," and the 106th section, together with the portion of the 100th, in the first, the original Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35. These three sections, or provisions rather, taken together, present the whole case complete; they deal with the persons who are liable, distinguishing between individuals resident in England and resident abroad, between individuals subjects of this realm, and individuals who are aliens and the subjects of foreign states, distinguishing also between individuals sole traders and firms consisting of several parties, one or more of whom may be resident in this country and one resident abroad; they also provide for the case of trades which may be divided into three categories—a trade carried on wholly in England, a trade carried on wholly abroad, or a trade carried on partly in England and partly abroad. It is the effect of these three provisions taken together, just or unjust, hard or equitable and fair, that where a person who carries on a trade is resident in England, so that he comes within the reach of the law of this country, whether he is a sole trader or carries on a trade in partnership with others; and whether if he carry on trade in partnership with others his partners are resident with him within the United Kingdom, or one resident abroad, or some are resident in the United Kingdom and some are resident abroad; and again, as to the trade, if the trade be carried on altogether in England, or altogether abroad, or partly in England and partly abroad, if there be a person in England—in any one of those states of things within the reach of the law he is liable to be assessed in respect of the profits of that trade. That is the effect of those three provisions taken together, and is what the Court of Ex. has held to be their effect. [These provisions were then minutely examined, criticised and commented upon.] Looking to the effect of these three provisions together they are this: that a person is liable to pay income-tax upon a trade which is carried on in this country, whether that person be resident in this country or non-resident, and whether he be a British subject or not, if the trade be carried on in this country; and, taking the three sections together, the trade must be taken to be carried on in this country, though the same trade is also carried on elsewhere, if a trade be carried on elsewhere, consisting of the buying of large quantities of goods in this country, the exporting them from the United Kingdom, and then selling them abroad at profits, is liable to the income-tax. [COCKBURN, J.—If the profits are not realised in England but are realised elsewhere, I do not see how they can be subject to income-tax in England. If a man is established here as a merchant, if he buys at New York and sells at Constantinople, and the profits of that buying and selling come back to him here, they are profits realised by him here. It is not because the sale is at Constantinople; but if the profits never find their way into this country, they are not a portion of the income of this country, and are not subject to be taxed.] Is it material where they find their way if they are profits which are made in this country? Suppose, instead of one partner residing in England and six others in New York, the whole resided in England, upon the question of trade, not of person, what is the trade and what is the profit? Would not those seven persons be liable, the firm all residing here, to pay the entire amount of income-tax upon the entire amount of net profits they received? It is not persons only who are made liable—they can only be made liable upon trade, such as is defined by Act of Parliament. Would not these persons be said to have received a profit upon this trade, although it happens to be received, the last component part of the transaction has taken place, in New York? The profit is received in New York, but it is profit upon a trade which consists of acts done in England. The mere place of the receipt of the money, where the money may be payable, is perfectly immaterial. [CROMPTON, J.—After all, it is whether we must not put a sensible construction on this, “from any property whatever in the United Kingdom, or any profession, trade, employment or vocation exercised within the United Kingdom.” Whether that can possibly mean everywhere a person sends his goods—whether that can mean exercising his vocation, or whether it does not mean the place where the principal vocation is carried on. All this is merely ancillary to the main business of the house in New York.] Throughout these Acts of Parliament there is no question of degree, as to how much is necessary to be done in one country and how much in another to constitute trading in this country. Nottingham is the place of business, not of the defendant alone, but the firm; and that being their place of business in this country, they are liable, one and all, to be taxed. The capital of the whole concern, as far as regards the purchase, is in England. [COCKBURN, C.J.—It is sent from America; it comes from America and goes back to America.] After the distribution of profits the income-tax is attached. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The profits result only from the sale.] Wherever there is a house of business established a trade is carried on. The great house of Rothschild have commercial houses in five of the capitals of Europe, one being in London; they carry on their trade at all five of those places, and if there were an income-tax in all five of those countries they would each be liable to the income-tax. [The sections referred to by the other side were again brought to the attention of the court; also the 3rd clause in schedule D, and rules; and the cases in bankruptcy.] Suppose Lottimer and Co., consisting of several partners, are all residing in this country, they carry on business exactly as this is carried on, but instead of conveying or consigning these goods to America, they consign them to a commission agent at Havre, and he sells the goods for them and remits that money to some other part of the world, where they have transactions; is it to be said that they are not assessable to this income-tax? If they are, and there can be no doubt that they are, are they the less so because some of them, one only, or more, be resident here, and the rest may be resident abroad? The section I have referred to shows that the return, where there is a firm, must be made, although perhaps by one partner of the firm only, the one that happens to be resident in England; yet it must be the return of the whole firm, of the whole trade, and of the whole profits of the trade, and it is then upon that return to be considered how those profits are to be assessed. There is no provision, no machinery at all, for separating the rights or liabilities of one or more members of any firm. Wherever there is a copartnership firm which is liable in respect of any trading to any income-tax at all, it is the firm that is liable, it is the firm that must make the return, or one member of the firm, and on behalf of the firm, and it is the profits of the entire trade that are thus made liable. That this is the meaning to be applied to the word “trade” (I rely upon the view taken by the Court of Ex. on this subject also), appears by the cases in bankruptcy already referred to. The Legislature must have intended that persons in the situation of the defendant and his partners should be liable to the payment of income-tax upon a trade which, although the whole trading is not complete, is yet carried on to such an extent in England as that it would amount to what would ordinarily and popularly be called a trading in England. The Act of Parliament points out no distinction whatsoever between the shares or proportions in which each partner may be entitled to the profits of the trade. Wherever there is a trade carried on by a mercantile firm, whether it is partly in England and partly elsewhere, or altogether in England or altogether elsewhere, if it comes within the income-tax at all, there is no distinction of partners: it is the carrying on of a trade and realising of profits by the firm, it is the firm or some member of the firm that is to make the return, it is the firm that is liable, and liable in respect of the entire profits to which the firm are entitled.

Mellish was not called upon to reply.

COCKBURN, C.J.—With all respect for the judgment of the Court of Ex., I must say, that after having given the best attention I could to the reasons set forth in the judgment, and to the argument which has been urged upon us on the part of the Crown, I cannot bring myself to entertain the slightest doubt whatever that the judgment of the Court of Ex. should be reversed, and that our judgment should be for the defendant below. The facts are simply these: There is a firm established at New York for the purpose of buying goods in this and other European countries, and conveying them to America for the purpose of being sold there, and upon the sale of these goods so purchased in Europe and America, all the profits of the partnership accrue. The principal firm being established at New York, it appears that they have branch houses in this and several other European countries for the purpose of purchasing goods manufactured in those countries, and sending them to America for the purpose of sale. Now the defendant is sought to be made chargeable in respect of income-tax accruing not only upon his own share as one of the members of this general firm, but in respect of profits accruing to the firm generally. Now the body of the firm are neither resident in this country, nor are they subjects of this country, but they are American citizens, and it must necessarily be admitted that they are only liable under the Acts of Parliament relating to the income-tax, which we are now called upon to interpret, in case profits accrue to them derived from a trade exercised by them or on their behalf in this country. The question is, and the whole turns upon that one simple narrow question, whether persons circumstanced as these American subjects are who constitute this firm, carry on under the circumstances of the case a trade in this country. I think that they do not, as the term is used in the 1st section of the Income-tax Act, namely, a trade exercised in the United Kingdom properly with reference to the subject-matter of the charge. It is perfectly true that wherever a merchant is established in the course of his dealings in buying and selling, with a view to profit, the details of his trade must necessarily extend over various places. He buys in one place; he sells in another, and the place where he sells is not always that where his business is established. He buys in one country; he sells in another, but he has one given place of business, in which and at which he may be said to trade, and his profits always come home to himself wheresoever they may, in the first instance, be realised: that I take to be the true meaning of trading, or exercising a trade within the terms of this Act of Parliament, and it would lead to the most serious and the most unjust consequences if it were otherwise. If it were to be said that because a man in the course of a trading transaction touches at a variety of places—buys in one place, barterers in a second, sells that for which he has bartered the goods originally bought at a third—that at every one of these he is carrying on a trade which would bring him within the income-tax of each particular country, if an income-tax were there established. That would seem to me fraught with consequences as unjust as they would be inconvenient. That I take it is not the true sense in which this ought to be construed; and, indeed, the argument of the Crown must be carried to this length, if it is good for anything—that the mere employment of an agent in another country to buy goods which the merchant requires for sale somewhere else, would make that a trading within the country which would subject the profits eventually realised to income-tax; as for instance, to try the case, suppose this defendant were not a member of the general firm buying here, but that the defendant were simply an agent of the firm, see what the consequence would be, that because the American merchant buys in this country, he is to be liable to have his profits which are realised in America taxed in this country as well as in that. In other words, we should be doing that which is about the most impolitic thing which as a nation we could do—taxing those who come as customers to this country. It never could have been the intention of the Legislature to do anything so impolitic or unjust. It is not merely when you look to the provisions of the first section, and see what is the meaning of exercising a trade in this country with reference to realising a profit, that this construction at once suggests itself as the just, equitable and proper one; but when you come to look at the rest of the machinery of the Act of Parliament, to which our attention was called by Mr. Mellish in his very lucid and able argument, the thing becomes clear beyond the possibility of a doubt. The foreign subject who carries on business in this country not being resident here, cannot possibly be made amenable to our law—personally he is not chargeable. Then by what machinery are the profits which accrue from a business which he actually carries on in this country to be made amenable to this fiscal law? Why simply by holding that whoever carries on his business for him and receives the profits shall be liable to make a return, and to be assessed and pay the income-tax. Well, but in this case that machinery could not by possibility apply, and for this simple reason: there is no one here who receives the profits, because they are not received in this country, which plainly shows that they are not profits accruing from a trade exercised within this country in the true sense of the word, because the profits are received in America. There is no one who receives them here, and who can be made responsible? I think, when the sections come to be looked at, if light were wanting—which I do not think it is—they shed an abundant light on the question in discussion, which is, whether the trade which is only so far incidentally carried on in this country that they buy here as they might buy anywhere else, for the purpose of that which is the main object of their business—selling in America—whether such a trading can be a trading within the meaning of this section of the Income-tax Act. I think, therefore, that in point of what is the reasonable construction of this Act, it clearly must be the policy of the law, and it certainly is the equity of it—especially when you come to look at all the other sections in the Act of Parliament, and the machinery to which our attention has been called—that there is only one construction which we can put on this Act of Parliament, which is, that the profits to the firm in America did not accrue to them in respect of any trade exercised in this country, but they accrued in respect of a trade exercised at the place where the firm is established, where its main and principal establishment is fixed, and where its main business is carried on, and where the eventual profits accrue and are realised, and where therefore alone they can be considered as forming a portion of the income of the country, and therefore are chargeable to the income-tax. The profits which come home here as the share of the individual partner in the business—who is established here more as agent than as a partner, performing the duties of an agent far more than of a partner, because he does not act for the general purposes of the house, but only for the purpose of buying the goods for them to sell—they coming home to this country as his individual profits, and forming a portion of the income of this country, are properly taxable here. Therefore, as far as regards his share, it is not disputed for a moment that he is properly made liable. With respect to the main profits of the firm, which go into the pockets of the partners in America, they are not, and ought not to be, subject to be taxed in this country; and therefore I have no doubt in my mind that the judgment of the Court of Ex. ought to be reversed.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion.

WILLES, J.—I agree in everything which has been said, except in thinking that this is so very clear a case. If I had had to construe the Act of Parliament without the assistance of the able argument of Mr. Mellish, I should have come to the same conclusion which the Court of Ex. did. Having heard that argument, for the reasons stated by the Lord Chief Justice, I agree that the judgment of the court below should be reversed.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion.—My brother Crompton has been obliged to go to chambers, and he desires me to say that he also is of the same opinion, for the reasons assigned by the Lord Chief Justice.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think it necessary to say anything more.

Judgment of the Court of Ex. reversed.

ERROR FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, June 14.

(Before WILLIAMS, J., MARTIN, B., WILLES and BYLES, JJ., CHANNELL and WILDE, BB.)

CLERK v. THE QUEEN.

Quo warranto—Office of town councillor—Venue—Mistrial.

Information in the nature of a quo warranto against a person for exercising the office of a town councillor of a municipal borough in the county of Lancaster. The original venue was laid in the county of Lancaster, but the issue was tried in Middlesex by order, on a suggestion on the record that it might be more conveniently tried there, and after verdict of guilty the judgment of the court was given thereon:

Held, that the court had power to order the issue to be tried in Middlesex upon this suggestion, and that there was no mistrial on this ground.

This was a writ of error brought by the defendant on a judgment of the Court of Q. B. in favour of the prosecutor after the trial of issues joined on an information in the nature of a quo warranto.

Liverpool. Be it remembered that C. F. Robinson, Esq., &c., at the relation of Thomas Rigby, of the borough of Liverpool, &c., gives the court here to understand and be informed that the borough of Liverpool is one of the boroughs named in schedule A in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, and that there are of right and ought to be divers, to wit, sixteen wards of the said borough, one whereof is called and known as No. 4, or St. Paul's ward, and that within the said borough, there are and of right ought to be divers, to wit, forty-eight councillors of the said borough; that is to say, three councillors of and for each of the said sixteen wards of the said borough, to be elected in the manner in the said Act specified, and that the place and office of a councillor of the said borough is a public office of great trust and pre-eminence within the said borough touching the rules and government of the same (that is to say) at the borough of Liverpool aforesaid, in the county of Lancaster, and that John Clerk, late of the said borough of Liverpool, merchant, to wit, on &c., at the borough of Liverpool aforesaid, in the county of Lancaster, did use and exercise, and from thence continually afterwards to the time of exhibiting this information, hath there used and exercised, without any legal warrant, royal grant or right whatsoever, the office of a councillor of and for the said ward called No. 4, or St. Paul's ward, in the said borough, and for and during all the time aforesaid hath there claimed and still doth there claim to be a councillor of and for the said ward, and to have and enjoy all the liberties, privileges and franchises to the said office of a councillor of and for the said ward belonging and appertaining, which said office, liberties, privileges and franchises, he the said John Clerk for and during all the time aforesaid upon our said lady the Queen, without any legal warrant, royal grant or right whatsoever, hath usurped, and still doth usurp. In contempt, &c.

Plea—Protesting that the said information and matters therein contained are not sufficient in law, and that the said John Clerk need not, nor is obliged by law to give any answer thereto, yet for plea in this behalf he says that he did not use or exercise the said office of a councillor of and for the said ward, nor claim to be a councillor of and for the said ward, nor to have, use, or enjoy the liabilities, privileges and franchises to the said office of a councillor of the said ward belonging or appertaining, or any part thereof.

Issue thereon.

And now on the 2nd March 1859, it is suggested and manifestly appears to the court here that the trial of the said issue above joined between, &c., may be more conveniently had in the county of Middlesex than in the county of Lancaster; therefore, according to the statute in such case made and provided, let a jury of the said county of Middlesex come, &c.

The record then set out, in the usual way, the verdict of guilty and the judgment of the court thereupon.

Upon this judgment the defendant alleged error, and after joinder in error delivered the following points for argument:—

1. That it appears by the record that the issue joined on the information was tried in and by a jury of the county of Middlesex, and not by a jury of the county or place where the venue in the said information is laid.

2. That there is no statute or law to warrant the trial of the said issue by a jury of the county of Middlesex, upon a suggestion that a trial of the said issue might be more conveniently had in that county, than in the said county of Lancaster.

3. That there has been a mistrial of the said issue.

The points for the defendant in error were the following:—

1. That the Court of Q. B. had power to direct the issue to be tried in Middlesex by a jury of that county, by virtue of its supreme common law jurisdiction.

2. That this is an action within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 22.

3. That the court had power to direct the issue to be tried in Middlesex under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 5.

4. That an information in quo warranto is a proceeding in which the prerogative of the Crown is concerned, and in which therefore the trial may be had in any county.

Brett for the plaintiff in error.—The point is, whether the venue was rightly changed to Middlesex. The venue was originally laid in the county of Lancaster, and so it appears by the record, but the parties went before Williams, J. at chambers, who, upon the mere suggestion that the information could be more conveniently tried in Middlesex than in Lancashire, ordered the venue to be changed to Middlesex, and the information was subsequently tried in Middlesex before a Middlesex jury. This it is submitted was a mistrial and a ground of error. The venue in this case is local in its nature, as the matter the information could only have arisen in the borough of Liverpool, Lancashire, and therefore there was no power for a judge to change the venue.

[MARTIN, B.—By the record it appears to be the suggestion of the court, and not the order of Williams, J.] An information is not an action within the meaning of the C. L. P. A., and there is no power to change the venue on such a suggestion. If the suggestion were that a fair trial could not be had in the county in which the matter arose, no doubt the venue might be changed. That was decided in Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 444; and also that the suggestion need not state the facts from whence it is to be inferred that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid. In the statute of Quo Warranto, 18 Edw. 1, there is an express enactment, "that for sparing the costs and expenses of the people of this realm, pleas of quo warranto from henceforth shall be pleaded and determined in the circuit of the justices, and that all pleas now depending shall be adjourned into their own shires until the coming of the justices into those parts." And in commenting on this part of the statute Lord Coke (2 Instit. 498) cites the Archbishop of York's case: "The Archbishop of York was in possession of prisage of wines in the port of Hull, and in the reign of Edw. 2, in the time of John Archbishop, the same franchise was seized into the king's hands. After the decease of John Archbishop, William Archbishop, his successor, sued in Parliament in the reign of Edw. 3, by petition of right, to be restored to the said franchise; and afterwards, by Parliament, the petitioner was restored to the possession of the said franchise, and by the same award it was adjudged that the said William Archbishop, the petitioner, should answer the King when and where he pleased; and the like award was made upon the petition of the said William Archbishop in the Parliament the morrow after the feast of St. Catherine, in the fourth year of the same king, whereupon the King brought a writ of quo warranto against the said William Archbishop, returnable in the Court of Common Pleas, to know by what warrant he claimed to have prisage of wines in the port of Hull. Parning, Serjt. of counsel with the archbishop, pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court, and demanded judgment if the archbishop ought to make any answer there, for that King Edward, grandfather of Edw. 3, made a statute (intending this statute of 18 Edw. 1) which provided that the pleas of quo warranto should be pleaded before justices in eyre in the counties, and that it was ordained by a statute, made in the time of Edw. 3, at his Parliament at Northampton (which was in 2 Edw. 3), that by a writ under the great or privy seal no disturbance should be that common right should not be done to all, and we intend not (saith he) that against the said statute, which is a law common to all, that we ought to answer in this court. The matter concerning this Act of 18 Edw. 1 was not denied, but Sir W. Herle, chief justice that gave the rule, relying upon the award in Parliament that the archbishop should answer the King when and where he would, and there it is said that the award of Parliament was the highest law that could be, and thereupon Serjt. Parning answered over." [WILLIAMS, J.—Lord Coke is there speaking of the old obsolete writ of quo warranto, which was very different from an information in the nature of a quo warranto.] The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 5, only gives power to the court to order the venue in an information in the nature of a quo warranto to be laid in Middlesex or London when the application is made at the same time as for leave to file the information; but in the present case no such order was made. In Corner's Crown Practice it is stated that an information in the nature of a quo warranto has all the incidents of a writ of quo warranto, and the alteration in the practice from the old writ to the modern proceeding by way of information, has not changed the

Ex parte MERRETT, re THE PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY COMPANY.

Tenant from year to year—Claim to compensation—Railway—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act—8 Vict. c. 18, s. 121—Mandamus.

A tenant from year to year of land required by a railway company has no claim to compensation under sect. 121 of the 8 Vict. c. 18, if he has received legal notice to quit, and his land is not required until the expiration thereof.

In this case a rule had been obtained for a mandamus to be directed to certain justices of Hampshire, requiring them to hear and adjudicate upon an application of a Mr. Merrett upon a claim for compensation against the above company.

By the 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 18, the promoters of an undertaking requiring any land are to give notice to the parties interested, and are to require the particulars of their estate, and by sect. 121, "If any such lands shall be in the possession of any person having no greater interest therein than as tenant for a year, or from year to year; and if such person be required to give up possession of any lands so occupied by him before the expiration of his term or interest therein, he shall be entitled to compensation for the value of his unexpired term or interest in such lands," &c., and the amount is to be determined by two justices in case the parties differ as to the amount.

In this case the Portsmouth Railway Company required the land occupied by the applicant, and gave him notice pursuant to the 18th section, whereupon he replied that he was tenant from year to year of the premises. He then had due notice to quit given him by his landlord, in order that the railway company might have possession. Not having received any compensation, he applied, under sect. 121, to two justices to assess compensation, but they held that he was not entitled to any, and dismissed the application.

Milward now showed cause, and contended that, as the company did not require and take the premises until after the term of the applicant had expired, he had no claim under the 121st section of the Act.

Digby being called upon to support the rule, argued that the first notice was in part a taking of the land, for it disabled the tenant from cultivating it, or obtaining any goodwill upon leaving: (Reg. v. The Commissioners of Woods, 17 L. J. 341, Q.B.)

HILL, J.—All that the notice says is, "We require to purchase this land; let us know what interest you have in it;" an answer is given some time after, and shows that the tenant is such from year to year. He then has a regular notice to quit, and is therefore not damaged. Rule discharged.

REG. v. HOOLE AND ANOTHER (Justices.)

Poor-law—Overseers of the poor—In whom the right to nominate—43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1.

The right to appoint overseers of the poor is vested by law solely in the justices, who may make such appointment, whether the inhabitants have nominated persons for the office or not.

On a former day Whigham obtained a rule nisi for a certiorari to remove into this court an order of justices, made at the special sessions for the hundred of Blackburn, Lancashire, appointing overseers for a parish within that hundred. The rule was obtained upon several grounds, and the affidavits there used and those in answer were so conflicting as to the precise facts that the counsel respectively agreed to leave the only question really in dispute, namely, whether or not justices have power to appoint overseers of the poor without or in disregard of a previous nomination by the inhabitants in vestry, as one of law for his Lordship's decision.

Mellish showed cause, and contended that the right to appoint was wholly in the justices, that right being founded upon the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, which enacts "That the churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parish and parishes, to be nominated yearly in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace in the same county, whereof one to be of the quorum, dwelling in or near the same parish or division where the same parish doth lie, shall be called overseers of the poor of the same parish," &c. That the assent of the inhabitants had nothing to do with the appointment.

Whigham was called upon to support his rule, and argued that the statute of Elizabeth must be read with reference to the Acts before in force; the first statute, 27 Hen. 8, c. 25, requiring the churchwardens to make collections for the poor, which was followed by the 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 2, of a similar character, and the 5 Eliz. c. 3, whereby the parishioners were to appoint the collectors of alms for the poor. [HILL, J.—Nolan, in his Poor Laws, lays down the practice. The question is, whether the consent of the inhabitants is necessary. Lord Kenyon, in Rex v. Forrest, 3 T. R. says: "But we are to decide this question on the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2, the first section of which expressly declares that the overseers shall be nominated by two or more justices of the peace, whereof one shall be of the quorum. Unless there is a legislative authority for it, it is not necessary that there should be the sanction of the vestry."] The practice from the earliest times has been invariably for the proper persons to be nominated by the inhabitants in vestry. The statute of Elizabeth has reference to the practice under the earlier statutes, 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 6.

HILL, J.—I am of opinion that the consent of the inhabitants was not necessary for the appointment. The overseers derive their authority from the 43 Eliz., which enacts "That the churchwardens of every parish, and four, three, or two substantial householders there, as shall be thought meet, having respect to the proportion and greatness of the same parish and parishes to be nominated, yearly in Easter week, or within one month after Easter, under the hand and seal of two or more justices of the peace in the same county," are to be the overseers of the poor. They are therefore nominated under this enactment, and all that the justices are by law required to do, is to exercise their discretion and act jointly, as was decided in Rex v. Great Marlow, 2 East, 244, and the very fact that the matter is for their discretion shows that the appointment is not to be the act of any other body. It is a remarkable circumstance that Nolan's Poor Laws, which is a very great authority, is altogether silent as to the nomination of the overseers by the vestry. At page 46 it is said "The appointment of fit persons for the discharge of this office is a discretionary power vested in the justices, who are to select such householders as they may think most proper, having respect to the circumstances of the place and the condition of the individual;" and the case of Rex v. Forrest and the one already cited confirm this. I am therefore, on this short ground, of opinion that the persons in fact appointed by the justices being substantial householders, and only objected to because they were not appointed by the vestry, who it appears sanctioned other parties, were properly appointed by the justices, and that none other can be appointed.

ROLLS COURT.

July 7 and 9.

Re STORIE'S UNIVERSITY GIFT AND THE 52 GEO. 3 AND THE CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACT 1853, 1855.

Charity—Scheme—Ambiguity.

A testator gave funds to maintain three boys at one of the universities for three years, to be taken from those poor children on whom he had settled lands for their teaching at a petty school at Wakefield until they should be fit to go to the free school at Wakefield, and to be sent from thence to the University. The boys were to be natives of Wakefield. By a scheme sanctioned by the court, it was directed that the boys should be chosen first from those born in the town of Wakefield, who "shall have been" three years at the free school, then from boys born within the parish who "have been" three years at the school, and then from other boys who have been three years at the school:

Held, that the three years need not be next preceding the election of a boy, and therefore the court refused to set aside an election of a boy who had been three years at the school, but had left five years before the election, and had since gone to Shrewsbury school.

John Storie, of Hasleborough, in the county of Derby, by his will, dated in 1674, gave and bequeathed certain lands, both copyhold and freehold, within the county of York, "for the maintaining and bringing up of three boys, the children of such parents as were not able to bring them up alone, at the universities of this nation, viz., Cambridge or Oxford, for three years, and his mind and will was that the said three boys should be chosen out of those poor children that he had lately settled lands upon for their teaching at a petty school until they should be fit to go to the free school in Wakefield, and to be sent from thence and maintained at one of the universities also for three years, and after that time other three boys of the same to be sent up and maintained there three years successively for ever."

The testator had by indentures of lease and release of 25th and 26th May 1674 conveyed and surrendered certain freehold lands and a copyhold close to the governors of the Free Grammar-school of Wakefield, upon trust to provide and pay a schoolmaster to teach and prepare twelve poor children of Wakefield until they should be ready and fit for the free school aforesaid, choice to be made from children living in particular streets of the town of Wakefield. It being found that there were not sufficient objects of the charity founded by the testator's will, a petition was presented to the Court of Ch., and a scheme was drawn up and confirmed by an order of the court, dated in July 1826, for regulating the said charity, by which it was declared as follows:—"That the said governors shall be at liberty to apply the rents, revenue and income of the said estate, called Storie's University Gift, to maintain and bring up three boys born in the town of Wakefield, at one of the Universities of Oxford or Cambridge, for four instead of three years, such boys to be elected out of the boys who shall have been three years at the Free Grammar-school at Wakefield, and that in case there shall not be any boy fit to be elected born within the town of Wakefield, the said governors shall be at liberty to elect boys born within the parish of Wakefield who have been three years at the Free Grammar-school at Wakefield; and if there shall be none fit to be elected born within the parish of Wakefield, then that the governors shall be at liberty to elect any other boys who have been three years at the Free Grammar-school at Wakefield; and in case there shall be no boys candidates for such charity from the said Free Grammar-school, then that the said governors might be at liberty to invest the surplus revenue of the said charity in the public funds or in the purchase of lands, to accumulate for the future use of the said charity."

In June 1859 an election took place of a boy to be sent to and maintained at the University of Oxford or Cambridge, there being three candidates: the petitioner, Fitzherbert Astly Cave, who was not a native of Wakefield, but had been at the school three years then immediately preceding; Joseph Westmoreland, who alone of the three candidates was born within the town of Wakefield, and had been formerly three years at the Free Grammar School, but had left it five years previously and gone to Shrewsbury school; and another boy. The governors elected Joseph Westmoreland.

This petition was presented by Fitzherbert Cave, praying a declaration that the said election was null and void, as not being justified by the provisions of the will and of the scheme.

R. Palmer, Q.C. and Karlake for the petitioner.

Selwyn, Q.C. and Kay for the trustees of the charity.

Follett, Q.C. and Druce, for Westmoreland.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The further consideration which I have given to this case has led me to the conclusion that the petitioner has put a wrong construction on the scheme settled by the court. The proposition of the petitioner is undoubtedly just, that, if the scheme is ambiguous, the original directions of the will of the founder must be followed; but these are not sufficiently distinct to control what I conceive to be the scope of the scheme. The question to be determined is, whether a boy who has been a scholar for three years next preceding the election of a boy to be sent to college, but who is not a native of Wakefield, is to be preferred to a boy born in the town, who has been at the school three years, but has left it previously to the election taking place. The objects of the testator's gift were three boys, natives, who should be educated at the petty school, established by the testator at Wakefield for natives of the town, and then at the Grammar-school at Wakefield, to be sent from thence to the University. In the scheme which was settled under the sanction of this court, for the purpose of defining and carrying into effect the testator's objects, precedence is given to boys born in the town of Wakefield, who "shall have been" three years in the school; then to boys born in the parish; and in default of these, foreigners are to be elected. In every case boys must have been three years at the Grammar-school; but the question is, must they have been at the school for the three years next preceding? The two expressions used in the scheme, "who shall have been," and "who have been," at the free school, are not, I think, distinguishable—they are in substance the same, and denote "attendance at any time" at the school, and not for the three years next preceding. The scheme ought to be construed in a liberal spirit, and so as to include as many objects as possible. Precedence is to be given to boys natives of the town and of the parish of Wakefield; and there is nothing to show that it is to be an indispensable condition that the boys chosen shall have been the three last years at the school, excluding boys who had left the school for another. If it were otherwise, assuming that there is a competent scholar born in the town or parish who had been three years at the school, but had left it, it would not be possible to elect him, which would, I think, defeat the object of the will and of the scheme. I shall therefore make no order on this petition.

THE OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF THE PARISH OF ST. BOTOLPH WITHOUT, ALDgate (appellants) v. THE BOARD OF WORKS FOR THE WHITECHAPEL DISTRICT (respondents).

Metropolis Local Management Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120—District board—Principle of rating parishes within district.

The object and effect of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, are to substitute districts for parochial government, not only as regards management, but as regards expenditure and taxation; and under it, a district board may assess a parish to an amount greater than is required for the outlay within its own limits, if such assessment be by a general rate throughout the district to meet the expenses of the district at large; though it is competent to the board in the exercise of their discretion, in cases where the outlay is for the exclusive benefit of a part of a district, to exempt from the rates that part which enjoys no benefit; with the exercise of which discretion, however, this court will not interfere.

This was a case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate for the opinion of the court under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

It appeared that an order having been made by the above board pursuant to the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120 (Metropolis Local Management Act), for the payment by the before-mentioned overseers of the sum of 564*l.* 1*s.* 14*d.* of which was to be levied as a sewers rate, and 423*l.* 9*s.* as a general rate, and the overseers having declined to levy such rate, they were pursuant to the said statute summoned before Mr. Yardley, one of the metropolitan police justices, to show cause why they should not pay the same, and the magistrate having decided in favour of the application, a case was demanded and stated accordingly. It appeared that considerable discussion had from time to time taken place at the board of works as to the principle to be adopted in determining the contributions to be paid by the various places within the district. It was ultimately resolved that the expense of keeping the pavement in repair and every other expense ought to be charged in the same manner on each parish in proportion to its rateable value; but as some portions of the district are not paved at all, and other portions are very insufficiently paved, the expense of bringing the paving of those portions of the district into as good a condition as the well-paved portions of the district ought to be borne by the parishes in which those unpaved or insufficiently paved portions are situate. Accordingly a call was made upon the several parishes of the Whitechapel district, St. Botolph, Aldgate, being one of them. One of the sums, viz., 2225*l.* charged to another parish under the general rate, was composed of its share of the call according to the rateable value, and a sum of 855*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*, being a sum required for special paving, chargeable exclusively on Whitechapel, according to the aforesaid resolution. The other sums, with the exception of 285*l.* for bond debt and interest charged exclusively upon the parish of Holy Trinity, Minories, represented the shares of the call according to a rateable value payable by each parish in the district. Prior to the passing of the Metropolis Local Management Act, the parish of St. Botolph had been separately rated for drainage, paving, cleansing, lighting and other purposes named in the said Act, except sewerage, and the affairs of the parish were managed under the 47 Geo. 3, c. 38 (local). If each parish of the Whitechapel district had been required to contribute to the "sewers rate" and the "general rate" for the district, upon the principle of apportioning the whole amount of those rates among the several parishes in the district according to the outlay for those purposes within such parishes respectively, or according to the benefit directly derived by such parishes respectively therefrom, and not, as was done, upon the principle of requiring each parish to contribute according to the principle laid down by the board, then the sum to be contributed by the parish of St. Botolph, both as regarded the "sewers rate" and the "general rate," would have been considerably less than the sum which the board had required the parish to contribute towards the said rates respectively. The several parishes within the district were all benefited indirectly by the expenditure, to meet which the sum directed to be levied was required. Upon these facts it was contended by the overseers before the magistrate that the order was made upon an erroneous principle, both as regarded the sum to be contributed for "sewers rate," and the sum to be contributed for "general rate" and that it was null and void. On the other hand, the board contended that the order was made upon a correct principle, and also that they had determined the proportion of benefit according to their discretion, and that their decision was conclusive.

The Attorney-General (Bovill, Q.C. and Honyman with him), appeared for the respondents.

Sir F. Kelly, Q.C. (Manisty, Q.C. with him) appeared for the appellants.

The following statutes and cases were cited:—18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, ss. 66, 68, 71, 72, 84, 86, 88, 135, 136, 137, 149, 150, 158, 159, 161, 164, 169, 170, 171, 248, 249; 47 Geo. 3, c. 38 (local); 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112; Howell v. The London Dock Company, 8 Ell. & Bl. 212; Reg. v. The Great Western Railway Company, 1 El. Bl. & Ell. 130; Dorking v. The Local Board of Epsom, 5 Ell. & Bl. 471; St. Catherine's Dock Company v. Hicks, 10 Q. B. 641; Metropolitan Board of Works v. Vauxhall Bridge Company, 7 Ell. & Bl. 964; Rez v. The Tower Hamlets, 9 B. & C. 317; Goodchild v. Lamb, 1 Ell. Bl. & Ell. 451.

The arguments sufficiently appear from the following judgment:—

COCKBURN, C. J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the magistrate from whose decision this appeal is brought was right, and ought to be affirmed. The contention, upon the part of the appellants is, that although the parishes under this Metropolitan Local Management Act have been united into aggregates called districts, nevertheless that the expenditure incurred by the district board is to be so apportioned as that each parish shall only contribute the amount of the outlay that takes place within its own limits; it being contended that the purpose and effect of the Act was simply to substitute districts for parochial management, but not districts for parochial expenditure and taxation. I am of opinion that that is an erroneous view of the effect of this Act of Parliament, and that the object and effect of the Act seems to substitute districts for parochial government, not only as regards management, but as regards expenditure and taxation. The Act has united various parishes into certain districts, and has appointed in each district a board to be created by election and representation to do those things which before were done by various local bodies, commissioners, and parish officers and others, appointed under a variety of Acts of Parliament, and substituted districts for parochial government and management. Powers with reference to paving, lighting, watering, sewerage, and various other purposes have been conferred by the Act of Parliament upon these boards; and then we find under the 158th section, the board which has these powers conferred upon it, and which is authorised to make an outlay and expenditure in the performance of the various duties imposed upon it, is authorised to levy the sum required for the execution of the Act by orders to be made upon the different parishes which, in the aggregate, constitute the district of which the board is for these purposes the governing body. Now, I think, if the intention of the Legislature had been that each parish should contribute only in respect of the outlay which takes place within it, the language of the 158th section would have been very different from that which is found. The language of the section is, that the district board (and we have nothing to do with vestries in parishes for united districts) "shall from time to time require the overseers of their parish, or of the several parishes in the district, to levy the sums which such vestry or board may require for defraying the expenses of the execution of this Act." Now, the language being quite general, having no reference to the amount of outlay which may be incurred in each particular parish, the general provisions being the substituted districts are for parochial management and government, I think it must be taken, on the whole, that the intention was, that the rate to be levied should be a general rate throughout the district to meet the expenditure of the district at large. Then, inasmuch as that might occasionally operate to do serious injustice as regards individual parishes, or parts of parishes, or parts of a district, the Act goes on, in the 159th section, to provide that where the outlay is for the special and exclusive benefit of any part of the district, or for any part of the district there was no benefit from the outlay, in that case the expenditure may be thrown upon that part of the district which exclusively enjoys the benefit: there the part of the district which derives no benefit may be exempted from it. That, however, is a matter which, so long as the board takes into consideration the especial circumstances which would call for the application of that 159th section, it is not for this court to consider whether, in the exercise of the discretion vested in them by the section, the board have acted rightly or wrongly. It may well be, if they refuse to take such circumstances into consideration, this court would interpose to compel them to do so, and so long as they appear to have taken the matter into consideration, which is the case here, this court will not take on itself to control the exercise of their judgment. Taking the 158th and 159th sections together, it seems to me plain that the whole expenditure is to be raised by a taxation which is to extend over the whole of the district, not with reference to the outlay incurred in any individual parish, but with reference to general outlay for the district at large. It is very true, as was pointed out by Sir Fitzroy Kelly in the course of the argument, there may be instances in which, from the preponderance of any one parish or more than one parish over others, occasionally inconvenience may occur and injustice may be done by the superiority of the number of votes, and the influence they would exercise. But it was matter for the Legislature to take into their consideration in fixing these various districts; it is not for us to give a different construction of the Act on account of that which the Legislature may be well supposed to have taken into consideration in fixing the number of parishes. Therefore, with regard to the general power of this Act and the general taxation to be raised under it, I own I entertain no doubt whatever as to what is the true construction as to the intention of the Legislature. The only difficulty which I have felt about it arises from the question of sewerage; and I think a complete answer has been given by the lucid and able argument of the Attorney-General on this point. Sewerage is one of the subject-matters of the powers given to the district boards under this Act of Parliament. There is no provision for any separate taxation in respect of the sewerage, except thus far, it is to be raised under the powers given by the 158th section, to raise the necessary amount of the expenditure incurred in the execution of the Act; then there is a provision that a distinction shall be made in the orders between the sums to be levied for general purposes and the sums to be levied in respect of the sewerage. It was said that this created some difficulty; that it might have some reference to the application of the principle of law which Sir Fitzroy Kelly brought so prominently before us in his argument, and according to ancient law the sewerage rate was not leviable on persons whose property did not benefit from the sewers. A full explanation has been given of that. Then the 164th section has reference to what the overseers have to do, and not to the contribution to be made by the board of the taxation to be levied for the purposes of the Act. It was pressed upon us, no doubt with considerable force, that this difficulty might present itself; that whereas the Act of Parliament provides that the taxation of the rate shall be levied upon the rateable value of the property in the different parishes; that there might be a considerable difference between property rateable to the poor and property assessable in respect of sewerage matters; and if there should be some great disproportion between the rateable value of one parish as compared with the rateable value of property in another (I mean property rateable to the sewers rate), it may be it would be the duty of the board to take that into consideration, and not, in distributing the aggregate sum among the various parishes, to look merely to the rateable value of property liable to the poor-rate; but, in making their order to levy the sum under the head of sewerage expenses, to take into consideration the difference there might be between the amount of property rateable in respect of the two different heads of poor-rate and sewers rate. There is nothing in this case to show us that the board did not take that matter into consideration in distributing the amount to be levied in each parish for sewerage expenses, and did not take into consideration any inequality there might be in this respect, supposing any such inequality to exist, or to show any defect in the sewerage rate in that respect. Therefore, it seems upon this broad ground that the sewerage expenses being to be defrayed under the 158th section, the only objection here made is, that in assessing, or rather in distributing the amount of the taxation necessary to be levied for the common purposes of the district, the board have not taken into consideration the amount expended in each individual parish. I think they were not bound to do that. They were perfectly right in looking to what was required for the general expenditure of the district, and in apportioning that among the different parishes according to the amount of rateable value in each. That, I think, was the intention of this Act of Parliament, which has superseded the old parochial boundaries and the whole system of parochial government, merging various parishes into one district, for the general purposes of local management and government of the district. It is a new system begun on a new principle, the principle of general representation in this system of local government. I think we must look to this Act of Parliament, and this Act of Parliament alone, and it is not enough to tell us that it supersedes the old principle of parochial government, when the fact is it was intended to do so. The boards in making these orders have acted in conformity not only with the Act which authorised them to do so, but with the intention of the Legislature. Therefore, this decision of the magistrates was right.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I was unfortunately obliged to leave the court last Wednesday before Sir Fitzroy Kelly had finished his argument, and I had not the advantage of hearing the whole of it. I feel, therefore, that I ought not to take a part in this judgment. I do so merely to say this, that, as far as I have considered the question raised upon this special case, I am of the same opinion as the rest of the court.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. We are bound to say the magistrate is not made out to have acted improperly. But it is a question left to us, and unless we see most clearly that this rate on the parties complaining is an invalid one, we cannot so decide. I do not think that is at all made out. Now the main question between the parties originally would be on the general construction of this Act of Parliament, as to whether it really was intended, according to Sir Fitzroy Kelly's argument, to transfer merely the management of parochial matters and the whole parochial government to the hands of this new representative board, or whether it did not really mean the new district, independent of parishes, for which rates were to be made to carry out the expenses of the Act. I am satisfied by the Attorney-General's argument, and was from the outset of the case, and I never entertained any doubt that the Act of Parliament did not mean merely to transfer the management of the different parishes, keeping each distinct, as Sir Fitzroy Kelly pressed so much by supposed analogy to poor-law unions, when it intended to create a new district for social government purposes, drainage and sewerage; they included that. Therefore I come clearly to see whether this was intended to be a district tax. That is the main question between the parties. Then we come to the principle and the mode of taxation. Now the mode is this, that the expenses in the district are to be ascertained, and then they are to be distributed. Now it was said that a great difficulty arises in the mode of distribution; for this Act of Parliament does not in express terms say on what principle it is to be distributed. I think they meant to leave it in a great measure to the discretion of the representative government to do what is fair in the distribution. It was pressed by Sir Fitzroy Kelly that each parish is to be taxed only according to the outlay in the parish. It seems to me, if it is to be a district rate, it is almost the same question, and does not need any argument, because it is to be a district tax, and it is not clear how the expense in the ambit of the parish is to be kept up. There is nothing in the Act of Parliament to show that; on the contrary, the words are for the expenses of the district in the very distribution clause as to rating. Therefore, I think it is not at all intended to be confined to the expenses in the district. The other suggestion was, it was only to be for the direct benefit of the parish. It seems to me that could not be the principle, because the indirect may be a very much greater benefit than the direct. An Act of Parliament of this kind, creating the whole remedy for what is called sewerage goes very much beyond the principle of sewers. We inquired several times, in order to know, what the actual principle was on which the appellants stated this distribution ought to proceed; and except in two instances, which were unintelligible to me, nothing was suggested. Then it comes to this, was there any actual direction, and have they done what really is within the general direction of the Act of Parliament? Now, the Act of Parliament does not say how they are to do it. It is not unreasonable as a prima facie rule perhaps, to say we think the rateable value shall be ascertained, and we will make it on that. With one exception that would only be fair. Now it seems in the present case, they have passed a resolution that they would distribute according to the rateable annual value; and I understand that to be according to the poor-rate. As to sewerage and as to the general rates, it would not do to say it was mathematically correct apart from all the other circumstances. Then by the 164th section there are to be exemptions and allowances; and if you are to collect what is the amount to be distributed according to what the rateable value is, I think they ought to take into their consideration that there is in some cases only to be a fourth taken, and in some others the property is not to be charged at all. If they did not take that principle, it would seem they were making it a parochial tax instead of a district tax; in other words, throwing the exemption on the rest of the parish instead of the district, whereas the basis of the respondents' argument is, it is a district tax. If it was for 2000*l.* for general purposes on one parish, on that which is rateable to the poor-rate, and 1000*l.* is struck off that, it is taking the rateable value; and when you come to see how much of that would be according to that, I do not think it would be mathematically fair. It may be—I do not know that there are any such exemptions—it may be there may be other circumstances that may make it fair; whether there are or are not one cannot tell. I do not think that sufficiently raised by the case that there was anything improperly done whatever in their resolution. There may be many cases where the direct benefit may be so much greater in one part than the other as to overbalance this exemption. I think the duty of the parties is to look at all the circumstances under the 158th and 159th sections, and say what was fair to be done under all the circumstances. I think, as this body is elected by representation as representing all the parishes, that may have been the meaning of the Legislature. Now there is no appeal given against it; it is to be left in their discretion. I think the judgment of this court in the case referred to shows it is discretionary. My notion of the rule for distribution is this: they are to look at all the circumstances of the case and say whether they think that this benefit principle, amongst others, is to be applied in favour of any portion of the parish or any part of the parish. Now, the 159th section is pointed to that expressly. I think it very likely, under the 158th section, they would look to the rateable value of the whole; then by the 159th section it would seem, if they do not get the full benefit they are to have the power to exempt; that is left to the district board, and not to the magistrate or this court. I think, if they decide wrong, we ought still to say they have exercised their discretion. If I were advising them I would say, do not make such a positive rule as to say you will take the annual rateable value of the property, entirely excluding everything else; do not do that, but look at it entirely how you ought to distribute it under the 158th and 159th sections. That is not the point, however, before us. I am clearly of opinion we cannot say the order is invalid; and even if they had not taken all the matters into their consideration, we think we cannot interfere with their discretion. In the present case they seem to have considered the matter; all we can do, and all we have said we will do, is, if they will not make a proper application, to take the matter under the 159th section, relieved from liability on the ground of it not being an equal benefit, and if they have not taken that into consideration, we will make them consider it. It never can be for one moment supposed, and it would be contrary to all the general rules of law, if we were to make them not only consider, but decide one way. Our judgment therefore ought to be against the appellant.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. This case comes before us on an appeal from the decision of a police magistrate, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. Under that we have no jurisdiction to say anything but whether the magistrate did right or wrong, and to answer the questions submitted to us by him. The question he asks, and the only question he could ask us, was this, whether the order was valid. He was called upon, under the 166th section of the Metropolis Local Management Act, to enforce an order that had been made by the overseers of this parish, and he was bound so to do unless the order was shown to have been invalid. Now, was the order void? It is said—and facts are brought before us to show—that in making the order to apportion the whole sum of expenses amongst the different parishes in the district, the vestry board acted on an erroneous principle in apportioning it amongst the parishes; that they ought to have apportioned less to this parish and more to the others. I think, even if that were so, that would not make the order void, which is the only question we have before us here. I find that the jurisdiction of the district board is given by the 128th and 129th sections; all expenses incurred by the district are incurred in carrying out this Act, including every different expense—the whole make one fund. I think the Attorney-General quite right in saying the whole of the amount of expenses incurred for district expenses is to be taken out of the whole district, and the manner in which they were to be apportioned by the parishes was to be given by these two sections: when you look at sect. 158 it says, “they shall make an order to pay the sums which such vestry or board may require for defraying the expenses of the execution of this Act.” The Act is silent as to the principle upon which they are to apportion those sums. If it stood solely on sect. 158, I should have thought the principle on which the board was to act was, as nearly as they possibly could do, to divide the sum equally and rateably amongst the parishes according to the value. But sect. 159 brings in another principle; it is that which gives the jurisdiction to do it. Sect. 158, if it stood alone, gives them jurisdiction to consider whether or no any particular sum shall be expended for the special benefit of one part of the district more than another—not for the benefit of any part of the district as regards the general power to make allowance for it, not even to benefit any particular parishes, unless under circumstances just and proper. Now, here the board have made a decision as to the rule on which they would go, and have not made such allowances as it was said by Sir F. Kelly ought to have been made. I do not inquire whether they have done right or wrong in that. I think an absolute discretion is given them, and they have jurisdiction to apportion it, not acting capriciously, but acting judicially and properly; and having made it, the Legislature has given no appeal, certainly no appeal to a police magistrate, to say what they are to do, unless the case can be carried so far as to say that after having made an error in the principle of apportionment, however small the error might be, and however slight the effect might be, the whole order was void, and every one of the ratepayers might refuse to pay the rate. If we decide the case in favour of the appellants, it certainly would be a most inconvenient construction to put on the power; and the only other construction that occurs to me is this—and what my brother Crompton has already stated—that the scheme of legislation was to give to the local Parliament, if I may so call it, a jurisdiction to determine, not acting capriciously, but keeping equality and fairness in view—equality in the general principle and fairness in the mode of applying the allowances to be made, before they took steps in their discretion and within their jurisdiction, without any appeal to us, and without any power in this court to review their decision.

REG. v. JOSH. ARMITAGE AND OTHERS, JUSTICES OF THE WEST RIDING OF YORK.

Practice—Certiorari—Case stated by justices.

A. was convicted for having woollen materials suspected to have been embezzled on his premises; he applied for and obtained a case for the opinion of the court, which was in due course entered in the Crown paper; he afterwards, but before the argument of the case, ascertained that the convicting justices were connected with the woollen trade, contrary to 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, s. 25. Under the above circumstances the court granted a rule nisi for a certiorari, to be heard at the same time as the special case.

Keane moved for a certiorari to bring up a conviction of Joseph Armitage, Joshua Moorhouse and Wm. Willans, three of the justices of the West Riding of York, with a view to the same being quashed. It appeared from the affidavits that on the information of one R. H. Kaye a search-warrant was issued, alleging that there was cause to suspect that a quantity of purloined and embezzled materials used in the worsted, woollen, cotton and silk manufactures were concealed in the dwelling-house, outhouse, yard, garden, or other place in the possession of Titus Thewlis, of Huddersfield, cotton twister. Search having been made, certain cotton materials were found, which were taken before two justices of the West Riding, who heard the case under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, and discharged the same, and the informant thereupon applied for and obtained a case for the opinion of the judges of this court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon which an order was made remitting the case to the justices, and ordering them to hear the information under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40. The case was heard before Joseph Armitage, Joshua Moorhouse and Wm. Willans, three of the justices of the West Riding, when they convicted the applicant under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, s. 2, in the penalty of 10*l.* for embezzling the cotton materials found on his premises in the sum of 2*l.*, the value of the materials, and the sum of 6*l.* for costs, and in default of payment ordered him to be imprisoned for one month. Defendant thereupon applied for and obtained a case for the opinion of the judges of this court, and such case was duly entered for hearing, but has not yet been heard. Joseph Armitage, one of the convicting magistrates, is the father of several persons engaged in the woollen manufacture, in the immediate neighbourhood of Huddersfield. One of his sons is chairman and treasurer of the Huddersfield Manufacturing District Association, established for the purpose of supporting prosecutions of this nature, of which association the said Richard Henry Kaye is the salaried inspector. William Willans, one of the convicting justices, is also a merchant in the woollen trade, and carries on business at Huddersfield, and has several sons in the same trade. Joshua Moorhouse, the other convicting justice, is part owner of and interested in a woollen mill at Holmfirth, is acting trustee of a woollen mill, and has a son-in-law a woollen manufacturer. John Tallents Fisher, one of the justices who previously heard the case, is engaged in the woollen business, and owner of woollen mills at Marsden. It was further alleged that the said proceedings were not commenced within six months after the commission of the offence. Sect. 25 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 40, provides that, in all convictions or adjudications under this Act, one at least of the convicting or adjudicating justices shall be a person not engaged in any manufacture, trade, occupation, or employment to which this Act extends, and shall not be the father, son, or brother of any such person; and sect. 34 limits the trades to which the Act extends, amongst which are the manufacture of woollen, worsted, linen, &c. This case is distinguishable from Reg. v. Justices of Macclesfield, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 352, which was before this court, inasmuch as here there was no waiver. The defendant was not aware of the objection to the justices at the time of hearing, or for a long time afterwards. No step has been taken by the defendant with regard to the special case since the objection has come to his knowledge.

Rule nisi; to come on with the case in the Crown paper.

June 9 and 11.

REG. v. HERFORD.

Coroner—Jurisdiction—Fire—Prohibition.

The jurisdiction of a coroner to hold inquests is, with reference to felonies, limited to the case of "on view of the body." And he has no jurisdiction to hold an inquest in cases of fire, unless it be by custom.

A writ of prohibition will lie to restrain the exercise of an excess of jurisdiction by criminal as well as civil courts.

Rule nisi for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the coroner of Manchester to restrain him from proceeding with an inquiry into the cause of a fire which occurred on the premises of Levy Kreigsfeld.

The affidavit of the coroner stated that he understood and verily believed that it was the duty of coroners to hold inquests in cases of fire, and such inquests had been made, and were now holden by the coroners of London, Lincoln, county of Middlesex, Doncaster, county of York, Rotherham, Nottinghamshire, Bedfordshire, Flintshire, Anglesea, and other places, by virtue of the general law of England; that he had held such an inquest three years ago, and no objection was made to his jurisdiction; that the present inquest was held on the written information of Mr. Palm, chief constable of the city of Manchester, and he charged the jury that it was their duty to inquire whether such fire was caused by accident or design, and if by design, then by whom; that he had examined on oath the said W. Kreigsfeld, against whom no charge whatever was made, and another, and that he had not held the said inquest by or at the instigation of the said insurance company.

The Solicitor-General, Dr. Wheeler and A. Fonblanque showed cause.—The first question to be discussed is, whether prohibition is the proper way to test the authority of the coroner; and the second, has the coroner jurisdiction in cases of fire to summon a jury to inquire into their origin? As to the first point, the coroner is an officer intrusted with a criminal jurisdiction only, and prohibition is not applicable to criminal cases. In the present case a jury has been summoned, an inquiry has taken place, and Kreigsfeld has been examined, In Bla. Com. lib. 3, c. 7, the cases there referred to as being cases for prohibition are all civil. [CROMPTON, J.—In Com. Dig. tit. "Prohibition," F. 6, "Prohibition lies if there be a suit before a spiritual judge for perjury in a temporal cause," or "if a suit be ex officio, which requires an answer upon oath to a criminal matter." 1 Sid. 374, is referred to. And the heading there is, "If the suit be for a criminal matter," on what ground should it be confined to civil suits? Suppose a court of sessions choose to try a man for perjury, why should not prohibition go? There is only one case on record (Gould v. Gould, 2 Hy. BL 100), and that was in the case of a court-martial. [BLACKBURN, J.—What then is the remedy? If a man is injured he has his remedy by action, or he may bring up the judgment to have it quashed. [CROMPTON, J.—Suppose they proceed to hang a man.] Probably they would subject themselves to the same punishment. [BLACKBURN, J.—You don't show any case in which a writ of prohibition has been refused on the ground that the court to which it was to be directed was exercising a criminal jurisdiction. Mellish referred to 12 Co. Rep. 302.] That was a case of suit: (2 Inst. 599, 638; 3 Inst.; Fitzh. Nat. Bre.) All the forms are there framed as applicable to civil proceedings: (Com. Dig. "Prohibition," A.) [BLACK-BURN, J. referred to Pomfret's case, Lit. Rep. 153.] That was a proceeding by the justices in a civil suit. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Have you anything to negative the jurisdiction of the court? It is often of greater importance that the subject should not be vexed by criminal proceedings than by civil process. CROMPTON, J.—I have no doubt the court may grant the writ ex mero motu.] The coroner was an ancient common law officer; his functions are laid down: (1 Bla. Com. lib. 1; Hale's P. C. c. 8; Magna Charta, c. 17; Com. by Lord Coke, 2 Inst. 30; Historical and Political Discourse of Law and Government of England, by Bacon, 1689, c. 67, s. 23; Jervis on Coroners, 24, 32, 44; Hawk. P. C. c. 9, s. 35; lib. 2, c. 9; Horne's Mirror of Justice, 54, 58, s. 13; stat. 52 Hen. 3, c. 24; 1 Edw. 3, c. 10; 4 Edw. 1, c. 2; 1 Bla. Com. 337, lib. 1, c. 9; 59 Geo. 3, c. 4; Ashford v. Thornton, 1 B. & Ald. 405; 59 Geo. 3, c. 46; 18 Edw. 3, stat. 1, ss. 2, 3; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 13, were also referred to. [BLACKBURN, J.—Are there any instances upon record of the exercise of such a jurisdiction between Magna Charta and the commencement of Queen Victoria's reign? I know there have been some recently, but are there during the period I name?] The burden of proving the non-existence of the jurisdiction now claimed lies on the other side. The statute De Officio Coronatoris, 4 Edw. 1; Bracton, bk. 3, c. 5, fol. 121; Britton, 11, 25; Fleta, were then referred to, to show that jurisdiction was once given by the statute using the word "burnings," and it was urged that non-user could not defeat the jurisdiction if once given: (Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 620.)

Mellish (Fearnley with him) in support of the rule.—The coroner has no jurisdiction to hold an inquest, except super visum corporis of a man. The uniform practice agrees with Lord Coke's Commentary, 2 Inst. 32: "And what authority had the coroner? The same authority he now hath in case when any man come to violent or untimely death, super visum corporis, &c. abjurations and outlawries, &c., appeals of death by bill, &c." There is some difficulty in distinguishing between the authority of the coroner and the sheriff in his own court. The coroner is elected in the County Court, and makes the proclamations in cases of outlawry in the Sheriff's Court. In ancient times prosecutions were instituted by way of appeal to the coroner, who was to institute a preliminary inquiry, and to direct whether the accused was to be imprisoned or pledges were to be taken: (4 Edw. 1; Bracton, c. 7, 8, 22, 27.) Fleta agrees with Bracton. The Mirror states so many things respecting the office of coroner, which are clearly not law, that the book is not of much authority on the point. In the part immediately preceding the passage relied on by the other side, the Mirror speaks of the practice of inquiry by the coroner into burnings as obsolete then. Lord Coke, 2 Inst. 271; Hale P. C. 57; Staundford P. C. 51; and Com. Dig. "Officer Coroner," G. 5, all agree that the coroner's jurisdiction to hold inquests exists only in cases of super visum corporis. (He was then stopped by the court.)

June 11.—COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule must be made absolute, on the ground that a coroner holding an inquest in case of a fire is acting beyond the proper limits of his office and jurisdiction. We have the authority of three of the very greatest writers who have expounded and illustrated the law of England for saying that the office of a coroner to hold inquests is, with reference to felonies, limited to the case of "on view of the body." And Lord Coke and Hale both lay down that law in very clear, distinct, and explicit terms; it is adopted by Comyn in his Digest, without the expression of any doubt on his part; and I should conceive that those authorities are sufficient, in the absence of statutory enactments to the contrary, to make good the proposition of law which is supported by such authority. Besides that, there seems to have been—certainly from the time of 24 Hen. 6, down to the last ten or twenty years—an uniform abstinence from the exercise of any such jurisdiction. It is difficult to conceive that if it had formed any part of the duty of a coroner to hold inquisitions not only in the case of homicide, but in the case of other felonies, arson included, that duty would not have been exercised; and the total omission of any act of the kind, so far as we can ascertain, during a period of several hundred years, combined with the authorities to which I have referred, satisfies my mind that such a jurisdiction cannot exist. But independently of that, we have a certain degree of exposition of the law in what has been done by the Legislature, for the office of coroner having ceased to be held by the great men in the counties, and having become for the most part exercised by professional men, who could not afford to give their time and trouble without remuneration, the Legislature has upon several occasions since the time of Henry VII. provided for the remuneration of coroners with respect to the duties they had to discharge; and we find that the remuneration of coroners has in these statutes been limited to the cases of inquests held upon the bodies of persons killed either by design or by misadventure. Now I think from that we may very fairly infer that the Legislature did not consider that coroners possessed the jurisdiction now contended for; because, if they did, it would have been their duty to exercise that jurisdiction in discharge of the duties of the office; and, as the Legislature has proceeded upon the principle of not calling upon them to discharge duties gratuitously, I cannot but think that the Legislature, if it had considered it was part of the duty of coroners to hold inquests in cases of fire or arson with a view to ascertain if arson had been committed, it would have taken care that they should be remunerated, there being no conceivable reason why, if it was their duty to hold such inquests, they should not be remunerated. The only difficulty which the question presents is, that which arises upon the statute De Officio Coronatoris, and upon the authorities of Fleta and of Britton which have been referred to in the course of the argument. And certainly the language of the statute 4 Edw. 1, De Officio Coronatoris, would, at first sight, present some difficulty, inasmuch as that speaks, not only of men suddenly slain and wounded, but of houses broken, which, at first sight, might seem to imply that it was the duty of a coroner, in case of burglary and housebreaking, to hold an inquest upon the place with a view to ascertain the circumstances attending it. I think that Mr. Mellish has removed any difficulty which at first sight might have been created by the language of the statute, by showing how plainly, beyond all possibility of doubt, it was more or less an abridgment of the law as it had been expounded by Bracton, and with a view of more clearly commenting on what the law was from which the language of the statute was taken. And, in the terms of Bracton, one finds that he was speaking either of the case of appeal on felony, or other appeal, or of the inquest to be held by the coroner super visum corporis in case of homicide or sudden death. I think, if there was any, that difficulty is removed by looking to see what is to be found in Bracton as affording a satisfactory exposition of what was the meaning of the language used. I think also with regard to the language of the statute of Marlbridge, Mr. Mellish has given, so far as a statute so obscurely worded can be explained, a satisfactory explanation; but I do not go the length of saying that all doubt or difficulty is entirely removed. But when we find that from the time these statutes were passed, so far as we have evidence upon the subject or light has been thrown upon it, this jurisdiction has never been exercised except on a contemporaneous exposition of the statute conformable to that of the great authors to whom I have referred, and from the time of the passing of the statutes we find there are these great authorities who declare in terms wholly unambiguous, clear, explicit and positive, what the law is, I think it is not because we find in what I cannot but conceive is a very inferior authority as compared with that to which I have referred, namely, the authority of Hawkins, the contrary laid down, that even there the expression of a doubt ought not to shake our confidence in the authority of such men as Lord Coke, Hale and Comyn. With regard to its importance to the public two opinions may be entertained. I do not express any; all I can say is, if such a jurisdiction is to be exercised on the part of coroners as to other felonies—for the argument goes the length of contending that they have the right, as well in the case of other felonies as in case of burning houses—if they are to exercise such a jurisdiction after the lapse of 500 or 600 years, let the jurisdiction be confirmed by the authority of the Legislature, and not revived by the simple arbitrary discretion of the coroners themselves, some of whom think they have that jurisdiction, others do not choose to exercise it, and some think it is better to abstain from it. If it is desirable for the public good that such a jurisdiction should be exercised by coroners, the Legislature would no doubt have interposed. As it now stands, it is not the law, and all we have to do is to interpret the law.

REG. v. HERFORD.

WIGHTMAN, J.—This is a case of a very singular application, and, as I understand it, new; and as there have been many inquests of late holden on questions of burning, and as there is no decision which has been cited as to the extent of the jurisdiction of the coroner, I should have wished to have compared the different cases that have arisen upon this subject, and to have looked more accurately than I have had an opportunity of doing into the different authorities upon the subject. But as my Lord Chief Justice and my brother Blackburn entertain a clear opinion upon the subject, and as I am disposed to agree with them, I do not think it necessary to raise any doubt that may cause any delay in our decision. It appears to me that the view taken by my Lord Chief Justice is entirely well founded, and it is in accordance with my own view of the case; and whatever the original jurisdiction of a coroner may have been, it was in the first instance limited to a great extent by the statute of Magna Charta, and that has ever since confined the jurisdiction in some particular cases that have been mentioned. The statute De Officio Coronatoris, which is chiefly directed to the holding of inquests on deaths, though there are other matters mentioned, namely, one as to inquiring of housebreaking; that is stated by my Lord Coke only to relate to such inquiries of housebreaking as concerned the death of a man. With respect to the other powers that are given to the coroner with respect to appeals, they stand on an entirely different footing from the inquisition super visum corporis. But the great point on which I am chiefly resting is this, that from that time downwards there has been no instance that has been brought before us, that has not been explained. There are only two or three (although there have been several lately at different times), there are only two or three instances in which the sheriff has taken any inquest of office except those which were upon the death of the body. Now, Lord Coke, in terms—and his authority is of the highest—says that a coroner has no power to hold any inquest of office except on treasure trove, or some other matter not now in question. But he cannot make any inquiries of any felonies except it be touching the death of a man; as he says, the sheriff can make no inquiry of the death of a man, though he might at criminal law have made inquiries of all other felonies.

REG. v. HERFORD—REG. v. WHITE AND ANOTHER

But he contrasts the duties and powers of sheriffs and coroners in that manner. Anciently, sheriffs could hold any inquisitions of any felonies except of death; and for the same reason anciently coroners could hold no inquisitions respecting felonies, except it was on the death of a man. I find that is fortified by the very high authority of Lord Chief Baron Hale, who says that without custom the coroner hath no authority to take any inquisition other than on death. Now, it is true there is a dictum, though no authority, to the contrary, except it is in Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown. There Serjeant Hawkins says, the statute being only directory, the coroner cannot be charged with any breach of duty for what is lawfully performed, though not mentioned in it. There are some offices mentioned as to inquiries, and burning is one. But all those are open to this observation, that there is a great obscurity in those ancient offices; they are not uniformly agreed upon or always certain to be perfectly understood. After all, the best exposition that is found of those ancient duties and offices is that of the custom; and I do not find, except in very late periods, there has been any instance of the exercise of such a duty as that which is now sought to be established, or that coroners have held any such inquisition as that now contended for. It is said the exercise of such an office may be beneficial. I know not how that may be. On the other hand, it is said, on many occasions it may lead to great vexation; and there may be very good ground for that. On the whole, it seems to me, it has not been made out to my satisfaction that the coroner has jurisdiction or authority to hold such inquests as this in question.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. In this case we are called upon to prohibit a coroner from proceeding to hold an inquest on a burning, on the ground that the coroner in holding it would be acting beyond his jurisdiction; and that we have power to do so, where he is acting beyond his jurisdiction, I think was sufficiently established in the early course of the argument. The question that now remains is, whether a coroner has or has not jurisdiction to hold such an inquest. It is said that he had at common law that jurisdiction with many others more extensive; and that though Magna Charta has taken away many parts of his jurisdiction, that jurisdiction which he had at common law is still left untouched, either by Magna Charta or any subsequent statute. Now in the first place, considering that the jurisdiction has not been exercised, certainly, till quite recent times—it has not, in fact, practically been exercised for a very long time—I think it lies on those who say it existed at common law to show reasons for believing it existed at common law, and was not taken away by the earlier statutes—Magna Charta and others. The manner in which jurisdiction is shown to exist at common law, is by proving it has been used in practice, showing it by evidence of records and other ways to show that the jurisdiction has in fact been exercised, or to show by a decided case that it has been supported, or on the authority of the great writers that such common law jurisdiction is laid down by them. In this case, as far as I can perceive, there is a total failure of anything to show any such jurisdiction on the part of the coroner. As to the authority of text-writers I think I am not wrong in saying that Staundford's Pleas of the Crown is one of the highest; and if I find the greatest authorities—Lord Coke, Hale, and Chief Baron Comyn—and all the text-writers lay down the same doctrine that a coroner has no right to hold an inquisition except in the one case upon the view of a body lying dead, then, if the authority of decided cases and entries on the records show that the jurisdiction has been exercised in only two decided cases that have been brought before us, I cannot doubt that the coroners who started this new jurisdiction have made research and brought everything they can forward. The only two instances are those in the city of London—two inquisitions concerning burning, held before the sheriff and the coroner, not (be it remarked) by the coroner on view, but in the court of the sheriff and coroner, and before the sheriff and coroner. Mr. Mellish explained in the course of the argument, and there is much ground for saying, that that has reference to the ancient court, and these two instances are not in point. Now the other instance we have is as early as the 27 Edw. 3, in the Book of Assizes: we have there the King's Bench acting by sending back an indictment set before them by the coroner with other indictments, giving as a reason, according to the reporter of the Book of Assizes, that the coroner cannot hold any inquisition except upon the view of the body on a special writ sent to him for that purpose—certainly a strong authority to show what was considered to be the law at the time of Edw. III. Again, in the reign of Hen. VI. we find the same point stated, though it was not the point of decision before the judges. It appears there—but whether it was one of the serjeants arguing as counsel or one of the judges discussing the matter does not appear on the face of the book—but we find it stated as clear law, except of custom the coroner cannot hold an inquisition of a felony save in the case of the view of a dead body, and no authority or instance is brought to the contrary. The only authority that has been brought before us to show its existence is that of Magna Charta and other statutes. The passages are very obscure and difficult to interpret, and which if they stood alone might lead one to suppose the coroners held something of the sort. Beyond these there are the passages in the Mirror, Fleta and Bracton. I think there is sufficient to show, if ever the jurisdiction existed then, the ancient Magna Charta took away some of the jurisdiction; and I think the common office having been continued for many hundred years, and considering the universal opinion of the text-writers—the only doubt being suggested by Hawkins, who is not to be considered in the same class of great authorities and text-writers with Hale, Comyn and Lord Coke—that being so, I doubt exceedingly if, by the ancient common law, the coroner had jurisdiction, if not upon the construction of the early statutes; we must take it there has been a construction put on them which we are bound to follow, and we are bound by that to say it is taken away. It is true, if there had been a statute giving them jurisdiction, that is not to be abrogated by mere non-user. But the fact that a particular meaning has been put upon a statute, and the law has been taken to be such as it has existed for many hundred years, that is conclusive and abundant reason for saying the construction of the early statute is this, if it is asserted to give a jurisdiction it has not been used for a hundred years, and jurisdiction never has been taken away in the early times by the construction of a statute. I need only say further, my brother Crompton, who has been obliged to leave the court, has authorised me to say he is perfectly agreed in taking this view of the matter; the only matter upon which he required explanation was the enactments of the statute De Officio Coronatoris, which he did not understand. Mr. Mellish's explanation of it was, to his mind, quite satisfactory, and he had no doubt as to the judgment that ought to be pronounced.

COCKBURN, C.J.—We did express during the argument our opinion upon the question whether a prohibition could issue. We entertain no doubt that a writ of prohibition is one that this court ought to issue, just as much to control a court of criminal jurisdiction in committing an excess of jurisdiction, as in the case of a civil action.

REG. v. WHITE AND ANOTHER.

Coroner's inquest—Second inquiry—Certiorari.

Q. B.]

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF BRAILSFORD—MORTON v. BRAMNER.

[C. B.]

A coroner is not authorised to hold a second inquiry on the same subject-matter until after the first has been brought before the court by certiorari and quashed.

In this case an inquest had been held at Birmingham on the body of Emily Stafford, a young woman, nineteen years of age, when a verdict was returned to the effect that she died from exhaustion brought on by disease. Something transpired, however, to lead the coroner to arrest the burial and to hold a second inquest. Accordingly a second jury was empanelled, and the investigation was proceeded with, when from evidence produced tending to show that means had been used to bring about abortion, the jury found "That the deceased had been wilfully murdered by White, and that Mrs. Fisher was an accessory before the fact." Subsequently a rule was obtained for a certiorari, calling on the coroner to show cause why the second inquiry should not be brought up with a view to its being quashed, on the ground that it was not competent for a coroner to hold two inquests for the same matter; that he had no jurisdiction to hold the second inquest, the first being valid and unquashed.

Field now showed cause.—In Britton, Wingate's edition, p. 4, it is said, if the coroner on the first inquiry suspect concealment of the truth, let the inquiry be made again and again. [CROMPTON, J.—He might apply to this court from time to time for a melius inquirendo, otherwise one does not see how proceedings could be carried on, because there might be inconsistent verdicts; if that happened so, and a committal ensued, which set of depositions would be used?] If two inquiries had been held, the last one is that upon which he would be indicted. A melius inquirendo usually went to the sheriff; it was to relieve against misconduct. The authorities referred to on moving for this rule, were 2 Hale's P. C. 59; Year Book, 2 Rd. 3 & 21 Edw. 4, c. 70; but on examination they will be found to be adverse to this rule. The passage in Hale which supposes that the first inquiry was not super visum corporis, is an error, as will appear upon turning to the Year Book. Many cases are to be found of two inquiries; but, with the exception of that mentioned in Hale, none in which the first has not been quashed. A passage in 2 Hale's P. C. p. 59, has been considered as laying down the law that a second inquest can only be held when the first inquest was not super visum corporis. Lord Hale says, "and therefore if the coroner take an inquisition without view of the body, he may take a second inquisition super visum corporis, and that second inquisition is good, for the first was wholly void;" but the cases referred to in the year-books show that the first inquest was super visum corporis, therefore it is not necessary that the first should be void to enable the coroner to hold a second. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The embarrassing point is the great inconvenience that would arise if a coroner ex mero motu were to hold several inquiries; but I think, upon looking to the construction of the language of the case in 2 Rd. 3, he may well come to the conclusion that the first inquiry was held to be bad for the insufficiency of the indictment, the words super visum corporis being probably omitted; and you don't find a man so accurate as Lord Hale stating that a proceeding had been set aside without sufficient authority.] (Fleta, 37, s. 3; Mirror of Justice; Umphreville, 45, were also referred to.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—We need not trouble you, Mr. Kennedy; we have the authority of Lord Hale and the universal practice. The only way in which a second inquiry can be made is by an application to set aside and quash the first. In the present case the second inquest was obviously bad; the rule will therefore be absolute.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF BRAILSFORD.

Highway—Indictment for nonrepair—Road impasssuble in winter—Dedication—New trial for misdirection after verdict for defendant.

Indictment for nonrepair of a road, tried before Pollock, C.B., at the Derbyshire spring assizes, and a verdict found for the defendants.

It appeared that there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the road in question was passable in winter, and had been used during that season, and the learned judge in his summing-up expressed great doubt whether there could be a dedication of a road which was impassable in winter, and at the close of the summing-up said: "I might have stopped the case if there had not been some evidence of user during the winter, for I do not see how you can infer the dedication of a road to the public which is impassable in winter."

A rule nisi having been granted for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, Mellor (Lush and S. Bristowe with him) showed cause.—As to the misdirection Ballard v. Dyson, 1 Taun. 279, and The Marquis of Stafford v. Coyney, 1 B. & C. 257, were cited. Secondly, the verdict having been found for the defendant, there is no ground for a new trial: (R. v. Russell, 3 E. & B. 943; R. v. Johnson, 29 L. J. 133, M.C.)

Mucanlay, Hayes, Serjt. and Field, in support of the rule, were not called upon.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am of opinion that in this case there was a misdirection by the learned judge. There can be no reasonable doubt that the jury may have been, and probably were, misled by the direction of the learned judge. The evidence was not all one way [His Lordship here cited from the summing up the passage above extracted]. There are some other passages to which objection might have been taken, but they are not mentioned in the rule; e. g., he says, that "from mere user the jury could not find a verdict that it was a public way; but that there must be a dedication;" without telling the jury that user was evidence of a dedication. Then as to the other point about granting a new trial after the verdict for the defendant, whatever may have been the rule long ago, as said by Lord Campbell C. J., in R. v. Russell, it has since been materially modified: first, by suspending the judgment to enable the Crown to move; and afterwards directly by granting a rule for a new trial. Certainly, the direct mode is the more convenient one in cases to which it can be applied. It was said in R. v. Russell, and also in R. v. Johnson, that where the indictment charges directly a misfeasance it may be a question whether the court, in exercising its discretion, would grant a new trial; but a distinction was taken between a charge of misfeasance and one of nonfeasance. This is an indictment for nonrepair of a highway, and it is in the nature of a civil proceeding to try the obligation of the parish to repair. It seems to me that there is no reason why, where the rule is moved for on the ground of misdirection, and not as against evidence, there being a conflict of testimony, we should not adopt the direct practice. The rule will therefore be absolute.

BLACKBURN, J. delivered a similar judgment.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

MORTON v. BRAMNER.

Poor-rate—Precise demand—Fraction of a farthing. If the amount of the proportion of the rate which a ratepayer was to pay comes to a certain sum and the fraction of a farthing, he is not bound to pay the fraction, and a demand by the overseer of the sum and a farthing is bad.

On the 20th March 1860 William Bramner (the espondent), by his attorney Mr. C. H. Cooper, appeared at March, in the Isle of Ely, before two justices of the peace for the said isle, pursuant to a summons previously served on the respondent, granted upon the information of George Norton the appellant, and one of the overseers of the poor of the hamlet of Wimblington, in the said Isle of Ely, requiring the respondent to show cause why he, "being a person duly rated and assessed to the relief of the poor of the said hamlet, in and by several rates made on the 8th Nov. 1859 (hereinafter called the first rate), and on the 31st Jan. 1860 (hereinafter called the second rate), in the several sums of 1s. 5d. and 1s. 9½d., had not paid the same, or any part thereof, but had refused so to do." The making, allowance and publication of each rate was duly proved. The respondent was assessed in each rate upon a rateable value of 4l. 4s. 6d. The first rate was at 4d. in the pound, and the second rate was at 5d. in the pound. Demands, of which the following are copies, were proved to have been served personally on the respondent for each rate.

As to the first rate—

"No. 11. "Wimblington Poor-rate Demand Note.

"To Wm. Bramner, of Wimblington.

"The overseer of the parish of Wimblington demands payment of the poor-rate, made the 8th Nov. 1859, due from you, with the arrears of the former rate previously due as below:—

Assessable value, 4l. 4s. 4d.; amount of	s.	d.
rate 4d. in the pound	1	5
	1	5

(Signed) "JOHN THOMPSON, Collector."

As to the second rate—

"No. 11. "Wimblington Poor-rate Demand Note.

"To Wm. Bramner, of Wimblington.

"The overseer of the parish of Wimblington demands payment of the poor-rate made the 31st day of Jan. 1860, due from you, with the arrears of the former rate previously due as below:—

Assessable value 4l. 4s. 4d.; amount of	s.	d.
rate at 5d. in the pound	1	9½
Previous arrear	1	5
	3	2½

On the part of the respondent it was contended that both rates were altogether void, inasmuch as they were monied out wrong; that is to say, the first rate being at 4d. in the pound on 4l. 4s. 4d., amounted to 1s. 4½d. and a fraction of another farthing only, instead of 1s. 5d.; and the second, being at 5d. in the pound, amounted to 1s. 9d. and a fraction of a farthing only, instead of 1s. 9½d. And further, that the demand in each case was insufficient, as the precise sum due, and no more, should have been demanded. As an authority the decision of Gibbs, C.J., in the case of Hurrell v. Wink, 2 B. Moore, 417; 8 Taunt. 369, was cited; and it was submitted that it was patent from the rate that the precise sum properly due was in each case less than the amount actually demanded. No tender of any sum whatever had been made by the respondent. There were at the same petty sessions thirty-five other cases in which the same attorney appeared, and he stated that he should raise the same question in each case. The magistrates in a previous case at the same petty sessions decided against the objection, on the ground that the defence properly constituted ground of appeal, and that an error in the rate-book could not be set up as a defence to a distress, the validity of the rate not having been tested by appeal. Mr. Cooper refused to demand a case, and stated that Mr. Naylor, barrister-at-law, advised that the objections were valid, and that he would have attended to support them, but that he was engaged at Cambridge assizes. A similar case had been heard at a previous petty sessions, when a similar question was raised by the same counsel, and overruled by the magistrates, who granted a warrant of distress, which was put in force, and Mr. Cooper thereupon issued writs for his clients against the overseers of Wimblington and their assistants acting under the said warrant of distress. The magistrates therefore deemed it expedient to decide the respondent's case in his favour, so as to allow an opportunity to the appellant of demanding this case, and obtaining the opinion of a Superior Court on the questions of law thus raised and insisted upon in an economical and summary manner. The appellant (the overseer) by his attorney Mr. W. L. Ollard, did accordingly demand a case, and entered into the usual recognisances; and this case is stated accordingly. The hearing of the other summonses was then adjourned, on the understanding that they were to abide the decision in this case. The questions for the opinion of the court were—First, whether the respondent showed sufficient cause for not paying the two rates in question, or either of them; and secondly, whether the magistrates ought or would have been justified in issuing a distress-warrant against the respondent for the recovery of one or both of the rates.

Keane for the appellant.—The overseers are entitled to demand this amount. It is their duty to get in the rate. Are they to be responsible for the insufficiency of the coinage? The demand is for the amount of rate at 4d. in the pound. But the amount, when carried out, gives the fraction of a farthing. Nothing was tendered. The right demand was made, though the sum total was wrongly expressed. He cited R. v. Goodburn, 8 Ad. & Ell. 508.

Naylor for the respondent.—The overseer is not entitled to collect more than is actually due. If it had been intended by the Legislature that he should collect a farthing or other coin where a fraction of a farthing or other coin only is due, it would have been so enacted, as it is in the Income-tax Act of 1842, s. 2. In the absence of such enactment the demand must be for the exact sum, and must be precise: (Hurrell v. Wink, 2 Moo.) [WILLES, J.—All you need say is, that the demand is intentionally larger than the overseer is entitled to.]

WILLIAMS, J.—We consider that this case is laid before us in order that we should determine the point whether, where the amount of a rate comes to the fraction of a farthing, the ratepayer is bound to pay it. We think he is not. He is not bound to pay more than his proportion. If I pay a farthing where a fraction only is due, not only am I paying more than my fellow-parishioners, but the overseer is collecting more than he is authorised by the rate to receive. The ratepayer may say, "I am willing to pay the rate as far as it is possible to pay it, but I can't pay a fraction of a farthing."

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The case of Bannister v. Fordham, in Wilson, is an authority for holding that, where an amount comes to something less than any known coin, the ratepayer cannot be called upon to pay it.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion. If there is any difficulty at all, it is caused by those who make the rate. Judgment for the respondent, with costs.

APPLETON v. MORRAY AND ANOTHER.

Overseers—Recovering possession of lands—Parish property, 59 Geo. 3, c. 12.

Overseers, with consent of freeholders of the parish, were in the habit of letting small quantities of land. Plaintiff obtained possession of part under a written agreement, not under seal, from some small portion of the freeholders, for ninety-nine years, at 5s. a year, payable to the overseers; he paid no rent at all. The overseers demanded possession, and sent a notice in compliance with the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, requiring possession; but the notice was served upon the plaintiff's daughter, and not upon the premises. Justices directed the constable to give the overseers possession; which he did. In an action of trespass for doing so:

Held, personal service of the notice upon the tenant in possession, demanding possession, was not required by the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, ss. 24, 25, and that service in this case was sufficient.

This was an action of trespass in a coal yard, and for taking the plaintiff's van, &c. Plea—General issue by stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, and others. It appeared that the overseers of a parish had been in the habit of letting, with the consent of the freeholders in the parish, small pieces of land there. The plaintiff had applied to some twenty of these freeholders to let to him in writing (not under seal), the land in question (about twenty-nine perches), upon which this trespass was said to have been committed, for a term of ninety-nine years, at a rent of 5s. a-year, to be paid to the overseers. No rent was paid, and the overseers went before the justices in petty sessions under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 24; that section says that, "whereas difficulties having frequently arisen, and considerable expenses have sometimes been incurred by reason of the refusal of persons who have been permitted to occupy, or who have intruded themselves into parish or town houses, or other tenements or dwellings, or otherwise, belonging to such parishes, to deliver up the possession, &c. when thereto required; and it is expedient to provide a remedy for the same;" it then enacts that "if any person who shall have been permitted to occupy any parish or town house, or any other tenement or dwelling belonging to, or provided by, or at the charge of any parish for the habitation of the poor thereof, or who shall have unlawfully intruded himself or herself into any such house, tenement, or dwelling, or into any house, tenement, or hereditament belonging to such parish, shall refuse or neglect to quit the same and deliver up the possession thereof to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any such parish within one month after notice and demand in writing for that purpose, signed by such churchwardens and overseers, or the major part of them, shall have been delivered to the person in possession, or in his or her absence affixed on some notorious part of the premises, it shall be lawful for any two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, upon complaint made to them by one or more of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish in which any such house, tenement, or dwelling shall be situated, to issue their summons to the person against whom such complaint shall be made to appear before such justices at a time and place to be appointed by them, and to cause such summons to be delivered to the party against whom the complaint shall be made, in his or her absence, so to be affixed on the premises seven days at the least before the time appointed for hearing such complaint, and such justices are hereby empowered and required upon the appearance of the defendant, or upon proof on oath that such summons hath been delivered or affixed as is hereby directed, to proceed to hear and determine the matter of such complaint, and if they shall find and adjudge the same to be true, then by warrant under their hands and seals to cause possession of the premises in question to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish, or to some of them." Sect. 25 says: "That if any person to whom any land appropriated, purchased, or taken under the authority of this Act, for the employment of the poor of any parish, or to whom any other lands belonging to such parish, or to the churchwardens and overseers thereof, or to either of them, shall have been let for his or her own occupation, shall refuse to quit and deliver up the possession thereof to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of such parish at the expiration of the term for which the same shall have been demised or let to him or her, or if any person or persons shall unlawfully enter upon, or take, hold, or hold possession of any such land, or any other land or hereditaments belonging to such parish, or to the churchwardens or overseers, or to either of them, it shall be lawful for such churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or any of them, after such notice and demand of possession as is by this Act directed in the case of parish houses, to exhibit a complaint against the person or persons in possession of such land before two of his Majesty's justices of the peace, who are hereby authorised and required to proceed thereon, and to hear and determine the matter thereof; and if they shall find and adjudge the same to be true, to cause possession of such land to be delivered to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, or some of them, in such and the like course and manner as are by this Act directed with regard to parish houses."

The overseers caused the plaintiff to be served with a proper notice in writing, duly signed, and demanded possession, and afterwards obtained an order of the justices to the constable to give possession, which he did accordingly by removing a van there to a convenient distance, doing no damage. This action was brought for doing so. The cause was tried at Chester before Byles, J., when a verdict was returned for the defendants, with leave to the plaintiff to move to set it aside and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 10*l*. if the court should think the judge at the trial ought to have told the jury that defendants were not under the circumstances justified in what they did, and a rule having been obtained, Welsby and M'Intyre showed cause.—The question here is, whether there has been a sufficient and proper service of the notice given under the Act of Parliament. The learned judge at the trial appeared to think it required a personal service; it was, in fact, served upon the plaintiff's daughter. But the defendants had a perfectly good defence at common law, for the plaintiff was no more than a tenant at will at most; he is estopped by his own agreement in writing from saying it was not parish land; and there having been a demand of possession and notice to go out, that is quite sufficient.

Brandt, contra, called upon to support the rule.—The service of the notice was not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the Act; it was not a personal service upon the plaintiff, but given to another person not even upon the premises at the time of the service. This is a penal statute, and should be construed strictly. If personal service could not be effected, then the other mode pointed out by the Act should have been pursued, by affixing the notice on some part of the premises. The defendants had no title at all, not so much as the plaintiff, for he had the possession; and if the defendants had brought an ejectment, they must have proved their title in order to have recovered.

POLLOCK, C.B.—The only question here is, whether the service of this written notice was sufficient, under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12? It was served upon the daughter of the plaintiff, the tenant in possession; and I think the circumstances of the case show that it was sufficient, and that the rule should be discharged.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am also of the same opinion. There is abundant evidence of the notice having reached the plaintiff, and that seems to be sufficient to bring it within the terms of the Act of Parliament. If the Act had said there should be personal service required, that would be another matter.

CHANNELL, B.—I also think this rule ought to be discharged. The plaintiff must be taken as the tenant in possession, and the only points reserved for us are, first, whether the plaintiff was in possession as tenant to the overseers; and secondly, was the notice signed by them duly served? He is prevented from denying that he held under the defendants by his own written agreement to pay them rent for it, but which he never did pay. The 24th section of the Act applies to the recovery of possession of houses, &c.; but the 25th section is for recovery of lands, and the notice required to be given by the 25th section is to be the same as that stated in the 24th, which is, that "it shall be delivered to the person in possession;" and I think the facts of this case show that, although it was not actually served personally upon the plaintiff, the 25th section has been sufficiently complied with.

ERROR FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, June 14.

(Before WILLIAMS, J., MARTIN, B., WILLES, J., CHANNELL, B., and BYLES, J.)

REG. on the prosecution of RINGLAND v. THE BURSLEM LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Public Health Act 1848—Compensation for damage caused by sewerage works—Denial of liability—Mandamus—Claim of specific amount.

A mandamus to make compensation for damage done to houses by sewerage works, executed by a local board of health in pursuance of the Public Health Act 1848, recited that the claimant had applied to the local board to make him full compensation, and that they had denied all liability to compensate him, and the writ then commanded the local board to cause compensation to be made out of the general or special district rate. The defendants by their return alleged that they had not denied all liability, and were willing to make compensation when the same should be ascertained; that it had not been ascertained, nor had the prosecutor taken any steps towards having the same ascertained, nor given any notice of the amount thereof, or whether it exceeded 20l., nor appointed an arbitrator, as by the Act provided. The return having been traversed, the jury found that the defendants had denied their liability, but that the prosecutor had made no claim for any certain amount:

Held (affirming the judgment of the Court of Q. B.), that a mandamus might issue in the first instance to compel the local board to make compensation, and that it was not a condition precedent that the claimant should demand a specific sum as compensation, or inform the local board whether or not it exceeded 20l.

Mandamus to the Burslem local board of health, reciting that the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) had been applied to and put in force in the town of Burslem; that the local board of health had been duly constituted under the Act; that certain houses in Adelaide-street in the said town were the property of the prosecutor; and that by reason of the exercise by the defendants of the powers of the Act they caused certain shafts to be sunk near to, and certain sewers to be made under, the houses, whereby the foundations of the houses gave way, and the houses became uninhabitable; that the prosecutor had sustained damage by reason of the said acts of the defendants, and was, under the said Act, entitled to have full compensation made to him out of the general or special district rates to be levied under the Act from the defendants for the damage so sustained by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act; that the defendants had been applied to on behalf of the prosecutor to make him such full compensation according to the provisions of the Act; and that they then and thence hitherto had denied, and still deny, all liability to compensate the prosecutor, and had wholly refused, and still refuse, to make him compensation; and enjoining the defendants to cause compensation to be made out of the general or special rate to be levied under the Act to the prosecutor for the damage so sustained by him by reason of the exercise by them of the powers of the Act, &c.

Return. That the district of Burslem was and is an incorporate district, within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1848 mentioned in the said writ, and not a corporate district within the meaning of the said Act; and that the said local board never have denied, nor do they still deny, all liability to make the prosecutor such compensation as in the said writ was mentioned for the damage or injury therein alleged to have been sustained by him by reason of the exercise of the powers of the said Act as therein mentioned, nor had they ever neglected or refused, nor do they still neglect or refuse, to make such compensation, but on the contrary thereof, that they had been, and still were, ready and willing to make him such compensation when and as soon as the same should be duly determined and ascertained in manner and form by the said Act in that behalf provided; and that the said compensation was not and had not yet been determined or ascertained in manner and form aforesaid, or otherwise howsoever; nor hath the said prosecutor taken any step towards having the same determined or ascertained in manner or form aforesaid; nor given nor delivered to the said local board any notice in writing, or otherwise, of his claim for such compensation, or of the cause or amount thereof, nor informed them whether such compensation as claimed by him exceeded the sum of 20l., nor appointed an arbitrator, nor given notice of an intention on his part to appoint an arbitrator, to whom the matter of his claim for compensation might be referred, in manner and form by the said Act in that behalf provided, or otherwise howsoever. And for the reasons aforesaid the said Burslem local board of health have not caused, and cannot and ought not to cause, compensation to be made to him out of any general or district rate to be levied under the said Act for the said damage and injury.

Issue was joined on a general traverse of all the allegations in the return.

On the trial before Crompton, J. at the Stafford spring assizes 1859, it appeared that the prosecutor Ringland was the owner in trust of two houses in Adelaide-street, Burslem, which had been damaged by the local board in carrying out the sewerage of the town, and that damage was also done to four houses in the Waterloo-road, which belonged to a nephew of the prosecutor, a minor, and were managed by the prosecutor; and the prosecutor made a claim against the board for 165l. in respect of the damage done to the whole six houses.

The following, among other letters, were put in evidence:—

From F. C. Lees, attorney to the prosecutor, to E. Challinor, attorney to the board.

"Burslem, 23rd Feb. 1858.

"My dear Sir,—Mr. H. Ringland claims compensation from the Burslem board of health, for injury which has been caused to his property in Waterloo-road and Adelaide-street, Burslem, in consequence of the carrying out the public sewerage works. He employed a competent man to give an estimate of the amount of damage, and he being of opinion that 165l., including loss of rent, would not more than compensate him for the injury, he applied to the local board of health for that amount, but they have refused to pay it, and refer me to you as their solicitor, in case of my instituting legal proceedings. Being well satisfied of the justice of my client's claim, I ask you under the 123rd section of the 11 & 12 Vict., the Public Health Act 1848, to appoint an arbitrator on the part of the board, to whose arbitrament the matter may be referred, and if I concur in the appointment, he can solely decide it without the appointment of another arbitrator," &c.

To this Challinor wrote in reply:—

Ringland v. Burslem Board.

"My dear Sir,—With every wish to do the utmost justice to your client, I really cannot see that this is a case falling within the arbitration clause of the Act. I am informed that my clients repudiate any liability to yours. How can it be a matter of compensation to be measured by arbitration?"

By consent the jury were to be taken to have found that the defendants had denied their liability to make any compensation, but that the prosecutor had not claimed any specific sum, and the verdict was entered for the Crown, with leave to the defendants to move to enter the verdict and the judgment for them; the court to be at liberty to draw inferences of fact.

A rule nisi was accordingly obtained, and after argument discharged (see 28 L. J. 345, Q. B.; 33 L. T. Rep. 201); whereupon the defendants appealed.

Gray (P. McMahon with him) for the defendants.—First, it is submitted that the prosecutor has mistaken his remedy, and that the proper course was to have proceeded by arbitration in the first instance for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the compensation, and then to have brought an action to enforce the liability. A denial of liability to make any compensation is a denial that any amount is due, and entitles the claimant to proceed under the arbitration clauses. Clauses 144 and 123 of the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) were then referred to. Then the amount being so determined, the question of liability is to be tried by an action, in analogy to the course pursued under sect. 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 Vict. c. 18). It is true that in Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, 1 Ell. & Bl. 694, the Court of Q. B. decided that under sects. 69, 70, of the Metropolitan Sewers Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 112), the arbitration clauses can only be resorted to where the mere amount of compensation was disputed, and not where the liability to make any compensation was denied. But in The East and West India Docks and Birmingham Junction Railway Company v. Gatlke, 3 Mac. & Gor. 155, a claimant was held entitled to have the amount of compensation ascertained in the first instance by a jury, and that the company were not precluded thereby from questioning the right of the claimant to any compensation whatever. Both these cases were brought to the attention of the court in The Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood, 6 W. Rep. 818, where Wood, V. C. held, that sect. 123 of the Public Health Act 1848 could not be distinguished from the compensation clauses in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. The cases of Glover v. The North Staffordshire Railway Company, 16 Q. B. 912; The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Smith, 1 Mac. & Gor. 216; The South Staffordshire Railway Company v. Hall, 1 Sim. N. S. 373; The Sutton Harbour Improvement Company v. Hichens, 1 De G. M. & G. 161; Re Penny v. The South-Eastern Railway Company, 7 Ell. & Bl. 660; Bradby v. The Southampton Local Board of Health, 4 Ell. & Bl. 1014, were then cited. Secondly, assuming that a mandamus will lie in the first instance, the prosecutor ought to have demanded a sum certain of the local board before he was entitled to the writ. [MARTIN, B.—If liability is admitted, it may be that the prosecutor should say the amount he claims, but why should he be bound to do so when all liability is denied?] Until the amount is known, it cannot appear whether the proper course is to apply to the justices, or to proceed by arbitration. Thirdly, the mandamus to cause compensation to be made is in too general terms; it should have been to do some specific act, as to appoint an arbitrator or otherwise.

Phipson, contra, was not called upon to argue.

WILLIAMS, J.—We are all of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Q. B. ought to be affirmed. One question is, whether a party who claims to be entitled to compensation from a local board of health under the Public Health Act 1848, for damage caused to houses by sewerage works, and whose claim is met by a denial of all liability, can sue out a mandamus in the first instance against the local board to enforce the making of such compensation. Prima facie, a mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a public body to perform a legal duty; but here two objections have been raised to the writ. First, it is said that, looking at the provisions of the Public Health Act, and construing them by analogy to similar provisions in the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, the claimant has mistaken his proper course, and that he himself ought in the first instance to have put in motion the proceedings under sect. 144 of the statute for having the amount of his claim ascertained by arbitration, and then to have brought an action to recover the amount so ascertained wherein the liability of the local board would be determined; and in support of this view, the authority of Wood, V. C., in The Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood, 6 W. R. 618, was referred to, where the V. C. certainly held that the Public Health Act in this respect should be construed by analogy to the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and that the same mode of proceeding ought to be pursued under both Acts. That decision, however, if upheld, would involve the necessity in all cases of instituting an inquiry which would serve no purpose, and might turn out entirely futile; and as there is nothing in the Public Health Act to constrain us to adopt that construction, we prefer the decision in the Court of Q. B., and think that the course pursued of obtaining a mandamus was proper. The next objection is, that no certain amount was claimed for compensation, and that therefore the applicant was not entitled to a mandamus. We think that was not necessary. The form of the writ of mandamus would not be affected by such a demand, or the future rights of the parties; and as therefore it could lead to no beneficial end, the omission to claim a certain sum by way of compensation is no reason why a mandamus should not issue. It was further said, that the Court of Q. B. considered when this case came before it on demurrer (29 L. J. 21, Q. B.), that the claim of a certain amount was a condition precedent to the issuing of the mandamus. When, however, that case is looked at, we think that all that was intended was, that such a claim might be necessary when the local board admits its liability, but not that it is necessary when they deny their liability. Lastly, it was said that the writ was in too general terms to enable the local board to obey it. We think there can be no difficulty on this head, if the local board are desirous of doing their duty. If the parties cannot agree, then the claimant may enforce the remedy by arbitration, as provided by the 144th section of the Public Health Act, and so get the amount ascertained.

MARTIN, B. concurred.

WILLES, J.—Probably there were some circumstances in the case before Wood, V. C., which do not appear in the report, and which might make his decision consistent with that of the Court of Q. B.

ILLINGWORTH (appellant) v. MONTGOMERY (respondent).

Highway—Dedication to and use by the public—Sect. 69, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63.

Where a street in a town under the operation of the Public Health Act 1848 had been set out and opened by the owners of the soil in the year 1828, and from that time to the present had been constantly used by the public, but had not since that year been subject to any repairs, and the local board having ordered the owners and occupiers of the houses to sewer, level, pave, &c., the said street, and they having neglected to do so, whereupon the said board themselves did the work and charged the amount to the said owners and occupiers pursuant to sect. 69 of the Public Health Act 1848:

Held, that the facts showed a dedication to and adoption of the street by the public, and that the owners and occupiers were not liable to do the above works.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court as follows:—

This was a complaint made to us, the undersigned two of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the borough of Bradford, in the county of York, by the respondent, the said John James Montgomery, the assistant surveyor of the said borough, on behalf of the mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the said borough as the local board of health for the district of the said borough, against the appellant, the said Booth Illingworth, for that he, being the owner of certain houses in a street in the said borough called Southgate (not being a highway), and the said street on the 8th Nov. 1851 not being sewered, levelled, paved, flagged and channelled to the satisfaction of the said local board of health, was, together with the other owners or occupiers of premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting upon the said street, on or about the same date duly served with a notice requiring them respectively to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel such parts of the said street as their premises respectively fronted, adjoined, or abutted, upon or before the 8th Jan. then next. That the said notice not being complied with by the appellant, and the said other owners or occupiers aforesaid, the said local board caused the said street to be sewered, levelled, paved, flagged and channelled, and in doing so necessarily expended a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of 248*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*; the appellant's portion of which, as settled by the surveyor of the said local board of health, amounted to the sum of 46*l.* 0*s.* 1*½d.*, was afterwards duly demanded of the appellant, but he hath refused to pay, and hath not paid the same. After hearing the parties, and the evidence adduced by them, we the said undersigned justices did thereupon adjudge that the appellant should forthwith pay to the said mayor, &c., the said sum of 46*l.* 0*s.* 1*½d.*, and also the sum of 8*s.* for costs in that behalf; and it was thereby ordered that if the said several sums should not be paid forthwith, the same should be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the appellant. And it was thereby adjudged that in default of sufficient distress the appellant should be imprisoned in the house of correction at Wakefield, in the West Riding of the said county, for the space of fourteen days, unless the said several sums, and all costs and charges of the said distress, and of the commitment and conveying the appellant to the said house of correction, should be sooner paid. Whereupon the following case was settled.

By the Bradford Improvement Act 1850 the provisions of the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) were duly applied to and put in force within the borough of Bradford in the county of York, and the mayor, &c., by the council of the said borough, became and were and have ever since continued to be, the local board of health for the district of the said borough; and by the said Bradford Improvement Act, most of the sections of the Public Health Act 1848, including the 68th, 69th, 70th and 129th sections thereof, were incorporated in the said Bradford Improvement Act. Among the streets or ways in the said town and borough of Bradford is one called Southgate, which was set out and opened on or before 1828, since which time it has been used uninterruptedly by any persons who have chosen to make use of it. It was in the first instance well paved and sewered, and no act of repair has been since done to the street by either the owners or occupiers of the buildings fronting towards it. The appellant purchased the land, now his property, fronting to Southgate, in the year 1828, such purchase including one-half of the site of Southgate, so far as co-extensive with his land, and he then agreed with the owner of the remainder of the property that he would appropriate four yards and a-half in width along the whole length of his land for the purpose of forming a moiety of a certain intended public street of the width of nine yards. The portion so agreed to be appropriated had, with the remainder of the street, previously to this time been paved and flagged, and it has ever since formed a moiety of Southgate so far as it is co-extensive therewith. Beyond this agreement between vendor and purchaser, no written instrument of dedication of the street has been given in evidence to us, and no notice has been given to the surveyor of the parish since the passing of the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, of any intention to dedicate the said street or way to the public, nor was any certificate granted by two justices, or enrolled at the quarter sessions as directed by that Act, so as to have rendered the township and borough of Bradford in which such way is situate, thereby liable to repair the same, nor has it ever been repaired by or at the expense of the inhabitants of Bradford at large, or been declared by the said local board to be a highway, nor was it ever repaired by them as such. Southgate is open at both ends, and extends from Westgate to Brick-row, a short street in continuation of Southgate into Thornton-road. Westgate and Thornton-road are two of the principal roads and means of ingress to the town. At the date of the formation of Southgate it was intended, in connection with Brick-row, to form, and did form, a more convenient communication between Westgate and Thornton-road than existed for a distance of a quarter of a mile in either direction. The road called Westgate has, during all the time since Southgate was formed, passed through one of the most thickly populated districts of the town of Bradford; and the neighbourhood of Thornton-road has become gradually filled with manufactories and other buildings. Such being the case, the number of persons passing between the two roads and using Southgate as their nearest and most convenient route, has ever since its formation been very great. For many years previously to the passing of the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, Southgate was lighted and watched by the commissioners under an old local improvement Act, which was repealed in 1850, and new powers for similar purposes were by the Bradford Improvement Act 1850 vested in the mayor, &c. of the said borough. The powers of the old commissioners under the repealed Act did not interfere with or derogate from the duties or authorities of the surveyor of highways within its limits. In 1851 Southgate not being sewered, levelled, paved, flagged, or channelled to the satisfaction of the said board of health, the said board gave notice to the respective owners and occupiers of the several houses and premises fronting, adjoining and abutting on such parts thereof as required to be sewered, levelled, paved, flagged or channelled, requiring them to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel the same accordingly. The appellant was then the owner of certain of such houses and premises, and such notice was duly served upon him as above mentioned, but he refused to comply with it; whereupon the said local board of health executed and caused to be executed the necessary works which were mentioned and referred to in the said notice, thereby incurring expense to a very considerable amount, the said appellant's proportion of which amount, as settled by the surveyor of the said local board, is 46*l.* 0*s.* 1*½d.*, and the amount of such proportion is not a matter of dispute. The said sum of 46*l.* 0*s.* 1*½d.* was duly demanded of the appellant, but he has refused to pay, and has not paid the same. The said appellant having appeared before the undersigned justices, and the facts before mentioned being duly proved, we did determine and adjudge that the appellant should forthwith pay unto the said mayor, &c., as such board of health as aforesaid, the said sum of 46*l.* 0*s.* 1*½d.*; and the ground of our determination was, that the said street or way called Southgate was not (as it was contended by the said appellant to be) at the time of the giving of the notice aforesaid by the said board of health, and of the execution of the works aforesaid, a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.

If the court shall be of opinion that the said street or way called Southgate was not at the time of giving the said notice and completion of the said works a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, then the said determination and adjudication shall be affirmed. But if the court shall be of a contrary opinion, then the said determination and adjudication shall be quashed.

Mauls now appeared in support of the order of justices, and argued that the facts justified the justices below, for that there was no dedication of the road to the public, and it was not therefore repairable by the public, but by the owners of the property as a private street, as provided for by sect. 69 of the Public Health Act 1848. That its not being a public highway was obvious from the fact of its never having been repaired by the public. [COCKBURN, C.J.—That may have been because it did not require repairing. BLACKBURN, J.—Is the fact that it has been repaired by the township a necessary element to make it a public highway?] It is a very strong presumption. It has never been dedicated to the public. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Before the General Highway Act the road need not have been adopted by the township at all. There was a constant stream of passengers, who went through it without let or hindrance.] It is said by Bayley, J., in Re v. St. Benedict 4 B. & Ald. 447, that it is not enough that there had been a dedication of the road to the public to make the parish liable to repair; there must also be acquiescence by the public.

Mellish, for the appellant, was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—If there had been any doubt whether this had been a highway, these circumstances might have been urged in favour of the respondent. But here there is abundant evidence of dedication to the public, and of adoption by the public. I cannot see how the justices could have hesitated for a moment in determining that this was a public highway repairable by the public. The conviction must be quashed.

WIGHTMAN, HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

THE CHELSEA WATERWORKS COMPANY (appellants)
v. THE PARISH OF PUTNEY (respondents).

Poor-rate—Waterworks—Rating of pipes passing through several parishes.

A waterworks company, by means of reservoirs, pumping apparatus, &c., obtained water in parish A., conveyed it by aqueducts and mains through the soil of parishes B., C., D. &c., and sold it to customers in parish Z. only:

Held, that it is not a correct principle of rating for the purpose of one of the intermediate parishes between the parish collecting the water and the parish consuming it, to ascertain the rateable value of the whole apparatus of the company in the several parishes in which it is situate, and then divide it among the several parishes according to the land occupied by the apparatus in each parish.

This was an appeal made by the Chelsea Waterworks Company, against a rate of the 10th Oct. 1856, for the relief of the poor of the parish of Putney, which rate was charged against the said company upon an assessment of the net value of 8000*l.*

The appeal came on to be heard before the court of quarter sessions for the county of Surrey, held on the 8th April 1857, when it was ordered by consent that the rate should be amended by reducing the said assessment to 3000*l.*, subject to the following case:—

The appellants are the company mentioned in and continued incorporated by the Chelsea Waterworks Act 1852. The company sell water to the inhabitants of a certain district, within which they are empowered to do so by virtue of the above-mentioned Act. This district is situate wholly within the county of Middlesex. The company have no power to sell, and do not sell, any water to any person or persons, or for any purpose, within the parish of Putney, or within the county of Surrey.

The water is obtained in the following manner:—A part of it is drawn off from the river Thames at Seething Wells, in the parish of Kingston, into reservoirs and filtering beds in the said parish of Kingston, and it is then, by means of pumping engines situate in the same parish, forced and conveyed through pipes which are laid down in the parish of Kingston, and other parishes in Surrey, including the parish of Putney, from the said reservoirs and filtering beds in the parish of Kingston, into certain covered reservoirs in the parish of Putney. From these last-mentioned reservoirs the water passes through other pipes which are laid down in the parish of Putney, to the banks of the river Thames, over which it is conducted by pipes, which form an aqueduct across the river, from the parish of Putney to the parish of Fulham, and thence the water is conveyed by means of other pipes into the company's district in Middlesex, where it is supplied to the company's consumers. The residue of the water is taken from the same part of the river Thames at Seething Wells. It is forced by the before-mentioned pumping engines through another set of pipes laid down in the parish of Kingston, and in other parishes in Surrey, including the parish of Putney, into an open reservoir in the parish of Putney, and the before-mentioned aqueduct across the Thames into the parish of Fulham, and thence by means of other pipes into the company's district, where it is delivered for the purpose of street watering. It is essential, for supplying the water in the company's district, either that it should be collected in and passed through the before-mentioned reservoirs in the parish of Putney, or else that some other contrivance should be resorted to for the purpose of keeping the water at a sufficient high level to admit of its flowing to the highest part of the company's district.

It is intended that the water should always be collected into and passed through the said reservoirs. The reservoirs, filtering beds and engines in the parish of Kingston; the reservoirs in the parish of Putney; and the pipes in the several parishes as used by the company, form an apparatus by which water is drawn from the Thames at Seething Wells, and collected, conveyed and sold and distributed as above mentioned.

The portion of the apparatus which is situate in the parish of Putney occupies nine acres of land, and consists of—

1. Certain pipes (occupying 2a. 3r. 10p. of land) by means of which the water, after being passed through the company's mains in the parish of Kingston, is conducted continuously into one or other of the said reservoirs in the parish of Putney.

2. Certain reservoirs occupying 5a. 1r. of land.

3. Certain other pipes occupying one acre of land, by means of which the water is conveyed from the said reservoirs to the banks of the Thames.

4. Certain other pipes which occupy the remainder of the said nine acres of land, and which form that portion of the said aqueduct across the Thames which lies in the parish of Putney, the remainder of the aqueduct being in the parish of Fulham.

The whole apparatus is so constructed and placed in the several parishes in which it is situate, that a part is rateable in each parish. Each and every part of the apparatus, as the same is constructed, and each and every part of the land occupied by it, is necessarily used and occupied for the purpose of supplying water to the company's customers as before mentioned, and none of the water supplied by the company to its customers can be supplied without the aid of every part of their said apparatus. The profits of the company are derived exclusively from the sale of the said water to its consumers in the said district. The rateable value, according to the Parochial Assessment Act, of the whole apparatus of the company, in the several parishes in which it is situated, is for the purposes of this case to be taken to be a certain sum, which has been agreed upon between the parties, the same being calculated at the rate of so much per acre for all the land occupied by the apparatus.

The charges and deductions which have been taken into account in making the estimate, are those which are specified in the Parochial Assessment Act, and there are no special circumstances affecting the portion of the apparatus which is in the parish of Putney.

It is to be assumed, for the purposes of this case, that the rateable value of the portion of the company's apparatus which is within the parish of Putney, has been ascertained by first taking the rateable value of the whole of the apparatus in the several parishes in which it is situate, then subdividing the amount among the said several parishes according to the quantity of land occupied by the apparatus in each parish.

If that principle be correct, the rate is by agreement to be amended, and is to stand for the sum of 2800*l*. If that principle be not correct, then the rate is by agreement to be amended, and to stand for the sum of 2000*l*.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the rate (when amended) ought to stand for the sum of 2800*l*., or for the sum of 2000*l*.

The Court is to have such powers of dealing with the rate as are possessed by the court of quarter sessions.

The costs are to be in the discretion of the court.

May 30.—Bovill (Brett with him) for the appellants.—This case is identical with and not to be distinguished from Reg. on the prosecution of the Overseers of Hampton v. The West Middlesex Waterworks, 28 L. J. 135, M. C., where this court held that the company was to be rated in Hampton in respect of the plant, engine houses, buildings, mains, &c., as for so much land and buildings with fixtures and machinery attached, and deriving some additional value from their capacity of being applied to such purposes as those of a water company.

T. Jones (Garth with him) for the respondents.—That case did not establish any rule of law; it only laid down a proposition of fact. The true principle is to be found in R. v. The Cambridge Gaslight Company, 8 Ad. & Ell. 73, where it was held that the company were rateable as occupiers of the land in the different parishes by their apparatus, pipes, &c., and were properly assessed upon a sum which a tenant would pay yearly for the apparatus, pipes, &c., deducting the annual average expense of renovating the same, but not the profits of the trade, and deducting also the annual value of the apparatus and pipes lying in extra-parochial land, and that the resulting amount was to be distributed among the assessments of the several parishes in proportion not to the payments for lights in the respective parishes, but to the quantity of land so occupied in each parish. In R. v. The Brighton Gaslight Company, 5 B. & C. 446, the company were held assessable in respect of the land occupied by their pipes, and to the extent of the increased value of the land in consequence of its being used by them for the purpose of conveying the gas.

Bovill in reply.—The principle of the Hampton case, 28 L. J. 135, M. C., is, that a certain part of the works, mains, &c., contribute directly and immediately to produce the profit, and that other parts, though essential to the working of the whole, do not directly and immediately tend to produce the profit. The artificial value of the works to the company is not the same at every point of them. It is like the Hammer-smith Bridge case, 15 Q. B. 369, every part of the approaches to which, in one sense, contributed to the earning, yet it was held that the company were to be assessed in an equal sum in the two parishes upon the profits of the bridge, which was half in one parish and half in the other, although the approaches made by the company were not of equal length in the two parishes. (The Mayor of Liverpool v. West Derby, 6 Ell. & Bl. 704; R. v. Mile End Old Town, 10 Q. B. 208.)

Cur. adv. vult.

BLACKBURN, J.—In this case—an appeal by the Chelsea Waterworks Company against the rate made on them by the parish of Putney for the relief of the poor of the parish—the quarter sessions refer to this court only one question. If the principle stated in the sixteenth paragraph of the case is correct, the rate is to be amended and stand for 2800*l*.: if that principle is not correct the rate is to be amended and stand for 2000*l*. The general question as to the principle on which the rateable value of such property should be apportioned, is one of great difficulty and importance, which has recently been the subject of much consideration; but in this case we are not asked or authorized to say what is the correct principle, but only to determine whether this particular principle is right. Now that principle is that the rateable value of the whole apparatus of the company in all the parishes in which it is situate, is to be ascertained and then divided among the said several parishes, according to the quantity of land occupied by the apparatus in each parish. If this principle be correct every square foot of land occupied by the apparatus is to be rated at the same rate, without regard to the situation or nature of the land, whether it was originally part of a barren heath, like Putney-heath, or part of the market-gardens of Fulham, and without regard to whether it be merely land occupied by pipes under the surface of the highway, or whether it be land on which extensive buildings have been erected for the purpose of converting it into filtering beds or reservoirs. We have no difficulty in saying that this principle is not correct. We cannot sanction it, and therefore we must answer the only question put to us by saying that the rate must stand for 2000*l*.

Rule to be amended accordingly.

REG. v. THE GLAMORGANSHIRE CANAL COMPANY.
Canal—Poor-rate—Local Act—Assessing to the poor-rate.

Q. B.]

REG. v. THE GLAMORGANSHIRE CANAL COMPANY.

The Glamorganshire Canal Company—The mode and principle upon which they should be assessed to the poor-rate, under the provision of their Act, 30 Geo. 3, c. 82, s. 67, local.

This was a case stated by the Glamorganshire sessions, upon an appeal by the Glamorganshire Canal Company against a poor-rate made for the relief of the poor of Saint Mary, Cardiff. The case stated that the appellants were at the time of making the rate the owners and occupiers of the Glamorganshire Canal, part of which was situate in the parish of Saint Mary, Cardiff. A rate or assessment for the relief of the poor of the said parish, made on the 19th Dec. 1857, was only allowed and published in respect of the defendants as occupiers of land covered by their canal and adjacent tenements and premises. The company appealed on the ground that they were overrated, but on the trial of the appeal the question was confined to the rate on the land under the canal and towing-path. The quarter sessions confirmed the rate, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. The Act for making the canal passed in 1790 (30 Geo. 3, c. 82): sect. 67 enacted "that the said company shall, from time to time, be rated to all parliamentary and parochial rates and assessments for and in respect of the lands and grounds to be purchased or taken by the said company in pursuance of this Act, in the same proportion as other lands and grounds lying near the same are or shall be rated, and as the same lands and grounds so to be purchased or taken would be rateable in case the same was the property of individuals in their natural capacity." At the time of making the canal, and previously, the lands adjacent to each side were of very much less value than at present. The land was then let at the usual rent for land in the neighbourhood of towns; but now, owing to the increase of population in Cardiff, the land adjacent has been built upon and converted into wharves and yards, and is of the value of 6*d.* per square yard. The average rateable value of the land nearest to the canal on the east side is about 3*l.* per acre. On the west side the lands are rated as wharves and yards at about 5*d.* per square yard. Beyond these wharves is a piece of land let as mere land, and rated at about 3*l.* per acre. The canal was, until the present rate, rated at the average annual rateable value of the land used as mere land nearest thereto. By the present rate the canal company are rated for the bed of the canal in the same proportion as the lands and grounds lying near thereto are rated in the same assessment, and in the same proportion as they would be rated in case they were the property of individuals in their natural capacity. The canal company contended that, under the 67th section of their Act, they were only liable to be assessed at the rateable value of the land lying near thereto, which at the time of the rate was used as mere land, or else at what would have been the rateable value of land adjoining, if the same had remained mere land. The court of quarter sessions found that the canal was not overrated, if the correct principle is to rate the lands and grounds in the same proportion as the lands and grounds lying near are rated as occupied at the time of making the rate, and as if the lands and grounds were the property of individuals; but that the appellants are overrated if their lands and grounds should have been assessed as the lands and grounds lying near would have been assessed if they had been continued to be used as mere land. The question for the opinion of the Court of Q. B. is, whether the principle of assessment adopted by the respondents is based upon the correct construction of the provisions of the Act regulating the rating of the company's lands. If the court shall be of that opinion, then the order of the court of quarter sessions is to stand, and the rate to remain at the full sum at which the canal and premises have been assessed by the respondents. If the court shall be of a contrary opinion, then the rate is to be amended by reducing it to the amount of the former assessment.

Field and Bowen now appeared for the respondents.

Borill, Q. C., Hughes and Giffard for the appellants.

The following cases were cited:—R. v. The Regent's Canal Company, 6 B. & C. 720; R. v. The Monmouthshire Canal Company, 3 Ad. & Ell. 619; Reg. v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 7 W. R. 597; R. v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 1 B. & Ald. 289.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the following judgment:—

July 7.—COCKBURN, C. J.—In this case the question turns upon the effect of a clause in the Canal Act, whereby the proprietors are protected against being rated in respect of the increased value of the land occupied by the canal by reason of its being so occupied, by a provision that the company shall be rated in the same proportion as other lands and grounds lying near the same are or shall be rated. A state of things has arisen which evidently is very different from that contemplated by the Legislature at the time the Act passed. The object of the enactment was to give immunity to the canal company against being rated in respect of the increased value of land, resulting from its occupation by the canal, as distinguished from its previous value as used for agricultural purposes; but in the new state of things which has arisen the adjoining land, instead of being inferior, has, by its being used as wharves and its application to building purposes, become of greater value than the soil occupied by the canal. The provision which was intended for the benefit of the canal company has thus become a means of casting an additional burden on them, and entails on them considerable hardship. Nevertheless, we are of opinion that full effect must be given to the enactment, its language being clear and precise. It is not competent to us to modify its provisions in order to meet a state of things which, if it could have been contemplated by the Legislature at the time of the passing of the Act, would probably have been provided against. Relief, in such a case, can only be sought at the hands of the Legislature, whose province we should be usurping if we were to put a construction on the Act different from what its terms warrant in order to meet the equity of the case. We have no hesitation, therefore, in rejecting the proposed construction that we are to consider not only what is the rateable value of the land immediately adjoining the canal, but that of the nearest agricultural land, no matter how far off, in order to give effect to what the Legislature had in view in passing this clause. The enactment is clear and unambiguous, that the land occupied by the company shall be rated in the same proportion as the adjoining lands. The court cannot construe the enactment differently, because the relative value of the land occupied by the canal, and of the adjoining land, have become changed. But a new difficulty presents itself, from the circumstance that the adjoining lands are no longer rateable simply as land. They have become, in many instances, covered by buildings of a valuable description, and the value of the land becomes as it were merged in that of the buildings by which it is covered. It is possible, however, to ascertain the value of the land as applicable and subservient to building purposes, as distinguished from the joint value of the land and buildings. But here a new difficulty presents itself. By the Parochial Assessment Act property is to be rated according to the rent which a tenant from year to year might be expected to give for it. Now a tenant from year to year would not give for the land in question a rent equivalent to its value for building purposes; it is only in the hands of the lessees with a long term that the land would have this larger value. For this reason this court then, consisting of my Lord

C. B.] THE LLANDAFF AND CANTON DISTRICT MARKETS COMPANY v. LYNDON.

[C. B.]

Campbell and Erle, C.J., in the case of Reg. v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, held that a provision similar to the present, that land occupied by a canal company was not liable to be rated otherwise than as agricultural land, notwithstanding that the adjoining land was occupied as land covered with buildings. We cannot, on consideration, bring ourselves to acquiesce in the propriety of this decision. It appears to us, then, in applying the Parochial Assessment Act to such a case as the present, the criterion is not what a tenant from year to year would give for the land to be rated, that is, the land occupied by the canal company, but what such a tenant would give for the adjoining land, according to the value at which the land in question is, by the provision of the enactment which we are called on to construe, to be rated. Now the adjoining land being built on, is worth so much to a tenant from year to year as land built upon. In the yearly rent for the buildings, a certain proportion of the rent must be taken as part in respect of the land occupied by the buildings. That proportion, larger no doubt than the value of the land, if not applied to building purposes, is capable of being ascertained. In our opinion, the rateable value of the land should be taken to be the proportion in which the lands and grounds lying near the canal in question are rated within the 67th section of this Act of Parliament, and consequently is the proportion in which the land occupied by the canal is to be rated. To rate the latter, according to what a tenant from year to year would give independently of what such a tenant would give for the adjoining land, is, at it seems to us, to rate it independently of the rating of the adjoining land; in other words, to give no effect to the provision in the section, according to which the rating is to be made. We hold, on these grounds, that the position taken by the argument of the appellants, that the whole of the land in question ought to be rated as mere land, is not tenable as relates to the adjoining land when built upon or made into wharves; but where the adjoining land has not been applied to such purposes, it must be rated as land under the Parochial Assessment Act, and cannot therefore be rated as land applicable to building purposes; at all events, beyond what a tenant from year to year would give for it for such a purpose. It appears to us that the principle on which the rate should be made is, that the land covered by buildings valued as we have already pointed out, should be brought into calculation with the land of the other description in each particular parish, and that the land occupied by the canal should be rated according to the aggregate value of the whole. This can of course be at best but a rough estimate, but it appears to us to be the only means of giving effect to the provisions of the various Acts of Parliament. The rate must therefore be amended accordingly.

Rate to be amended.

THE LLANDAFF AND CANTON DISTRICT MARKETS COMPANY (appellants) v. LYNDON (respondent).

Statute—Construction of—The Llandaff and Canton District Markets Act 1858, sect. 25.

The 25th section of the Ll. and C. District Markets Act enacts, that "every person who shall sell or expose for sale at any place within the limits of this Act (other than in any existing market-place, or the market-house and market-places to be established under this Act, or in his own dwelling-house or in any shop attached to and being part of any dwelling-house), any article in respect of which tolls are by this Act authorised to be taken, other than eggs, butter and fruit, shall forfeit and pay to the company any sum not exceeding 40s. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall restrain or prohibit any person from crying or exposing for sale, or from selling from door to door, within the limits of this Act, any such articles as aforesaid, provided such person or persons shall have first paid for such articles the regular market tolls or duties."

L., a licensed auctioneer, sold horses by auction within the limits of the Act, in a private yard belonging to H.:

Held, that horses were "articles" within the meaning of the Act; that the yard was not L.'s dwelling-house, or a shop, within the exception, and that L. ought to have been convicted under the above section.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court, pursuant to stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

CASE.

At a petty sessions for the borough of Cardiff, in the county of Glamorgan, held on the 13th Feb. 1860, the respondent appeared before us in pursuance of a summons, charging him with having on the 4th Feb. inst. unlawfully exposed horses for sale at the town of Cardiff, within the limits of the Llandaff and Canton District Markets Act 1858. By sect. 4 of the said Act (a copy of which accompanies, and is to be referred to as part of this case) the parishes of St. John the Baptist and St. Mary, comprising the borough and town of Cardiff, are included within the limits thereof. Sect. 25 of the said Act enacts as follows:—
"Every person who shall sell or expose for sale at any place within the limits of this Act (other than in any existing market-place, or the market-house or market-places to be established under this Act, or in his own dwelling-house, or in any shop attached to and being part of any dwelling-house), any article in respect of which tolls are by this Act authorised to be taken, other than eggs, butter and fruit, shall forfeit and pay to the company any sum not exceeding 40s."

By sect. 26, the company are required, within eighteen calendar months from the passing of the Act, to construct and open for public use, the cattle-market, by the Act authorised to be made; and from and after the opening of such market no other market and fair for the sale of live cattle shall be held.

The Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1847, incorporated with the said Llandaff and Canton District Markets Act, by sect. 13 enacts, "that after the market-place is opened for public use, every person, other than a licensed hawkers, who shall sell or expose for sale in any place within the prescribed limits, except in his own dwelling-house or shop, any articles in respect of which tolls are by the special Act authorised to be taken in the market, shall for any such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s."

At the hearing, the opening of the markets constructed under the Act was admitted. A local newspaper was put in by complainant, hereinafter called the appellant, which contains the following advertisement:

"Mr. Lyndon's announcements. Horses for sale.—Mr. Lyndon begs to announce that he will sell by auction, on Saturday, the 4th Feb., at Holland's Horse Repository, Working-street, a number of excellent horses, comprising several draft horses, useful and handsome hacks and others, five or six hawkers' carts, dog carts and gigs. Several sets of cart and other harness, saddles, bridles, &c. The auctioneer begs to call the attention of intending purchasers to this sale, as a large proportion of the horses and other things can be highly recommended. Sale to commence at two o'clock. Auctioneer's office, Institute-chambers, Cardiff. Jan. 27, 1860."

A witness was called by appellant, who deposed that he went on the 4th Feb. to Holland's repository in Working-street, Cardiff, and saw some horses put up for sale by public auction by the defendant Lyndon,

C. B.]

MASON v. THE BIRKENHEAD IMPROVEMENT COMMISSIONERS.

[Ex.

and, on cross-examination, that the place where the horses were sold is a private place, entered by an archway, which leads to a yard at the side of Mr. Holland's house. A witness was called on behalf of Lyndon, who deposed that he knew Holland's repository, that it is private property, and leads nowhere, and is all in Holland's hands and within his gates. The defendant's licence as an auctioneer (a copy is hereto annexed) was put in. On this state of facts it was urged by the appellant that the place where the horses were sold was not within the exception of sect. 25; that at all events a sale of horses by auction publicly advertised in newspapers, held in a yard to which the public were admitted without restriction, is not exempted from the operation of the Act.

For the defendant it was urged that he being an auctioneer, was protected, and the licence and the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15 were relied on in support of this view, and that the place of sale was a private place, and within the exception of the company's Act, s. 25.

We were of opinion that the place where the auction took place, being a private yard, forming part of the dwelling-house and premises of Holland, came within the exception of the 13th section of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1849, and the 25th of the Llandaff and Canton Markets Act, and we thereupon dismissed the information.

The appellant being dissatisfied with our determination as being erroneous in point of law, applied to us in writing within three days after such determination, to state and sign a case for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, in compliance with which application we hereby state this case, and pray the opinion of the court thereon. (Signed)

Giffard for the appellant.—The Legislature, by sect. 25 of the special Act, creates a monopoly, and prevents the sale of live cattle within the limits of the Act in any place except those specified; and that section provides a summary remedy in lieu of an action on the case for a disturbance of the market, and for the purpose also of protecting persons selling in their own houses. Horses are clearly "articles" within the section. Then Lyndon is not selling in his own dwelling-house, but in Holland's. He cited The Prior of Dunstable's case, in a note to Mosley v. Walker, 7 B. & C. 47. He is therefore not within the exception. He is an auctioneer come to sell the horses of other persons. The fact of its being a private place makes no difference. It is not "his dwelling-house," nor is it a "shop attached to and being part of any dwelling-house."

Coleridge for the respondent.—An auctioneer having a licence under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 15, s. 2, would have a right to sell as the respondent did, but for the special Act. Does that Act in terms take away that right? It is submitted it does not: (Williams v. Prichard, 4 T. R. 2.) But what was done was within the exception in sect. 25. The shop of a horse-dealer is his yard; moreover, horses are not "articles" within the meaning of the section. He referred to sect. 15 of 10 Vict. c. 14. Horses are not cried from door to door, nor are they subject to inspection.

ERLE, C. J.—I am of opinion that a horse is an article within the 25th section of the special Act. The statute authorises the making of a market, and gives certain tolls to those who go to the expense of constructing and repairing it; and I think the Legislature used the word "article" so as to include all things for which tolls are to be levied. It seems to me to be intended by the Legislature that the proprietors of the market should be remunerated; and sect. 26 provides for a cattle-market, and no toll is to be taken unless accommodation is provided. Can it be said that persons may send their horses free of toll? It is said that horses do not come within the meaning of the word "articles," because they are not cried from door to door. A person is not likely to take horses from door to door, but he may do so if he pleases. The statute says he may sell from door to door, having paid the tolls. I think the words of the Act, as to inspection, have nothing to do with this case. Then is the auctioneer within the exception that he is not to be liable if he sells in his own dwelling-house, or in any shop attached to and being part of any dwelling-house? He sells in a yard of Holland's. It is not his own. And I do not think it is a dwelling-house within the statute. I think that means a dwelling-house in the popular sense of the word, and the more so because the special Act adopts the general statute as to markets and fairs, where the exception is "except in his own dwelling-house or shop."

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to his being an auctioneer, it is only where the sale is lawful that his licence protects him.

WILLES and BYLES, JJ. concurred.

MASON v. THE BIRKENHEAD IMPROVEMENT COMMISSIONERS.

Negligence by servants of commissioners—Notice of action requisite—Sufficiency of notice.

The plaintiff, by the alleged negligence of the servants of the defendants, the Birkenhead Improvement Commissioners, sustained an injury for which he brought an action. Previously to the action he sent a letter signed by himself to the defendants, which he alleged was a sufficient notice of action, if any was required:

Held, that under the statute for the improvement of Birkenhead by the commissioners (local and personal Act, 3 Will. 4), the alleged negligence was the negligence of the defendants' servants, and notice of action was necessary, and that the notice given in this case was insufficient.

This was an action brought against the defendants, as the Birkenhead Improvement Commissioners, for negligence, in consequence of which alleged negligence the plaintiff, as he stated, became injured. Under the 201st section of 3 Will. 4, clxviii. (the Act being local and personal), thirty days' previous notice of action is required to be given, signed by the attorney, &c., &c. It enacts that "no plaintiff shall recover in any action or suit to be commenced against the said commissioners, or any of them, or any other person for anything done, or to be done, in pursuance or under the authority of this Act, unless notice in writing, signed by the attorney for the plaintiff, and specifying the cause of such action, shall have been given to the defendants thirty days before such action shall be commenced, nor shall the plaintiff recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made to him, or his attorney, by or on behalf of the defendant before such action brought; and in case no such tender shall have been made, it shall be lawful for the defendant in any such action, by leave of the court after such action shall have been brought, at any time before issue joined, to pay into court such sum of money as he shall think fit, whereupon such proceeding, order and judgment shall be made and given in, and by such court as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay money into court."

The plaintiff, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the commissioners, said that he left his house, which was in Price-street, at six o'clock, p.m., on the 17th Jan. 1859, and "I crossed Price-street and proceeded along the flagged footway, on the right hand, towards Watson-street, and when I arrived near Mr. Smith's, 'the British Queen,' I walked precipitately into a large heap of setts or gutter stones, lying on the footway, and in endeavouring to extricate myself was propelled forward headlong on the opposite flags, and upon which these formidable stones had been left in a heap."

The attorney for the plaintiff had written and sent the following letter:—

"10, Price-street, Birkenhead, May 30, 1859.

"Gentlemen,—I am instructed by Mr. John Mason, of 144, Price-street, to apply to you for compensation for the very serious injuries he sustained in the month of January last, through the carelessness of your servants in leaving a quantity of channel stones in the street, without any protection to the same. My instructions are to commence legal proceedings if no satisfactory arrangement is made.

"Your obedient servant,

"SYDNEY OTWAY HUSBAND.

"The Commissioners of Birkenhead."

The action was commenced on the 12th Nov. 1859.

Defendants pleaded:—1. Not guilty; and 2. That no sufficient notice had been given to the defendants, in compliance with the before-mentioned Act of Parliament, before commencement of the suit.

The cause was tried at Chester before R. Gurney, Esq., when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, 150*l.* damages, leave being reserved to move to enter a verdict for the defendants, and a rule nisi having been obtained accordingly to enter the verdict for the defendants on the second issue, on the ground that the notice of action was insufficient, pursuant to leave reserved, or for a new trial on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury of negligence on the part of the defendants, or that the verdict was against the evidence on the question of negligence, Beccan showed cause, and contended that under the circumstances of the case, this being an action for negligence, no notice of action at all was necessary. It was not for anything done under the Act of Parliament, but for omission on their part to do what they should have done. If notice of action should be held to be requisite, then the plaintiff's letter signed by himself was a sufficient compliance with the terms of that local Act.

Welsby (M'Intyre with him) in support of the rule.—The sections of the local Act are to be liberally construed. The defendants have properly discharged their duties, but they have not done anything whatever beyond their duty. Notice of action was necessary in order that amends, if thought expedient, might before action have been tendered, and clearly the plaintiff's letter was an insufficient notice: (Norris v. Smith, 10 A. & E. 188; Martins v. Upcher, 3 Q.B. 662; Breeze v. Jerdein, 4 Q. B. 585; Jacklin v. Fytche, 14 M. & W. 381; Leary v. Patrick, 15 Q. B. 226.)

The COURT intimated that the argument might be continued on a future day if required. Adjourned.

June 21.—BRAMWELL, B. said:—We told Mr. Welsby we would let him know whether we required to hear him further upon it. We do not. One objection taken was, that there was no sufficient notice of action, and that notice of action was required. It is not necessary to go into what was suggested on the notices; it is manifest on an examination of them they were not good notices. The doubt entertained was, whether notice of action was required. That doubt existed in my own mind. The action being one for negligence, I had a doubt whether there ever was a necessity for notice of action in a case of negligence. There may be cases in which notice of action is not necessary. Under the terms of the statute, where the negligence is the negligence of servants, then I do not see any reason why, if ever notice is given, it should not be given in that case. The negligence, if any, was the negligence of the defendants' servants. We think they were entitled to the protection of notice of action being given; consequently the rule will be made absolute.

Welsby.—Since arguing the case, I have discovered a case in which, under circumstances identical with the present, it was held that notice of action was necessary.

CHANNELL, B.—I agree with my brother Bramwell in thinking that notice of action was necessary; but I should say that I have had an opportunity of consulting the learned gentleman who tried the cause, and he is anything but satisfied with the verdict for the plaintiff.

Rule absolute.

(Sittings in Banco before HAYES, J.)

REG. V. EDWARD GONNE BELL.

Certiorari—Coroner's inquisition—Venue, change of —Jurors—Trial, impartial—Manslaughter.

Where it prima facie appears to this court that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in a particular place, and such is not displayed by a strong case in answer thereto, the court will grant a certiorari to remove the proceedings into the Queen's Bench to enable an application to be made to have such case tried in some other jurisdiction.

This case came before the court upon a motion to make absolute, notwithstanding the cause shown, a conditional order of the 7th June 1859, whereby it was ordered that a writ of certiorari should issue directed to the clerk of the Crown for the county of the city of Limerick, to remove into this court all and singular inquisitions and depositions taken or made before the coroner in the said county of the city, on or about the 25th May 1859, for the purpose of having the venue changed from the county of the city of Limerick to the county of Limerick, on the grounds that the parties charged with manslaughter under the said inquisition could not have a fair and impartial trial in the county of the city of Limerick, unless cause should be shown within three days after the service of the order upon the solicitor for the next of kin of the deceased at his registered town lodgings, and upon the Crown solicitor. It appeared from the following affidavits which had been filed to ground the motion for the conditional order, from the affidavit of Edward Gonne Bell, R.M., that, at an inquest held at Limerick before the coroner, on view of the bodies of three persons, a verdict of manslaughter was, on the 25th May 1859 returned by the jury against Edward Gonne Bell and a party of police who were under his charge upon the evening of the 4th May 1859, at Broad-street, in the city of Limerick, during the election for the said city of Limerick, when very angry and bitter feelings were excited; that very many of the persons who would be likely to serve as jurors in the said city took a very warm interest in the said election on behalf of the popular candidate, and exerted themselves very much in bringing up voters; that he truly believed that it would be impossible to have a jury empanelled for his trial and said party of police who would enter upon the trial and listen to the defence with unbiassed and unprejudiced minds; that the circumstances connected with the unhappy occurrence have been repeatedly discussed among all persons in the said city; the deaths of said men and the firing of said police were referred to in placards posted throughout said city, in which it was stated that the people were shot down by the Orange underlings of the Derby Government; that the conduct of said Bell and the police has been canvassed and commented on by several of the local newspapers, which have been widely circulated in said city, and in several numbers thereof said occurrence has been designated in the strongest language as "an awful effusion of innocent blood," "murderous outrage," "Broad-street slaughter," "hideous and revolting case," &c.; that a committee has been appointed to collect subscriptions for the families of the sufferers, and about forty gentlemen were appointed members of said committee, among whom are many who are likely to form the petty jury panel at the ensuing assizes. There were also affidavits from the county inspector of police, and from the said Edward Gonne Bell's solicitor, strongly corroborative of the above facts. There were only two affidavits filed as cause—one by the town agent of Joseph Murphy, who was the solicitor for the next of kin of the deceased; and the other by fifteen of the persons who composed the coroner's jury on the occasion of the said inquest. The former affidavit stated that the verdict on the inquisition was given on the 25th May 1859, and no motion for the certiorari was made until the 6th June 1859; and that the said solicitor for the next of kin was not present during the entire of the proceedings before the coroner, and was not aware of all the facts stated in the affidavits filed to ground the motion for the conditional order; and that the said solicitor was then absent from town, and that within the three days allowed for showing cause it was wholly impossible to have the necessary affidavits filed to displace the many erroneous statements which he was informed were contained in the said affidavits. The second affidavit, filed as cause by the fifteen jurors, stated they were astonished at hearing that it had been alleged that they had been intimidated into finding the said verdict; no intimidation was practised, and they would not submit to any; that they were summoned by the police in the usual way; that they found the said verdict on the evidence laid before them, totally uninfluenced by any other consideration than that of honestly discharging an invidious public duty.

James Murphy (with him J. Clarke, Q.C.), for Edward Gonne Bell, submitted that under the circumstances the conditional order for a certiorari should be made absolute.

Andrew Vance, on behalf of the Crown, appeared to say that it seemed almost a matter of right the certiorari should issue.

O'Hagan, Q.C. (with him Charles Barry) contra, for the next of kin of the deceased.

Clarke, Q.C. objects that on a motion of this nature, counsel on behalf of the next of kin should not be heard, as the matter should rest between the party charged and the Crown.

James Murphy.—In the Six-mile Bridge case it was held, that the only persons who could be heard on a motion such as this, was the Crown and the prisoners.

Charles Barry.—I was in that case for the next of kin and was heard; and in the case of Reg. v. Palmer, 5 E. & B. 1024, counsel appeared for the next of kin and were heard.

Clarke, Q.C.—There is a marked distinction between cases of this sort in England and in Ireland, for in the former the cases are taken up by private prosecutors, but in the latter the prosecutions are taken up and prosecuted by the Crown. [HAYES, J.—There is some difference between a coroner's inquisition and a case which has undergone a magisterial investigation; for in the former the party is not bound to prosecute at all, but in the latter the witnesses are generally bound over by the magistrates to prosecute. I am inclined, as the learned judge who made the conditional order made it a part of the same that the solicitor for the next of kin should be served, and as the next of kin now appeared by his counsel, and as this is a matter having reference to a coroner's inquisition, and as I have heard all that one side has to say in this matter, to hear what those on behalf of the next of kin have to say why I should not make absolute this conditional order for a certiorari.]

O'Hagan, Q.C.—Three days being only allowed for showing cause against the conditional order, we could not procure affidavits in reply within that time. The object of this motion is clearly to postpone this trial from the next to the spring assizes 1860. The verdict of the coroner's jury was given on the 25th May 1859; the conditional order was not applied for until the 6th June. If now that order be made absolute, the inquisition will be returned, and no motion for a change of venue can be made until after plea pleaded in this court: (Reg. v. Forbes, 2 Dowl. P. C. 440.) The laches of the parties is enough here to have this motion refused. The application to have it tried by a jury from the county can be made to the judge at the trial at Limerick.

C. Barry.—We are here on an ex parte motion, for it was impossible within the time allowed we could have any affidavits in reply.

Clarke, Q.C. in reply.—Where a prima facie case, such as here, is made, that it would be unlikely that a fair trial would be had in any particular place, it is almost a matter of course to grant the certiorari to remove the proceedings, unless a strong case be made out on the other side. In this case there has not been an affidavit made even by the attorney of the next of kin, stating even his belief that a fair trial could be had in the city of Limerick: (R. v. Holden, 5 B. & Ad. 347.)

HAYES, J.—This case comes to a very narrow point, for I have nothing now to do with many of the discussions which have been raised during the progress of this motion. I have only now to deal with the question whether a certiorari should issue in this case or not, and this case I will deal with merely on legal grounds, and I will deal with the materials, such as they are, which I have before me. It has been said that the shortness of the time which was allowed for showing cause did not allow of affidavits being filed in answer. If that were so it would have been open to the parties to have come here with an application to extend the time for filing affidavits as cause. This was not done, and two affidavits only were filed: so I must now deal with the case as I find it, bearing in mind that this was a very serious charge, and a case occurring within a very limited jurisdiction, and bearing in mind the circumstances of this case. I do not see any reason why I should not grant this motion; and, without giving any opinion on any of the extraneous matters which have been discussed during the progress of this motion, I will only say I think this certiorari should go.

Rule accordingly.

[A similar rule was made subsequently to bring up any indictments which may be found against Mr. Bell or the police at the ensuing assizes.—REP.]

REG. on the prosecution of GEORGE PORTER v. THE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR THE COUNTY OF TYRONE.

Certiorari.—Interested magistrate sitting on the bench—Declaration by interested magistrate at the sitting of the court of his intention to take no part in the proceedings—Proceedings not thereby invalidated.

hearing of the case, having made an audible and distinct declaration at the sitting of the court that they did not intend to take any part in the proceedings:

Held, that the presence of these magistrates on the bench did not invalidate the proceedings, and a motion for a certiorari was, therefore, refused.

This was a motion to make absolute a conditional order obtained on the 14th of January, for a certiorari to be directed to the justices of the peace for the county of Tyrone, "to remove into this court all and singular the orders and convictions, for whatsoever trespasses and offences, whereof at a petty session held at Strabane on the 1st of August 1859, on the respective complaints of the Marquis of Abercorn and T. W. D. Humphreys, the said George Porter stands convicted, in order that the same may be quashed, on the grounds that the said orders were invalid on the face of them, that the jurisdiction of the justices to entertain the said complaints or make the said orders was ousted by reason of a question of title to do the acts complained of having arisen on the investigation thereof; that no offence was in fact proved against the said George Porter; and that the said T. W. D. Humphreys and John Humphreys, two of the justices who presided at the petty sessions, were interested therein, as agents of the said Marquis of Abercorn; and inasmuch as one of the said complaints was at the instance of the said T. W. D. Humphreys;" unless cause shown. The question of title alleged to be involved in this case, and on which the prosecutor grounded the present motion, arose from the following state of facts:—The father of the prosecutor became tenant from year to year, under Captain Patterson, of a farm of land containing about fifty acres, at the yearly rent of 64*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.*; and continued in occupation of the lands as such tenant until the time of his death, which occurred in the year 1840, when the prosecutor's mother Margaret Porter entered into possession. On the death of Captain Patterson, in the year 1841, the Marquis of Abercorn became the purchaser of his interest in the lands, which was an estate for lives renewable for ever. By articles entered into on the occasion of the prosecutor's marriage in the year 1849, Margaret Porter assigned over her interest in the farm to the prosecutor, and the prosecutor continued to cultivate the lands and to pay the rent, but the rent receipts were made out in the name of Margaret Porter. In the month of June 1858, two years' rent having become in arrear, a civil bill ejectment was brought for the recovery of the lands: this proceeding, however, was abandoned, as the case was not within the assistant barrister's jurisdiction, the rent exceeding 50*l.* In the month of October following an arrangement was entered into between Margaret Porter and John Humphreys, who was land agent of the Marquis of Abercorn jointly with his son T. W. D. Humphreys, that the lands should be surrendered to the Marquis of Abercorn, and that upon payment of the sum of 100*l.* Margaret Porter should be relieved from all liability with regard to the arrears of rent. This arrangement was shortly afterwards carried out, and possession of the premises given up; and on the same day an undertaking in writing was signed by George Porter to become caretaker on the farm up to the 1st Feb. 1859, and to give up peaceable possession on that day. Upon this undertaking being entered into, George Porter was permitted to resume occupation of the dwelling-house. It was alleged in the affidavit of George Porter, that the possession of the lands was so given up, and the undertaking entered into, on the belief that a decree had been obtained in the civil bill ejectment at the previous June sessions; and that that belief was founded on the statement of the bailiffs of the Marquis of Abercorn, to whom the possession had been surrendered, that such a decree had been obtained. The bailiffs, however, in their affidavits denied having made any such statement. The lands, as appeared from the affidavit of T. W. D. Humphreys, continued from that time in the occupation of the Marquis of Abercorn, and were cultivated at his expense. The prosecutor continued in the occupation of the house until the following spring, when possession having been demanded, according to the terms of the undertaking, and refused, a civil bill ejectment was brought at the June sessions 1859, and a decree obtained for the possession of the dwelling-house. From this decree the prosecutor appealed to the ensuing assizes; and the appeal having been heard by Hughes, B. at the Omagh assizes, on the 19th July 1859, the assistant barrister's decree was affirmed. Subsequently to the affirmation of this decree, the trespasses were committed, the convictions for which were now sought to be set aside. These convictions were five in number, and were made at the petty sessions held at Strabane on the 1st of August 1859; two of these convictions were made at the complaint of the Marquis of Abercorn against Joseph Lafferty and Patrick Byrne, who were in the service of George Porter; and of the remaining three convictions, two were on the complaint of the Marquis of Abercorn against George Porter for wilful and malicious trespass; and the remaining one on the complaint of T. W. D. Humphreys against the said George Porter for wilfully and maliciously letting loose an entire horse in a field the property of the Marquis of Abercorn, in which the complainant's mare was working, by reason whereof the mare was injured, and the life of the man who was working with the mare endangered. It appeared that the summonses which were served on the said George Porter, Joseph Lafferty, and Patrick Byrne, were signed by John Humphreys, and that they were served about one o'clock on Saturday the 30th July, to appear on the following Monday. The prosecutor's affidavit stated that, when the case came on to be heard, his attorney produced him as a witness, but that the magistrates refused to permit him to be sworn; that from the short time which he had to prepare for his defence, he was unable to procure the attendance of any other witnesses; that his attorney applied for an adjournment, but that the application was refused, except upon conditions, which the prosecutor could not accede to, as being detrimental to his case. The prosecutor further stated that, at the commencement of the case, both John Humphreys and T. W. D. Humphreys were seated on the bench, and that, though remonstrated with by his attorney, they continued to sit there during the hearing of the case; and that not only did they sit on the bench, but that they took part in the proceedings; and this latter statement was corroborated by the joint affidavit of Alexander Cummins and Robert M'Connell, both of whom deposed to the same fact. On the other hand, the affidavit of John Humphreys stated "that it was wholly untrue that the deponent or his son acted magisterially in any of the cases against George Porter on the 1st Aug. 1859, or in any way whatsoever, at the said petty sessions, and they distinctly expressed that they would not act magisterially on the said day." And the affidavit of T. W. D. Humphreys was to the same effect, "that it was wholly false that deponent acted as a magistrate in his own case, or in any of the cases at the suit of Lord Abercorn against the said George Porter;" and further, "that the deponent abstained altogether from acting as a justice in any case whatsoever on the said day, and at the commencement of the proceedings he distinctly and audibly stated that he was not there as a magistrate, and would not act as such on that day, and that when the justices retired to deliberate on the cases, the deponent and his father remained in the court-house with the general public." These statements were corroborated by the affidavits of all the magistrates who sat on the bench on that day.

M'Donogh, Q.C. (with him R. Dowse) in support of the motion.—The 8th section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 92, which provides penalties for wilful and malicious trespass, contains a proviso exempting from its operation trespasses committed under a reasonable supposition of title. There may have been a reasonable belief in the mind of the prosecutor that the delivery of possession to the bailiffs and the undertaking which was entered into on his part in Oct. 1859, did not constitute a valid surrender of the premises, as he has stated in his affidavit that he acted under the belief, grounded on the statement of the bailiffs, that a decree had been obtained in the civil ejectment. Again, these convictions ought to be set aside, as being made by an improperly constituted tribunal. It is admitted that both John Humphreys and T. W. D. Humphreys sat on the bench during the progress of the case; and the affidavit of the prosecutor, as well as that of Alexander Cummins and Robert M'Connell, state that they took part in the proceedings: (Reg. v. Justices of Surrey, 1 Jur. N.S. 1138; Reg. v. Sir Hugh Massey, 7 Ir. C. L. 211.) It is not merely necessary that justice should be administered by uninterested tribunals, but that the appearance presented to the public should be such as to remove from their minds every suspicion that the source of justice is impure: (Dimes v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 17 Jur. 73; Reg. v. The Justices of Cork, 2 Ir. Jur. N.S. 304.)

Fitzgibbon, Serjt. (with him Armstrong, Q.C.) showed cause.—All the magistrates who sat on the bench on the day when these convictions were made have sworn affidavits. In each of these affidavits there is a distinct and positive statement that neither John Humphreys nor T. W. D. Humphreys took any part in the proceedings; and the affidavits of Mr. Humphreys and his son further state that at the commencement of the case they distinctly and audibly expressed their intention of not taking any part in the proceedings. This state of facts distinguishes this case from Sir Hugh Massey's case, for Crampton, J. there grounded his decision on the fact, that although it appeared by Sir H. Massey's affidavit that he publicly and in the hearing of every one in the court stated that he would take no part in the proceedings, yet notwithstanding that statement he did take a part, and a very important part, by remaining with the rest of the magistrates when the public were excluded, and the magistrates proceeded to confer on the case. In the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Cork, Mr. French not only made no declaration of his intention not to interfere, but took part in the proceedings. And the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey was also decided on the ground of interference by the interested magistrate.

LEFROY, C.J.—This is an application for a certiorari to remove into this court five convictions which have been made by the justices of the peace for the county of Tyrone. Four of these convictions were made on the complaint of the Marquis of Abercorn, and the fifth on the complaint of his agent, Mr. John Humphreys. The objections to these convictions are brought before the court in the affidavit of the prosecutor, Mr. George Porter, and are as follows:—Firstly, that the court of petty sessions was improperly constituted, inasmuch as the Messrs. Humphreys took part in the proceedings, and were present on the bench with the other magistrates; secondly, that Mr. Porter raised an objection to the jurisdiction of the magistrates, on the ground that the alleged trespasses were committed by him under an impression that he had a bona fide claim of title to the lands upon which they took place; and thirdly, that the evidence in the court below did not establish that the acts done constituted with his defence, that they occurred in the course of an entry made by him upon the lands with a view of asserting his title. The first objection is pointed at the constitution of the court below, and is founded on the circumstance that the Messrs. Humphreys during, at all events, part of the proceedings, sat upon the bench which is the place appropriated to the magistrates. There is no doubt that the appearance presented to the public of these gentlemen in that position would afford ground for the supposition that they took part in the proceedings; and, as it would give these gentlemen an opportunity of conferring with the rest of the magistrates, and participating in the discussion of the case, it would be prima facie objectionable, not only with respect to the fair and impartial decision of the case, but also because in the eyes of the public it was calculated to bring suspicion on the proceedings. Now, it has been said that the circumstance of the Messrs. Humphreys sitting on the bench raises a prima facie presumption that they participated in the decision; but there is a maxim, Stabitur presumptio donec probetur in contrarium: we must therefore inquire whether this presumption has been met satisfactorily by the evidence on the other side. Now, we have not only the denial of the Messrs. Humphreys themselves, but also the statement of the five other magistrates who sat upon the bench on the day when these convictions were made, and who were confessedly impartial, that the Messrs. Humphreys took no part in the proceedings; and we have not merely a general denial, but there is a statement in the affidavit of Mr. T. W. D. Humphreys, that when the magistrates retired into their private chamber to confer on their decision, the Messrs. Humphreys remained in the court. As regards the impression which the public might have received, we have this additional evidence. An objection was taken by Mr. Porter's attorney to these two gentlemen remaining on the bench, and in reply to his objection the chairman, whose impartiality is not questioned, stated that it was usual as a matter of courtesy to persons in a respectable position, when they came into court, to allow them to occupy that portion of the court where the Messrs. Humphreys then sat. These gentlemen then remained on the bench, and it is stated that Mr. Porter's solicitor acquiesced in their doing so, and of that acquiescence there has been no denial. But there is one additional circumstance so far as regards the view which the public might take of the matter—namely, that these gentlemen both announced, before the proceedings commenced, that they did not intend to take any part in the proceedings upon that day. In this statement one of the Messrs. Humphreys inserts the word “audibly;” that word has been omitted from the affidavit of the other; but we have the statement of the petty sessions clerk that both the Messrs. Humphreys made that announcement audibly. Now, when we compare these circumstances with the facts which existed in the cases that have been cited, we find a solid and substantial difference. In French's case, 2 Ir. Jur. N.S. 431, the magistrate was admitted to a share in the proceedings with respect to the adjournment. Mr. French voted on that question, and therefore there was in that case the fact that a magistrate sat on the bench and appeared to take part in the proceedings. The question in that case respected the adjustment of rentcharge in lieu of tithe, and Mr. French was a parishioner, and therefore had a pecuniary interest in the adjudication of the question. In the case of The County of Clare Justices, 7 Ir. C. L. 211, the magistrate whose conduct was complained of, when the other magistrates retired to consider the case, went along with them, and remained in their chamber—and therefore in that case there was a palpable participation in the proceedings. In the case of the Surrey justices, the magistrate remained on the bench, and no disclaimer was made on wilful and malicious trespass, but were consistent

his part. That was sufficient to impress the public with the conviction that he did act; and further, the justices did not retire to consider their decision, and the chairman announced their decision in terms general enough to embrace him: "all of us are of opinion." It occurs to me, therefore, that, with respect to the illegal constitution of the court, there is no foundation for the prosecutor's objection, and I do not feel that it is a wholesome administration of the control which this court exercises over magistrates, to raise imaginary objections, which are calculated to bring their proceedings into disrepute. I consider that justices are entitled to the greatest consideration at our hands, for they, without remuneration, discharge an onerous and often disagreeable duty, and yet, in the administration of that duty, are excluded from the protection which has been extended to the paid administrators of the law. We are now asked to inflict on these magistrates all the consequences that may arise from our granting this motion. It may be a flaw in the laws regulating the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace, that they should be exposed to consequences to which they are liable for errors committed in the discharge of their duty—a duty gratuitous on their part—and that they should not have the same exemption from liability which the paid administrators of the law enjoy. But, at the same time, the court will not countenance the slightest departure from that strict impartiality with which the law should be ever administered. The next objection to these convictions is, that the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted, by reason of the defendant raising a bonâ fide question of title. I could not but observe the tenderness with which the counsel who opened handled this part of the case, as if it would not bear much pressure. He showed his judgment in not making this the strength of his position. But, considering all the circumstances, it is clear that there was not a scintilla of evidence that a bonâ fide question did or could exist as to Porter's title to the land. It was a tenancy from year to year, derived from his mother, who transferred all her interest to him, but continued as the ostensible tenant; the receipts for rent were made out in her name, though the rent was paid by Porter himself. In the month of October 1858, two years' rent being due, Mrs. Porter went to the agent of Lord Abercorn, and earnestly entreated him to accept 100*l.* in full of all demand for rent, and to take the land off her hands. The possession was, therefore, actually up, and an undertaking entered into on the part of Porter to become caretaker on the lands; and from that time down to the period when these trespasses were committed, Lord Abercorn remained in possession of the lands, and his agents continued to manage them. It was argued that this operated as an estoppel, and concluded Porter from setting up a question of title to the lands; while, on the other hand, Porter denied that his signature was properly obtained, and insisted that the undertaking was entered into under a mistake. In this defence, however, he was defeated in the civil bill ejectment at the quarter sessions held at Strabane in June 1859, and the decision of the assistant barrister was afterwards affirmed at the following assizes. There was, then, evidence of record before the magistrates to show that Porter's title was invalid. But it was invalid the moment the tenant from year to year gave up possession. On looking through the authorities the impression left on my mind is, that the circumstances which have taken place put an end to the tenancy. I will only refer to the authority of Grimman v. Legge, 8 B. & Cr. 324; in that case, Bayley, J. says, "a parol licence to quit will not of itself operate as a surrender of the tenant's interest. But when the tenant gives up possession, in pursuance of such a licence, and the landlord accepts it, the licence, coupled with the fact of the change of possession, operates as a surrender by act and operation of law, and the landlord cannot recover any rent which becomes due after his acceptance of the possession." From that case down to Nickells v. Atherstone, 10 Q. B. 944, with the exception of one case—Lyons v. Reed, 13 M. & W. 306—that doctrine has obtained. As to the third objection, that the alleged trespasses took place in the course of an entry made by Porter on the lands for the purpose of asserting his title, the very nature of the acts done is sufficient to remove any such presumption. I need only allude to the abominable nature of one of the acts complained of, an act which the magistrates very properly visited with seven days' imprisonment: ex uno disce omnes. Whatever other ground the prosecutor may have had for resting this motion upon, he has failed in establishing this objection. On the whole case, I am of opinion that this motion should be refused.

O'BRIEN, J.—During the course of the argument I had some doubts as to the validity of the surrender in point of law, and we were not referred to the authorities on that branch of the case. But, on the authority of the case of Dodd v. Arklow, 7 Scott's N. R. 415, it appears to me that the circumstances which have occurred in this case constitute a valid surrender by operation of law. But whatever question may have existed upon that point was set at rest by the decision of the assistant barrister, affirmed, as it was, at the subsequent assizes. It would have been much better had the Messrs. Humphreys taken their seats in the body of the court; but I do not concur in the opinion that this is a ground to disentitle them to costs.

HAYES, J.—I am of the same opinion as the other members of the court upon this case. With regard to the question of title, it appears that the prosecutor, Mr. Porter, in the year 1849, became entitled under his marriage articles to the entire interest in the lands, but that this circumstance was never communicated to the landlord, and that after his marriage the prosecutor allowed his mother to continue as the ostensible tenant; and, although the rent was paid by him, and he derived all the benefit from the farm, yet the receipts were taken out in his mother's name, and this person whom he thus put forward as tenant in the year 1859 surrendered the lands and put the landlord into possession. He can hardly now be permitted to raise a question of title, after having stood by during all these proceedings and signed an undertaking on his own part to act as caretaker on the lands. But, notwithstanding this undertaking, he refuses to give up possession of the house upon demand made by the landlord, and he puts his landlord to the trouble of an ejectment. A civil bill ejectment is brought, and a decree pronounced against him by the assistant barrister, and this decree is affirmed at the subsequent assizes. Yet, after all this, this gentleman proceeds to commit these trespasses which he says the magistrates had no right to adjudicate upon, as there was a bonâ fide question as to whether they were not committed under a fair and reasonable supposition of title on his part. If we required anything else, the very nature of the trespasses would be quite sufficient to show that no such supposition could have existed. A man would be insane who would commit acts of such a nature on his own land. As to the next objection, that the court of petty sessions was not rightly constituted, the question is, whether any of the persons who constituted the court were interested in the result. I cannot come to the conclusion that these two gentlemen formed part of the bench of magistrates upon that day. I am always most anxious to protect magistrates in cases of mistake—they should receive the greatest consideration from us; but I do not like to see a man acting as Mr. Humphreys, sen. has acted in this case. I think he would have acted with much better feeling had he abstained altogether from interfering in the matter, as he did in the first instance by issuing the summonses. These summonses were not issued until Saturday, and the defendant was required to appear on the following Monday; this was hardly a reasonable time for a person to prepare for his defence, more especially in a case of a criminal nature, where the defendant cannot be examined himself. I think, under these circumstances, it would have been much better if the magistrates had postponed the case; and I think the Messrs. Humphreys would have acted with much better feeling had they, during the hearing of the case, retired to another part of the court. Upon the whole case, I am of opinion that the certiorari should not issue, and that these magistrates should not have costs.

FITZGERALD, J.—I concur in the judgment pronounced by the other members of the court; and in an ordinary case I would have contented myself with a mere expression of my concurrence. But I think it right that each member of the court should express his individual opinion in a case like the present, where this court has not only to see that the law is administered impartially, but to encourage a confidence in its impartial administration. I entirely concur in the observations that have been made, that the greatest consideration should be shown to magistrates, but I cannot express anything but condemnation on the course that has been pursued in this case. These two gentlemen were the real plaintiffs; the summonses were issued on Saturday, the 30th July, for the following Monday, and we cannot take into consideration the intervening Sunday; besides the undue haste with which the matter was thus pressed forward, when the case came on to be heard these two gentlemen took their seats on the bench. I was prepared to pronounce my judgment at the conclusion of the argument, but I considered it my duty to read over the affidavits, in order to discover if there had been any interference on the part of the Messrs. Humphreys; but after having examined the affidavits with care, I could not detect the slightest interference by them during the progress of the case. Assuming that to be so, still I cannot help saying that it is a most objectionable proceeding for a party in a case to take his seat on the bench along with the magistrates. How would it be possible for the members of this court to communicate freely if we had parties interested in the case sitting beside us, while it was at hearing? Besides, the appearance which is presented to the public, of the prosecutor sitting on the bench, is most injurious. It would be well for gentlemen in the position of the Messrs. Humphreys, if they were to remember the words of Crompton, J., in the case of Reg. v. Massey. "But the admission of Sir Hugh Massey that he was interested, and his continuing to sit with the other magistrates, and the important declaration of the bench, at the calling on of the case, are what this court cannot give its sanction to." With regard to the question of title, I agree that the real question is, whether Mr. Porter acted under a fair and reasonable supposition of right, and whether that appeared to the magistrates below; for although the party may have had no right to the lands, it might be that he acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had. But it is clear from the affidavits that he could have acted under no such supposition, and the nature of the acts was such as to show that they were the acts of a wilful trespasser, and not those of a person going upon his own ground.

(Before the FULL COURT.)

REG. v. BUTLER. (a)

Summary Jurisdiction Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 13, Jr.—Jurisdiction of a magistrate—What documents may be removed by a writ of certiorari.

A magistrate not sitting in petty sessions issued a warrant (which purported to be issued under the Summary Jurisdiction Act), committing P. L. to gaol, "till the next petty sessions day, or to find bail to appear at said petty sessions." The warrant recited that P. L. had disobeyed a summons to appear at the then last petty sessions day, and give evidence "in a case against two publicans." No case against two publicans was pending in court at the date of the service of the summons, or of the issuing of the warrant:

Held, that the warrant could not be removed by writ of certiorari.

On the 5th May 1860 the court issued a peremptory writ of habeas corpus cum causâ ad subjiciendum, directed to the high sheriff of the county Fermanagh, and to the governor of the gaol of Enniskillen, commanding them to bring up on 8th May the body of the prisoner, Patrick Leonard, by whatever name or addition he may be called. The writ issued on the affidavit of the prisoner, who stated that on 27th April 1860 he was served with a copy of a summons to appear at the petty sessions of E., on the 30th April, as a witness in the cause therein mentioned; that he ascertained that no cause was pending or summons issued against the defendants, and therefore, believing his attendance unnecessary, proceeded to his daily work, and while so engaged was required by a police constable to accompany him to the police barrack; that he went thither, and was brought before the sub-inspector, who required him to make an information as to his knowledge of the offence stated in the summons served on him; that deponent said he would not become an informer, but would give evidence if duly summoned, and that he had already told the truth before the coroner's jury, in the presence of the sub-inspector; and deponent believes that on the same day, the sub-inspector applied to H. E., a justice of the peace who was then presiding at petty sessions, for a warrant to arrest deponent for not attending as a witness in the alleged complaint; that H. E. refused to grant the warrant, because no summons had issued or complaint laid against the defendants named in the summons served on the deponent; that deponent would have attended on 30th April to give evidence, had any cause been pending in court; that on the 3rd May deponent was arrested by two constables, who conveyed him to the constabulary barrack, and, after about two hours, brought him before A. S. Butler, resident magistrate, who committed him to gaol under a warrant signed by A. S. B., which warrant deponent believes was illegally obtained against him; and that both warrant and summons are irregular and deficient in form and substance, for not containing a statement of the title, profession, trade, or residence of the defendant, as required by stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93. Deponent caused an application for his discharge to be made to A. S. B., who said he would not have interfered had he known that the matter had been entered on at petty sessions, but, as he had committed the deponent, would now admit him to bail; that deponent is still detained in prison under said warrant, and believes that neither of the persons as to whose offences he was summoned to give evidence has been summoned to answer said complaint, and that he had no intention of leaving the country, or evading service of the summons as a witness. On the 8th May the governor of the gaol returned, that he had in court the body which on 3rd May 1860 had been delivered into his custody under the following warrant:—"Petty Sessions Act (Ireland) 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93). Form E. B. Warrant to commit or detain for trial. Win. Fletcher, constable, complainant; Patrick Leonard, defendant. Petty sessions district of Enniskillen, county of Fermanagh. Whereas a complaint was made on the 3rd May 1860, on the oath of John Meehan, sub-constable, that on the 27th April 1860 he served a copy of a summons on defendant at, &c., to appear as a witness in a case against two publicans in E., for selling spirits or other drink at prohibited hours, and said P. L. did not appear when called upon, and having been ordered so to do in said summonses on 30th April 1860, and having been arrested under a warrant and ordered to give bail—This is to command you to whom this is addressed to lodge the said P. L. of E., in the gaol of E., in the county of F., there to be imprisoned by the keeper of said gaol, as follows: to Monday, the next petty sessions at E., viz., 7th May 1860, or to find bail to appear at said petty sessions; and for this, &c. —Signed, A. BUTLER, R.M., Justice of said county. 3rd May 1860. To," &c. And I do further humbly certify that said P. L. is not in my custody for any cause other than by virtue of said warrant, on which is indorsed the words, &c. "Rule of Bail—Petty Sessions district, &c. Whereas, on 3rd May 1860, P. L. was committed to the gaol of E., charged with disobeying a magistrate's summons, I hereby consent to said P. L. being bailed by recognisance," &c. So answers James Jeffers, governor of E. gaol. Upon hearing this return read, the court (Lefroy, C.J., and Fitzgerald, J., being absent,) discharged P. L., as the term specified in the warrant for his confinement had expired—whereupon, on motion of R. Dowse, of counsel for P. L., the court was pleased to grant a conditional order for a writ of certiorari, directed to A. S. B., to the clerk of said petty sessions district, and to the governor of the gaol of E., to remove into this court a certain warrant of commitment, and all other warrants, convictions and informations, together with all things touching the same, made before A. S. B. against P. L., whereby P. L. was committed, &c., with a view that they may be quashed, on the grounds that they are null and void on the face of them; that the said justice acted without jurisdiction, and in excess of jurisdiction, in so committing P. L., unless cause shown, &c. The affidavit of A. S. B., filed as cause, stated that on the 3rd May 1860 he was sworn in as resident magistrate, on which day sub-constable J. M. swore before deponent this information:—"Constable William Fletcher complainant; Patrick Leonard, defendant. Petty sessions, &c. The information of, &c., who saith that on 27th April 1860 I served a copy of a summons on P. L. at, &c., to appear as a witness in the case against two publicans in E., for selling spirits or other drink at prohibited hours, and P. L. did not appear, &c. Signed, John Meehan, s.c. And the said informant binds himself, &c. Taken before me this 3rd day of May, at Enniskillen.—A. S. BUTLER." That deponent then issued a warrant under which P. L. was committed; that previous to issuing said warrant he required P. L. to give bail for his appearance, at next petty sessions day, at E., and thinking that P. L. might find a difficulty in getting bail, offered to discharge him on his own recognisance to appear on said day; that P. L. refused, and was thereupon committed till 7th May, to insure his appearance; that deponent was entirely ignorant that any application had been made to any other magistrate for a warrant against P. L., and relied altogether on said information of J. M.; that deponent was then informed that the offence with which the publicans were charged was that of selling spirits before six a.m. on Sunday, 22nd April last, to a person named M. M., who was then in a state of intoxication, and who died on the same day, of the effects thereof, as was found by the verdict of a coroner's jury; and deponent was then further informed that P. L. was the companion of M. M., and drinking with him on that occasion, and had given evidence to that effect on the inquest; and deponent was anxious to procure, by all legal means, the evidence necessary to the prosecution of said offence; that on 7th May, when P. L. was brought before the petty sessions, deponent ordered him to be discharged, and caused a written order for his discharge to be delivered to the governor of the gaol; and deponent says, that in granting said warrant he acted, as he believed, in the discharge of his duty, and without any other motive whatever, and submits, that therefore the conditional order should be discharged.

J. P. Hamilton (with him F. Macdonough, Q. C.) now showed cause.—The question is, whether a certiorari lies to remove a justice's warrant of commitment. The court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of certiorari to quash a warrant of commitment, when the magistrate who issued that warrant has not done any judicial act. Such a warrant is returnable by a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, but a writ of certiorari lies only in a case in which the document partakes at least of the nature of a conviction. The remedy of the party aggrieved is by action, and this was a mere ministerial act on the part of the justice: (Rex v. Lediard, Say. 6; Rex v. Lloyd, Caldecott Rep. 309; Reg. v. Churchwardens of Hatfield Peverel, 14 Q. B. 298; Ex parte Tuunton, 1 Dowl. P. Cas. 54; Re Allison, 10 Ex. 661.) This warrant was plainly a mere ministerial act, for on its face it appears to have been issued not by way of conviction, but was a ministerial act done out of petty sessions, in order to further the performance of a judicial act at some future period. The Summary Jurisdiction Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, s. 13, par. 2) gives to a justice power to arrest a person by warrant, and thus bring him up as a witness, if he disobeys a summons; and the fifth paragraph of that section empowers a justice to commit a witness who refuses to give evidence; but nowhere does the Act enable the justice to imprison a man for a week, to make sure that he will be forthcoming to give evidence when required. This act was an illegal act, and the warrant cannot be removed by certiorari. This warrant was issued when the magistrate was not sitting in petty sessions, and also when there was no such cause pending in the court; but no warrant, under sect. 13, can be issued, except by a court of summary jurisdiction. The warrant was therefore wholly illegal, and does not stand in the prosecutor's way if he desires to bring an action against the magistrate. If, then, the court refuses to grant a writ of certiorari, the prosecutor will not be left without remedy, for the proviso in the Justices' Protection Act, Ir. (12 Vict. c. 16, s. 2), does not apply to this particular case, as this warrant was not a legal warrant, and therefore need not be quashed in this court, before action brought, not being such a warrant as is contemplated in the Act; and further, because even if it was such a warrant, yet it has not been followed by a conviction or order.

R. Dowse, in support of the conditional order.—This document may be brought up by a writ of certiorari. The prosecutor did obtain a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, but the matter could not be debated in that proceeding, because when the body was brought into court it appeared from the return that the term of imprisonment had expired, and the party was at once discharged. This document is such an order or conviction as requires to be quashed before an action can be brought. A warrant standing alone, generally speaking, seems not to be capable of being quashed, if it be not sustainable in law. But that occurs only in the case where the justice acts merely ministerially, and is left absolutely without discretion in the matter of issuing the warrant. Moreover, the information upon which the magistrate issued this warrant was made in a cause different from that in which my client was summoned to give evidence. That appears in the very title of the information itself, which is further defective for the want of an allegation that my client could give material evidence. But even though the information did contain that allegation, yet the warrant is bad, as the statute only empowers the justice to have the party arrested and brought before him, but not to imprison the party. No cause such as that mentioned in the title was in existence at the time when the warrant issued. The other side contend that this warrant was a nullity, at all events, and, therefore, not a subject to which the law of certiorari applies; but a document, even though it be a nullity, may be removed by a writ of certiorari: (Haylock v. Sparke, 1 Ell. & Bl. 471.) In that case the court assumed that the document was removable by certiorari, although there had not been any conviction. The warrant merely authorised the governor of the gaol to keep the party in prison. They contend, however, that this warrant is so bad that it cannot be treated even as a nullity; but the authorities prove that that circumstance does not make the document less examinable by certiorari, if the act was a judicial act: (Reg. v. Aberdare Canal Company, 14 Q. B. 854; Reg. v. Arkwright, 12 Q. B. 960; Reg. v. Coles, 8 Q. B. 75; Grady v. Hunt, 8 Ir. Jur. 10; Reg. v. Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 7 Ad. & El. 583.) This, then, was not a mere ministerial act, but was a judicial act; it cannot possibly be a ministerial act, for such an act must be one done in obedience to the law, which leaves no discretion in the magistrate in that matter. Where is the common law or the statute that authorises or commands the issuing of this warrant? There is another ground on which this conditional order must be made absolute. The form of the order is, "to remove into this court a certain warrant of commitment, and all other warrants, convictions, and informations," &c. Now, Mr. Butler does not swear that this warrant is the only document in the case.

HOWELL v. THE LONDON DOCK COMPANY.

F. Macdonough, Q.C. in reply.—This act of the magistrate was not a judicial act. A judicial act must be done in the exercise of some jurisdiction. But the magistrate issued this warrant not in the exercise of his jurisdiction, but in excess of it. It is true that the warrant recites: "Whereas a complaint was made on the 3rd May 1860, on the oath of John Meehan, sub-constable, that on the 27th April 1860 he served a copy of a summons on the defendant, &c., to appear as a witness in a case against two publicans, &c."—and that no such case was then in existence, as now appears. That recital is therefore a misrecital, which cannot, however, alter the nature of things, and does not create a case against the magistrate himself, so as to bring him within the 13th section. In Haylock v. Sparke the warrant purported to be a judicial act, and the court, in delivering judgment, assumed that it was so.

The COURT stopped him, and allowed the cause shown.

ERRORS FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

Tuesday, June 14.

(Before WILLIAMS, J., MARTIN, B., WILLES, J., CHANNELL, B. and BYLES, J.)

HOWELL v. THE LONDON DOCK COMPANY.

Appeal from the Q. B.—Jurisdiction—Action to recover rates—Consent of parties that Q. B. should deal with special case as if stated by quarter sessions—C. L. P. A. 1854, s. 42.

After an action had been commenced by the clerk to parish trustees to recover the amount of a rate, it was agreed by consent that a case should be stated for the opinion of the Court of Q. B. to be dealt with by the court as if granted by the quarter sessions on an appeal against the rate. The Court of Q. B. having heard the case argued, decided that the defendants were entitled to be relieved from the rate in respect to certain matters. Thereupon the plaintiff brought error in pursuance of the C. L. P. A. 1854, c. 42:

Held, that the parties were bound by the agreement that the Court of Q. B. was to deal with the case as if granted by the quarter sessions, and that, as there could not be a review of the judgment of the Q. B. in such a case, this court had no jurisdiction in the present instance.

This was an action of debt brought by the plaintiff as clerk to the vestry of St. George's-in-the-East, and to the trustees for putting into execution the Act of 46 Geo. 3, c. lxxvii., to recover 3063*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, being the amount of a rate made on the property of the defendants on the 20th Feb. 1856.

It was agreed by consent that a case should be stated for the opinion of the court, to be dealt with by the court as if granted by the quarter sessions on an appeal against the rate.

CASE.

By the 13th section of the above Act (local, personal and public), intituled "An Act for more effectually maintaining, regulating and employing the poor within the parish of St. George, in the county of Middlesex, and for cleansing and lighting the squares, streets and other open passages and places, and for keeping and regulating a nightly watch within such parts of the said parish as are not within the liberty of the Tower of London," certain trustees to be annually appointed under the Act were directed to settle and ascertain the respective sums of money necessary to be raised for the purpose of the Act.

By sect. 14, the rector, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor, and trustees are to make and sign two distinct rates or assessments, one of which rates shall be laid upon all persons who shall inhabit, hold, or occupy any land, house, shop, warehouse, or other building, tenement, or hereditament within the said parish, for the relief of the poor; and the other upon all persons who shall inhabit, hold, or occupy any land, house, shop, warehouse, or other building, tenement, or hereditament other than and except any docks or warehouses, which are or may be considered exempt from such rates, or some part thereof, for a limited time under any Acts relating to the London Docks within such part of the parish as is not within the liberty of the Tower of London for cleansing, lighting, and watching.

Under this statute the poor-rates have been made to the present time, and the London Dock Company have been rated thereto in respect of the same property, and on the same rateable value as in the rate now in dispute.

By the local and personal Acts, 17 Geo. 3, c. xxii. and 22 Geo. 3, c. lxxxvi. provisions were made for paving parts of the said parish and dividing the same into districts for that purpose, and powers were given to the commissioners appointed under the said Acts to make rates for defraying the expenses of paving and repairing, &c., upon all persons occupying premises within the streets, lanes and places respectively which were paved by such commissioners respectively for, adjoining to, or opening into the same.

The powers of such commissioners were altered and extended by statute 5 Geo. 3, c. 29, intituled "An Act for better paving, improving and regulating the streets of the metropolis, and removing and preventing nuisances and obstructions therein."

By sect. 24 of that Act all paving rates are to be laid upon the persons who inhabit, hold, occupy, and are in possession of, or enjoy any messuages, tenements, lands, grounds, coach-houses, stables, cellars, vaults, houses, shops and warehouses, or other buildings or hereditaments situate or being within any of the streets or places within the said parochial or other districts.

The London Docks are situate partly in the said parish of St. George, in the county of Middlesex, and partly in the parishes of Wapping and Shadwell, the greater part being in the parish of St. George.

That portion of the docks which is situate within the parish of St. George was, for the purpose of paving, comprised in two separate districts, and under the jurisdiction of separate commissioners appointed under the said statutes 17 Geo. 3, c. xxii. and 22 Geo. 3, c. lxxvi. viz., the St. George and Wapping Pavement Commissioners.

HOWELL v. THE LONDON DOCK COMPANY.

For that portion of their property which was included in the St. George's paving district, the London Dock Company was, previously to and at the time of the passing of the Metropolis Local Management Act, rated in point of fact at the sum of 17,000*l.*, being the estimated annual value of their property immediately abutting on the streets, lanes, and passages so paved by the St. George's Pavement Commissioners, but it is not admitted by the plaintiff that such mode or amount of rating was right in point of law.

They were also rated for other portions of their docks and premises within the said parish of St. George, for paving purposes, by the Wapping commissioners, having jurisdiction in the streets and places upon which such docks and property abutted, but to a much less amount in the whole than the rateable value of the same property as assessed to the poor rates, but it is not admitted by the plaintiff that such mode or amount of rating was right in point of law.

By the Metropolitan Local Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 90, all the duties and powers of any commissioners in relation to paving in the parish, are transferred to the vestry of that parish.

Sect. 158 of that Act requires the vestry, from time to time, to order the overseers to levy the sums which the vestry may require for defraying the expenses of executing the Act.

Sect. 159 enacts that where it appears to any vestry that all or any part of the expenses, for defraying which any sum is by such vestry ordered to be levied as aforesaid, is incurred for the special benefit of any particular part of the parish or otherwise, has not been incurred for the equal benefit of the whole of their parish, such vestry may by any such order direct the sums necessary for defraying such expenses, or any part thereof, to be levied in such part, or exempt any part of such parish from the levy, or require a less rate to be levied thereon, as the circumstances of the case may require.

By sect. 92 expenses of paving are to be deemed expenses incurred in the execution of the Act.

By sect. 161 the general rates under that Act (which include the expenses of paving) are levied on the persons, and in respect of the property by law rateable to the relief of the poor, upon the net annual value to be ascertained by the rate for the time being for the relief of the poor.

By sect. 247 all Acts in force in any parish are repealed so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

The vestry of the parish of St. George, duly elected under the Metropolis Local Management Act, proceeded in pursuance thereof to make, and duly made, an order upon the trustees for putting into execution the said statute 46 Geo. 3, c. lxxvii., hereinafter called trustees of the said parish (being the officers charged with making and levying the rates for the relief of the poor), to levy and raise a sum of 6000*l.* for the purpose of defraying the general expenses of the execution of the said Act (exclusive of expenses relating to the construction of sewers, &c.), and which order is as follows:—

"To the rector, churchwardens, and overseers, and trustees of the parish of St. George-in-the-East, in the county of Middlesex,—You are hereby required to levy in the above-mentioned parish, and to pay over to C. B. S., Esq., the treasurer of this vestry, on or before the 30th June next, the sum of 6000*l.*, for defraying the expenses of the execution of the Metropolis Local Management Act, exclusive of the expenses of constructing, altering, maintaining and cleansing the sewers, or otherwise connected with sewerage. Sealed with the common seal of the vestry of the parish of St. George-in-the-East, this 17th day of January 1856.

"W. L. H. CLERK. (L.S.)"

The above order having been duly issued and served upon the trustees of the said parish, they in pursuance of such order, on the 20th Feb. 1856, made a rate of 10*d.* in the pound upon the persons and property rateable to the relief of the poor, which rate was duly allowed and signed by one of the police magistrates of the metropolis, and published as by law required, and to which rate the company were assessed in respect of warehouses, wharfs, docks, and quays within the walls of the London Docks, and also upon other warehouses, a jetty, and excise and custom offices, situate in different parts of the premises of the London Dock Company, the rateable value of the whole being 73,514*l.*, such sum being made up of seven separate assessments on different parts of the property.

The said company were and are the owners and occupiers of the property mentioned in the above extract from the rate, and the same was and is situate within the said parish of St. George, and rateable to the poor-rates of the said parish at the sums mentioned in the above extract; and the company were assessed for the same property at the same amount in the last poor-rate for the said parish, made previously to the 20th Feb. 1856.

The whole area of the docks of the said parish is paved at the company's own expense.

Out of the sum of 6000*l.* mentioned in the said order of vesting of the 17th Jan. 1856, about half was estimated as required for paving purposes.

Some of the principal approaches to the London Docks are by water, and a large part of the goods conveyed to and from the docks is conveyed by water carriage.

The principal land entrance to the docks is in the parish of Wapping.

One of the land entrances, and the principal water entrances to the docks, are in the parish of Shadwell, but there are five land entrances to the docks, for waggons and carts and other vehicles, in the said parish of St. George's, by some of which they have access to and from all parts of the London Docks within the said parish, and a great portion of the heavy traffic to and from the docks passes in some of these entrances and through various streets in the said parish.

The dock company having been served with notice of the said general rate, and the same having been demanded of them, applied to the vestry of the said parish that the said vestry would be pleased to make an order that the said general rate should as to 3000*l.* part thereof (being the amount alleged by the said company to be applicable for paving purposes, be levied on such part of the said parish only as was not within the walls of the London Dock Company, and upon the warehouses and other premises of the company previously assessed to the paving rate by the said commissioners for the St. George and Wapping districts, and that as to the said sum of 3000*l.* the residue of the premises of the company should be exempt from the rate, and that with reference to subsequent orders for rates a similar principle might be acted upon.

The vestry of the said parish having met and considered the application of the dock company, resolved that no part of the said sum of 6000*l.*, directed to be raised by their said order of the 17th Jan. 1856, had been incurred for the special benefit of that part of the parish not comprised in the London Docks, but such expenses had been incurred for the equal benefit of the whole parish, and they resolved that the company were not entitled to any exemption as prayed, and that with reference to the general rate required to be levied under the Metropolis Local Management Act, the poor-rate was their only standard of rating.

The said company having failed to pay the said rate after demand, and after fourteen days' notice left for them on the premises so rated, this action has been brought for the amount of the said rate by the plaintiff, who was at the time of making the rate, and still continues to be, the vestry clerk of the said parish, and also clerk to the trustees above mentioned.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the trustees of the said parish were right in making the said general rate on the whole property of the dock company rated to the poor-rate of the said parish of St. George, or whether they ought to have limited the said general rate, as to so much thereof as was made for raising moneys required for paying expenses or charges, to such parts of the property of the said dock company in the parish as were formerly rated by the paving commissioners under the said Paving Acts, or to any other and what part of the property of the said dock company.

If the court should be of opinion that the said general rate was rightly made on the whole of the company's property rated to the poor-rates as aforesaid, then judgment was to be entered for the plaintiff for the sum of 3063*l.* 1*s.* 8*d.*, and costs of suit.

If the court should be of opinion that the rate ought to have been limited to part or parts only of the company's property, then it was agreed to be referred to surveyors to award and determine, according to the principles laid down by the court, the rateable value of the portion or portions of the company's property to which the court should decide the rate ought to have been confined, and to determine for what amount judgment should be entered, and it was agreed that judgment should be entered accordingly, and in that case each party was to bear his and their own costs.

The Court of Q. B. held, that it was the duty of the vestry, by the 159th section, to apportion the burden according to the benefit, and that if part of the property of the dock company had not equal benefit with the rest of the property in the parish rated to the poor from the paving expenses, in respect of that part the company was entitled to be relieved pro tanto; and that if inequality of benefit exists, the court would be bound to amend the rate according to the fact; and that the dock company were exempt from being rated for profits not immediately connected with the use of the paved streets, as e. g. those arising from the use of the basins by vessels, and from the use of bonded warehouses by imported goods afterwards exported. (The case is reported 8 E. & B. 212; 27 L. J. 177, M. C.)

Huddleston (J. Brown with him).—The question is, whether the parish ought to have limited the rate in question to that part of the London Dock property which was formerly assessed to the paving rate, or whether the whole of that which was assessed to the poor's rate previously, was liable to be assessed to the rate in question. The whole question turns on the construction of the Metropolis Local Management Act. [WILLIAMS, J.—There is a preliminary point to be determined. The parties in this case by consent have substituted the Court of Q. B. for the court of quarter sessions, and the Court of Q. B. have considered the case as if it had been a case reserved on an appeal to the quarter sessions. Now there could be no appeal to this court upon such a case when stated upon appeal to the quarter sessions.] This is a case stated by consent after action brought to recover the amount of the rates under the local Act 46 Geo. 3, c. lxxvii. s. 23. [WILLIAMS, J.—If this had been simply a case stated after action brought, you might have alleged error upon the judgment of the Court of Q. B., but you have put that court in the place of the court of quarter sessions.] It is submitted that this case falls within the C. L. P. A. 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 32, which enacts that error may be brought upon a judgment upon a special case in the same manner as upon a judgment upon a special verdict, unless the parties agree to the contrary. Here there is no agreement to the contrary.

CHANNELL, B.—If you had gone on with the action, the proceedings would have been as in an ordinary case. But the parties by agreement have substituted the Court of Q. B. for the quarter sessions. The court of quarter sessions have power to amend the rate, but this court has not.

WILLIAMS, J.—How can we review the principles laid down by the Court of Q. B., as those which are to guide the conduct of the arbitrator who is to ascertain the correct amount? The parties in effect have agreed that in lieu of the ordinary course of proceeding in an action a case should be stated as if granted by way of appeal from the court of quarter sessions. The judgment of the Court of Q. B. on such a case is final; and the parties could not by special agreement transfer the appeal to this court, and this court would have no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

BYLES, J.—If the parties could appeal to this court in this case, then it might go up to the House of Lords; and so in every rating case, where the parties consented to a course like the present. But consent cannot give jurisdiction; and I never heard that this court could review the judgment of the Court of Q. B. on a rating case reserved at the quarter sessions.

CHANNELL, B.—I think that, by the terms of the agreement, "it was agreed by consent that a case should be stated for the opinion of the court, and be dealt with by the court as if granted by the quarter sessions on an appeal against the rate," it was meant to exclude an appeal to this court.

MARTIN, B.—This is not the subject-matter of an appeal to this court at all. We decline the jurisdiction.

Sir F. Kelly (Grove with him), for the dock company, were not called upon.

WILLIAMS, J.—We are all of opinion very strongly that we have no jurisdiction. It was agreed that the Court of Q. B. was to deal with the case as if it had been granted by the quarter sessions on an appeal against the rate. As there could be no appeal against the judgment of the Court of Q. B. on a case granted by the quarter sessions on an appeal against the rate, so neither can there be an appeal in the present instance.

THE WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY v. THOMAS KEARNEY.

Appeal from the decision of the justices at petty sessions—Liability of railway companies to keep in repair the surface of a road which they had once altered—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 46, 49, 56, 65).

The W. and L. Railway Company carried its railway over a bridge which spanned the public highway, the surface of which, underneath the bridge, the company lowered, so as to give the necessary head-room for the public traffic, and then put the road so lowered "into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances would allow." The lowered part of the road afterwards became out of repair, by reason of the public traffic. On complaint to the justices at petty sessions, they ordered the railway company to put the road into repair within fourteen days.

From this order the railway company appealed to the Court of Q. B., and (per O'Brien and Fitzgerald, J.J.), the decision of the justices was reversed (Hayes, J. dissenting).

This was a case stated by the justices of the county Limerick, for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench on the written requisition of the appellants, pursuant to the provisions of stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. This appeal was taken from the order of the justices in petty sessions, of which the chairman gave the following certificate:—"I certify that, upon hearing of a complaint that, notwithstanding notice to the said defendants from the said complainant (now respondent) that the roadways of the approaches to the bridges of the defendants' railway at Spittalland, Ballysimon, and Peafield, are severally out of repair, defendants have neglected to put the same into a complete or proper state of repair; an order was made on the 23rd Feb. 1860, by the justices present, against the said Waterford and Limerick Railway Company to the following effect, viz.: The majority of the magistrates find the company have neglected to put the roads in complete and proper repair; and the magistrates are of opinion that the roads complained of ought to be put into repair by the company within fourteen days. I (the chairman) object to this decision.—D. M. MAUNSELL, J.P."

The facts proved at the hearing of the complaint on which the above order was made, were shortly these:—The complaint was made under the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 46, 65 (the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845). It appeared from the evidence of the complainant, that the W. and L. Railway Company, in constructing their railway, had built bridges, which spanned over the public roads at the three several places mentioned in the above certificate, and, for the purpose of giving under those bridges sufficient height of passage, and the proper ascent and descent, had lowered or cut away a certain portion of each of the said roads to and under each of the said bridges, and that the surfaces of the portions of each road so lowered or cut away were, at the time of hearing such complaint, and for some time had been, out of repair. The complainant contended that the W. and L. Railway Company were under sect. 46 of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, bound, from time to time, to repair or metal the surface of such portions of said roads to said bridges as had been lowered or cut away by the company, according and as often as the surface was worn down or out of repair, from the public traffic passing over them, although all the said bridges, with the immediate approaches thereto, and all the works connected therewith, were then and always in proper repair; and that the part he complained of being out of repair was the surface of the road, which he termed the approaches to the bridges; and admitted that the railway company had lowered or cut away the said roads pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Parliament enabling them to do so; and that it was the public traffic on the roads which wore them down, and caused it to be necessary to repair said roads by metalling them; and that the road spanned by the said Spittal railway bridge was under the control of the trustees of the turnpike board until they ceased to exist, about a year and a half since, from which time it came under the control of the grand jury of the county Limerick, of which county complainant is one of the surveyors. From the evidence of Mr. H. Langley it appeared that the trustees of the turnpike board had repaired the road under Spittal bridge ever since it was first put into repair by the company, on completion of their works—a period of twelve years—and that the road has not been repaired at all since that board ceased to exist. The company then contended that they were not bound to metal the surface of the said roads leading under said bridges, after they had once put them in a proper state of repair, on the completion of their works connected with them; and that the authorities, at the time being, had taken up the roads, and that the regular public traffic passed over them, after which it was the duty of the grand jury to repair them and keep them in repair. Mr. J. C. Smith, engineer of the company, proved that the bridges, approaches thereto, and all necessary works connected therewith, were in good repair; and that, so far as he knew, Limerick was the only county through which railways ran and in which it was sought to make the companies repair the surface of the roads when worn down by public traffic. He admitted, however, that until about two years since the company had been in the habit of repairing or paying for the repairs of the surface of the roads at Ballysimon and Peafield. A majority of the justices held that, under sect. 46, the company were bound to repair or renew from time to time, for ever, the surfaces of as much of the roads as had been lowered by them. A minority of the justices held a different opinion. The points noted for argument were these two: First, that, as to each of the roads in question, same is not an approach or necessary work connected with the bridge by means of which the railway is carried over said road, within the meaning of the 46th section of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845; secondly, that the company having restored the roads in question, within the meaning of the 56th section, at the time of the formation of the railway, they are not now bound further to maintain or repair the same.

Walter Boyd (with him Fitzgibbon, Serjt.), for the appellants, contended that the decision of the justices ought to be reversed. The Railway Clauses Consolidation Act was passed for the purpose of lessening the expense attendant on the construction of railways, and not to relieve counties from any portion of their liabilities. Sect. 46 (a) is not capable of receiving the construction put on it by the justices. We contend that sect. 46 does not impose on the railway company the duty of maintaining in repair a public county road, whether that road passes over the bridge or under the bridge of the railway. If, however, the court shall incline to the construction given in England to this section, and hold that the railway company is liable to repair that part of a public county road which runs along the top of a bridge constructed by the company and spanning their railway, then we still contend that in no case can the company be forced to repair that part of a public road which lies vertically under the railway-bridge. It may be contended by the respondent that, as the company altered the highway by lowering it, they are bound to keep the altered part in repair, because water will collect in the hollow and render it more expensive to keep that portion of the surface of the road in a condition fit for traffic. The 56th section disposes of that argument. For the company have caused "the substituted road to be put into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow;" and having done so, the company is thenceforth exonerated from all liability in respect of that road. Such is plainly the construction of sect. 56, and if the respondent contends that the company in exercising its powers has done any damage, then his remedy is under sect. 16. The respondent, then, must rely on sect. 46, but this court cannot give to that section the construction for which he contends. Suppose that construction adopted, that argument proves too much; for the company must then keep in repair that part of the road which lies vertically under the bridge, even though it had never altered the surface of the road at all, and, although the foundation of the respondent's claim is that the company did alter the road. Moreover, sect. 46 contains no provision for keeping in repair the part of the road underneath the bridge. It provides for the repair of the immediate approaches to the bridge, and all other necessary works connected therewith. The company are bound to keep in repair the fabric of the bridge and the approaches to it, but the section does not enact that they shall also keep in repair the passages under the bridge. The company are bound also, if the embankments at either side of the bridge fall in upon the road, to remove the débris, and keep the road clear for the protection and convenience of the public. No larger construction can be given to the section, and it is quite impossible to hold that the term "approaches" comprehends the road under the bridge. The approaches to the bridge are the railway line, by which alone it is possible to get on the bridge. Sect. 46 has been the subject of two decisions in England, but the cases are not binding as authorities on this court, as no appeal from the decision is given by the statute, and the cases were decided in courts of concurrent jurisdiction: (The North Staffordshire Railway Company, Apprs., Thomas Dale and others, Resps., 8 Ell. & Bl. 836, and 27 L. J., N. S., 147, Mag. Cas.); Leech, App., North Staffordshire Railway Company, Resps., 332.) Those two cases may be distinguished from this case, because in them the highway was carried over the railway, and, therefore, the part which ran along the bridge and the immediate approaches thereto never had any existence before they were constructed by the railway company. These alterations are not of the species meant by the phrase necessary works connected with the bridge, for if that were so, the company should keep in repair that part of the surface of the road which lies underneath the bridge in every case, even though the company had never touched the surface at all. The reason upon which the decisions in England were founded is, that the road and the top of the bridge, and the approaches to it, all form part of one continuous whole, which is not the case here. We therefore submit that the 46th section does not apply to this case, and that the decision of the magistrates ought to be reversed.

(a) Sect. 46. If the line of the railway cross any turnpike-road or public highway, then (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) either such road shall be carried over the railway, or the railway shall be carried over such road, by means of a bridge of the height and width, and with the ascent or descent by this or the special Act in that behalf provided; and such bridge, with the immediate approaches and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained, at the expense of the company. Provided always, that with the consent of two or more justices in petty sessions, as after mentioned, it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway, other than a public carriage-road, on the level.

IRELAND] THE WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY v. THOMAS KEARNEY. [IRELAND.

James Murphy (with him E. Sullivan, Q.C.)—The 46th section clearly imposes on railway companies the liability to keep in repair every road altered by them in constructing their railways, so far as the alteration extends. That is the principle laid down in the English decisions, and it is consistent with justice; for when a road is lowered in one part, the alteration must be extended to a considerable distance on each side of the bridge so as to provide the inclines specified in the Act. These alterations create a greater length of surface to be kept in repair, and therefore render those repairs more expensive. If, then, the railway companies are exempt from liability to keep the altered portion in repair, an increased liability will be imposed on the county. The company would be bound to execute the necessary repairs, even although the alteration by lowering consisted in levelling a hill, and therefore made the curved surface shorter, which would actually relieve the county from some expense. The road has been sunk by the company for their own convenience. They have by that deepening of the road rendered the repairs more expensive, and they ought to bear the additional liability of which they have received the benefit. If the highway had passed over the railroad, as happened in the English cases, the question upon the construction of sect. 46 would be concluded by the authority of the cases which have been cited. But, in truth, ours is an à fortiori case, as the alterations have made it more difficult to keep the road in repair. A sunken cutting has to be made which extends to a considerable distance on each side of the bridge. That is a "necessary work connected therewith." Much argument has been employed to show that the altered portion cannot be comprehended within the words "immediate approaches." That argument might be valid if "thereto" was inserted immediately after "approaches;" but there is no specific word in sect. 46 to show that the approaches mentioned are the approaches to the bridge, and none other. On the contrary, the words are sufficiently general to comprehend also the approaches to the altered portion of the road. The manifest intention of the Legislature was that the companies should put into repair and maintain so for ever whatever works they executed for their own convenience. The meaning of sect. 46 is that a railway company which alters a road shall keep in repair the portion so altered. The decision of the magistrates ought, therefore, to be affirmed.

Fitzgibbon, Serjt. in reply.—The attempt made to compel the company to keep in repair the altered portions of the roads is very unjust; for the authorities—the trustees of the turnpike board—have always executed these repairs themselves for more than twelve years past, having accepted the road from the company after it had been put by them into a "permanently substantial condition" as provided by sect. 56. Now, the approaches mentioned in sect. 46 are those which enable the public to reach the bridge and pass over it. That was so in the English cases cited. The words "necessary works connected therewith" do not aid the respondent. Those words are satisfied by the construction for which we contend, and plainly comprehend the buttresses and fences and such like works. Therefore, sect. 46 refers only to the cases in which the highway is carried over the railroad. The sinking of a road is not a necessary work of the character contemplated by that section. This deepening of the road is a mere operation, but the meaning of necessary "work" is a structure. The 65th section, which enumerates the cases in which justices shall have jurisdiction to order railway companies to execute repairs, does not contain the word "road." Anything which did not pre-exist is a work executed by the company. But this road did exist before, and the magistrates' decision ought to be reversed on these grounds alone. But, further, see what inconveniences and injustice might result from affirming the decision of the justices. Admittedly, the road so altered is under the jurisdiction of the grand jury of the county—they alone have control over it. They may deal with every portion of it at their pleasure. And yet the magistrates' decision determines that the company are liable to repair a road over which they have no control or power, and although those very repairs may have been rendered necessary by acts of the grand jury which the company could not in any way prevent or control. This court cannot hold the company liable for the acts of a public body which is not responsible to them.

The court then heard the appeal taken by the Limerick and Ennis Railway Company from a like decision of the justices, and wherein the said Thomas Kearney was respondent.

E. P. Levinge (with him C. R. Barry, Q.C.) appeared for the appellants.

IRELAND.] THE WATERFORD AND LIMERICK RAILWAY COMPANY v. THOMAS KEARNEY. [IRELAND.]

James Murphy appeared for the respondent.

The arguments addressed to the court were the same as those urged in the former case.

FITZGERALD, J.—We are anxious, in order to convenience the parties, to decide these cases at once, instead of deferring our judgment until Michaelmas Term. Unfortunately there is a difference of opinion among the members of the court as to the judgment which we ought to deliver, and therefore the judgment which I am about to pronounce will be my own judgment only. Having now read the authorities and heard the arguments on both sides, I own that I would not have entertained a doubt upon the case except for the adverse opinion entertained by my brother Hayes. But having heard the arguments and given the best consideration I can to the case, I adhere to my own opinion that the decision of the magistrates was wrong, and ought to be reversed. As our judgment will determine this particular case only, and will leave the parties free to raise the same question in a new case if they are so disposed, I shall express the reasons of my opinion very shortly. On looking at sect. 46 (as it relates to a particular case), I think it cannot be contended that a highway running under a railway-bridge is an approach to that bridge within the meaning of sect. 46. We still, however, must deal with the words which occur further on in that section, “and all other necessary works connected therewith.” But, even supposing the surface of the road to have been deepened or altered in its character, yet such alterations are not, in my opinion, comprehended within the words used in the statute as “other necessary works connected therewith.” This Act contains two classes of sections which deal with this subject. From the 46th to the 52nd sections inclusive, the Act provides for the crossing of roads by bridges, and from the 53rd to the 58th sections inclusive the statute deals with the interference with roads themselves. Now, I think that this case does not come under any section of the first class, but is included within those of the latter class, which provide for the substitution of new roads or for the alteration of old roads. My opinion is, that the present case falls under sect. 56, and that the company has provided a substituted road “equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow,” and that the company having once put the substituted road into a permanently substantial condition, lie under no further responsibility in respect thereof. On coming to any other conclusion great inconveniences would result. So far as the authorities in England are applicable to this case, they are rather in favour of this construction. The judges in those cases foresaw the serious inconveniences that would result from holding the railway company liable to repair in perpetuity the road so substituted. If the company in this case is bound to repair the road running under their bridge, at what point on the road is their liability to commence? Is it at the point at which the declination of the road begins? That point may be distant one mile or two miles from the bridge, and is it to be said that the company are bound in perpetuity to keep this extent of road on both sides of the bridge in repair although the alteration made by them may have much improved the road? Furthermore, this inconvenience would result, and is pointed out in the cases in England: supposing that this liability of the company exists, the county surveyor and the grand jury will still retain control over that part of the road, and may alter its character at their pleasure, and then a serious conflict of authority attended with grave public inconvenience would arise. If this perpetual liability exists, then in case the justices direct the county surveyor to alter the road from a metalled surface to a paved or asphalted surface, such alteration would not relieve the company from the liability to keep in repair, although the alteration imposed on them additional expense. As a doubt arises on the construction of the 46th section, the case is a proper one in which to give weight to the argument ab inconvenienti, and I think that great public inconvenience would result from our holding that the company are liable. The words “other necessary works connected therewith” may be satisfied without resorting to the construction adopted by the magistrates, for the words may mean embankments, fences, parapets, or such like works which are required to protect the public. This meaning will satisfy the words without resorting to the larger construction for which the respondent contends. I am, therefore, of opinion that the railway company are not liable, and, consequently, that the decision of the magistrates ought to be reversed.

HAYES, J.—I am very sorry to differ from the opinion which my learned brethren have formed; but giving my best consideration to the case and to the Act, I think that the decision of the magistrates should be affirmed; for, giving to the words in sect. 46 a plain, ordinary and reasonable construction, I think that this substituted road is a “necessary work connected therewith,” and that the company has thus incurred a liability, from which they cannot easily rid themselves. I think that the cases in England are equally applicable to the case of a road which passes underneath the railway-bridge. See what an extraordinary state of things will obtain if our judgment conflicts with those pronounced in the cases which have been cited, and railway companies be held liable to keep in repair roads which pass over their railway by means of a bridge, while they are exempt from such liability whenever the railway passes over the highway. For, if railway companies act wisely there will be an end of the custom of carrying the high road across the railway. If a railway company is to be liable whenever their railway passes under a road and exempt from liability when the road passes under the railway, they will go over the road in every instance, because, having once for all put the road in repair, they will be no longer responsible. Apart, however, from this consideration, and remembering that we should give to the Act the same construction as it has received in England, it does appear to me that this is one of the “other necessary works connected therewith” which are mentioned in the 46th section, and are to be performed by the company. Therefore, upon these plain principles, and upon the authority of the cases cited, my judgment is, that the decision of the magistrates be affirmed.

O'BRIEN, J.—I agree in the judgment pronounced by my brother Fitzgerald, that this appeal should be allowed; and, apart from the strong opinion expressed by my brother Hayes, I would not have felt any doubt upon the subject. The sole question upon which we have to decide is—whether this case comes within the 46th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20? Considering what that section provides for, and also the provisions of the latter sections, this case plainly does not come under sect. 46 but under the later sections. The alteration of a road by raising or lowering its surface comes within sects. 56 and the two or three preceding sections, and the only obligation thereby imposed on the companies is this, they shall put the substituted road “into a permanently substantial condition, equally convenient as the former road, or as near thereto as circumstances will allow,” and then when they have once obeyed the directions of that section, their obligation ceases, and they are not bound to keep the road in repair. It is said, however, that this alteration should be considered a “necessary work connected therewith” under sect. 46. Now, as to the argument that when a public road runs under a railway bridge there the company should be liable to keep the road in repair, I inquired during the argument under what section those repairs could be enforced if there was no alteration by raising or lowering the road? I was answered that there is no such power to make the company liable in that case. And yet here it is sought, where the company crossed the road by a bridge, because it is necessary where the bridge is built in a different manner because this road runs under the bridge; therefore, we are to hold it necessary for the company to keep it in repair under sect. 46. I consider that that argument is unfounded. In sect. 46 the phrase "necessary works connected therewith," means works necessary to the bridge in its character as a bridge, and which the public would have a right to; or, in the words of Lord Campbell (Dale v. North Staffordshire Railway Company), "The work must be complete so as to be fit for the passage of carriages;" and Wightman J., says that under sect. 46 are comprised "all works necessary to make the work fit to be passed over." But where the public are not concerned with the bridge itself, I do not think that a bare alteration of the road by deepening it or by raising it is a work necessarily connected with the bridge. Necessary works are buttresses and such like. With respect to the pernicious consequences which it has been argued will flow from reversing the magistrates' decision, it must be remembered that no company can get their Act without first lodging in the proper office plans and specifications to which every person can have access, and if the company, to save themselves expense, propose to construct their railway in a manner prejudicial to the public by passing over a road when they ought to go underneath it, the Legislature will take good care of the public interests, and prevent such plans being executed. On these grounds, I think that this case is not only not affected by the English authorities, but that the grounds of those decisions are widely different. I am therefore of opinion that the decision of the magistrates must be reversed.

REG. at the prosecution of ROBERT HUNTER v. THE MAYOR OF THE BOROUGH OF SLIGO.

Burgess—Premises—Description of.

The premises out of which A. claimed to be qualified to be enrolled as a burgess on the burgess-roll of the borough of S. were described in the rating books of the poor-law union of S. as "a store and coal yard."

Held, that this was a sufficient description within the 30th section of the Municipal Corporation Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 108.

Nov. 21, 1859.—Hemphill, Q.C., obtained a conditional order "that a mandamus should issue directed to John M'Carthy, the mayor of the borough of Sligo, commanding him as such mayor to insert the name of Robert Hunter, as a burgess, on the burgess-roll of the western ward of the borough of Sligo, on the ground that he, the said Robert Hunter, is duly qualified to be a burgess of the said western ward; and that, possessing the qualification, and having complied with the requirements of the statute in that behalf, by reason whereof his name had been inserted in the town clerk's list of the burgesses of the said western ward, he should have been retained and enrolled on the said burgess-roll, at the revision court held on the 7th and 8th days of November, inst.," unless cause shown.

It appeared that the name of Robert Hunter had been inserted on the burgess-roll of the western ward of the borough of Sligo in the year 1858, and that in the notice of claim made by him in that year the premises out of which he claimed to be qualified were described as "a store and yard in Wine-street;" that on the 1st Sept. 1859 he claimed to be enrolled as a burgess for the said ward, in respect of the same premises; but that inasmuch as the premises were, by a recent description in the rating book of the poor-law union of Sligo, described as "a store and coal yard," the said John M'Carthy, acting as mayor, in conjunction with his assessors, expunged the name of the said Robert Hunter from the burgess-list on the ground that the said premises were not described as comprising a house, warehouse, counting-house, or shop, occupied either separately or jointly with land, as required by the 30th section of the Municipal Corporation Act, 3 & 4 Vict. 108.

Sir Colman O'Loghlen (with him John Harkin) showed cause.—This motion comes before the court under the 49th section of the Municipal Corporation Act. The words of the 30th section are, that every man of full age, who shall occupy within a borough "any house, warehouse, counting-house, or shop, which either separately or jointly with any land within such borough," occupied therewith by him as such tenant, shall be of the yearly value of not less than 10*l.*, such person shall be entitled to be enrolled as a burgess of such borough and to vote, &c. The words "house, warehouse, counting-house, or shop," are identical with the words used in the English Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 9; and the construction put upon the section in England is, that the description must include some of those words. [HAYES, J.—May not store mean warehouse?] No doubt it may; but what we submit to the court is, that the description must follow the words of the Act. Again, there is here a supplementary qualification, namely, a coal yard; and the Act is express, that the supplementary qualification must be "land." [FITZGERALD, J.—Was there any evidence as to the nature of the premises?] No: it is not to the nature of the premises we object, but to the description.

Macdonagh, Q.C. (with him Hemphill, Q.C.)—The objection here is to the description of the premises, and not to their nature; and what we contend for is, that the premises out of which the prosecutor claims to qualify, are of such a nature as the Act contemplates. The word store is a manifest synonyme for shop. In America store means a shop. In Todd's Johnson's Dictionary, the meaning given to the word store is "a storehouse or magazine;" and in France, magazine is the word used to express a shop. The real question here is, whether the prosecutor is in occupation of premises contemplated by the Act. It is hard that he should suffer on account of the misdescription of the premises by the poor-law valuator. With regard to the supplementary qualification, counsel cited Robert Sweetman's case, Alcock's Registry Cases, 27. [O'BRIEN, J.—It is clear that Crampton, J., in that case was of opinion that the supplementary qualification need not be described as land; that it was sufficient if it was in the nature of land. He says, "When the Legislature has used, in the same sentence, the words house, counting-house, &c., as contradistinguished from land held therewith, they must be understood to have meant such land, &c., so used as land is generally used when held conjointly with a house in a town or city—namely, as a garden, field, curtilage, yard, or other appurtenance to the principal with which it is conjoined."]

Harkin, J. in reply. Cause shown disallowed.

EDMONDS v. PLEWS.

Injunction—Bond by solicitor not to practise.
Defendant, an admitted solicitor, having accepted the situation of clerk to the plaintiff, a solicitor practising at N., entered into a bond with the plaintiff which recited that the defendant had been recently appointed agent to a Mr. O., and was conditioned to be void if the defendant should abstain from practising as a solicitor in N., or within thirty miles from thence, without the consent of the plaintiff; and should not act as Mr. O.'s legal adviser, except as the plaintiff's clerk; and should not accept or undertake any other agency or appointment (except such as he then held) without the plaintiff's consent; and in case the engagement should be put an end to or determined, should not continue to act as agent for Mr. O.

Shortly afterwards the defendant was a candidate for the office of clerk to the board of guardians; whereupon the plaintiff gave him three months' notice of putting an end to his engagement. After the expiration of the three months, defendant resigned his appointment as agent to Mr. O., but afterwards resumed the same. Defendant also obtained the situation and was performing the duties of clerk to the board of guardians, and (since the filing of the bill) obtained the situation of clerk to the Commissioners of Land Tax:

Perpetual injunction granted to restrain the defendant from acting as agent to Mr. O., or as clerk to the magistrates, or from otherwise violating the stipulations of the bond.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff Edmund Edmonds, of Newent, in the county of Gloucester, gentleman, for an injunction to restrain the defendant John Plevs from acting within the said town of Newent, or thirty miles from thence, as agent to Richard Foley Onslow, of Oxenhall, near Newent, Esq., or as clerk to the magistrates of the division of Newent, without the consent in writing of the plaintiff first had and obtained for that purpose, and from otherwise violating the stipulations of a bond dated the 15th Jan. 1859.

It appeared from the bill that the plaintiff Mr. Edmonds, who is a solicitor practising at Newent, in the year 1857 advertised for a clerk, and the advertisement was answered by the defendant Mr. Plevs, who was then an admitted solicitor practising in partnership with a Mr. Fisher, at Masham, in Yorkshire. Mr. Plevs finally accepted the situation, and entered upon its duties in the following month of September. In the course of the correspondence it was agreed that the defendant should execute a bond to the plaintiff binding himself not to practise without the plaintiff's consent, and a draft of such bond was prepared by the defendant, altered by the plaintiff, and as altered approved by both parties; but owing to some inadvertence it was not executed.

The bill stated that, in Dec. 1858, Mr. Onslow was desirous of engaging an agent to look after his estates and collect the rents, and manage the affairs thereof, and Mr. Plevs, being still a clerk in Mr. Edmonds' office, proposed to take that situation, and also applied to the plaintiff for his consent thereto. The plaintiff being ready to promote the wishes of the defendant, so far as the same were not inconsistent with his duties as clerk to the plaintiff, consented, after some consideration, to the proposed arrangement, but he required and insisted that the bond which had been previously agreed to should now be executed. The bond was accordingly altered to meet the circumstances, and was executed by the defendant on the 15th Jan. 1859.

The bond was in the sum of 2000*l.*, and contained the following clause:—"Whereas it was lately agreed by and between the said John Plevs and Edmund Edmonds, that the said John Plevs should become and he has already entered upon the duties of managing clerk to the said Edmund Edmonds, at such salary (the same not being less than after the rate of 120*l.* per annum) as should from time to time be agreed upon, for the term of one year, to be computed from the 29th Dec. last, and so on from year to year, until either the said John Plevs or the said Edmund Edmonds should put an end to the said agreement, by giving to the other of them three calendar months' notice in writing of his intention of putting an end thereto. And whereas the said John Plevs hath, with the consent of the said Edmund Edmonds, been appointed agent to and for Richard Foley Onslow, of, &c., the same agency not comprehending or extending to the giving of any legal advice, or the transaction of any legal business whatsoever, and upon the stipulation for such appointment it was agreed by and between the said John Plevs and Edmund Edmonds, that the said appointment should not take precedence of his duties as such managing clerk as aforesaid; and should the said engagement of managing clerk be put an end to and determined as hereinbefore mentioned, that then and in such case, and at the expiration of such notice as aforesaid, the said John Plevs should resign the said appointment as agent to the said R. F. Onslow, and cease to hold the same, unless the said Edmund Edmonds agree in writing to the said John Plevs continuing to hold the same. And whereas it was further stipulated and agreed upon, by and between the said John Plevs and Edmund Edmonds, that the said John Plevs should enter into and give to the said Edmund Edmonds a bond, conditioned that he the said John Plevs would not at any time or times hereafter, directly or indirectly, practise as an attorney, solicitor, or conveyancer on his own account, or in partnership with any other person or persons, or act as agent for any attorney, solicitor, or otherwise, or accept or undertake any other agency or appointment of any nature or kind soever, except such as he now holds, during the continuance of his re-engagement as such managing clerk as aforesaid, within the town of Newent aforesaid, or within the distance of thirty miles from thence, without the leave, licence and consent in writing of the said Edmund Edmonds, or hold the said appointment of agent to the said Richard Foley Onslow, after his said engagement with the said Edmund Edmonds shall be put an end to or determined by notice as hereinbefore mentioned. Now therefore the condition of the above-written obligation is such, that if the above bounden John Plevs shall and do at all times hereafter abstain from directly or indirectly practising as an attorney, solicitor, or conveyancer on his own account or in partnership with any other person or persons, or as agent for any attorney, solicitor, or otherwise within the town of Newent aforesaid, or within the distance of thirty miles from thence, without the leave, licence, or consent in writing of the said Edmund Edmonds, his executors, administrators, or assigns, in that behalf first had and obtained; and if the said John Plevs shall never act within the town of Newent as aforesaid, or the distance of thirty miles from thence as the legal adviser of the said Richard Foley Onslow, either in the way of giving or offering professional advice (except as managing clerk to the said Edmund Edmonds); and if the said John Plevs shall not at any time or times hereafter, during the continuance of his said engagement as such managing clerk to the said Edmund Edmonds as aforesaid, accept or undertake any other agency or appointment of any nature or kind whatsoever (except such as he now holds) without the leave, licence and consent in writing of the said Edmund Edmonds for that purpose first had and obtained, and in case the same engagement shall at any time be put an end to or determined by notice as hereinbefore mentioned, if he the said John Plevs shall not thereafter continue to hold, accept, or undertake any agency or appointment of agent to the said Richard Foley Onslow, or any other person whatever, within the town of Newent aforesaid, or within the distance of thirty miles from thence, without such leave in writing as hereinbefore mentioned, then the above-written obligation shall be void, but otherwise shall be and remain in full force and virtue."

Upon this bond being executed, and with the consent of the plaintiff, the agency of Mr. Onslow was accepted by Mr. Plews.

The bill then alleged that the defendant, having obtained leave to hold this situation simultaneously with and without prejudice to his position as clerk to the plaintiff, had taken advantage of the opportunities which such situation afforded him to extend his own connection as a solicitor and agent, independently of and in opposition to the interest of the plaintiff, and the terms and stipulations of the bond.

On the 23rd June 1859 the clerkship of the Newent Union fell vacant, and the plaintiff Mr. Edmonds became a candidate for that office. The defendant, however, was proposed by Mr. Onslow, who was chairman of the board of guardians, so that Mr. Edmonds found his own clerk in rivalry with him as candidate for this office. The plaintiff and Mr. Onslow had, up to this time, been on friendly terms with each other, and the plaintiff warmly expostulated with him on the subject of this proceeding; and in consequence of his remonstrance the proceeding was dropped. Mr. Edmonds thereupon, finding it impossible to retain Mr. Plews as his clerk, wrote to him a letter dated 27th July 1859, giving him a three months' notice, under the bond for putting an end to his engagement with the plaintiff. The defendant accepted the notice, and expressed his readiness to leave at once. The plaintiff replied that he was quite willing; but that the defendant's engagement with Mr. Onslow must at the same time terminate. The defendant thereupon said he would see Mr. Onslow on the subject. A correspondence followed between Mr. Onslow and the plaintiff, and the result was that, in consequence of the determination expressed by the plaintiff to enforce the bond, the defendant relinquished the idea of leaving the plaintiff's service at once.

On the 3rd Oct. 1859, the plaintiff, who had for many years held the appointment of clerk to the magistrates for the division, received a notice of dismissal. No reasons were assigned for this step.

A correspondence then ensued between Mr. Fisher, the former partner of Mr. Plews, and the plaintiff, in the course of which Mr. Fisher informed the plaintiff that the defendant was advised he could accept and hold certain appointments without violation of the bond, namely, the clerkship to the magistrates for the division of Newent, which had been that day offered him, and the continuance as agent to Mr. Onslow. The plaintiff said he should not give his consent to the defendant's holding these appointments.

The bill alleged that from and after the 27th Oct. 1859, the defendant ceased to attend at the plaintiff's office, and his engagement terminated, and the defendant thereupon resigned his appointment as agent to Mr. Onslow. Subsequently, however, in violation of the stipulations contained in the bond, the defendant resumed his appointment as agent for Mr. Onslow, and also succeeded in obtaining the appointment of clerk to the magistrates, and he was now carrying on and performing the duties of both these situations in the town of Newent; and prayed for an injunction in the terms above mentioned.

Mr. Plews, by his answer, admitted that he did resign, and that he had resumed and was now carrying on his occupation of steward to Mr. Onslow; that he was acting as clerk to the magistrates; and further, that he had since obtained another appointment, usually held by a solicitor, viz., clerk to the commissioners of land-tax. He further said that Mr. Onslow had formerly employed as his agent the late Mr. Cannon, a solicitor, who died in June 1858. At that time the defendant was appointed Mr. Onslow's agent. Defendant was informed and believed that the plaintiff—who had frequently adverted to and complained of Mr. Cannon's appointment to him—on the occasion of Mr. Cannon's death applied to Mr. Onslow for the agency, and Mr. Onslow refused to appoint him. Defendant said the plaintiff told him (the defendant) that as he, the plaintiff, could not obtain the agency himself, he had no objection to the defendant's accepting it; but that he would take time to consider the terms upon which he would allow defendant to accept it.

Malins, Q. C. and B. B. Rogers supported the motion.

Bacon, Q. C. and Faber appeared for the defendant.—They said, that although the defendant had entered into the contract, he did so upon the express understanding of the plaintiff that no unfair use should be made of it. There was no affidavit filed in support of the plaintiff's case. [Malins.—I have read his own admission from the answer of the three facts. He admits them.]

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—Is it not better to treat this as a motion for decree? Would it not be better that the motion should be either refused or granted on this application, if there is no other question in the cause?

Bacon.—The only reason why I do not accede to that instantly is, that I am persuaded, if the matter stood over until November, it might be arranged.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I have been looking through your answer, and there seems to me to be a confession of the whole case; and an undertaking and injunction will be the same thing. I really do not see what can be done for this gentleman. He may say he expected that the instrument would not be enforced, or some other use made of it; but there seems as flagrant a violation of it as there could possibly be. I should regret if there is any exasperation of feeling in the matter, the case being very clear. I think you cannot show any reason why there should not be an order for an injunction. It is only an interim injunction. You can move to dissolve it or come to any terms that may be desirable. Your undertaking would be no more than an injunction.

After some further discussion, it was arranged that the defendant consenting to allow the motion to be treated as a motion for decree, a perpetual injunction should be granted; but that the injunction should not come into operation for one month from the date of the order; and, by consent of the plaintiff, no costs. Liberty to apply.

HODGSON AND OTHERS v. HOOPER AND OTHERS.

Real property—Statute of Limitations—3 & 4

Will 4, c. 27, ss. 2, 7, 8, 15, 34.

In 1781, the lady of a manor, with the consent of the tenants, granted to certain persons licence to inclose certain waste land, that they and their heirs, and all persons claiming under them, should and might lawfully hold the same so inclosed in trust, for the purpose of erecting and building a workhouse for the poor of the parish of Mitcham, and for a garden, &c., rendering to the lady and all other lords or ladies the yearly rent of 5s. for the same in every year for ever. Two of the grantees were the churchwardens and overseers of the parish; they entered into possession of the land, and a workhouse was duly erected thereon, which was used as such until 1838. Previously to 1817, all the grantees had died; and in 1835, proclamations having been made, and the heir of the surviving grantee not coming in to be admitted, the vestry of the parish in order to save the forfeiture of the land, nominated seven persons, who were duly admitted on payment of a fine, to hold to them, and the survivor and survivors, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor of the lord of the manor, by the rod, and by copy of court-roll, at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, upon the same trust, and subject to the same rent as contained in the grant of 1781, and certain heriots and fines therein specifically named. In 1840, a resolution of the vestry was passed for surrendering the piece of ground and the workhouse to the lord of the manor, and in pursuance thereof the then trustees and the churchwardens and overseers surrendered the same by the rod to the lord, who thereupon entered into and took possession of the same. The yearly rent of 5s. was paid from 1781 to 1791, and from 1825 to 1836.

In 1859 the then overseers and churchwardens of the parish brought an action to recover the premises from the then lord of the manor :

Held, that there was no adverse holding by the overseers and churchwardens in 1833, when the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, passed, and that the lord had five years from that time during which he might have entered and resumed possession; that before the expiration of that time a fresh tenancy at will was created, which was put an end to in 1840; that there was no creation of a freehold, but that the plaintiffs were tenants at will, or at most tenants from year to year, and were not entitled to the possession of the premises at the time they brought the action.

This was an action brought (16th Feb. 1859) by the plaintiffs, the churchwardens and overseers of Mitcham, Surrey, against the defendants, for the recovery of a piece of land, containing four acres and ten perches or thereabouts, in the said parish, on the north side of Mitcham-common, together with the messuage or tenement and the out-offices and buildings thereon lately erected as a workhouse for the poor of the said parish of Mitcham, and for a garden or orchard for the further accommodation of the said poor, and such other buildings as are now standing thereon, and which premises are now used as an india-rubber manufactory, with the appurtenances.

Case stated by consent.

There are, either appendant to, or forming part of or included in, the manor of Biggin and Tamworth, in the county of Surrey, large commons or commonable waste lands, of which the premises sought to be recovered, prior to 1781, formed part.

On the 21st Aug. 1781 the lady of the manor of Biggin and Tamworth, by the consent in writing of eighteen persons, tenants of the manor, "granted unto Foster Reynolds, John Swain, John Chesterman, Joseph Sibley and James Galpin, licence to inclose a piece of land, parcel of the common or waste belonging to the said manor, called Mitcham-common, containing three acres and two roods (being part of the land sought to be recovered), as the same were then staked out, and that they and their heirs, and all persons claiming under them, should and might lawfully hold the same so inclosed, in trust, for the purpose of erecting and building a workhouse for the poor of the said parish of Mitcham, and for a garden and orchard for the further accommodation and benefit of the said poor, rendering to the lady of the said manor, and all other lords or ladies, lord or lady of the said manor, the yearly rent of five shillings for the same in every year for ever." The consent and grant are entered on the court-rolls of the manor, but the grant was not according to any custom of the manor, and there never was any custom of the manor for the lord or lady of the manor to grant alien, or convey any part of the common or waste lands of or belonging to the manor in the manner in which the waste land comprised in the grant of the 21st Aug. 1781 was or purported to be granted or conveyed.

John Chesterman and Joseph Sibley were the then churchwardens and overseers of the parish.

The churchwardens and overseers of the parish from 1781 entered into possession of the land and premises, and a poorhouse or workhouse was duly erected at the expense of the parish upon the piece of land, and the workhouse and land was thenceforth used and possession thereof had by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, for the accommodation and benefit of the poor thereof, until 1838.

Up to and including the year 1836 the workhouse was used by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Mitcham. Subsequently to the year 1836, and by virtue of the Poor Law Acts, the parish of Mitcham was included, with other parishes, in the Croydon Union, and the workhouse was from time to time used by the guardians of the Croydon Union constituted under the said Acts, for the reception of the poor of the parish of Mitcham, until Midsummer 1838. The guardians of the poor of the said union paid to the churchwardens and overseers of Mitcham the annual rent of 105l. in respect of such workhouse up to Midsummer 1838, and up to that time the churchwardens and overseers kept the workhouse in repair and disposed of the fruit or produce of the garden and orchard, and annually accounted to the vestry of the parish in respect of the rent and produce. In the year 1838 the use of the workhouse as a workhouse was abandoned, but the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish retained possession of the land and premises, sold the produce of the land, and accounted for the sums realized by such sale in their accounts as such churchwardens and overseers until Feb. 1840.

In the year 1817 the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish took possession of 2 roods 10 perches of land, parcel of the said Mitcham-common (the remaining part of the land sought to be recovered), and inclosed the same, and held possession of and used and enjoyed the same, with the residue, for the benefit of the poor, until 1838, and from thence till Feb. 1840 they sold the produce thereof, and applied the proceeds in manner mentioned with respect to the residue of the land.

Previously to the 6th Aug. 1817 all the persons originally nominated trustees of the said piece of ground and premises, containing three acres and two roods, had died, and it appears on the rolls of the manor that the homage presented to a court baron, holden on the 21st May 1834, the deaths of the said trustees, and it was not known who was the survivor or the heir of the survivor, and there is also an entry on the court-rolls, and the fact is that thereupon three several proclamations were made, according to the custom of the manor, for the heir of the surviving trustee, or any other person claiming title to the said premises, to come in and be admitted, and that the last of such proclamations was made on the 27th Oct. 1835, and that default having been made, the bailiff of the manor was ordered to seize the land as forfeited to the lord. Such proclamations and default were duly enrolled.

On the 10th Oct. 1835 the steward of the manor wrote and sent the following letter to the churchwardens of Mitcham :—

"6, Harper-street, Red Lion-square,
"10th Oct. 1835.

"Gentlemen,—I beg to inform you that a general court baron for the manor of Biggin and Tamworth will be held at the Swan Inn, Mitcham, on Tuesday, the 27th instant, at twelve o'clock at noon, and as all the gentlemen who were admitted tenants of the manor for the land upon which the workhouse is erected are dead, it is necessary that the parish should

"To the churchwardens, Mitcham, Surrey."

In the parish books of Mitcham there is an entry dated 22nd Oct. 1835, to the following effect:—"At a vestry held this day, pursuant to public notice given in the church on Sunday last, for taking into consideration a notice received by the churchwardens from the steward of the manor of Biggin and Tamworth, to nominate tenants for the land on which the workhouse is erected in the stead of those who are deceased, and other business: Resolved, that the following eight gentlemen being nominated, be requested to take upon themselves the execution of the trust, with the understanding that the expenses consequent thereon should be paid by the overseers of the poor of this parish."

The overseers of the parish paid to the then lord of the manor, or his steward, the sum of 79*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* as and by way of fine in respect of the admission of seven of the above named eight persons (the vicar not being admitted), and there is on the rolls of the manor an entry that at a special court baron, holden on the 27th Oct. 1835, after reciting the grant of the 21st Oct. 1781, and that the said Foster Reynolds and the four other persons inclosed the piece of land whereon the churchwardens and overseers erected the workhouse, and converted the remainder into a garden and orchard as aforesaid, and after reciting the proclamations and forfeiture, and that the lord had remitted the escheats and forfeiture, the lord granted to the said seven persons the said piece of land and premises, to hold unto them and the survivor or survivors of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivors of the lord of the manor, by the rod and by copy of court-roll, at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, in trust for the inhabitants of the parish of Mitcham, and to be surrendered and disposed of as they should from time to time, in public vestry assembled, or otherwise, legally direct or appoint, so as the aforesaid customary hereditaments and premises should be for ever thereafter used as a workhouse for the poor of the parish of Mitcham, and for no other purpose, yielding and paying the rent of 5*s.* a-year, and a heriot on the death of every tenant of 2*l.* 2*s.*, and a fine at will on the death or alienation of a tenant, and doing fealty, suit of court, and performing such other services as the customary tenants of the manor do or ought to perform. And such seven persons were then admitted tenants in manner and form aforesaid, and the fine for their admission was set at 79*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, and their fealty was respited.

It appears from the accounts of a deceased steward of the manor, that the yearly rent of 5*s.* reserved by the grant of the 21st Aug. 1781 was paid to the lord from 1781 to 1791, and from the books of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish that it was paid to the lord from the year 1825 to the 25th March 1836.

The guardians of the poor of the Croydon Union, on the 8th May 1838, sent to the churchwardens and overseers of Mitcham a notice in writing under their common seal of their intention to deliver up to them on the 24th June next possession of the workhouse and gardens, land and appurtenances thereto belonging, which they then held of them. The workhouse was at the same time abandoned by the guardians, and possession thereof was delivered up to the churchwardens and overseers of Mitcham.

At a meeting of the vestry of the parish of Mitcham, held on the 23rd Jan. 1840, a resolution was passed for surrendering the said piece of ground and the workhouse and premises which had been erected thereon by the parish, into the hands of the then lord of the manor, which resolution was to the following tenor and effect:—"At a vestry assembled under public notice, given as the law requires for that purpose, to take into consideration the expediency of surrendering and disposing of the premises on Mitcham-common, lately used as and for the workhouse of this parish, and to give directions to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and the trustees and all other persons in whom such premises are now vested, to surrender and dispose of the same accordingly, Edward Walmsley, Esq., churchwarden, in the chair, present Messrs. James Bridger, churchwarden (who is now lord of the manor, and one of the now defendants), John Glover and John Searle, overseers, John Holden and Charles Aspery, guardians, and nineteen other vestrymen: Whereas, it appearing to this vestry that the guardians of the Croydon Union have ever since Midsummer 1838 formally abandoned and delivered up possession to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of this parish, the premises on Mitcham-common, which had been for many years and up to that period used as a workhouse for the poor of this parish, and that such premises are now no longer used or required as such workhouse, and it appearing also to this vestry that the parish has ever since sustained a considerable annual expense by keeping a proper person to protect the premises, and it further appearing to this vestry that the purpose and object for which the premises were granted to certain trustees for the benefit of the parish by the lord of the manor, of whom such premises are holden, have now ceased, and that such trustees are liable to pay to the lord of the manor a yearly quit-rent, and to keep the premises in repair; it is unanimously resolved and agreed that it is expedient and for the benefit of this parish that the hereditaments and premises heretofore used as a workhouse for the poor of this parish be surrendered to the lord of the manor of whom the same are holden by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor, and by the trustees of the same, and by all such other persons as may be considered necessary to effect a legal surrender of the said premises. And this vestry do hereby accordingly authorise and empower, direct and appoint the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of this parish, the five persons (naming them) to whom the premises were granted in trust for the inhabitants of this parish, and to be surrendered and disposed of as they should from time to time in public vestry assembled, or otherwise legally direct and appoint, so as the said premises should be for ever after used for a workhouse for the poor of this parish, and for no other purpose, to surrender the same premises into the hands of the lord of the manor in such way as may be considered necessary in order to relieve this parish and the trustees from all further expense and liability."

A copy of this resolution was forwarded to James Moore, Esq., the then lord of the manor, with a letter expressing the readiness of the parish officers to execute it.

It appears by an entry on the court-roll, that in pursuance of the resolution, the then trustees of the piece of land, workhouse and premises, and the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, surrendered the same into the hands of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, and by a surrender note under seal, taken out of court by the steward of the manor on the 16th Feb. 1840, and signed by the trustees, therein described as customary tenants of the manor, and by the overseers and churchwardens of the parish, described as such, those parties, in pursuance of the direction of the vestry meeting of the inhabitants of the parish of Mitcham, contained in the above resolution, surrendered by the rod into the hands of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, the said piece or parcel of customary land, containing 3a. 2r., together with the messuage or premises, for many years, and until then lately used as a workhouse, &c., to which said customary hereditaments the said trustees were admitted tenants at the said special court baron holden on the 27th Oct. 1835, to the intent that the lord might do therewith his will.

The poor-law board for the time being were no parties to the surrenders, or either of them. According to the course of business of the poor-law board, if any application for their consent to or with respect to such surrenders had been made to them, such application, and the consent thereto, if any, would have been entered on the register for the time being of their correspondence, which register is now in existence. On searching such register it is found that no such application or consent is contained therein, nor is there any trace among the documents of the poor-law board of such application having been made or consent given.

Immediately after the aforesaid surrender of the 3a. 2r. had been made, and on the same 18th Feb. 1840, one churchwarden and one overseer of the poor of the parish accompanied the bailiff of the manor on the said 2r. 10p., and delivered the possession thereof to the bailiff. One churchwarden and one overseer were appointed and delegated by the two churchwardens and three overseers of the poor of the said parish to deliver up possession as aforesaid as their joint act, and on their behalf, and such possession was so delivered up accordingly.

James Moore, as the landlord of the said manor, thereupon entered into and took possession of all the lands and premises containing 4a. 0r. 10p. James Moore was, and continued to be, from the year 1803 up to the time of his death (which happened in the month of Feb. 1851), the lord of the manor, and the defendant James Bridger became the lord of the manor in 1857.

The defendants claim all and every the said lands through the said James Moore.

The licence of the 21st Aug. 1781, and the grant of the 27th Oct. 1835, were neither of them executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, or enrolled in the High Court of Chancery within six calendar months next after the execution thereof, and the licence was not made for a full and valuable consideration, actually paid at or before the making of such licence. The said 2 roods 10 perches of waste land was not, nor has any part thereof, assured by deed executed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, and enrolled in the High Court of Chancery.

The questions for the opinion of the court, were first—whether, at the time of the surrender in Feb. 1840, the churchwardens and overseers of Mitcham had any, and what, estate or interest in the premises, or any part thereof? secondly—whether at the commencement of this action, the churchwardens and overseers were entitled to the possession of the land and premises, or any part thereof, on behalf of the parish? If the answer to the two questions were in the affirmative, in respect of any part thereof, then judgment was to be entered for the plaintiffs for so much. If in the negative, then judgment was to be entered for the defendants.

The court was to be at liberty to draw such inferences from the facts stated as a jury might have drawn.

Lush, Q.C., T. H. Terrell (Chancery bar) and Holl for the plaintiffs.—At the time of the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, there had been an adverse possession for twenty years, and a freehold was acquired which has never been divested: (1 Coke, 142 b.) It was the intention of the parties, not that the grant should be a copyhold grant, but a grant in fee-simple for ever, subject to a nominal rent, and it was the intention that beyond that rent the lord should have no interest. The twenty years' adverse possession gave a title; the rent was not paid as a rent service, but as a rent seck, and not as any acknowledgment of a tenure. A title was gained at the passing of the Act, subject to be divested if an action was brought within five years of that time; that not having been done, nothing has occurred which can divest the plaintiffs: (Litt. ss. 215-217; Nepean v. Doe, 1 Smith's L. C. 535, 4th Edit.; Reading v. Royston, 2 Salk. 423; Co. Litt. 277; Taylor v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60; 1 Wms. Saund. 319, note k; Doe d. Dayman v. Moore, 9 Q. B. 555, were also referred to.)

Boril, Q.C., IV. H. Terrell (Chancery bar) and Robinson, contra—This action was brought in 1859, and we must look to what took place during the twenty years preceding that time. From 1836 the lord exercised the rights of an owner in fee, and the plaintiffs were only in possession as tenants till 1840, when the surrender was made; then there is no adverse act by the plaintiffs till 1859, when the writ was issued. There has, therefore, been a twenty years' possession by the lord. The reservation of a rent shows the intention to preserve the lord's rights; the tenancy was at will, or, at most, from year to year. In 1833, therefore, the holding was not adverse. The Act gave the lord five years before his title was put an end to, and before that there was a new tenancy: (Doe dem. Lansdale v. Gower, 17 Q.B. 589; Doe v. Gregory, 2 Ad. & El. 14, were also cited.)

cur. adv. vult.

June 14.—COCKBURN, C.J.—This was an action brought by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Mitcham, to recover certain lands and premises of which the defendants are in possession, deriving title from Jas. Moore, lord of the manor of Biggin and Tamworth, in the county of Surrey. The property in dispute was formerly part of the wastes of the manor in question, and, as such, part of the lord's freehold. It appears from the case that on the 21st Aug. 1781 the then lady of the manor, by consent of the tenants of the manor, granted to five persons named, licence to inclose three acres and two roods, part of the waste, and that they and their heirs, and all persons claiming under them, should and might lawfully hold the same so inclosed, in trust for the purpose of erecting and building a workhouse for the poor of the said parish of Mitcham, and for a garden and orchard for the further accommodation and benefit of the said poor, rendering to the lady of the said manor, and all other lords or ladies, lord or lady of the said manor, the yearly rent of 5s. for the same in every year for ever. The churchwardens and overseers in the year 1781 entered into possession, and at the expense of the parish erected a workhouse, and used and occupied it, up to and including the year 1836, as the workhouse of the parish. It appears from the accounts of a deceased steward of the manor, that the yearly rent of 5s. reserved by the grant was paid to the lord of the manor from the year 1781 to the year 1791; and it appears from the books of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish that this rent was further paid from the year 1825 to the 25th March 1836. We think ourselves warranted to infer that it was paid during the interval between 1791 and 1825. On the 10th Oct. 1835, the five persons to whom the licence had been granted in 1781 being then dead, notice was given to the officers of the parish by the steward of the manor to nominate other persons for the purpose of admission to save a forfeiture. Seven persons were accordingly nominated and admitted, the parish paying a sum of 79l. 17s. 6d. as a fine on their admission. In this proceeding the estate was treated by all parties (but beyond all question erroneously) as a copyhold tenement, In 1840 the parish officers, in conformity with a resolution of the parish in vestry assembled, surrendered and gave up the premises to the lord of the manor, and the latter then entered and took possession and afterwards conveyed the premises to the defendants. The plaintiffs claim to recover possession on the ground that the parish having had adverse possession of the premises for more than twenty years at the time of the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, the right of the lord was barred, and an indefeasible freehold interest acquired by the parish, which freehold interest was not afterwards divested by what took place in the admission in 1835 or the surrender to the lord in 1840. The defendants on the other hand contend, that the possession of the parish up to the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, was that of tenants at will, and that consequently the lord had a period of five years from the passing of the Act before his right of entry expired; that within such five years a new tenancy at will was created by what took place in 1835, and consequently a further period of twenty-one years accrued to the lord within which the estate at will might be determined; and that within such twenty-one years, namely in 1840, the estate at will was put an end to by the entry and possession of the lord. If the defendants are right in the position that the parish officers were possessed as tenants at will at the time of the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, the defendants must prevail, as we are clearly of opinion that if the first tenancy was a tenancy at will, the admission in 1835 operated to create a fresh tenancy of the same kind. If before the right of entry upon a tenant at will is gone, the tenancy is put an end to, and a new tenancy at will created by fresh agreement, express or implied between the parties, then, according to the decision in Doe dem Bennett v. Turner, 7 M. & W. 226 (with which we concur), a fresh right of entry accrues, and an additional period of twenty years must run before the entry would be barred. Whether such a fresh tenancy was created or not is a question of fact. It is true that the admission in 1835 took place under an erroneous belief that the property was copyhold; but this mistake does not prevent the transaction from operating as what we find it really was, namely, a determination of the first tenancy at will and the creation of a new one, inasmuch as the admission being inoperative to convey a copyhold estate, the possession under it amounted in point of law to no more than a tenancy at will. The right of entry of the lord after this would not be barred by efflux of time till 1855. But in 1840, long before it was barred, the lord of the manor, Mr. Moore, actually entered, and from that time he, and those who claim under him, had both possession and title to the premises. This being so, we are brought back to the question whether the holding of the plaintiffs up to the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, was as tenants at will, or whether their possession had been adverse. It was contended on the part of the plaintiffs, that the intention of the parties was that a freehold interest should be created (the grant of the licence being to the licencees and their heirs for ever), and that the rent was received as a quit-rent, after the manner of the rents received in ancient times on the grants of freehold by lords of manors, and that although such a grant could not operate in law as a conveyance of the freehold, yet the parties having intended to create a freehold estate, possession under the grant would be of a character incompatible with the notion of a freehold title in the grantor, and would therefore be an adverse possession. The proposition of the plaintiffs—that where there is an intention to convey a freehold estate, and possession is given accordingly, but owing to some defect in the conveyance in point of law an estate at will only is created, possession under such circumstances will amount to an adverse possession—if true in point of law

(a matter which it is not necessary to determine) must at all events be taken with this qualification, namely, that the intention that the holding should be in the character of a freehold must clearly appear. The incompatibility of the possession with the notion of the freehold remaining in the former owner must be fully established, or the presumption that that which in law is an estate at will was only intended to be such must prevail. But, in our opinion, the plaintiffs fail to establish that there was in the present case an intention to create a freehold estate. The so-called grant does not purport to convey the fee in the ordinary way. It merely purports to grant a licence to inclose the land and to hold it in trust, paying a yearly rent for the same. The argument as to intention, arising from the fact of the grant being made to the grantees and their heirs for ever, is met by the reservation of a yearly rent; more especially as this rent could not be effectually reserved unless the grantor reserved to herself the freehold; and we can see no reason why we should not give effect to this reservation. It seems to us that the terms of the licence as strongly manifested that the lady of the manor should for ever have the lordship of the land, as that the licencees should hold the land for ever. Moreover, the fact of the parish having submitted in 1835 to the demand of the lord to nominate fresh trustees for admission, at a time when, from the effect of the recent statute, had their possession been adverse, they would have acquired an indefeasible title against the lord, is inconsistent with the notion of their having held as freeholders. On the contrary, such a proceeding is evidence of an acknowledgment that the freehold was in the lord: (see Doe v. Wilkinson, 3 B. & C. 413, ; Doe v. Clark, 8 B. & C. 717.) Besides this, the payment of the annual rent, even if he did not turn the holding from a tenancy at will into a tenancy from year to year, which would exclude all question as to adverse possession—a question which, in the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to consider—at all events affords strong evidence that the holding continued permissive, and as the lord of the manor could, before the statute had run, have turned the licencees out of possession, and probably would have done so if at any time they had refused to pay the 5s., which they had stipulated to pay, “for that holding,” we cannot but draw the inference that each successive payment of 5s. was a fresh acknowledgment that the land was held by the permission of the lord of the manor. It is enough for the decision of this case, that we think that on these facts the plaintiffs have not established that the holdings, which originally had been permissive, had before 1833 become adverse. The onus lies on them to do so, and we do not think they have succeeded. If this be so, the possession was not adverse when the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, received the royal assent. The then lord of the manor had five years more during which his right was preserved, and he might at any time before 1838 have entered and resumed possession of the premises. We have hitherto spoken only of the part of the premises which were comprised in the licence of 1781. Besides this, the parish officers in 1817 took possession of 2 roods 10 perches of land, parcel of the waste, and inclosed the same, and held possession of it and enjoyed it with the residue. The lord's right of entry to this portion of the land could not, in any view of the case, be barred before 1837, and as this portion of the premises was included in the surrender and readmittance in 1835, before the right of entry was barred, and was also taken possession of in 1840, the defendants are equally entitled to this portion as to the other. We therefore answer the questions put to us, by saying that in 1840 the churchwardens and overseers of the poor had no greater interest in the premises than that of tenants at will, or at most tenants from year to year; and secondly, that they were not entitled to the possession of the premises at the time they brought the action. The result is, that there must be judgment for the defendant.

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR COMPANY v. JONES.
Poor-rate—Exemption—Docks—Occupation beneficial or non-beneficial.

The Mersey Docks and Harbour Company are not rateable for the relief of the poor in respect of their wet docks, basins, cranes, sheds and wharves, graving docks, &c., transit sheds and offices, tramways, railroad and sidings, dock offices and depots, &c.; no person having a beneficial occupation thereof. Following Rex v. The Inhabitants of the Parish of Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61, where the same question in effect, and the same statutes, were the subject of adjudication.

Per Byles, J.: there is not, as regards the question of exemption from rating, any difference in principle between the case of a public harbour where any man may enter with his ship, and pay a compensation towards the sustentation of the harbour, and the case of a public road which any one may use with his vehicle, and pay his contribution towards the repair of the road.

This is an action of replevin brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant for the taking and detaining certain goods and chattels of the plaintiffs, and by consent of the parties, and by the order of the Hon. Keating, J., dated the 11th Jan. 1860, according to the C. L. P. A. 1852, the following case was stated for the opinion of the court:—

By a rate made for the relief of the poor of the parish of Liverpool, on the 2nd June 1859, the plaintiffs were assessed in the sum of 20,580*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* in respect of the annual value of the dock estates within the said parish vested in the said board. The following is a copy of the assessment:—

The plaintiffs did not appeal against the said rate.

The distress in question was levied in consequence of the nonpayment of the rate. The plaintiffs entered into the usual replevin bond, and brought the present action. The dock estates within the parish of Liverpool became vested originally in the mayor, aldermen, bailiffs and common council of the borough of Liverpool, as trustees of the docks and harbour of Liverpool, by virtue of several Acts of Parliament; part of those estates was granted voluntarily by that corporation, part was sold by that body to the trustees for a pecuniary consideration, and other parts were purchased by the trustees from private individuals, according to the powers given to them by the said Act before-mentioned and other Acts, being altogether twenty-two in number, and forming a series extending from the first year of Queen Anne to the twenty-first year of her present Majesty, both inclusive, all of which may be referred to as part of this case. Before the construction of many of the present works part of the land was shore both above and below high-water mark, but the greater part consisted of land and buildings in the occupation of individuals rated to the relief of the poor of the said parish. The dock estates at present consist of docks, basins, piers, jetties, graving docks, gridirons, wharfs, quays, sheds, offices, buildings, landing stages, slips, stairs, river walls, dams, embankments, locks, gates, bridges, weirs, sluices, tunnel cuts, channels, roads, railways, tramroads, cranes, engines, machinery and other matters and conveniences requisite to form complete docks, and the trustees are authorised to receive large sums of money under the name of dock rates and duties for the accommodation of vessels in the said docks by virtue of the said Acts of Parliament.

Under and by virtue of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 187, and the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 64 (being two of the Acts comprised in the said series), a committee was appointed in the manner directed by the Acts, called the Committee for the Affairs of the Estate of the Trustees of the Liverpool Docks, and all the powers and authorities of the said trustees of the Liverpool docks were vested in such committee. By stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 162 (local and personal), and which also may be referred to as part of this case, entitled "An Act for consolidating the docks at Liverpool and Birkenhead into one estate, and for vesting the control and management of them in one public trust, and for other purposes," sect. 26, all the docks, lands, buildings and other property, real and personal, situate at Liverpool that were held by or in trust for the trustees of the Liverpool Docks, became vested in the plaintiffs under the style of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, but subject to all charges and liabilities affecting the same. By sect. 49 of the said last-mentioned Act, it is enacted that, subject to the provisions of this Act, the board shall stand possessed of all the property, powers, rights and privileges hereby transferred to them upon the trusts and for the purposes upon and for which such property, powers, rights and privileges were holden previously to the commencement of this Act. The 56th section of the same enacts as follows:—The following rules shall be observed by the board with respect to the moneys received by them under this Act; (that is to say), (1.) The conservancy expenditure shall be defrayed out of the conservancy receipts. (2.) The pilotage expenditure shall be defrayed out of the pilotage receipts. (3.) No portion of the conservancy receipts or pilotage receipts shall be applied in aid of the general expenditure. (4.) No sums shall be payable in respect of docks by any vessel that does not use the same. (5.) Save as by this Act is provided, no moneys receivable by the board shall be applied to any purpose, unless the same conduces to the safety or convenience of ships frequenting the port of Liverpool, or facilitates the shipping or unshipping of goods, or is concerned in discharging a debt contracted for the above purposes. The 59th section of the same Act is as follows:—"The board shall render to Parliament, as soon as may be after the 24th day of June in every year, an account of its receipts during the preceding year, ending the 24th June, and the manner in which the same have been applied."

The board manages the dock estates by its servants and agents, who receive and account for to the board the dues and other moneys arising from the management of the said estates, and no part of the estates and premises comprised in the above assessment or schedule is let off to other persons, nor are any rents paid to the board for any part thereof. With regard to the application of the moneys received as dock duties, the stat. 8 Anne, c. 12, s. 9, under which the first dock was built, enacts as follows:—

"That all and every such sum and sums of money that shall be raised and received by the duties aforesaid, and recovered for any the forfeitures in this Act appointed, other than so much thereof as shall be laid out and allowed to the collector, or other necessary officer, for the collecting and managing the said duty, for charges of recovering the same, shall, by the said mayor, aldermen, bailiffs and common council for the time being, be applied and disposed of to the building and repairing the said new dock or basin and other works, and for the securing, preserving, amending and maintaining the said dock or basin and harbour of Liverpool, and to no other use or purpose whatsoever."

By sections in the subsequent Acts all the Acts in the series, including this of 8 Anne, are directed to be read and construed as one Act.

All the dock rates payable by the former Acts of Parliament were repealed by the 51 Geo. 3, c. 143, one of the above-mentioned series, by which new rates were substituted. The 27th section of that statute is as follows:—

"And be it further enacted, that all the moneys which shall be collected, received, levied, borrowed and raised by and under this Act shall be applied in paying and defraying the expenses and charges attending the obtaining and passing this present Act, and to the paying the expenses and charges attending the levying and collecting the said rates and duties, and after the paying and appropriating one-third part of the said money, to and for the purpose of making and completing the southernmost portion of the said North Docks as hereinafter is mentioned, then to the paying off and discharging the present bond-debt of 14,705*l.* 19*s.* 4*d.*, and the debt of 67,406*l.* 18*s.* 7*d.*, owing by the said trustees to the corporation of Liverpool, for the purchase of land and strand intended for the site of the southernmost of the said two northern docks, and any future bond-debt, and the interest on the same, and to the paying and discharging the interest on all other moneys which may be hereafter borrowed and taken up at interest under the provisions of this Act upon the credit of the said dock rates and duties as aforesaid, and to the carrying into execution the purposes of this Act and the said recited Acts, in the making, erecting, building, finishing and maintaining such docks, basins, piers and other works and buildings in the port of Liverpool, under the said Acts and this Act, and to the paying, defraying and satisfying all other charges and expenses already incurred, or hereafter to be incurred, in the carrying into execution or under or in consequence of any of the said former Acts or this present Act, and the residue or surplus of all moneys arising from such rates or duties which shall remain after such application thereof as aforesaid, shall from time to time be applied in or towards the repayment of the principal moneys which shall have been borrowed under this Act, until all such principal moneys shall be repaid, and all assignments of or mortgages upon the rates and duties are paid off, satisfied, discharged and redeemed; and when by the means last mentioned all the principal moneys which shall have been borrowed shall be repaid, and all assignments and mortgages upon the said rates are satisfied and redeemed, then, and in such case, it shall be lawful for the said trustees, and they are hereby required, to lower and reduce the rates and duties hereby granted and made payable, as far as the same can be done in the then state of the docks, basins, buildings and other works and buildings of the said port, and leaving sufficient for all charges of management and collection of rates and other concerns of the said docks, basins, piers, works and other buildings, and improving, repairing and maintaining the same, and for the carrying into execution the provisions of the said former Acts and this Act."

By the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. 187 (another of the said series), power is given by the 105th section to the said trustees to levy certain fresh rates; and by the 106th section, to lower all rates, and to raise the same again; and by the 130th section it is enacted as follows:—"And be it further enacted, that all the moneys which shall be collected, levied, borrowed and raised under this Act, or the said recited Act, shall be applied in any order, with respect to priority of such application, as to the said trustees shall seem expedient and proper (except as by this Act provided as to the time of payment of assignments of the said rates and duties granted by virtue of the said recited Act) in paying and defraying the charges and expenses of obtaining this Act, and in paying the expenses and charges of collecting the rates and duties, and all interest due and to grow due from time to time on moneys borrowed or taken up at interest by the said trustees, and any principal moneys that may be called in from time to time, and in the general management and conducting of the said trust-estate in the construction of the works by this and the said former Acts authorised to be erected, established and maintained, in supporting, maintaining and repairing the same, and every part thereof, and in carrying into execution all the provisions of the said several recited Acts and this Act, and in paying off and discharging the whole or any part of the present bond or other debt, and any future bond or other debt, and all interest due and to grow due thereon, and also in the defraying, paying and satisfying all the charges and expenses already incurred or hereafter to be incurred in carrying into execution the several purposes of or under or in consequence of any of the clauses, provisions, powers or authorities contained in the said former Acts or this Act."

By the Act 4 Vict. c. 30 (another of the said series), power is given to the trustees to erect transit sheds, to make a wet dock, to construct other works, and to raise a further sum of money, and to levy certain additional rates; and by the 124th section it is enacted as follows:—"And be it enacted, that all the moneys which shall be collected, levied, borrowed, or raised under or by virtue of the said recited Acts and this Act, shall be applied in any order, with respect to priority of such application, as to the said trustees shall seem expedient, in and towards the completion of the several docks, transit sheds, warehouses and other works, by the said recited Acts and this Act authorised to be made, framed, erected and built, and for and towards the several objects and purposes in the said recited Acts and in this Act mentioned, in the general management and conducting the said trust-estate and carrying into execution all the provisions of the said several recited Acts and this Act, and for the general improvement and reparation of the docks, basins and works of the said trustees."

By the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 80 (another of the said series), power is given to the said trustees to construct additional docks and raise further sums of money; and by the 127th section it is enacted as follows:—"And be it enacted, that all the moneys which shall be collected, levied, borrowed, or raised under and by virtue of the said recited Acts and this Act, shall be applied first in and towards the payment of all the expenses of and attending the passing of this Act, and then in and towards the completion of the several docks and other works by the said recited Acts and this Act authorised to be made and constructed, and for and towards the several objects and purposes of the said recited Acts and this Act mentioned, and in the general management and conducting of the said trust-estate, and carrying into execution the provisions of the said recited Acts and this Act, and for the general improvement and reparation of said several docks and other works of the said trustees."

By the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 119 (another of the said series), power is given to the said trustees to construct additional wet docks and other works, and to raise a further sum of money; and by the 47th section it is enacted as follows:—"And be it enacted, that all the moneys which shall be collected, levied, borrowed, or raised under and by virtue of the said recited Acts and this Act shall be applied first in and towards the payment of all expenses of and attending the passing of this Act, and then in and towards the completion of the several docks and other works by the said recited Acts and this Act authorised to be made and constructed, and for and towards the several objects and purposes of the said recited Acts and this Act mentioned, and in the general management and conducting of the said trust-estate, and carrying into execution the provisions of the said recited Acts and this Act, and for the general improvement and reparation of the several docks and other works of the trustees."

By the Act 11 Vict. c. 10 (another of the said series), power is given to the said trustees to construct additional docks and other work; and by the 40th section it is enacted as follows:—"And be it enacted, that all moneys which shall be collected, levied, borrowed, or raised under and by virtue of this and the said recited Acts shall be applied in and towards the payment of all expenses of and attending the passing of this Act, and in and towards the construction and completion of the several docks, warehouses and other works by the said recited Acts and this Act authorised to be made and constructed, and for and towards the several objects and purposes in the said recited Acts and this Act mentioned, and in the general management and conducting of the said trust-estate, and carrying into execution the provisions of the said recited Acts and this Act, and for the general improvement and reparation of the several docks and other works of the trustees."

The board are bound to apply the present dock rates and dues, and all other moneys received by them out of the dock estate, according to the directions of the several Acts of Parliament, and no member of the board derives any private advantage or emolument whatsoever from the execution of the trusts of the dock estates. All the docks, sheds, tramways, railroads, offices and other things mentioned in the above assessment were erected and provided under and in pursuance of the said several Acts of Parliament, or some of them, solely for the purposes of the dock business, and are not used for any other purpose whatever, and all revenues of any kind derived by the board from any part of the property is carried to the general dock estate, and is appropriated and applied in manner shown by the accompanying accounts for the year 1858, which are to form part of this case.

By the 4 Vict. c. 30, s. 52, the trustees were empowered to build warehouses on the quays of one of the docks, and by the 11 Vict. c. 30, s. 3, such power to build warehouses was extended to all the dock quays; and by sect. 71 of the first-mentioned, and by sect. 4 of the second-mentioned Act, such warehouses were expressly made subject to all parochial and other rates. None of the warehouses built in pursuance of the said Acts are included in the above assessment.

The questions for the opinion of the court were, whether the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board is rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of the property enumerated in the above schedule or any part of it? If the court should be of opinion in the affirmative, then judgment is to be entered for the defendants, for such sum as the court think they were entitled to distrain for, and costs. If the court should be of a contrary opinion, the judgment is to be entered for the plaintiffs for their costs of suit.

June 4.—Sir Fitzroy Kelly, Q.C. (with whom was Quain) for the plaintiffs.—The very point now before the court was decided in favour of the plaintiffs by the Court of Q. B. in Rex v. The Inhabitants of the Parish of Liverpool, 7 B. & C. 61. My friend must say that that decision was wrong. He contends for three propositions: first, that this dock property is occupied by some class of persons entitled to usufruct; secondly, that the dues taken under the Acts of Parliament are not applicable to public purposes; thirdly, that this case comes within the Parochial Assessment Act. He must show that a tenant would give for this property a sum of money upon which this rate might be legally imposed. During the last 150 years the Legislature, finding the port of Liverpool useful for ships of war as well as merchantmen, passed these Acts, granting to a body of merchants power to purchase lands, &c., and carry out the objects of the Acts. It was intended that the usufruct should be applied to specific purposes, and in the manner pointed out in the Acts, and the usufruct being made applicable to those purposes by the Legislature, the property is not rateable. But the Legislature has treated this property as not rateable. 4 Vict. c. 30, s. 71, enacts expressly that the additional warehouses by that Act authorised to be erected shall be subject to the payment of all parochial rates in like manner as the same are or would be payable in respect of warehouses the occupancy of which is not beneficial." There is a similar enactment also in 11 Vict. c. 10. He cited Reg. v. The Trustees of the River Weaver Navigation, 7 B. & C. 70, n. (c); Reg. v. The Mayor of Liverpool, 9 Ad. & Ell. 435; Reg. v. Wallingford, 10 Ad. & Ell. 259; Crease v. Sawle, 2 Q. B. 862.

Bovill, Q.C. (with whom was Mellish) for the defendants.—Since the passing of the Acts authorising the erection of additional warehouses, the docks are in this position: a portion is liable to be rated, and a portion by the decision of the Court of Q. B. is not liable. In 1859 the same question arose in respect of the Newcastle Docks, also with respect to the Clyde Docks; and in the case of the Birkenhead Docks the Court of Q. B. decided that the docks were rateable, and that case cannot be distinguished from this. In addition to the cases cited on the other side, he referred to R. v. Kentmere, 17 Q. B. 859; R. v. Temple, 2 Ell. & Bl. 163; Mayor of Liverpool v. Wetherby, 6 Ell. & Bl. 704-713; R. v. Churton, 28 L. J. 131, M.C.; R. v. Trustees of River Lea, 19 J. P. 310.

June 5.—ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of this court should be given in accordance with the decision in Rex v. Liverpool, where the same questions in effect on the same statutes were the subject of adjudication. At the same time I beg to reserve to myself the right of reconsidering the point in case I should hereafter form a part of a court of error between these parties. My learned brethren in the Q. B. had my full concurrence in the cases cited for the defendants. In these cases the questions seem to me to be, first, does the statute prohibit payment of poor-rates where it makes the property subject to the payment of all charges thereon? If not, then, is the party rated a trustee occupying merely for the public benefit? In all these cases the question which was mooted in Rex v. Badcock, what is the public's, is the governing consideration. Property held on behalf of the Government of the country, for the purposes of administration, is clearly held for the public benefit. Beyond this no clear definition of holding for the public interest has been given that I have found. In each of the series of cases relied on for the defendants, the effect of the decision was, that the claim of exemption on the ground of public interest was not sustained. Thus the millers benefited by the Kentmere reservoir; the inhabitants of Huddersfield, or of Harrogate, or of Manchester, benefited by waterworks; and the capitalists investing capital in merchandise and shipping, resorting to the port of Birkenhead and the port of Tynemouth, were not the public. If the question here is narrowed to the point, whether the capitalists thus resorting to the port of Liverpool for commerce are the public, the analogy to the cases cited is strong. If the exemption continues these capitalists benefit. If the liability is established, these capitalists will probably sustain the burden, as they would have to pay increased charges for the use of the port; the main distinction between the cases decided and the Liverpool case thus being the comparative wealth and importance of the town of Liverpool. I have wished to say thus much, that I may not appear to have deserted an opinion which I repeatedly expressed in concurring with my brethren, with whom I had the satisfaction to act in another court. But, as a court here of co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Court of Q. B., I give judgment upon the express decision upon the point decided in the case in Barnewall and Cresswell, reserving to myself the right hereafter as above expressed.

MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR COMPANY v. JONES.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I think we are bound by the decision in 7 B. & Cr. of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks. Mr. Bovill has certainly called our attention to several recent decisions in the Court of Q. B., which I admit are inconsistent with the principle upon which that case was decided, particularly the Birkenhead case the River Lea case, and Rex v. Churton. In those recent decisions the ratio decidendi of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks is regarded as founded on a supposed statutory prohibition to apply any part of the surplus of the dock receipts to the poor-rates, because such surplus is entirely devoted to certain other prescribed purposes. The authority, therefore, is sought to be confined to cases where there is such a statutory exemption. On looking at the report of the case in 7 B. & Cr., the ground on which that case was decided manifestly is, that there was no person who had a beneficial occupation of the docks. That is plain, not only from Lord Tenterden's language to that effect, but also from his referring to the case of Rex v. Woodward, as an analogous case, where it was held that a Quakers' meeting-house, if the pews were not let, is not rateable. So, in the case decided at the same time, the case of Rex v. Weaver, Bayley, J. says it virtually has been decided by the conclusion to which they have just arrived in Rex v. The Liverpool Docks; and says, the principle of that decision is applicable to the case of Rex v. The Trustees of the River Weaver Navigation, the case that the court then had in hand. There the surplus remaining over and above the expense of supporting the navigation was to be applied to maintaining and repairing the bridges and highways. Those were public purposes, and as no part of the moneys could be applied to private purposes, those moneys were not rateable in the hands of the trustees. I own I cannot see how any doubt can be entertained. It was upon that ground that the Court of Q. B. decided the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks. A long series of cases has recognised Rex v. The Liverpool Docks as decided on the ground which I have just mentioned, especially the case of Rex v. Badcock, which was cited during the argument, and also another case, which I think was not cited, of Rex v. St. George's, Southwark, 10 Q. B. Rep. There Lord Denman, in giving the considered judgment of the court, says: "It has been settled by several cases that the possessors or occupiers as trustees of property otherwise rateable, the profits of which they were bound by Act of Parliament to apply to public or charitable purposes, were not rateable to the poor in respect of such property." And then Lord Denman goes on to cite the case of Rex v. The Salters Load Sluice, Rex v. Liverpool, and Rex v. The Weaver Navigation. This recognition was continued down as late as the case of Rex v. Harrogate, where Lord Campbell and the Q. B. go into the distinction which they consider was established by the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks, between a beneficial occupation and a non-beneficial one, by reason of its being for public purposes. Down to as late as Lord Campbell's time, therefore, we find that distinction was recognised, and that distinction was investigated, treating the case of Rex v. Liverpool as good law, and as founded on that distinction. As far as I understand the Acts of Parliament, not only has this decision been recognised as settling the law by this long line of cases, but the Legislature itself appears to me to have clearly recognised the law as settled by Rex v. Liverpool Docks, and as settled on the ground that the occupation of the trustees is not a beneficial one. Because the statute of the 4 Vict. c. 30, after providing that additional warehouses may be erected, goes on to enact in the 71st section: "That the occupancy by the said trustees of all or any of the warehouses to be erected under the provisions of this Act, shall be subject to the payment of all parochial and all other local rates now levied and hereafter to be levied in the said parish of Liverpool, in like manner as the same are or would be payable in respect of warehouses the occupancy of which is beneficial." There is a similar enactment in the 11 Vict. c. 10, and, as I caught it, the statute not being before us, in another Act which has passed since this rate was made, the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 152. Then what is the legitimate inference to derive from these enactments in these three Acts of Parliament? Surely they assume that but for the passing of these enactments, and but for the exception there created with respect to a particular portion of the property occupied by the trustees, the occupancy would not be beneficial. In other words, these enactments treat the law, as laid down in Rex v. The Liverpool Docks, as the settled law, and assume that, by reason of the law being so settled, the occupation by the trustees is not beneficial, and therefore that it is not the subject of a rate; and they proceed to say that in respect of this particular portion of the property, it shall be considered as if it was beneficial, therefore, plainly assuming that it was not in truth beneficial, but should be treated as such for the purpose of being rated, by reason of this special enactment. How, then, can we, sitting here as a court of concurrent jurisdiction, refuse to recognise a case which for many years was regarded both by the court and the bar as the leading case on the subject, and which no one has ever ventured to say ought to be overruled, and which, in fact, the Legislature has adopted as the basis of enactments in three Acts of Parliament. It seems to me, therefore, that we are bound to recognise it; and being so bound, our judgment must be for the plaintiffs.

BYLES, J.—I also am of opinion that our judgment

EDDLESTON v. FRANCIS.]

must be for the plaintiffs. I found my opinion upon the applicability of Rex v. Liverpool Docks; indeed, applicability is hardly a proper word to use. This very question, with the Acts of Parliament, exactly as Mr. Bovill now contends that they are, presented itself to the mind of the Court of Q. B. in 1825, and they decided that the property was not rateable. I say "exactly as they are," because, although it has been pointed out, it is as well to recall attention to the fact, that supposing Mr. Bovill is right in his contention that the statute of the 8 Anne, c. 12, s. 9, is no longer in existence, Lord Tenterden, for some reason or other which is not very apparent, construed these Acts of Parliament without reference to that Act, the statute of Anne, for he says that the statutes which he was considering did not contain the words "to the purposes of the Act, and to and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." The statutes therefore presented themselves, that is, the earlier statutes, to the mind of the Q. B. in 1827 precisely as Mr. Bovill now says they are. That is a decision on the very point and between the very parties now before the court, that these docks are not rateable. I admit that Mr. Bovill has been more successful in contending that the case of the Birkenhead Docks, followed, as it has been, by the two cases of the Newcastle Docks and the River Lea, is with difficulty distinguishable from the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks. But the court in giving judgment in the case of the Birkenhead Docks, expressly refrained from overruling that prior case. On the contrary, they treat it as a subsisting authority. How is it possible for us, therefore, with the respect which should be always due from one court of co-ordinate jurisdiction to another, to refuse to recognise the existing authority of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks, which the Court of Q. B. did at the time when they were deciding the Birkenhead Dock case, which the learned counsel for the defendant says is irreconcilable with that prior case. But, although it is more easy to point out slight differences than to distinguish these cases by any solid and substantial ground of distinction, it must not be assumed that the Acts of Parliament are the same. It is impossible to read the Acts of Parliament to which my brother Williams has called attention, without seeing clearly that it was a matter of bargain between the parishes and the docks that the rateability of the warehouses should be created, but that the absence of rateability on the rest of the property should be preserved. Their bargain, it is true, can make no difference in the law; but then that bargain is incorporated in three Acts of Parliament, which seem to me to imply, almost as clearly as if they had expressed it, that the rule laid down in the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks, whether applicable to other cases or not, shall at all events govern the rateability of those docks. If, therefore, we were at liberty to do what the Q. B. did not venture to do, it seems to me that we are entirely precluded by the subsequent Acts of Parliament. I do not wish to preclude myself from forming any other opinion, if, upon further consideration in another place, I should be called upon to give it; but at present it seems to me that the Acts of Parliament are not the same, but that they differ, and differ in a way unfavourable to the defendants. I cannot help, however, saying—and I think I am bound to say—that I think the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks was rightly decided, and that when the case comes to be discussed in a court of error, it is possible that that decision may be arrived at. Now all these decisions proceed on the statute of the 43 Eliz. What does the 43 Eliz. do? It delegates to the new overseers of the poor, then first created, a power of taxation. Now whom are they to tax? They are to tax the inhabitants and the occupiers in the parish according to their ability. Such are the words of the statute, "according to ability." Did the Legislature intend to delegate to them the privilege of Parliament to tax the public? I say nothing of the exemption of Crown lands from taxation, or even of the exemption of those lands which are temporarily severed from the Crown and under the administration of the Woods and Forests; it may be that they stand on another footing; they are Crown property. The Crown is not bound in a statute unless it is named. But public land, public buildings, the extensive lands of the Bedford Level, lands or buildings which are for the benefit of a borough, have been held exempt from rateability. In this case, as in a thousand others, it may be very easy to say property of this nature is clearly not liable to taxation, property of another nature is liable to taxation, but difficult to lay down a precise rule as to those cases which fall near the dividing line. On the one hand, if there are a plurality of individuals, even members of a neighbouring parish, they are individuals, and if trustees hold for them they are rateable in the name of their trustees. On the other hand, it seems to me that if the occupier is agent or trustee for a body who are the general public, then, according to the decisions and upon the true construction of the statute of Eliz., the property is not rateable, and that is consistent with the first and leading case on the subject; I mean the case of the Salter's Load Sluice, and all the cases down to the case of Rex v. Birkenhead, as far as I am aware of. Then that brings the question to the narrow point, is this a public purpose? Mr. Bovill says, no, it is not, because it is only a portion of the public who use it, the capitalists who invest in ships. It might equally be said of a public highway for carriages, that that is for the use of that branch of the public who invest their property in carts and waggons: in one case as well as the other, all have a right to use it. And if a great public harbour like this, open for all the public, is to be rated, I do not see how we can stop, unless we go on and say that the occupier of the soil over which there is the easement of a public highway is also rateable for the value of the benefit which the public receive. The distinction between the two is this—but it is no distinction in principle—the frequenters of this great public harbour pay a compensation for the use of it. Put the case of a turnpike-road; there the public pay a toll for the use of the road. There is, indeed, now an Act of Parliament specially exempting the toll of a turnpike-road; but that was intended to meet the case of mortgagees in possession. It had been decided long before, that the soil of a public turnpike-road is not rateable, on the ground that it belongs to the public. Now, I cannot conceive any difference in principle, I must admit, between the case of a public harbour where any man may enter with his ship and pay a compensation towards the sustentation of the harbour, and the case of a public road where any man may enter with his vehicle and pay his contribution towards the repair of the road. Upon these grounds I am bound to say that it seems to me that the case of Rex v. The Liverpool Docks was rightly decided. At the same time I place my judgment, as I said before, on the incompetency of this court to review a solemn decision of the Q. B., recognised by them when they had all the opposite considerations before their eyes; especially when I see several Acts of Parliament which in this particular case have treated that as being law, whatever it may do in other cases, which is to conclude all questions arising between the parishes of Liverpool and the docks in that borough.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

EDDLESTON (appellant) v. FRANCIS (respondent).
Local board of health—Improvements—Recovery of expenses—11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11—When matter of complaint arises.
In the year 1854 certain permanent improvements were completed by the local board of health upon premises at Nantwich. F. was receiver of the rent of the premises, appointed by the Court of Ch. In 1853 and 1854 F. and the local board agreed that the expenses should be raised by mortgage, and notice of the sum was given to F., who paid 30*l.* in part payment. He afterwards ceased to be receiver, and refused to pay the balance. A demand of payment was made upon him in 1857, and in December of that year he finally refused to pay. A complaint was made by the local board before justices, upon the 19th Jan. 1858:

Held, that the matter of complaint arose when notice of the amount to be raised by mortgage was given to F., and that the information ought to have been laid within six months from that time, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11:

Held, also, that the local board, in agreeing to the mortgage, had exercised their option, and could not afterwards proceed to recover the expenses by summary proceedings, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 129.

This was an appeal by the Nantwich Local Board of Health (by R. C. Eddleston, their clerk), against the dismissal of a complaint made before justices of the county of Chester, by the local board, under sect. 51 of the Public Health Act 1848, against Francis, for the nonpayment of 14*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*

Case.—On the 19th Jan. 1858 an information and complaint was made and preferred by the appellant before the Rev. Thomas Brooke, against the respondent, for 14*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, being a balance due for certain works of private improvements done in the month of October 1853, to houses at Nantwich, under sect. 51 of the Public Health Act 1848, which case was fixed for hearing at the special sessions, Nantwich, on 26th Jan. last, when Mr. Charles Stuart Brooke appeared for the respondent, and objected to the magistrates' jurisdiction: first, on the ground that the said complaint was not made within the time limited by law, and by sect. 11 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, which enacts that, "in all cases where no time is already or shall hereinafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information in the Act or Acts of Parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose," nor in accordance with the decision of the judges in the case of Reg. v. The Leeds and Bradford Railway Company, 21 L. J., N. S., 193, M. C.; secondly, that the said Frederick Francis is not, nor was he for more than six calendar months before the said complaint was made, the owner or occupier of the premises mentioned in the said complaint, as required by the Public Health Act 1848; and, thirdly, for other good and sufficient reasons. On which the case was adjourned until the 23rd Feb. last, when the appellant applied for a further adjournment until the 23rd March last, which adjournment was granted. The magistrates present on that day were of opinion that the information should be dismissed, but at the request of the appellant, who stated he wished it heard before a larger bench of magistrates, it was again adjourned to the 6th April last. On which day the respondent's attorney was unable to attend in consequence of illness; but to save the expense of witnesses being under the necessity of attending again, the appellant called his clerk to prove the posting of two notices to a Mr. Joseph Woolf, of Haslingdon-hall, in Cheshire, who acted as agent for the respondent, which said notices were dated respectively the 23rd April 1853, requiring works to be done by the respondent. On Mr. Woolf being called, the notices were shown to him, and he proved that he received copies of them from the appellant, and wrote to the respondent on the 4th May 1853 as to the same; and that he also saw the respondent at the Rising Sun at Wistaston, on the 19th of the same May 1853, when he handed the notices over to him. The case was then again adjourned until the 4th May instant, when it came on for hearing before us. The respondent's attorney handed in a written notice of the foregoing objections to our jurisdiction to hear the case, and after hearing the arguments on behalf of the appellant and the respondent, we were unanimously of opinion that the information should be dismissed, and therefore we dismissed it, on the ground that it appeared to me the undersigned Thomas Fletcher Twenlow, that so far back as 1833 certain permanent improvements were done by the direction and under the superintendence of the local board of health, at a cost of 44*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, upon houses in Nantwich belonging to a property over which the respondent had been appointed receiver by the Court of Ch., and that for the raising the sum required, a mortgage had been agreed upon and prepared between the local board of health and the receiver, which mortgage was never executed. For some time there was an account current kept between the builder and the board of health, and 30*l.* was paid by the receiver to the builder, but the receiver having retired from the office, after various applications, finally by letter, dated Dec. 1857, declined to pay the sum of 14*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.* Then it was objected by the respondent's attorney that the complaint was laid too late, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, but I, the said Thomas Fletcher Twenlow, was of opinion that this objection should be overruled. On referring to the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11), I thought that the money should have been raised under sect. 90; but as it appeared that another mode of raising the money had been adopted in a way not pointed out, as I thought, by the statute, I doubted whether the balance of the account came under the provisions of sect. 129, which provides for the recovery in a summary way of damages and costs; and therefore I agreed with the other justices in dismissing the said complaint. And we the undersigned, Samuel Cross Starkey and William Baker, Esquires, being of opinion that the said complaint was not laid within the time limited by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, also dismissed the said complaint, when the appellant being dissatisfied with our determination as being erroneous in point of law, on the 6th day of May instant gave notice of appeal against the same, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2.

Welsby for the appellant.—The first question is, whether the application was in time under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, which enacts "that in all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint (i. e. a complaint before justices) in the Act or Acts of Parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint arose." By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 129, the amount of any damages, costs, or expenses by that Act directed to be ascertained or recovered in a summary manner, may be ascertained by and recovered before two justices. The matter of complaint here arose on the demand: (Labouchere (appellant) v. Addison (respondent), 23 L. J. 25, M. C.) The matter of complaint is the refusal to pay. And the time must be reckoned from the notice of demand. Secondly, Francis being only a receiver under the Court of Ch., was the owner chargeable within the Act. Such a receiver is an agent and a trustee, having a fiduciary character under which he would be answerable to the parties interested.

Huddleston, Q.C. for the respondent.—The mortgage was prepared in May 1854, and 30*l.* was paid on the understanding that it would be carried out. It was then brought to the knowledge of the respondent how much the amount was, and the matter of complaint arose then, and the application should have been made within six months of that time.

WILLETT v. BOOTE AND ANOTHER.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that this appeal ought to have been dismissed. It ought to have been made within six months after the matter of complaint arose. The matter of complaint is the nonpayment of the expenses of works completed in 1854. The proceedings which we are now adjudicating upon were commenced in Jan. 1858. The appellant relies on the fact of the demand of payment in 1858, and he says there was no matter of complaint until a demand and a refusal. I am clearly of opinion that in such cases the matter of complaint does not arise until the person liable has notice of the amount. Now it appears that Francis in 1853 and 1854 objected to be answerable, having only a temporary interest, and he and the local board of health came to an agreement that he should not be looked to, and that an improvement rate should be made. A mortgage was prepared, and notice of the sum was given to Francis, and he paid in part 30%. Now it is in my mind clear that that must either be taken to be notice to Francis of the amount due, or to be an agreement that it should be raised by an improvement rate. And then I think they had exercised their option, and cannot now, especially when Francis has long ceased to be receiver, come and recover it by a summary proceeding from him. They must be taken to have exercised their option.

WILLIAMS, J.—As to the first question, it appears to me that the local board, having selected to throw the expenses on the occupier by rate, cannot now proceed under the 90th section.

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. If the proceeding to charge the premises was operative, it prevents the proceeding under the 90th section. If it was not operative, the board could have at once proceeded under that section.

KEATING, J.—I concur; especially on the ground taken by the Lord Chief Justice, that what was equivalent to notice to Mr. Francis was done.

WILLETT (appellant) v. BOOTE AND ANOTHER (respondents).

Appeal from justices—Master and servant—Servant absenting himself—4 Geo. 4, c. 34, s. 3—Payment by foreman.

Where the respondents, being master potters, contracted with the appellant to serve them at a certain weekly wage, and by a subsequent agreement contracted with other parties to pay them a certain sum for every dozen score put into the oven, the said parties undertaking to pay thereout the wage of the said appellant:

Held, that the relation of master and servant arising between the respondents and the appellant under the first agreement, was not terminated by the subsequent agreement.

CASE.

The complainants are manufacturers of earthenware at Burslem. The defendant is a journeyman ovenman. The complaint came on for hearing before Thomas Bailey Rose, Esq., on Tuesday, the 20th March, and afterwards by adjournment on the 27th March 1860, and the following facts were proved:

By an agreement, bearing date the 15th Nov. 1859, the defendant agreed to serve the complainants as a biscuit oven placer, from the 11th Nov. 1859 to 11th Nov. 1860, on the terms therein stated, namely, to be paid four shillings a day for each day's work done.

By an agreement, also bearing date the 15th Nov. 1859, Thomas Robinson and John Bowers entered into the service and employment of the complainants as biscuit oven firemen, and they were to be paid by the complainants one shilling per score for placing and firing twenty dozen of ware, to be delivered into the biscuit warehouse, and a further sum of twenty shillings per oven for odd work, it being understood that, out of the price of one shilling per score of twenty dozen, and the extra charge for odd work, Robinson and Bowers should pay to the defendant Willett and the other line workmen, parties to the first agreement, the wages payable to them by virtue of such agreement, Willett and others being employed in placing the ware in the ovens to be fired by Robinson and Bowers.

The entry of the work done, and the wages paid for the same work, is made in the book kept by Messrs. Boote for that purpose in the following manner:

“Bowers and Company.

“6050 dozen, at one shilling per score dozen—Odd work for four ovens, twenty shillings per score £19 2 6”

It was proved in evidence that the above sum of 19l. 2s. 6d. included the wages payable to the defendant and the other workmen, and it was proved that the complainants were in the habit of paying several workmen under one name, and so entering it in their wages book, but no specific sum was reckoned in that as payable to Willett.

On Saturday, the 25th Feb. last, the defendant, with nine other workmen, parties to the first agreement, refused to carry out the dishes from the dish makers' place to the oven, which they had always heretofore done, alleging as a reason that, since their hiring, extra work had been put on them, namely, sanding the saucers. About the middle of the day of the 25th Feb. last, the defendant absented himself from work without the permission of the complainants, and did not return to his work, although required by the complainants to do so, but he returned on the 27th Feb. and continued to work as heretofore, except carrying out the dishes, which he refused to do. The defendant and the other workmen had offered to leave the question in dispute to arbitration, which Messrs. Boote refused. Sometime after November Robinson gave Willett a month's notice to leave, but at the expiration of the month he (Robinson) agreed that he (Willett) should continue to work, which he did. On the examination of Robinson on the part of the defendant he admitted that there had not been any express contract of hiring of the defendant Willett by Robinson and Bowers, but he stated that Willett had performed part of the work comprised under the agreements. It was objected on behalf of the defendant that the relation of master and servant did not subsist between the complainants and the defendant, notwithstanding the first agreement, and it was alleged on his behalf that he had worked under Robinson and Bowers, who had paid him the wages he was entitled to out of the money received under their agreement with Messrs. Boote.

It was further urged that the agreement was vague and indefinite, as the rules and regulations were not specified, and that any dispute about work could be referred to arbitration.

The magistrates convicted the defendant and sentenced him to one month's imprisonment in the House of Correction; but on the application of the defendant I consented to grant a case for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and in pursuance thereof I have stated the foregoing circumstances. And whereas the said William Willett has given me notice in writing and required me to state and sign a case for the opinion of the Court of Ex. setting forth the facts and grounds of the said conviction, and entered into recognisances pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided. stances stated, the relation of master and servant did subsist between the complainants and the defendant, and whether there was an absenting from the service within the meaning of the Act. Whether the agreement was vague and indefinite, and therefore void. Whether the dispute ought not to have been referred to arbitration; and whether my said conviction was correct in point of law.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26.—BRAMWELL, B. now delivered the judgment of the court.—We are of opinion this conviction should be confirmed. The first question is, did the relation of master and servant exist between the respondents and appellant. The facts are, that the respondents are master potters, that they hired the appellant and several other men for a considerable period, by a written agreement, at the wages of 4s. a day. On the same day that this agreement of hiring was made, the respondents engaged with two other men for their services, and undertook that they would pay them 1s. for every dozen score put into the oven, and this meant that a sum arrived at by taking 1s. for every dozen score of the total quantity put into the oven was to be given to these latter men, but that out of the sum so given to them they were to pay the other men for daily wages. The appellant and the other men who signed the first-mentioned agreement were no parties to this; but in fact they were paid their wages by the hands of the two men named in the second agreement. It is said this established the relation of master and servant between the men in the second and those in the first agreement, and destroyed it between the respondent and the appellant. But this is not so; that would be to suppose that the appellant and respondents entered into an agreement for no purpose, but at once to cast it away. The matter is very intelligible; the appellant desired to have, and the respondents desired to pay, a fixed daily wages for the appellant's labour, but the respondents desired to have that benefit which is got from careful supervision and the partial application of the principle of piecework. They therefore hired the appellant at daily wages, and they agreed with the two men in the second agreement that the appellant should work under them as under foremen, and that they the foremen should be paid thus: an account should be taken at one penny for every dozen score of all articles put in the oven. That is, the sum which exceeds the wages of the men employed should be paid to them (the foremen) to keep for their own benefit; and that for the convenience of all parties the residue of that sum should be given to them for them to be the hands who pay the men. It is clear that if the foremen had not paid the men, either because their earnings would not allow them, or for any other reason, the respondents would be liable. It was asked whose would the loss be if one of the workmen did not work? but the question is not intelligible—nobody's but his own. If he did not work he would not be paid. If the question means if he worked idly or ill, why the loss would be the foreman's. But so it would be if the respondents had agreed in terms with the foreman, as we say they have in substance, with this difference, that they themselves would pay the men, and deduct their wages from the sum arrived at by taking one shilling for every dozen score. The very object of the arrangement is to give the foreman an interest in getting the greatest possible quantity of work out of the appellant and his fellows. The other objection to the conviction arose thus: in the agreement of hiring there is a clause of arbitration; the appellant made a claim on the respondents, which the respondents refused to accede to and refused to refer to arbitration; the appellant then deserted the service of the respondents. Now it was urged that if he thought he had a right to do so because his master would not refer this dispute to arbitration, his doing so would not be a wilful desertion of the service so as to subject him to a penalty. Probably that is so; but there really is no ground in the case stated for saying, that he left the service for such a reason. There is nothing to indicate it on the case; and though we have offered to remit it to the justice, the offer has been declined by the appellant. The point is not open to the appellant, and it must be taken that he left the service as a means of compelling his master either to comply with his requisition, or to refer the matter, or for some other cause, knowing he was thereby breaking his agreement. That being so, the appeal must be dismissed.

Judgment for the respondents.

Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, T. W. SAUNDERS, and C. J. B. HERTLETT, Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

LEARY (appellant) v. LLOYD (respondent).

Merchant Shipping Act 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 19, 107, 109, 244, 257—Harbouring deserters—Evidence of being a British ship—Proof of registry.

In order to convict a person under the above Act of harbouring a seaman who has deserted from his ship, it is necessary to prove that the ship is a British ship, which proof must be given by evidence of its being duly registered.

This was a case stated under the provisions of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, by which it appeared that on the 25th Jan. last George Lloyd, the respondent, who is the police officer employed by the Newport Dock Company for the protection of the shipping frequenting the Newport Docks, and to prevent seamen from deserting their vessels, laid an information before one of the justices for the borough against the appellant Dennis Leary, who keeps a sailor's lodging-house and beer-house at Newport, for having wilfully harboured certain seamen who had deserted their vessel.

The information was laid under sect. 257 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (the Merchant Shipping Act 1854), and a summons was issued and served upon the appellant, who appeared at the town-hall on Friday, the 27th Jan., before two justices to answer the charge. The summons recited that information, "That you, Dennis Leary, did on the 22nd Jan. 1860, at the borough of Newport, then and there wilfully harbour Peter Smith, Allen M'Intyre, Ferdinand Pamin and John Brown, seamen, who had deserted from the British ship Sultana, knowing or having reason to believe such seamen to have deserted."

It was proved by Samuel Brewster that he was the master of the British ship Sultana, of Liverpool, then lying in the Newport Docks, within the said borough, where she had arrived a week previously from Antwerp; that eleven seamen, who were on the ship's articles of agreement (which were produced), and who had arrived at the port of Newport with him in the vessel, had all deserted the ship; that Peter Smith, Allen M'Intyre, Ferdinand Pamin, and John Brown, named in the summons, were four of the eleven seamen who had so deserted; that the men signed the articles at Antwerp to come to the port of Newport, and from thence to proceed to a port in the United States and back to a port of discharge in the United Kingdom; that the men only having just commenced their voyage, and having no right to leave the ship, deserted either on the night of the 21st or 23rd Jan., and took away all their clothes and effects with them.

The official log-book of the ship was not produced, but it was proved that Smith, M'Intyre, Pamin and Brown had severally been duly convicted on the 25th

FOX v. WILLIAMS.

Jan. at Newport, for having deserted from the said vessel, the Sultana, and had been each of them sentenced to three weeks' hard labour.

The appellant's attorney objected that there was no evidence that the Sultana was a British ship; that the evidence of the master that she was such, and the production of the articles of agreement signed by the deserting seamen, which were in the form required by the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, was not sufficient proof of the ship being a British vessel in the absence of the certificate of registry, which he contended ought to be produced. He further contended that, in the absence of the official log-book, no legal evidence was before the justices in proof of the men named in the summons being deserters.

The justices were satisfied, on the evidence before them, that the ship was a British vessel, and that the seamen named in the summons had deserted from the vessel. Sect. 244 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1844 was referred to in reply to the appellant's objection.

Michael Miles proved that he was the watchman employed on board the Sultana, "to watch the ship and see nothing went out of her; that he was going on board the ship at twenty minutes to six on Sunday night, Jan. 22nd; that the Sultana was lying second ship off the dock wall, a Bremen ship being moored next to her; that he then and there saw the appellant Leary standing on the dock wall, and saw a bag of clothes thrown down upon the wall, and one of Leary's men take away the bag. Miles, concluding that seamen were deserting, seized the bag of clothes and took it from the man who was carrying it away, when another man, a sailor, ran up and said, 'This is my bag,' and pulled it away from the watchman. Leary stood by and said to the witness, "Mike, go on board your ship." Miles replied, "No, Leary; you are carrying on a pretty game here to-night, and I will report you for it."

To this accusation Leary made no reply. The watchman then proceeded on board his ship, the Sultana, and in order to reach her he had to pass over the Bremen ship lying next the quay wall. On the deck of the Bremen ship he saw beds and other seamen's effects wrapped up, and some seamen standing by. He called the mate of the Bremen ship and asked him if the beds, &c., belonged to the vessel? and the master replied, in the hearing of Leary, who was then standing under the Bremen ship's bow, that they belonged to the Sultana.

It was then proved by Lloyd, the respondent, that in consequence of the information he had received from Captain Brewster and the watchman Miles, he went with the other police officers to the house of the appellant on the 23rd Jan., and in his house they found four of the eleven men who had deserted, namely, Smith, M'Intyre, Pamin and Brown, named in the summons. They were in the taproom openly; a fifth man, on seeing the officers, ran away. The seamen were taken to the police station, and on the following day were duly convicted before two justices and were severally committed to prison for deserting the said ship.

It was not proved that Leary was present or in his house at the time the deserters were so taken out of it; but George Bath, one of the police officers, who went with the respondent and apprehended the seamen, proved that he saw Leary in the street in the evening of the day on which the four seamen were taken into custody, and told him (Leary) that four sailors had been apprehended in his house for deserting from the Sultana. Leary replied, "Is that all?" The witness said, "Yea." Leary said, "There are some more there; I don't want them; they came to me; the captain can have them if he likes; they shall pay me for their board before they get their clothes."

The appellant's attorney having contended that there was no evidence to show that the bag of clothes thrown from, or the effects found upon, the Bremen ship, were part of the effects of the deserting seamen from the Sultana, and that the appellant did not know the men were deserters; the justices, looking at all the circumstances proved in evidence, deemed the offence proved, and convicted the appellant of wilfully harbouring Peter Smith, knowing or having reason to believe he had deserted his ship, in the penalty of 5*l.*, including costs.

The question for the consideration of the court was, whether the conviction was right or wrong?

Dowdeswell appeared for the appellant, and contended that there was no legal evidence that the Sultana was a registered British ship, which proof was necessary to support the conviction: (ss. 19, 109, 107, 244, 257 of the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, Merchant Shipping Act 1854.)

No one appeared for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 7.—BLACKBURN, J.—This was an appeal against a conviction on an information under the 257th section of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, for harbouring a deserter from the British ship Sultana. On the hearing before the magistrates no certificate of the registry of the ship having been produced, an objection was taken that there was no proof that the ship in question, which was alleged to be a British ship, had been registered pursuant to the requirements of the Act in question, and that the information could therefore not be sustained. The magistrates having overruled this objection, the same point was taken before us upon the hearing of the appeal, and we are of opinion that the objection is well founded and must prevail. After a careful consideration of the Act, we are of opinion that the sections coming under the head of discipline, of which the section in question is one, have reference to British ships alone; but by the 19th section no ship required to be registered shall, unless registered, be recognised as a British ship. It follows that in a proceeding in which it becomes necessary to show that a ship is a British ship, proof of the ship having been registered becomes essential to invest the ship with the character of a British ship. Such proof was in the present case wanting, and the absence of it ought, in our opinion, to have prevented a conviction from taking place. We therefore hold that the conviction was wrong, and must be reversed.

Conviction quashed.

FOX v. WILLIAMS.

Clerk to borough justices—Partner with clerk of the peace of the county—Interest in prosecutions—5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102.

A. and B. were in partnership as attorneys A. was clerk to the borough magistrates of N., and B. was clerk of the peace for the county of M., to the quarter sessions of which the borough justices of N. committed their prisoners for trial.

By indenture B. released all interest in A.'s fees as clerk to the borough justices, and B. released all interest in A.'s fees as clerk of the peace for the county:

Held, that this arrangement exempted A. from the operation and penalties of sect. 102 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76.

This was an action for a libel published in the Star of Gwent newspaper of Feb. 18, 1860, of which the defendant is the proprietor.

The first count of the declaration was for publishing the report of a meeting of ratepayers of the borough of Newport, at which some strong observations were made by some of the speakers, on the plaintiff. The second count was for a libel contained in an article in the same paper, commenting on the subject. Among other pleas, the defendant pleaded a justification as to part of the libel.

The trial took place before Byles, J., at the Hereford assizes, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages 200*l*.

It appeared that the plaintiff and a Mr. Prothero were in partnership as solicitors, at Newport, Monmouthshire, and had been so for some time prior to Jan. 1857, and that Mr. Prothero was clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, and Mr. Fox clerk to the justices of the borough of Newport, that prisoners and others were committed for trial by the borough justices to the quarter sessions at Usk, and the assizes for the county, that Mr. Prothero as clerk of the peace received fees on the arraignment and trial of such prisoners, &c.; that Mr. Prothero and Mr. Fox, as such partners, brought their fees, &c., prior to Jan. 1857, into one common account. In consequence of this arrangement much litigation took place, and ultimately the Court of Error decided that Mr. Fox was acting contrary to the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 102 (see Reg. v. Fox, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 216), and liable to an indictment, and having been found guilty upon such an indictment a fine of 1*s*. was imposed upon him. During the progress of the litigation, and before the decision of the Court of Error, Mr. Fox, and Mr. Prothero by the advice of counsel, executed the following indenture to avoid the effect of the 102nd section of the above statute.

"This indenture, made the 11th March 1858, between Charles Prothero, of Newport, in the county of Monmouth, gentleman, of the one part, and Charles Burton Fox, of Newport aforesaid, gentleman, of the other part. Whereas prior to and since the 1st Jan. 1857, the said C. P. and C. B. F. have carried on business together as attorneys and solicitors at Newport aforesaid, in copartnership, by verbal arrangement only, and not under any deed or articles of copartnership. And whereas no rest or division of profits of the said copartnership hath ever yet been made or taken place. And whereas doubts have been entertained as to the legality or advisability of the said C. P., who is clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, being interested or taking any share in the fees or moneys received of the said C. B. F. as clerk to the justices of the borough of Newport, in respect of prisoners committed for trial at the general or quarter sessions, or any adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of Monmouth, and of the said C. B. F. being interested in or taking any share in the fees or other moneys received by the said C. P. as clerk of the peace for the county of Monmouth, in respect of prisoners committed for trial by the justices of the borough of Newport aforesaid, to or of whom the said C. B. F. is the clerk, and the said parties hereto have accordingly agreed to enter into these presents for the purpose of removing such doubts and all questions relating thereto. Now this indenture witnesseth, and it is hereby mutually declared and agreed by and between the said parties hereto, and each of them the said C. P. and C. B. F. doth hereby for himself, &c., covenant, agree and declare to and with the other of them, his heirs, &c., that as and from the 1st Jan. 1857, and henceforth during the continuance of the partnership between the said C. P. and C. B. F., upon any and every rest and division of profits by and between the said partners, or their or either of their executors or administrators, the said C. P., his executors or administrators, shall not take or receive, or share or have any claim or interest whatsoever in all or any of the fees or moneys received or receivable by or payable to the said C. B. the borough of Newport aforesaid, or any one or more of them, at any court of gaol delivery, or general or quarter sessions, or any adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of Monmouth, or any part or parts of such last-mentioned fees or moneys respectively. And the said C. P. doth hereby, for himself, &c., relinquish, release and quit claim to all and every such last-mentioned fees and moneys, and every part and parts thereof respectively, and all share, claim and interest whatsoever, either at law or in equity, or otherwise howsoever, of him the said C. P. therein or thereto, and doth hereby declare that the said C. B. B. F. as clerk of the justices of the borough of Newport aforesaid, for or in respect of all and every, or any prisoner or prisoners, or other person or persons whomsoever heretofore committed or hereafter to be committed for trial by the justices of the borough of Newport aforesaid, or any one or more of them, at any court of gaol delivery or general or quarter sessions, or any adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of Monmouth, as and for the sole proper fees and moneys of him the said C. B. F., his executors and administrators, and for his and their own absolute use and benefit. And further, that as and from the 1st Jan. 1857, and henceforth during the continuance of the said copartnership, upon any and every rest and division of profits by and between the said parties hereto, or their, or either of their executors or administrators, the said C. B. F., his executors or administrators, shall not receive or take or share, or have any claim or interest whatsoever in all or any of the fees or moneys received or receivable by or payable to the said C. P. as clerk of the peace of or for the county of Monmouth or otherwise howsoever, for or in respect of the indictment, arraignment, prosecution, conviction, trial, sentence, judgment, or acquittal, or other proceeding whatsoever, at or before or by any court of gaol delivery or general or quarter sessions, or any adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of Monmouth, of all and every, or any prisoner or prisoners, or other person or persons whomsoever, heretofore committed or hereafter to be committed for trial by the justices of the borough of Newport aforesaid, or any one or more of them, at any court of gaol delivery, or general or quarter sessions, or any adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of Monmouth, or any part or parts of such last-mentioned fees or moneys respectively. borough of N. aforesaid, or any one or more of them, to or at any court of gaol delivery, or general or quarter sessions, or adjourned sessions of the peace for the county of M., as and for the sole proper fees and moneys of him the said C. P., his executors and administrators, and for his and their own absolute use and benefit. In witness, &c."

The justices having taken advice as to the effect of the deed, resolved to continue Mr. Fox in his office as clerk to them. Afterwards, however, at a meeting of ratepayers of the borough of Newport, a Mr. Brown and a Mr. Geo. Williams made speeches containing libellous matter upon Mr. Fox, the report of which speeches, with some unjustifiable comments, constituted the libel complained of. At the trial Byles, J. ruled that the operation of the deed of March 1856, so far as the prospective part of the deed was concerned, was to make the subsequent acting of Mr. Fox legal; but reserved leave to the defendant to move for a new trial for the purpose of questioning that ruling.

Huddleston now moved accordingly, and also for a new trial on the ground that the damages were excessive. It is submitted that the ruling of Byles, J. was a misdirection; and that the execution of the deed of March 1858 has not avoided the effect of sect. 102 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. By sect. 102 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, after giving the borough justices a power to appoint a clerk, it is provided "that it shall not be lawful for the said justices to appoint or continue as such clerk to the justices any alderman or councillor of such borough, or clerk of the peace of such borough, or the partner of such clerk of the peace, or any clerk or person in the employ of such clerk of the peace, provided also that it shall not be lawful for the said clerk to the justices, by himself or his partner, to be directly or indirectly interested or employed in the prosecution of any offender committed for trial by the justices of whom he shall be such clerk as aforesaid, or any of them, at any court of gaol delivery or general or quarter sessions. And any person being an alderman or councillor, or clerk of the peace of any borough, or the partner or clerk, or in the employ of such clerk of the peace, who shall act as clerk to the justices of such borough, or shall otherwise offend in the premises, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of 100*l.*, one moiety thereof, to the treasurer of such borough to be paid," &c. If the plaintiff is in any way interested by himself or his partner in the prosecution, sect. 102 is contravened. Although the deed deprives the one of any pecuniary interest he derived through the fees of the other, still there is an indirect interest in promoting the number of prosecutions, and it may be that the clerks' and office expenses requisite for the purpose of conducting them are shared in common.

COCKBURN, C. J.—We have been informed that Byles, J. is not dissatisfied with the amount of damages, and, considering that the libel is admittedly such as cannot be justified on the ground of fair comment, and charges that the arrangement between Mr. Fox and Mr. Prothero is not a bonâ fide one, but merely colourable and fictitious, the verdict ought not to be disturbed on the ground of the amount of damages. As to the point of misdirection, I also think that there is no ground for a rule. The plaintiff has now no such interest as the statute contemplates. He has no pecuniary interest as an individual, himself or by his partner, in the office. The only interest he can have is such as a man has in the advancement of the pecuniary profits of a brother or a friend. Whether such an arrangement is to be commended, and may not be open to some observation, we have not to determine.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I also think that this was a case for substantial damages, and that a rule ought not to be granted on this ground. If there had been any evidence that the plaintiff was directly or indirectly interested in the profits of the office by his partner, it might have been different, but there was no such evidence.

HILL, J.—The libel went far beyond a bonâ fide comment, and made a grave imputation on the professional character of Mr. Fox. It was therefore a case for substantial damages. After the execution of the deed I am of opinion that Mr. Fox did not by himself or his partner directly or indirectly become interested in the profits of the office within the meaning of the statute?

Ex parte THE MAYOR OF BIRMINGHAM.

Status of mayor—Right to preside as chairman—Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 57.

The mayor of a borough is not entitled as of right, under the 57th section of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, to take the chair at the gaol sessions and other meetings of the justices; the words in that section only refer to his social rank, and not to his magisterial authority.

The Solicitor-General (Tomlinson with him), on the part of the mayor of Birmingham, moved for a rule calling upon the justices of the borough to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to allow the mayor of the said borough to take precedence and to preside as chairman at all meetings of the justices at which he should be present and where a chairman should be required.

By the affidavit it appeared that the present mayor, Thomas Lloyd, was elected to the office in 1859, the borough being a corporation under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76. In 1859 a separate commission of the peace had been granted to the borough. In 1859 disputes having arisen between the borough justices and Sir John Rattcliff, the then mayor, as to his right to take the chair and preside over the gaol and other sessions and meetings as of right, by virtue of his office, certain of the other justices of the borough insisted that he had no such right, and they then elected another of their number to perform the duties of chairman.

On the 9th Jan. last, at a gaol session, there were present thirteen justices, including the mayor. When the business was about to commence the mayor took the chair and invited the other justices present to proceed with the business, whereupon a discussion arose as to the right to act as chairman, and a motion was made, seconded and carried, that Mr. Wart should take the chair. The mayor thereupon left the chair and the council chamber, after protesting against the proceedings, and the justices proceeded with the business. The mayor now stated in his affidavit that he had made inquiries as to the practice of other principal boroughs and cities, and found that it was the general and unchallenged practice of the mayor to take the chair as of right and by virtue of his office. In the present case the mayor has applied to the Home Secretary, who took the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, who were of opinion that the mayor was entitled as of right under the Municipal Corporation Act. After the mayor had returned from the meeting, the justices sent him a memorandum, stating that he had no right to preside; that the justices were independent of the town council; that all justices were in the eye of the law equal and that, in fact, they could carry on the business without appointing a chairman, or elect whom they thought proper; that they had taken the opinion of counsel, and that they determined to insist on their right to appoint their own chairman until they should be commanded by this court to do otherwise.

It was now argued that the Municipal Corporation Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 57, gives the mayor for the time being of every borough, during the time of his mayoralty, precedence in all places within the borough; and that the present was the proper and only way to insist on such right. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Are all justices of the peace equal in the eye of the law? I don't find words that the mayor is to have precedence as a justice of the peace. BLACKBURN, J.—It merely means precedence in point of dignity.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is a proper mark of respect to place the mayor in the chair, but there can be no compulsion. The words in the statute plainly refer to the mayor's social rank, and not to his magisterial authority.

BOSANQUET v. HEATH.

HEATH v. BOSANQUET.

Ecclesiastical law—Chapel—Proprietary—Rights.

A churchwarden of a parish, as such, has no rights over a proprietary chapel in the parish devoted to the performance of divine service according to the rites of the Established Church.

The proprietor of an unconsecrated chapel, though open for the performance of divine service according to the rites of the Established Church, has a right to request any one therein to depart, and, if he refuses, to remove him by ordinary legal measures.

Bosanquet v. Heath.

Declaration for an assault and false imprisonment.

Pleas:—That the defendant was possessed of a chapel wherein the plaintiff was trespassing and doing damage; that the defendant requested the plaintiff to leave the chapel, which the plaintiff refused to do, whereupon the defendant gently laid his hands upon the plaintiff to remove him, doing no more than was necessary for that purpose, which is the alleged assault complained of, and thereupon the plaintiff being still in the said house resisted and assaulted the defendant, who thereupon necessarily committed the other trespasses in his own defence, and in defence of the said chapel of the defendant.

Replication.—That the plaintiff being vicar and incumbent of the parish of Enfield, had dedicated and devoted the said chapel, the same being situate in the said parish, and within the diocese and jurisdiction of the Bishop of London, to the worship of God according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England as by law established, for the celebration of which said worship in the said chapel the said bishop had duly granted his licence according to law, and which said licence was at the said time when, &c. in full force. That the plaintiff was at the said time when, &c. one of the churchwardens of the said parish, and an inhabitant and parishioner of the same, and that at the said time when, &c., the same being Sunday, the said chapel being then open, with the defendant's consent, for the purpose of celebrating divine service there, and such service being about to commence, the plaintiff went into and was in the said chapel for the purpose of joining in the celebration of divine worship therein, according to the rites and ceremonies aforesaid, and of worshipping God therein according to the same, and was desirous of remaining therein for the purposes aforesaid.

Demurrer thereto and joinder.

Heath v. Bosanquet.

Trespass for breaking and entering a messuage, chapel and premises of the plaintiff at Clay-hill, in the parish of Enfield, Middlesex, and breaking open a box and taking away plate, velvet and furniture.

Pleas:—1. That the said chapel was within the diocese and jurisdiction of the Bishop of London, and was dedicated by the plaintiff, then being the vicar and incumbent of the parish of Enfield, to the worship of God according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England as by law established, for the celebration of which said worship in the said chapel the bishop had duly granted his licence according to the statutes in that behalf. That defendant was one of the churchwardens of the said parish, and an inhabitant and parishioner, there then being no chapelwarden of the said chapel, and that at the said time when, &c., the same being Sunday, and being one of the usual days for the celebration of divine service and of the Lord's Supper in the said chapel, the said chapel being then with the plaintiff's assent open for the celebrating divine service therein, and for the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the defendant went into and was and remained in the said chapel for the purpose of joining in the celebration of divine worship therein according to the rites and ceremonies aforesaid, &c. 2. Justifying breaking open the box and taking the plate for the purpose of collecting the alms at the offertory as churchwarden as aforesaid. 3 and 4. Justifying the trespasses as to the velvet and furniture, as churchwarden as aforesaid, for the purpose of arranging the communion-table and walls adjacent, according to the rites of the Established Church.

Demurrers to the pleas and joinder therein.

M. Smith (Coleridge with him) for the vicar.—What is called a chapel in the pleadings is a mere secular building in point of law, and the defendant, as churchwarden of the parish, had no right in the chapel. It does not appear that the chapel has been consecrated to the service of the Church of England, and the public have no right to the use of it: (3 Instit. 203.) The licence to the clerk to perform divine service in the building is only a personal licence. [COCKBURN, C.J.—What is there to prevent the proprietor charging one shilling admission to each person?] Nothing: (Moysey v. Hilcoate, 2 Hag. 30; Farnworth v. Bishop of Chester, 4 B. & C. 553.)

Field (Bovill with him) for Captain Bosanquet, the churchwarden.—The vicar in his plea calls the building a chapel, and, as against him, that must be taken to mean a legal chapel. It is quite consistent with the pleadings that this is a chapel of ease. The defendant Bosanquet could not be turned out according to the 52 Geo. 3, c. 159, s. 11. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The chapel being open for service, the plaintiff might not be a trespasser for entering; but the proprietor has a right to determine the licence to enter at any moment.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—This case is free from any doubt. We have not to determine the intrinsic merits of the case, but what is the law. The pleadings disclose only that this was a chapel, and we are bound to construe it as merely a private proprietary chapel, dedicated by the owner to the performance of divine service, according to the rites of the Church of England, retaining over it his rights of property, and never intending to divest his right of property over it, or to dedicate it to the parish at large. The owner therefore has a right to prescribe what persons shall or shall not remain in it; and where a person, as here, claims a right to be there, he may call on him to depart, and if he will not, he may remove him in a legal way. Our judgment ought therefore to be for the vicar.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. The facts in the case are these: This is a private chapel, not consecrated for the use of the parish, and therefore the owner retained his rights of property over it, and though open, it must be considered as open for the purpose of private worship.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. Mr. Heath is on these pleadings the proprietor of the chapel. It was contended that he was bound to admit Captain Bosanquet, because the chapel was open for divine service, but there is no authority for that.

Judgment for the vicar.

REG. on the prosecution of THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE STRAND UNION (respondents) AND THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF THE PARISH OF ST. GILES-IN-THE-FIELDS (appellants).

Order of removal—Lunatic pauper—Unemancipated child—Status of irremovability of father—Order of maintenance.

The unemancipated child of a person who has acquired the status of irremovability becomes thereby himself irremovable, so that an order of maintenance made with reference to himself as a lunatic pauper should not be made upon his parish of settlement, but upon the parish where he has obtained his status of irremovability.

The parish of settlement of A. was St. Giles-in-the-Fields, but he obtained the status of irremovability by residence in St. Anne's, Westminster. B, his unemancipated child, being a lunatic pauper, was removed to an asylum, and an order of maintenance was made upon St. Giles-in-the-Fields:

It is, that upon a proper construction of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, and the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, the order should have been made upon St. Anne's, Westminster, and was therefore bad.

This was a case stated for the opinion of this court under the provisions of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11.

It was stated that on the 17th Oct. 1854 James Randall, who was then eighteen years of age, was living unemancipated with his father Thomas Randall (who is still alive), in the parish of St. Anne, Westminster, in the Strand Union, Middlesex, and on that day the said James Randall having become insane, was removed to the county lunatic asylum, and has been maintained therein ever since, and ever since and during this period has been and still is there as a pauper lunatic. He never gained a settlement in his own right. At the time of his removal to the asylum his father was legally settled in the parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, Middlesex, by reason of having gained a settlement in such parish by renting a tenement, and which settlement the said Thomas Randall still retains. The said Thomas Randall and his said son James Randall the lunatic, who lived with him as part of his family, had each resided for five years and upwards in the said parish of St. Anne, Westminster, next before the 17th Oct. 1854, when such lunatic was removed to the said asylum. After his son's removal to the asylum, Thomas Randall continued to reside in the said parish of St. Anne, Westminster, until three years ago, when he left the parish without any intention of returning thereto, and he has, in fact, never since returned thereto. After the lunatic had been sent to the asylum, and down to the 15th Sept. 1859, his maintenance and support therein were charged to the common fund of the Strand Union, but after the last-mentioned day, being that on which it was discovered that his father had left such parish in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, the cost of such maintenance and support were as to the twelve months immediately preceding the said 15th Sept., transferred and for the future charged to the account of the said parish of St. Anne with the said union. On the 11th Oct. 1859 the order now appealed against was made, under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 97, adjudging the settlement of the said lunatic to be in the parish of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, and the guardians of the poor of such parish were ordered to pay the expenses incurred and paid in supporting the lunatic in the asylum within the preceding twelve months to the guardians of the poor of the Strand Union, and were also ordered to pay for the support of the said lunatic. The part of such expenses paid or incurred since the said 15th Sept. to the 11th Oct. 1859 amounts to 2*l*. and no more. It is contended, on the part of the appellants, that the lunatic was, at the time of his being conveyed to the asylum, exempt from removal to the parish of his settlement, by reason of a provision in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66; that under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, the order ought not to have been made, and that such lunatic ought to continue to be maintained in the said asylum out of the common fund of the Strand Union. The appellants also contend that if any such order may be made, it ought not to direct the payment of expenses incurred before the date thereof; or, at all events, ought not to direct the payment of expenses incurred before the said 15th Sept. 1859. It was contended on the part of the respondents, that if the said lunatic was exempt from removal, as alleged by the appellants, such lunatic being, as the respondents contend, unemancipated when his father left the parish of St. Anne as before mentioned, and having, as the respondents contend, no other settlement than that of his father, ceased to be exempt from removal by reason of any provision in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and that the order was properly made in its terms on the parish where the lunatic was settled.

The questions for the opinion of the court were—

First, whether any order can lawfully be made on the said parish of St. Giles for payment by the said parish of expenses for the lodging, medicine, clothing, and care of the said lunatic in the said asylum?

Secondly, whether, assuming that any such order may be made, the payment of past expenses may, by such order, be ordered to be made?

Thirdly, whether, if the payment of past expenses may be so ordered, all the expenses incurred during the twelve months next before the order, or such part only as may have been incurred since the said 15th Sept. 1859, may and ought to be directed to be made by such order?

If the first question ought to be answered in the affirmative, the order is to be confirmed; but if in the negative, the order is to be quashed.

The second and third questions were given up by the appellants upon the argument.

By the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1, it is enacted that "no person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any person from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant."

Provided always, that whenever any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removeable whenever he or she is removeable, and shall not be removeable when he or she is not removeable."

This last proviso was repealed by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, and the following enacted in its stead: "That the said last proviso be repealed, and that instead thereof the following be enacted: Provided always that whenever any person should have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children should be removeable from any parish or place from which he or she would be removeable notwithstanding any provisions of the said recited Act, and should not be removeable from any parish or place from which he or she would not be removeable by reason of any provision in the said recited Act."

By the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, it is enacted: "That all the expenses incurred since the 29th day of September 1853, or hereafter to be incurred in and about the examination, bringing before a justice or justices, removal, lodging, maintenance, medicine, clothing and care of a pauper lunatic heretofore or hereafter removed to an asylum, registered hospital, or licensed house under the authority of this or any other Act, who would at the time of his being conveyed to such asylum, hospital, or house have been exempt from removal to the parish of his settlement or the country of his birth by reason of some provision in the Act of the session holden in the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty, chapter sixty-six, shall be paid by the guardians of the parish wherein such lunatic shall have acquired such exemption if such parish be subject to a separate board of guardians, or by the overseers of such parish where the same is not subject to such separate board," &c.

Poland now appeared on behalf of the respondents, and contended that the order was valid, for that the lunatic had not himself acquired such a status of irremovability as is contemplated by the 102nd section of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, that section only referring to the irremovability mentioned in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and not to the irremovability of a child as referred to in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, s. 1; and that at all events, as the irremovability of the child continued only so long as the parent continued irremovable, its own irremovability ceased when its father lost his irremovability by quitting the parish of St. Anne three years ago: (Reg. v. Cudham, 28 L. J. 105, M. C.; R. v. St. Ann's, Blackfriars, 2 Ell. & Bl. 440.)

Keane, for the appellants, argued that the order was bad, for that the child having at the time of the order acquired through its father the status of irremovability, came within the provision of sect. 102 of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97: (Reg. v. Elvet, 29 L. J. 17, M. C.) (He was stopped by the court.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—The whole force of Mr. Poland's argument rests upon the contention that the proviso in the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, is not to be considered as a part of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. If it is to be considered as a part of it, then the case comes within the express provision of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102. Now it is clear to my mind that the proviso of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, was intended to be a substitution of the proviso in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and that the meaning of the Legislature was to incorporate the provision of the subsequent Act into the former one, and with reference therefore to the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 102, that the second Act should be considered as a part of the first Act.

BLACKBURN, J.—I think so too. The words of the 102nd section of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, are that all expenses incurred with reference to a lunatic pauper removed under the authority of the Act, "who would at the time of his being conveyed to such asylum, hospital, or licensed house under the authority of this or any other Act, have been exempt from removal to the parish of his settlement or the country of his birth, by reason of some provision in the Act of the session holden in the ninth and tenth years of her Majesty, chapter sixty-six, shall be paid by the guardians of the parish wherein such lunatic shall have acquired such exemption." The first question is, whether the lunatic, when he was conveyed to the asylum, had acquired an exemption from removal under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66? Now in that statute the first provision is that a person who has resided for five years in a parish should not be removed from it, and then there is a proviso which was afterwards repealed by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, and another substituted for it, and the effect of that subsequent proviso is, that it becomes a portion of the former Act.

If with the assistance of the two statutes the lunatic was irremovable at the time the order was made, then comes the next question, whether in this case the lunatic pauper was exempt from removal? The language used in the case of Reg. v. Elvet is very strong upon this point, showing that a child obtains irremovability, though only through its parent. It may be that the effect of this is, that a lunatic pauper may be a burden to the parish, even after the parent has ceased to be irremovable, but the Legislature may have intended that, irrespective of such questions, it was desirable to settle the question of liability at once. The order was therefore not properly made, and there must be judgment for the appellants.

Judgment for the appellants without costs.(a)

Prohibition to Arches Court—Church-rate—Notice of meeting.

"Notice is hereby given, the churchwardens and overseers, and other principal inhabitants of this parish, are requested to meet in the vestry on the 14th July, &c., to examine the churchwardens' accounts, and to grant a rate."

Held, a sufficient notice; this court refusing a writ of prohibition to the Ecclesiastical Court to stop a suit for subtraction of church-rates, the defendant having neglected his right of appeal.

Philbrick moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff and the judge of the Arches Court to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to prevent the judge from further proceeding in a suit of subtraction of church-rates. The libel had been opposed, but was admitted by the court, and the defendant ordered to bring in his defensive allegation. The first article of the libel alleged that the parish church of Hadleigh, in the county of Suffolk, was out of repair, and that there were no funds out of which the expense could be defrayed; that on the 14th July 1858 the churchwardens and other ratepayers met in the vestry-room to make a rate, when certain proceedings took place, and on a poll being demanded by the churchwardens, a church-rate was carried. The second article referred to certain paper writings, one of which was the following notice of the said vestry meeting, which notice it was contended was insufficient. It was as follows:—"Notice is hereby given, the churchwardens, overseers and other principal inhabitants of this parish, are requested to meet in the vestry on Wednesday, the 14th July instant, at half-past nine o'clock in the forenoon, to examine the churchwardens' accounts and to grant them a rate. Given under our hands this 3rd day of July 1858. Joseph Rand, William Grimwade, Churchwardens." It was contended in the Arches Court that the above notice was defective, but the judge (Dr. Lushington) overruled the objection, and desired the defendant to bring in his defensive allegations. It was now contended that such decision of the judge was an error in point of law. At the present time vestry meetings are regulated by Sturges Bourne's Act, 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, which enacts that "no vestry or meeting of the inhabitants in vestry of or for any parish shall be holden until public notice shall have been given of such vestry, and of the place and time of holding the same, and of the special purpose thereof, three days at the least before the day to be appointed for holding such vestry." This notice is informal and incorrect; first, it is not addressed to all who had a right to attend, but only to the churchwardens, overseers, and other principal inhabitants; secondly, no parish is named; thirdly, it is not stated what rate it is proposed to make. [HILL, J. referred to the case of Griffin v. Ellis, 11 A. & E. 743, as showing that the mere admission of a pleading by an ecclesiastical court proving a rate void at common law, was not sufficient to enable this court to grant a prohibition.] Blunt v. Harwood, 8 A. & E. 610; Gould v. Gapper, 5 East, 345; Gare v. Gapper, 3 East, 472, are in defendants' favour, and have never been overruled. [HILL, J.—Yes, but the case of Griffin v. Ellis was decided on demurrer, and might have been appealed against.] It does not overrule the case referred to. He also referred to Richetts v. Bodenham, 4 A. &

E. 433. The judge has decided that this notice is sufficient. Defendant says he ought to have rejected the libel altogether, and that he was wrong in his construction of the statute. [COCKBURN, C.J.—All the inhabitants of the parish are entitled to be present, but only those who are rated are entitled to vote. You cannot contend that the notice would be bad if the word "principal" had been left out. Was this objection taken in the Ecclesiastical Court? Yes, and it was overruled by the judge. [COCKBURN, C.J.—It does not seem to me that this form of notice would prevent any one from attending and exercising their rights; the request to meet in the vestry is the same as if the notice had said the vestry of the parish on the church-door of which this notice is stuck. The defendant might have appealed to the Privy Council.] No doubt blame attaches to the defendant for allowing the time to appeal to go by. A similar application to the present had been made to the C. P. and refused. The Act requires that notice should be given to all the parishioners, not alone to the principal parishioners, and this notice might well include lodgers; it ought to have been addressed to the occupiers and ratepayers. [COCKBURN, C. J.—How could the insertion of the word "principal" have misled any one? BLACKBURN, C.J.—We say "worthy and independent electors," but that does not exclude the unworthy and corrupt.] Clutton v. Cherry, 2 Phil. 373; Smith v. Deighton, 8 Moore P. C. 179; Bacon's Abr. tit. "Churchwardens," C.; Rind and another v. Green and another, 6 Jur. N.S. 303, were also cited.

COCKBURN, C.J.—We do not think there is anything in these objections, as no practical inconvenience or mischief can arise. We think we ought not to interfere, especially as defendant might have appealed.

Held, a good committal.

Overend, Q.C. moved for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of William Thompson, a prisoner now under confinement in Preston gaol, Lancashire, with a view to his being discharged. It appeared that on the 2nd Nov. an information was laid against the prisoner for assaulting and abusing a woman named Susannah Taylor; on the following day he was taken before the magistrates, when the prosecutrix gave evidence, which, if true, would go to show that a rape had been committed on her person by the prisoner, and the magistrates thereupon committed him to prison for six calendar months. It was now contended that the charge, as stated by the prosecutrix, was such an one as ought to be tried by a jury; that as soon as the woman had deposed to the felony having been perpetrated, the magistrates were ousted of their jurisdiction, and they were bound to commit the prisoner for trial; they could not in such a case deal with the charge summarily, for their jurisdiction was gone; they had only power to convict in cases of assault. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Suppose the justices were of opinion that there had been no rape, and no assault with intent, but merely an assault.] As soon as the charge of rape was made they ceased to have jurisdiction. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The man is brought before the justices, and no objection is then made; the prisoner did not demand to be tried by a jury, but was content with the justices' decision, and they believed him to be guilty of an assault. HILL, J.—The charge was entered as an assault, which was consistent with the evidence; the man might possibly have committed a grossly indecent assault, and yet it might not be with an intent to commit a rape, and the justices believing that, convicted him of the lesser offence. COCKBURN, C.J.—The woman first of all treats it as the minor offence, the justices doubt the evidence as to the higher offence.] There was a further objection to the commitment, that nothing was said in it as to whether the defendant was to be imprisoned with or without hard labour.

Rule refused on the first point, granted on the last.

SOMERVILLE v. MIREHOUSE.

Justices—Action against—Mistake of law—Quashing order.

Upon a summons for nonpayment of church-rates, the ratepayer set up a demand by the collector for the rate, and a refusal by himself to pay it, more than six months before the application for the summons to oust the jurisdiction of the justices (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11); on which the other side proved a second demand and refusal within the six months, whereupon the justices made an order for payment (53 Geo. 3, c. 127). This order was removed by certiorari, and quashed on the ground that the cause of complaint was complete on the first demand and refusal:

Held, that the justices were not liable to an action for making the order, though the ratepayer had incurred costs in quashing it.

This was an action against two justices of the peace for the county of Gloucester. From the facts alleged in the pleadings it appeared that the plaintiff was the occupier of a mill, and duly rated to the church-rate, and that he was summoned before the defendants, as justices, to show cause why he neglected and refused to pay the rate; that there was a demand by the collector and a refusal to pay by the plaintiff more than six months before the application for the summons, and another demand and refusal within the six months; that it was contended that the cause of complaint was complete upon the first demand and refusal, and that therefore the justices had no jurisdiction to entertain the summons (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 s. 11); that the justices held that the second demand and refusal to pay the rate was sufficient to give them authority, and they accordingly made an order for payment on the plaintiff; that the order was then brought up by certiorari into this court, and quashed on the ground that the cause of complaint was complete upon the first demand and refusal.

There was a demurrer to the declaration on the ground that it disclosed no cause of action.

J. Gray in support of the demurrer.—The action will not lie. It may be taken that the justices acted wrongly in making the order. There is nothing to show that their so doing was not an honest mistake as to the law, and no malice being alleged, the action will not lie. The justices may have acted without jurisdiction, but that under the circumstances gives no cause of action. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, says that for any act done by a justice of the peace in a matter of which by law he has not jurisdiction, any person injured thereby may maintain an action without alleging malice or want of reasonable and probable cause, provided nevertheless that no such action shall be brought for anything done under such conviction or order until after such conviction shall have been quashed. There is no new cause of action given by the statute, and this action is not brought for anything done under the order. This is only an error of judgment on the part of the justices, and the costs of quashing the order cannot constitute a cause of action. It is damnum absque injuriâ: (Harman v. Tappenden, 1 East, 555; Ackerley v. Parkinson, 3 M. & S. 411.)

CLEMENTS v. SMITH.

Lush (A. Wills with him) for the plaintiff.—This was a matter of which the justices had no jurisdiction.

HILL, J.—The subject-matter of complaint was within the jurisdiction of the justices, and when before them the plaintiff set up by way of answer to it a demand and refusal more than six months before the application for the summons to oust the justices of their jurisdiction, to which the other side replied a second demand and refusal within six months. Upon that contention the justices were bound to give a decision, and they did so, but they gave a wrong one.

Lush.—Here the plaintiff incurred costs in quashing the order so made.

HILL, J.—If you are right there ought to be an action in every case in which a conviction is quashed, to recover the costs of quashing it.

Lush.—The effect of the limitation in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, is to put the justices in the same position as if they had no jurisdiction at all.

HILL, J.—The true rule is laid down in Barton v. Bricknell, 13 Q. B. 393, which, unless the defendants can be fixed with malice, is a decision in point.

COCKBURN, C.J.—Here the subject-matter was within the jurisdiction of the justices, and it was their duty to decide the point raised. It is like an erroneous direction as to whether a case is taken out of the Statute of Limitations by evidence tending to that purpose.

Lush.—It would be like the case of a warrant which recited all the facts on the face of it, and which would therefore manifestly be bad on the face.

By the COURT, Judgment for the defendants.

CLEMENTS (appellant) v. SMITH (respondent).

Turnpike toll—Cart laden with barley going to be ground for barley-meal for the owner's pigs—Exemption—3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32.

By the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, sect. 32, no toll is to be demanded for any horse or carriage employed in conveying any hay, straw, fodder for cattle, and corn in the straw which has grown or arisen on land or ground in the occupation of the owner of any such hay, straw, fodder, or corn in the straw.

Held, that a cart laden with barley, going to be ground for barley-meal for the owner's pigs, and one laden with barley-meal for such pigs, were exempt from toll under the foregoing section.

This was a case stated by justices under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. It appeared that an information was laid by the appellant, who was the toll collector at a gate upon a turnpike-road in Essex, against the respondent, for having on the 16th Jan. last claimed and taken the benefit of exemption from toll, he (the said respondent) not being entitled to the same, contrary to the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 36, and the 9 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 17.

It appeared that the respondent on the day in question came to the toll-gate kept by the appellant with a horse and cart, and claimed to pass and did pass through without payment of toll, alleging that he was carrying threshed barley to the mill to be ground into meal for his master's pigs, and that on his return laden he again claimed to pass and did pass through the same gate without payment of toll, on the ground that he was laden with barley-meal to be used as food for his master's pigs. It was proved on behalf of the respondent that at the time of the alleged offence he was the servant of a Mr. Wood, an occupier of land at Rochford and Hawkwell; that the barley which he was conveying was grown on his master's farm, whence it was taken to the mill to be ground into meal for feeding pigs upon the farm; that on his return from the mill his cart was laden with barley-meal delivered to him at the mill as the produce of another parcel of his master's barley, grown on the said farm, which had been previously sent to be ground; that the said meal was afterwards actually consumed by his said master's pigs on his said land; and that the said horse and cart had not been employed in any other way during the same day. On these facts the justices decided that the barley and barley-meal were both fodder for cattle, within the meaning of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32; and further, that, if not fodder for cattle, they were agricultural produce grown on the lands of the owner, and not bought, sold, or disposed of, or going so to be, within the meaning of the same section, and as such were exempt from toll: and on these grounds they dismissed the information.

By the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 32, it is enacted that "no toll shall be demanded or taken by virtue of this or any other Act or Acts of Parliament on any turnpike-road for (inter alia) any horse, beast, or other cattle or carriage employed in carrying or conveying, having been employed only in carrying or conveying, on the same day . . . any hay, straw, fodder for cattle and corn in the straw which has grown or arisen on land or ground in the occupation of the owner of any such hay, straw, fodder, or corn in the straw, potatoes, or other agricultural produce, and which has not been bought, sold, or disposed of, nor is going to be sold or disposed of."

Round now appeared for the appellant, and contended that the respondent was not exempt upon either occasion when he passed through the toll-gate, for that neither barley nor barley-meal was within the exemption; that barley itself was not exempt was obvious from the exemption given to corn in the straw. [COCKBURN, C.J.—The mention of corn in the straw certainly excludes corn itself, but then is not the barley in this case within the meaning of the word "fodder?" The Act seems to have intended to exempt food to be used for agricultural purposes.] Then as to barley-meal. That is a manufactured article. [COCKBURN, C.J.—So it may be said of hay.] It is difficult to say where the manufacturing process commences. It may be said that loaves of bread are agricultural produce. [BLACKBURN, J.—But they do not give loaves of bread to cattle.] Oil-cake may be said to be agricultural produce, and yet it would be clearly liable to toll. In this case the barley in the first instance was not being taken for the purposes of food—it was being taken to the mill to be ground, and the barley-meal that was brought back was not the produce of the barley that was then taken.

Shaw, for the respondent, was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think the justices were right in their determination. The words of the exemption are certainly large enough to comprehend the case, and the clause being intended in favour of agriculture it ought to be construed liberally. I had some difficulty at first in saying that barley going to be ground is to be considered as fodder for cattle; but I think that as soon as it is intended for fodder it may be considered as vested with the privileges of exemption; otherwise this difficulty may arise, that if produce intended for fodder has to be taken some distance to be prepared it may be subject to toll. Take the case of bruising oats—the bruising machine may be in one part of the farm whilst the oats are to be consumed in another, and in going to the machine it may be necessary to pass through a toll-gate, when, according to this argument, a toll might be demanded. So in the case which sometimes occurs in different parts where turnips are first boiled before eaten by the cattle—the boiling may take place at a distance from the place where the turnips are to be eaten, and there may be a turnpike in the way. But looking at what was the manifest intention of the Act, it is clear that it is intended that whenever the produce is destined for the food of cattle then the exemption exists.

HAYES (appellant) v. STEVENSON (respondent).

Vagrant Act—Being upon premises for an unlawful purpose—What is an unlawful purpose.

By the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, sect. 4, it is enacted that any person being found in or upon any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or outhouse, or in any inclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond:

Held, that the words "any unlawful purpose" mean "for the purpose of violating some positive law," and that being upon such premises for the purpose of fornication is not an "unlawful purpose" within the meaning of the section.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, upon a conviction of the appellant under sect. 4 of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 83 (the Vagrant Act). By that section it is enacted (inter alia) that "every person being found in or upon any dwelling-house, warehouse, coach-house, stable, or outhouse, or in any inclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose," shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond.

In this case it was stated that the appellant was found in a private park with a female, being there for the purpose of fornication, and under the above section he was convicted, and sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment.

Sligh now appeared for the appellant, and contended that the words in the section, "for any unlawful purpose," meant any purpose that was criminal, and not merely immoral. [HILL, J.—Something punishable by statute or common law.] It could not have been intended to have included a party who was merely committing a trespass.

No one appeared in support of the conviction.

COCKBURN, C.J.—According to the construction which the justices have put upon the Act, any civil trespass would be within the meaning of the Act. A man who goes inside an area gate to court a servant-maid would be a trespasser, and so liable to be convicted. The Act must mean that the party is there for the purpose of violating some positive law. This is only a civil trespass, and not a criminal act.

Conviction quashed.

DOICK (appellant) v. PHELPS (respondent).

The Watermen's and Lightermen's Act 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 133)—Liability of unlicensed parties.

Under the Watermen's and Lightermen's Act 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 133), it is an offence punishable upon summary conviction for any person, not being a freeman licensed in pursuance of the Act, &c., to act as a waterman or lighterman, or ply, or work or navigate any wherry, passenger-boat, lighter, vessel or other craft upon the river Thames, from or to any place or places, ship or vessel, within the limits, i. e., from Teddington Locks to Lower Hope Point, for hire or gain; and this, notwithstanding the exemption in sect. 7 of the said Act, and notwithstanding also that the vessel navigated has come from a distance beyond Teddington Locks.

This was a case stated under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, as follows:—On the 11th Feb. last Thomas Doick appeared before one of the metropolitan police magistrates to answer the complaint of Alexander Phelps, a freeman of the Company of the Master Wardens and Commonalty of Watermen and Lightermen of the River Thames, for that on the 3rd day of the said month of February, upon the river Thames between Tedding-ton-lock in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and Lower Hope Point, near Gravesend, in the county of Kent, to wit at the parish of Putney in the county of Surrey, the said defendant, not being licensed in pursuance of or qualified according to the Watermen's and Lightermen's Amendment Act 1859, did then and there unlawfully act as a lighterman, working and navigating a certain barge upon the said river for hire and gain, contrary to the said statute. Upon the hearing of the complaint it was admitted that at the time of committing the alleged offence the defendant was neither licensed nor qualified as aforesaid, and was acting as a lighterman, working and navigating for hire and gain on the said 3rd Feb., on the said river Thames at Putney, within the limits mentioned in the said Act, a barge carrying timber from the town of Guildford, in the county of Surrey, which is beyond Teddington-lock aforesaid, and also beyond the town of Kingston, in the county of Surrey; that the said barge was a flat-bottomed barge, and would have been deemed to be a western barge within the meaning of the 101st section of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 75, intituled "An Act for the better regulation of the watermen and lightermen on the river Thames between Yantlet Creek and Windsor." This Act was repealed by the first-mentioned Act, but it is, among other things, provided by the first-mentioned Act, sect. 7, that such repeal shall not affect any appointment or licence already made or granted under any enactment thereby repealed. The said 101st section of the repealed Act exempted from the operation of that Act barges navigating the Thames from Kingston, in the county of Surrey, and places above it, to London-bridge, so that such barges might have been navigated so far as London-bridge by persons neither freemen of the Watermen's Company nor their apprentices. The defendant contended that, as he was working and navigating what would have been deemed under the said repealed Act to be a western barge, his right so to act was preserved by the 7th section of the said first-mentioned Act; and also that the 54th section of the said first-mentioned Act, under which the complaint was laid, only applies to craft starting from or stopping at a place between Teddington-lock and Lower Hope Point aforesaid, and that as he had started from Guildford aforesaid, there being no evidence as to where he had stopped, he could not be convicted of an offence under the 54th section. The magistrate, however, decided that the defendant was guilty of the said offence, upon the grounds that the exemption in favour of western barges, referred to in the 101st section of the said repealed Act, not having been re-enacted in the said first-mentioned Act, did not then exist; that such exemption is not an appointment or licence within the meaning of the 7th section of the said first-mentioned Act, and that the 54th section of the first-mentioned Act applies to a barge starting from a place beyond the limits of that Act, as Guildford aforesaid, and navigated within such limits, as at Putney aforesaid, because such barge must necessarily be navigated on the river from Teddington-lock, the first place within such limits. He therefore adjudged the defendant to pay for his said offence the sum of sixpence and two shillings for costs.

By the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 101, it is enacted that nothing in the Act shall extend to any western barges; and that all flat-bottomed boats and barges navigated from the town of Kingston, in the county of Surrey, or any place or places beyond the said town, shall be deemed western barges, and shall and may be navigated on the said river Thames as far as London-bridge.

By the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 133, the former Act was repealed, but it was enacted by sect. 7 that such repeal shall not affect "any appointment or licence duly made or granted under any enactment hereby repealed."

By the 54th section it is enacted, that "if any person not being a freeman licensed in pursuance of this Act, or an apprentice qualified according to this Act to a freeman, or to the widow of a freeman of the said company (except as hereinafter is mentioned), shall at any time act as a waterman or lighterman, or ply or work or navigate any wherry, passenger-boat, lighter, vessel, or other craft upon the said river, from or to any place or places or ship or vessel within the limits of this Act, for hire or gain (except as hereinafter mentioned), every such person shall forfeit and pay for every such offence any sum not exceeding forty shillings," &c.

Scotland now appeared for the respondent, and contended that, whatever exemption may have existed under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 77, s. 101, it no longer exists since the passing of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 133, which wholly omits all reference to it, and that the provision in sect. 7 of the latter Act does not apply to such a case, it not being shown that the appellant had any appointment or licence.

Bovill, Q. C. (Prentice with him), argued, first, that the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 133, does not apply to a barge coming from a place not on the river Thames; secondly, that the old exemption is kept alive by sect. 7 of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 133. [HILL, J.—It is really extraordinary, if the Legislature intended to preserve to such persons these rights with reference to western barges, that it had not been enacted in positive terms. COCKBURN, C. J.—The only exemptions are in favour of appointments and licences.] Then the appellant is not brought within the provision of the 54th section, as not acting as waterman or lighterman "from or to any place or places within the limits of this Act." The 66th and 67th sections also must be referred to.

COCKBURN, C. J.—The words of the two Acts are very similar, but in the last Act the exemption is not referred to. It seems to me to be exceedingly clear that the exemption was purposely omitted.

HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Re RAND AND GRIMWADE v. GREEN AND ANOTHER.

Church-rate—Prohibition—Notice convening vestry-meeting.

A notice affixed to the church-door stating that "the churchwardens, overseers and other principal inhabitants of this parish are requested to meet in the vestry, &c., to examine the churchwardens' accounts and grant them a rate," is a good and sufficient notice, and a rate made thereunder is valid.

Philbrick moved herein for a rule to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not go to the Arches Court of Canterbury to prohibit that court from proceeding in a suit of subtraction of church-rates pending in that court by the churchwardens of the parish of Hadleigh, in the county of Suffolk, against the defendants, who were joint occupiers of a farm and premises in that parish. The suit had been originally instituted in the Diocesan Court of Ely, and removed by letters of request into the Arches Court of Canterbury, and on its removal the promoters had propounded their libel, to the reception of which the defendants made several objections, but after argument the Official Principal of the Arches Court admitted the libel to proof, and decreed the defendants to bring in their responsive allegation. The first article of the libel pleaded in effect that the parish church was in need of repairs, that the churchwardens had not enough of funds in hand, wherefore they and other ratepayers of the parish, on the 14th July 1858, met in vestry to make a rate, pursuant to notice in that behalf duly and legally given, that a church-rate was proposed, and an amendment negating that rate was carried, that a poll was demanded and the rate carried, and that the defendants were therein rated at 6*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.* The notice was annexed to the libel as an exhibit, and was as follows:—

"Notice is hereby given. The churchwardens, overseers and other principal inhabitants of this parish are requested to meet in the vestry on Wednesday, 14th July inst., at half-past nine o'clock in the forenoon, to examine the churchwardens' accounts, and to grant them a rate. Given under our hands the 3rd July 1858. J. Rand, W. Grimwade, Churchwardens." It is contended that this notice is bad, because, first, it does not contain the name of the parish, and is not a sufficient notice convening a vestry meeting; secondly, it does not show that a vestry meeting will be absolutely held; thirdly, the notice is addressed to the wrong parties. The chief point arises on Sturges Bourne's Act, 58 Geo. 3, c. 69, s. 1; 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 45. [ERLE, C.J.—At common law the notice was given orally in the church, and under Select Vestry Act, 7 Will. 4, in writing on or near the church-door?] Yes. The notice is addressed to the wrong parties, and does not include all that it ought to include, and is therefore bad. It is addressed to the churchwardens, overseers, and other principal inhabitants of the parish, and not to the parishioners, being ratepayers: (Smith v. Deighton, 8 Moore, 175; Richardson v. Gladwin, E. B. & E. 138; Burn's Eccles. Law, 378; Medland v. Payne, 4 Jur. N. S. 1283; Arches Court.) It has been held that small tenement occupiers have a right to attend the vestry meeting, though they have no right to vote. Furthermore, the notice is bad, because it includes within its terms persons not entitled to vote, for there are occupiers within the parish who reside without its bounds. [BYLES, J.—Residence is not a necessary qualification for a right to vote.] No. [ERLE, C.J. referred to a passage in the Institute upon the Statute of Bridges.] There is not at common law any authority upon this point; the court therefore will, it is hoped, give the parties an opportunity of discussing it, and obtaining an authoritative opinion upon the question.

ERLE, C.J.—I think that there ought to be no rule in this case. The duty imposed upon the churchwardens is to give a notice to those who have a right to attend at a vestry meeting of the parish, that the meeting will be held, and the purpose for which it will be held. Now, looking at the notice complained of in this instance, it appears to me to comply with all the requisites; it is a notice intended for the inhabitants of Hadleigh, but the words of the notice are, "the inhabitants of this parish," and it is supposed that the inhabitants of Hadleigh might be misled, and not know that they were the persons called upon to attend. But I remember that the notice originally was the older notice by the parish clerk in the parish church of the parish, and I remember, and believe, at the time the notices were so given, it was on those occasions "the inhabitants of this parish," not the inhabitants of the parish designated by the name of its saint, which might apply to a great many parishes where the church is dedicated to the same saint; it was a specific notice, and I think a written notice affixed to the door of the church in the particular parish is more capable of being understood, and would answer the purposes directed by the statutes better if it is directed "to the inhabitants of this parish," the parish where the church is situate upon which the notice is stuck. Then is it addressed to the persons who have a right to attend? At common law all are parishioners—all that are resident within the parish, and the term "resident" being extremely vague, there being very few defined rules fixed who shall be considered to be vagrant, who shall be considered as a guest, and who shall come within the class of resident, having passed so many nights within the parish, the 58 Geo. 3 gave some defined rule by which it could be ascertained who had a right to attend at the vestry meetings when rates were to be made, and it is those who occupy property liable to be rated at that meeting. Then is this notice so addressed that any persons having a right to attend would, by reading the notice, so construe it as to consider themselves excluded? It is addressed "to the churchwardens and the overseers, and the other principal inhabitants of the parish." No case has decided that it is bound to be, in the terms of the statute, to the occupiers of rateable property. They have addressed it here to the principal inhabitants; and the parties objecting entirely fail to satisfy me that any of the persons who occupy rateable property are solely and more properly parishioners than the mere vagrants, or the parishioners generally; they entirely fail to satisfy me that they would consider themselves excluded; and though it is said there are two priests in holy orders inhabitants of the parish, who live in lodgings, and who might consider themselves to be inhabitants, and might come and find themselves, if they did come, excluded, it is an objection more in the nature of a fancy than a reality for the court to attend to. It is said that it is not a notice that the meeting will be held and those who choose to attend might be present, but it is worded in the form of requesting the parties to attend, and it is clear that language of a peremptory demand of no more force than the language of common courtesy would not render an instrument void. They are requested to attend to examine the accounts of the churchwardens and grant them a rate. It is clear that the purpose of the meeting is to make an ordinary church-rate. If an ordinary church-rate is in respect of money to be borrowed, or money borrowed to be paid off, or any unusual purpose, it ought to be specified. But in this case the words would indicate to my mind that it was an ordinary church-rate. I believe that nobody could misunderstand this notice in any of the respects in which it has been objected to, and it required some decree of astuteness to pervert the meaning and find a ground for contending that the notice was not properly expressed. I am willing to give every effect to the matters brought before us by Mr. Philbrick, and if I could entertain a doubt, beyond question I would grant a rule; but my mind positively refuses to see that the document is open to any of the objections he has made.

BYLES, J.—I also am of opinion that this is a perfectly good notice. In country parishes generally, the persons who give these notices are unlearned and unskilful persons, and if there are any documents which should receive an indulgent construction rather than a strict and adverse one, they are documents of this nature. Now I agree with my Lord Chief Justice, that when we see it is a meeting of the churchwardens and overseers and other principal inhabitants, who are to meet in vestry, and to examine the churchwardens' accounts, and to grant them a rate, no reasonable man can suppose that it was not intended to make a church-rate at that meeting. With respect to the word "principal"—for that is the objection—it is admitted, if it had stood "and other inhabitants of this parish," it would have been right, for it is clear that a residence is not necessary in order to enable a person to vote in vestry if he is a rated occupier of the parish. That is one mode of testing it. Then the word "principal" shows that the word "inhabitants" is not to be understood in its strictest sense to mean everybody who sleeps in the parish; it is one class of persons who are in some respect or other superior to the other inhabitants living in the parish. I am not sure that it is not even more correct to say the principal inhabitants. In one sense they are the principal inhabitants, the taxpayers of the parish. I remember a maxim of Lord Bacons—Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis—that if I give a ring to John Smith, and say, "William Jones, I give you this ring," that is a good gift to John Smith, because he is present, though misnamed; and if I give my ruby ring to John Smith and say "I give you this diamond ring," the misdescription is there immaterial, because the ring is present. That question would have arisen here if it had been "this parish," and the parish had been misnamed. But I cannot conceive a safer mode of giving a notice than, avoiding all questions of that kind, to stick the notice up in the most public place in the parish, and say "this parish," which is the same as saying "in the parish" on the church-door of which parish this notice is affixed. I think we should be encouraging very inconvenient and dangerous objections if we were to give the least sanction to criticisms on a notice drawn as this notice is.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that in construing these notices we should take care on the one hand that the inhabitants should have fair and reasonable notice of the object of the meeting—that a meeting is to be called to contribute a rate, and that they shall be thoroughly informed of what is about to be done. I think this notice, like every other document, should receive a reasonable construction. We must see whether within the terms of it any person who could be called upon to contribute to a rate was likely to be misled, or have any doubt as to what was to be done, and when it was to be done. Now it seems to me that, notwithstanding the very ingenious objection to the notice by the learned counsel, it does give fair and reasonable notice to the parties liable to contribute to a church-rate, that a vestry was to be holden, and that it was for the purpose of making such a rate. I therefore agree with the rest of the court in thinking that the rule should be refused. Rule refused.

REG. v. THOMAS NEWELL HOLT.

False pretences—Evidence of guilty intent.

The prisoner was charged with obtaining a specific sum from W. by false pretences. It appeared that he was employed by his master to take orders, but not to receive moneys, and he was proved to have obtained the specific sum from W. by representing that he was authorised by his master to receive it. Evidence was then admitted of the prisoner's having obtained another sum of money from another person by a similar false pretence, such obtaining not being mentioned in the indictment in any way:

Held, that such evidence was not admissible for the purpose of proving the intent of the prisoner when he committed the acts charged in the indictment.

Case reserved for the opinion of this court by the chairman of the general quarter sessions of the peace for the West Riding of the county of York, holden at Leeds on the 15th Oct. 1860.

The defendant T. N. Holt was tried on an indictment charging him with the misdemeanor of having obtained the sum of 9s. 9d. from Wm. Hirst by false pretences.

It appeared in evidence that the defendant was employed on the 19th April by one Luke Uttley to take orders for goods, but was not authorised, but forbidden, to receive money on behalf of Luke Uttley, nor did he at any time pay over or account for any moneys received to Luke Uttley; that on the 30th April the defendant obtained from W. Hirst the sum of 9s. 9d. charged in the indictment, by the representation that he was authorised by the said Luke Uttley to receive that sum on his behalf for goods delivered in pursuance of an order taken by the defendant.

The counsel on behalf of the prosecution tendered the evidence of one Samuel Uttley, to the effect that on a day not specified, but within a week from the said 30th April, the defendant obtained from him the said S. Uttley the sum of 11s. by a like representation that he (the defendant) was authorised by the said Luke Uttley to receive money on his behalf for goods delivered in pursuance of a like order taken by the defendant, such last-mentioned obtaining not being charged or in any way referred to in the indictment.

The counsel for the prisoner objected that the evidence so tendered was inadmissible.

I held, as chairman, however, that such evidence was admissible for the purpose of proving the intent of the prisoner when he committed the acts charged against him in the indictment.

I therefore received the evidence, but reserved the question whether it was properly admitted for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

The prisoner was convicted and sentence of imprisonment for four calendar months in the house of correction at Wakefield, with hard labour, was passed upon him, and he is now admitted to bail to render himself in execution.

The question for the Court of Appeal is,

Whether the evidence of Saml. Uttley was or was not rightly admitted.

E. B. W. BALME, Chairman.

No counsel appeared to argue on either side.

ERLE, C.J.—This conviction must be quashed. In the statement of the case submitted to us we cannot find any facts that would warrant us to say that the evidence was admissible. Conviction quashed.

REG. v. GEORGE OLIVER.

Indictment—Counts for grievous bodily harm and unlawfully occasioning actual bodily harm—Evidence of common assault.

Upon a count for assaulting, beating, wounding, and occasioning actual bodily harm against the statute, the prisoner may be convicted of a common assault.

Case reserved for the opinion of this court by the chairman of the court of quarter sessions of the peace for the county of Northumberland, held at Alnwick, in the said county, on the 17th Oct. 1860.

The prisoner George Oliver was indicted at these sessions for a misdemeanor, of which indictment the following is a copy:—

“Northumberland to wit.—The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present that George Oliver, on the 18th Aug. 1860, unlawfully and maliciously did inflict upon one Robert Bainbridge some grievous bodily harm, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity.

“Second count.—And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said George Oliver afterwards, on the said 18th Aug., in the year aforesaid, unlawfully did make an assault in and upon the said Robert Bainbridge, and did then unlawfully beat, wound and ill-treat the said Robert Bainbridge, and did thereby then unlawfully occasion actual bodily harm to the said Robert Bainbridge, and then did other wrongs to the said Robert Bainbridge, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity.”

Upon this indictment the jury found a verdict of “guilty of a common assault.”

An objection was taken by the counsel for the prisoner that this finding amounted to an acquittal, and he moved in arrest of judgment.

The court thereupon postponed the judgment, and reserved the following question of law, which had so arisen on the trial, for the consideration of the justices of either bench and barons of the Exchequer, under the provisions of the statute of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, viz., whether the conviction can be sustained? And in the mean time that the prisoner be committed to the common gaol at Morpeth, until he shall enter into a recognisance, himself in 50*l.*, and two sureties in 25*l.* each, or one in 50*l.*, conditioned to appear at the court of quarter sessions to be holden for the county of Northumberland next after he shall have notice given to him by the prosecutor to receive the judgment of this court, if it should be empowered to pass any such judgment.

CHARLES WM. ORDE,

Chairman of the said court of quarter sessions.

No counsel appeared to argue on either side.

By the COURT,

Conviction on the second count affirmed.

REG. v. JOHN BURNSIDES.

False pretences—Indictment—Evidence.

An indictment for false pretences charged that the prisoner falsely pretended to the prosecutor that a certain person who lived in a large house down the street, and had had a daughter married some time back, had been at him the prisoner about some carpet, and had asked him to procure a piece of woollen carpet, to wit about twelve yards, by which, &c. Whereas no such person had been at the prisoner about any carpet, nor had any such person asked the prisoner to procure any piece of woollen carpet.

The evidence was, that the prisoner stated to the prosecutor that he wanted some carpeting for a family living in a large house in the village, who had had a daughter lately married, and thereby obtained twenty yards of carpet from him.

The evidence to negative the false pretence was that of a lady living in the village whose daughter was married about a year ago, who stated that she had not sent the prisoner to the prosecutor for the carpet:

Held, that there was a sufficient false pretence alleged in the indictment, and that it was sufficiently negatived by the evidence.

Case reserved by the chairman of the Midsummer quarter sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire for the opinion of this court.

At the Midsummer quarter sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire, holden at Northallerton on the 3rd July 1860, John Burnsidess was indicted for obtaining a piece of carpet under false pretences.

The following is a copy of the indictment:—

“North Riding of the county of York, to wit.—The jurors for our lady the Queen upon their oath present, that J. Burnsidess on the 8th May 1860, unlawfully, knowingly and designedly did falsely pretend to one George Stonehouse, that a certain person who lived in a large house down the street, and had had a daughter married some time back, had been at him the said J. Burnsidess about some carpet, and had asked him the said J. Burnsidess to procure a piece of woollen carpet, to wit, about twelve yards. By means of which said false pretences the said J. Burnsidess did then unlawfully obtain from the said G. Stonehouse twenty yards of woollen carpet of the goods and chattels of the said G. Stonehouse, with intent thereby then to defraud, whereas in truth and in fact no such person as aforesaid had then or at any other time been at the said J. Burnsidess about any carpet, nor had any such person as aforesaid asked the said J. Burnsidess to procure any piece of woollen carpet whatsoever, to the great damage and deception of the said G. Stonehouse, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

The evidence was, that the prisoner went to the prosecutor's shop in the village of Snainton, and stated that he wanted some carpeting for a family living in a large house in that village who had had a daughter lately married. Upon this the prosecutor gave the prisoner about twenty yards of carpeting, which the prisoner afterwards sold in the neighbourhood to two different persons at a higher price than that which the prosecutor would have charged.

The only evidence to negative the false pretence charged in the indictment was that of a lady living in the village of Snainton, whose daughter was married about a year ago, who stated that she had not sent the prisoner to the prosecutor's shop for the carpet.

At the close of the case for the prosecution the prisoner's counsel objected,

That the indictment did not sufficiently allege any false pretence;

That upon the evidence there was nothing to go to the jury; and

Thirdly, that the false pretence alleged in the indictment had not been sufficiently negatived by the prosecution.

The court decided that there was a sufficient false pretence in the indictment, and that there was evidence to go to the jury in support of it.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty.

The judgment of the court was reserved until the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal could be taken on the point raised by the prisoner's counsel.

The opinion of the court is therefore requested on the point reserved.

The prisoner was discharged on recognisance of bail to appear at the next Epiphany sessions to receive the judgment of the court.

CATHCART, Chairman.

No counsel appeared on either side.

By the COURT, Conviction affirmed.

EVAN v. THE PORTREEVE, ALDERMEN AND BURGESSES OF AVON (otherwise ABERAVON), GRIFFITH WILLIAMS AND HER MAJESTY'S ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Demurrer—Corporation—Injunction—Account—Discovery.

A plaintiff here may obtain a decree for discovery alone, in aid of an action at law, or of proceedings in another court; but if by his bill he prays for discovery, as incident to some further relief—and fails in obtaining such relief—he will not be entitled to the discovery.

A plaintiff filed a bill on behalf of himself alone as one of a corporation, against the corporation, their solicitor, and the Attorney-General, praying an injunction against the corporation, for an account, and for discovery. The bill did not disclose a case of trustees and cestui que trust as between the plaintiff and the corporation. The corporation demurred to the bill for want of equity and for want of parties:

Held, that the demurrer must be allowed.

The bill in this suit was filed by the plaintiff, on behalf of himself only, against the defendants, the portreeve and burgesses of the town of Avon, their solicitor, and the Attorney-General—praying an injunction, an account and discovery against the corporation. The bill stated as follows:—That the plaintiff was a senior burgess of the borough of Avon, otherwise Aberavon, in the county of Glamorgan, and was resident within the said borough: that the first-named defendants, either by prescription, or under some charter of incorporation, were, previously to the grants thereafter mentioned, and have since continued, and now are, a corporation by the name or style of "The Portreeve, Aldermen and Burgesses of Avon, otherwise Aberavon;" that the said corporation, previously to the sales thereafter mentioned, were seised or well entitled of or to hereditaments of considerable value in the said parishes of Avon, and also in the parish of Michaelstone-super-Avon, in the said county of Glamorgan, which hereditaments comprised divers inclosed pasture lands, mountain lands, marsh lands and lands let on building leases, liberties, franchises, a town-hall, and divers others hereditaments; that previously to the said sales there were more than eighty building and other leases of the said lands of which the several terms were unexpired, and the rents thereby reserved were payable to the said corporation, and the income arising from the said corporate property then was and now is of large amount; that the rights of the said corporation in and to certain of the said hereditaments of or to which they are now seised or entitled, originated in certain charters or deeds, including the deeds of which the following are translations, that is to say: first, a charter or deed under the seal of Leyson-ap-Morgan, Lord of Avene, otherwise Avon, aforesaid, as follows:—

"Be it known to this present and all further generations, that I, Leyson-ap-Morgan, Lord of Avene, son and heir of Morgan Vachan, have given, granted and by this present charter, have confirmed for myself, my heirs and assigns, to all my English burgesses, and also my chancers of Avene, and to their heirs and assigns, all liberties in my town of Avene, and my whole lordship within the limits of Avene, which the burgesses of Kenfig have within the town of Kenfig, and within the lordship of the Earl of Gloucester and Hereford, as much as in me lies, and also the duty of eight dishes of corn upon every . . . due to me, my heirs and assigns, for castle ward and assize. I have also granted for me, my heirs and assigns, to my said burgesses and chancers of Avene, and their heirs and assigns, freely, quietly, well and peaceably, and without any molestation or impeachment, house-bote and hedge-bote in all my tenants' woods, and they shall have common pasture freely, quietly, well and peaceably, for ever, in all places, woods and meadows, pasture and pasture grounds in the open time of the year, upon my lands, and all the pasture ground on the side of the dinas which lie between Karmoerndreech and a place called Kae Kedrech in length and in breadth between the arable land of Tireskin and the arable land on the top of the dinas, at all times of the year; and if it should happen that my heirs or assigns should inclose any land, and the said inclosure be broken through by the cattle of the burgesses or chancers, the tenants are bound to repair and make up the said inclosure, and they shall also have common pasture in the open time of the year in all woodlands, meadows, pastures, and pasture-grounds belonging to my tenants, of what rank or condition soever they be. But for this grant, donation, and confirmation of this present charter, my burgesses and chancers aforesaid have paid me forty shillings sterling, and because I would have this my donation, grant and confirmation by this present charter to be of perpetual force and effect, I have corroborated this present charter with the impression of my seal, in presence of these witnesses, Thomas the Abbot of Margam, Ameas, rector of the church of Avene, Henry Clerk, the steward, Avene-Rees-ap-Morgan, Rees-ap-Cradock, and many others."

Secondly, a charter or deed, under the seal of Thomas de Avene, otherwise Avon, as follows:—"To all Christians who may see or hear this present writing,

EVAN v. THE PORTREEVE, ALDERMEN, &c. OF AVON.

[ROLLS.]

Thos. de Avon, as son of St. John Deavene, Lord of Avene, wishes everlasting salvation in the Lord. Know all men that I have granted, released, and for me and my heirs have quit claimed to all my burgesses and chancers, and all my Englishmen within my town of Avene and out of the town, all liberties in the said town of Avene in my whole lordship within the limits of Avene, which they have and enjoy by virtue of a grant from Lord Leyson-ap-Morgan, in words to this effect:—Be it known to this present and all future generations that I, Leyson-ap-Morgan, have given, granted, and by this my present charter have confirmed to all my English burgesses and chancers of Avene, and their heirs and assigns, all liberties in my town of Avene and throughout my whole lordship within the limits of Avene, which the burgesses of Kenfig have in the town of Kenfig, with the lordship of the Earl of Gloucester and Hereford as far as in him lies. I have also granted for me, my heirs and assigns, to my said burgesses and chancers of Avene, and their heirs and assigns, freely, quietly, well and peaceably, and without impeachment, house-bote and hedge-bote in all my tenants' woods, and they shall have common pasture freely and peaceably for ever in all places, woods, meadows, pastures, and pasture grounds in the open season of the year upon my lands, and also that pasture ground on the side of the dinas, which is between Karmoerndreech and a place called Kae Kedrech, and from the arable land on the top of the dinas at all times of the year; and if it should happen that I, my heirs or assigns, should inclose my lands, and the inclosure be broken through by cattle of the said burgesses or chancers, the tenants are to repair the said inclosure, and they shall also have common pasture in the open time of the year in all woods, lands, meadows, pastures and pasture grounds belonging to my tenants, of what rank or quality soever they be; and moreover, I, Thomas, son of St. John De Avene, have granted, released, and for me and my heirs, have quit claimed to all my burgesses and chancers, and all my Englishmen, all that pasture ground which lies between Pyll y-Scythan-a-Clawr Person, and between the burrows or sea shore, and the lands called Clawr Leyson, and the land called Tir Madun, to be depastured by all their cattle; and that they may also have common pasture everywhere in my burrows at all times of the year with all their cattle, so that neither I, the said Sir Thomas, nor my heirs or assigns shall have it in our power to challenge, claim, or demand any right or title in the aforesaid liberties, but are for ever by these presents excluded therefrom. And I Sir Thomas de Avene and my heirs and assigns will warrant, discharge and maintain, and defend for ever all the liberties and all the premises aforesaid to all the said burgesses or chancers, and their assigns, against mankind. But for and in consideration of this my grant, release, donation and quit claim my said burgesses and chancers have paid in hand two marks of sterling money. In witness whereof I have set my seal to this present quit claim before these witnesses, Henry, Abbot of Margam, Thomas, Rector of Avene, John-Lovet-with-my-Rese-Ley-a-William, ab-Owen and Mad-dock-Lloyd-Evan, ab-David-Vach, and many others. Dated at Avene the next Monday after the feast of St. Mark the Evangelist, in the 24th year of the reign of King Edward the 3rd, after the conquest.

Thirdly, a charter or deed as follows:—"Edward Le De Spencer, Lord of Glamorgan and Morganwg, to his sheriff, bailiff, officers and others, his liege people to whom these presents shall come greeting—know ye that we have of our special grace and favour granted to our burgesses of our town of Avon, their successors and heirs for ever, all the liberties under written, namely, that they have the same liberty to buy and sell all manner of goods and merchandises whatsoever within our lordship of Glamorgan and Morganwg and elsewhere, as well within the liberties and without, and be as free from toll, custom, package, kayage, stallage, pontage, murrage, parrage, and all other customs and duties for all manner of goods, wares, and merchandises by them sold or bought, as are our burgesses of Kenfig and Neath; we have also granted to our said burgesses, their successors and heirs for ever, two fairs annually in our town of Avon, viz., the first fair to be kept upon the feast of St. John the Baptist, and the second fair upon the feast of All Saints, the both to be held upon the vigils or eve of the said feasts as well as upon the festival days themselves, and that our said burgesses of Avon, their heirs and successors for ever, do take and receive, or cause to be received in toll, and through toll and other customs and duties upon all manner of goods and merchandises within our said town or its liberties, from those that buy and sell, or that pass through the said town of Avon or its liberties, with any goods or merchandises, with as full powers as our burgesses of Kenfig and Neath do, those only excepted who, within our lordship of Glamorgan and Morganwg are by ancient right excepted from paying toll and custom; but, nevertheless, so that the portreeve of the said town of Avon, for the time being, shall yearly give in an account of all toll and duties so taken and received to us and our heirs for ever, in our exchequer at Cardiff. In witness thereof the seal of our Chancery of Cardiff annexed to these presents, before these witnesses, John Davis, &c. Dated at our Castle of Cardiff, the 20th day of April in the 47th year of the reign of King Edward the 3rd, after the conquest."

That, after the date of the last-mentioned charter, and by some means unknown to the plaintiff, the said portreeve, aldermen and burgesses of Avon, otherwise Aberavon, acquired, and for many hundred years have had and enjoyed, a good title to the fee-simple of all and singular the hereditaments, franchises and liberties comprised in the said several charters, and also to the fee-simple of the lands subject to the said liberties, and also to the fee-simple of divers other hereditaments acquired and held by them in their corporate capacity.

All the hereditaments so vested in the said corporation have always been and are subject to certain trusts in favour of the individual members of the said corporate body, and also as to certain proportions of the rents, issues and profits of all of the said hereditaments, to certain trusts in favour of the town and inhabitants generally of Avon, otherwise Aberavon aforesaid; and every burgess, on his admission as a burgess, has from time immemorial taken, and still takes, an oath to preserve the hereditaments belonging to the said corporation for the benefit of the said corporation, and of the said town and inhabitants, and not to consent to or join in any alienation prejudicial to the said corporation or town. The said private and public trusts are evidenced by divers provisions, rules and ordinances contained in charters, or which have obtained by custom or been duly made by the said corporation.

The plaintiff charges that there are divers charters, deeds, declarations of trusts, or other instruments in writing, declaring the trusts of the said corporate property or parts thereof which the defendants ought to discover.

The bill also stated that, although the burgesses of the said borough were well entitled to, and of right ought to enjoy the right of pasture for their cattle in and upon all the marsh and mountain lands of the said corporation, and also a voice in the management of the property of the corporation, the thirty-three senior burgesses, of whom the plaintiff was one, were well entitled to and of right ought to enjoy, the right of an allotment of three acres apiece to each of the said senior burgesses, for the purpose of the exclusive pasture of their cattle during their respective natural lives. All the burgesses of the said borough were entitled to participate in the surplus income of the said corporation property which remained after satisfying such public trusts as aforesaid, in favour of the said town and inhabitants, according to certain shares and proportions, and in manner the particulars whereof were unknown to the plaintiff, and the defendants, the said corporation, ought to discover such particulars, and whether the said right of participation is regulated by any instrument in writing, or by prescription in ancient customs, and whether there are any records or registers of such customs.

That monthly courts have from time immemorial been held, and of right ought to be held for the transaction of the business of the said corporation. At such courts the said portreeve presides, and the said burgesses have each a voice in the decision of matters considered thereat, and all the burgesses ought to be summoned to attend such courts by special or general notices, according to the nature of the business to be transacted at such courts. That in or about the year 1848, the defendants, the said corporation, applied for and obtained an Act of Parliament enabling them to erect a public market-house and slaughter-houses. The short title of such Act is "The Aberavon Market Act 1848," and in the preamble thereof it is recited, that the Earl of Jersey had agreed with the portreeve, aldermen and burgesses of the said town and borough, to convey to them by way of free gift certain lands, tenements and hereditaments situate in the said town and borough, and particularly described in the schedule A to the said Act annexed, and the site whereof was convenient for the erection of a market-place and place for holding fairs for the said town and borough, and after the incorporation in the said Act of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1847, and certain provisions of the Commissioners Clauses Acts 1847, and of the Lands Clauses Acts 1847, it is thereby enacted, that the said corporation might construct a market-place and place for a fair as therein mentioned on the lands described in the said schedule A, and also a market-place for the sale of cattle, and also provide slaughter-houses for the slaughtering of cattle for the supply of the said town and borough, and the neighbourhood thereof, and divers powers are given to the said corporation for such purposes, and they were empowered to take such stallage rents and tolls as in the schedule to the same Act are specified. And by the 21st section of the same Act it was enacted, that all moneys arising from stallage rents and tolls to be levied or taken under the authority of the said Act, from any lessees or mortgagees thereof, and other property thereafter mentioned, should be applied, first, in paying the expenses of obtaining the said Act, and incident thereto; secondly, in making and maintaining the market or fair, and works connected therewith, and the slaughter-houses so to be established or constructed as aforesaid, and in the payment of the interest and repayment of the principal of all moneys borrowed on the security of the said works, stallage rents and tolls, and that the residue of such moneys (if any) should be retained by the said portreeve, aldermen and burgesses, and be applied by them as they should think fit.

The bill next stated that the recital that the lands in the said schedule A were a free gift from the said Earl of Jersey is erroneous, inasmuch as the said corporation granted and conveyed certain lands, part of the hereditaments so vested in them as aforesaid, to the said earl, in consideration of the said conveyance or gift from him of the said lands mentioned in the said schedule A; videlicet, a certain tract of sand and land near the sea-shore, which has since become considerably enhanced in value; that the said corporation erected and constructed the said market-place and slaughter-houses and place for holding a fair according to the provisions of the Aberavon Market Act 1848, and to defray the expenses of such works they mortgaged the whole or part of the hereditaments vested in them to a person named Daniel to secure 3000*l.* and interest, which sum was unduly applied in payment of the said costs and other liabilities unduly incurred by the said corporation; that the said corporation was not included in the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, and has not been since brought within the operation of such Act of Parliament; that, in or about the year 1850 certain inhabitants of the said borough of Avon applied to the Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council for a charter of incorporation under the last-mentioned Act of Parliament, but such application was refused.

The defendants, the said corporation, opposed such application and incurred costs to a large amount thereby, and to defray such costs they borrowed a further sum of 3500*l.* from some other person or persons, and executed a further mortgage of all or part of the said corporate property to the said mortgagees to secure the last-mentioned sum; such sum was unduly applied in payment of the last-mentioned costs and other liabilities unduly incurred by the said corporation.

The plaintiff by his bill then charged that the said several mortgages were not authorised by the said constitution of the said corporation or within their powers, and that the same ought to have been, but were not, authorised by a monthly or other meeting or court of burgesses duly summoned for such purpose. The plaintiff was never duly summoned to attend any meeting for the purpose of considering such mortgages or either of them. A second application had been made to the said Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council for the grant by her Majesty of a charter of incorporation for the said borough under the said Municipal Corporations Act, and was now pending. The defendants, the said corporation and their said mortgagees being apprehensive that the said corporate property might be taken out of their control in case such charter should be granted, in or about the month of Feb. 1860 proceeded to sell the property comprised in the said securities and other the property of the said corporation, and have since such date sold and disposed of and conveyed away a large proportion of such property, but no account of the application of the proceeds of such sales had ever been furnished to the plaintiff, but he had been informed that the several mortgages thereinbefore mentioned had been fully paid off and satisfied. The bill further stated that the said sales had been conducted in a hurried, reckless and improvident manner, and were made against the express protest of certain of the burgesses, including the plaintiff, and published in the public newspapers, and the property sold had been disposed of at prices much below its real value. Such sales had not been authorised by any monthly or other meetings or courts duly summoned for such purposes, nor had the plaintiff been duly summoned to attend the meetings for such purposes; in fact, the said portreeve and certain other officers of the corporation arranged the holding of the said courts and the manner of issuing summonses or notices to attend the same, so as practically to exclude a large proportion of the burgesses.

The said sales made in and since the month of Feb. 1860 comprised all the property of the said corporation, except the said market-place for a fair and slaughter-houses so erected on the lands described in the said schedule A to the said Aberavon Market Act, and the town-hall of the said borough, and such last-mentioned particulars were the only hereditaments now remaining unsold. The last of such sales took place in or about the 3rd Sep. 1860, when a large tract of mountain land was sold to a Mr. Robert Parsons for a very inadequate price, and contrary to the express protest of many of the said burgesses.

The moneys arising from the several sales so made as aforesaid had been applied in divers undue and improper ways, partly in payment of bills of costs unduly incurred for legal proceedings, and partly in payment of other debts unduly incurred by the defendants the said corporation. The said corporation also borrowed from divers other persons unknown to the plaintiff divers other sums of money, amounting together to between 2000*l.* and 3000*l.*, and such sums have been unduly applied.

The plaintiff by his bill then further charged that the solicitors or solicitor from time to time, in and since the year 1853, employed by the said corporation, or some or one of them, had taken and had conveyed to them or him certain parts of the said corporate property in consideration of and in lieu of payment of bills of costs from time to time incurred by the said corporation for legal proceedings, and the defendants the said corporation ought to discover the particulars of all such conveyances, and the several considerations for the same; and that the purchase-money received for such sale as aforesaid and the several sums so borrowed on mortgage as aforesaid, had not been duly applied or distributed according to the constitution of the said corporation and the trusts attached to the said property thereof, and that the defendants the said corporation ought to set forth an account of the particulars of which the said corporate property consisted previously to the sales so made thereof as aforesaid, and also of the particulars of the corporate property so sold as aforesaid, and when and to whom such sales were made, and how the purchase-moneys arising therefrom had been applied and distributed, and whether in any manner invested, and also of the particulars of which the property vested in the said corporation now consisted, and what was the annual income thereof; that the defendants the said corporation ought also to set forth shortly the several deeds, charters, ordinances, records, rules, minute-books, or other instruments in writing, and also all customs within their knowledge regulating the said corporation and the property thereof, or showing the constitution thereof; that the defendants the said corporation had successfully offered for sale, and they threatened and intended to sell the market-house and the town-hall and the said slaughter-house and other the remaining property vested in the said corporation, or part thereof, and to distribute the proceeds of such sale amongst certain individual members of the said corporation, or otherwise to apply the same contrary to the constitution of the said corporation, and in violation of the trust attached on the property thereof. Such conduct was contrary to the wishes of a large number of the said burgesses and against their protest; and that the defendant Griffith Williams was the common attorney of the said corporation, and the several facts and things aforesaid were within his personal knowledge, and he ought to discover the same.

The bill then contained the charge as to documents, and concluded with a prayer, that the defendants, the said portreeve, aldermen, and other burgesses of Avon, otherwise Aberavon aforesaid, might be restrained by the order and injunction of the court from selling or disposing of, or offering for sale, the said market-house, market-place, or place for holding fairs, slaughter-houses, town-hall, or any other hereditaments remaining vested in them upon such private and public trusts as aforesaid; that an account might be taken of the hereditaments sold by the said portreeve, aldermen and burgesses of Avon, otherwise Aberavon, in and since the month of Jan. 1860, or from such other date as this court should think fit; and also of the proceeds of such sales, and the application of such proceeds, and of the mortgage moneys so borrowed as aforesaid, and also an account of the hereditaments, moneys and property now vested in the said corporation; and that the defendants the said corporation, and also the defendant Griffith Williams, might make a full discovery of the several matters aforesaid; and for further relief.

To this bill the defendants the corporation demurred for want of equity, and the cause now came on to be argued upon that demurrer. A demurrer was also made, ore tenus, at the bar, for want of parties.

Selwyn, Q.C. (Speed with him), in support of the demurrers, contended that the plaintiff ought to have filed the bill on behalf of himself and all other persons in the same interest with himself, but he had not done so: or, since it was clear from the statements in the bill that there must be other parties having such an interest, they ought to have been made parties, but that was not done. Further, the suit ought to have been instituted by the Attorney-General. With regard to the plaintiff's general equity to sue the corporation, this bill was a fishing bill, for discovery, founded on a claim to relief to which the plaintiff was not entitled. The bill was one by a member of the corporation against the corporate body, when the proper remedy was by mandamus at law. What the plaintiff wanted was, to show that the corporation had been, and intended to be, guilty of improper acts—acts ultra vires their charter. As to past acts, the plaintiff sought to impeach some sales already effected; and, as to future acts, to restrain some proposed sales and mortgages of the corporation property. For that he had alleged no sufficient case, for he had shown no proper trust on the part of the defendants; and prima facie every corporation not within the Municipal Corporations Act was entitled to deal with its own property as it chose. Upon the whole case they contended that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief, by way of injunction or otherwise, that he prayed for: (The Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway Company v. The North-Western Railway Company, 6 H. of L. Cas. 113; Jackson v. The North Wales Railway Company, 13 Jur. 69.

R. Palmer, Q.C. (F. H. Colt with him), for the plaintiff, insisted that it was apparent on the face of the bill that the defendants, the corporation, were trustees of their property for the purposes of the corporation; and that, as the plaintiff was himself a member of the corporation, they were therefore trustees for him. The plaintiff had alleged a specific claim, as an individual burgess of the town of Avon, and that claim involved a right to a part of the land on which the buildings mentioned in the bill, and the subject-matter of the sales and mortgages, were situated. It could not therefore be said he had no right to sue the corporation. Further, the members of the corporation had sworn not to alien the corporation property; therefore there was a clear trust imposed on them not to do so—above all things, not to do so if prejudicial to any one of the body: (Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Cashel, 3 Dr. & W. 294; Ward v. The Society of Attorneys, 1 Coll. C. C. 370; Adley v. The Whitstable Company, 17 Ves. 315; Dummer v. The Corporation of Chippenham, 14 Ves. 245.)

Selwyn, Q.C. was not called on to reply.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This bill cannot be supported. The case is one of a single individual, a burgess and a member of the corporation of Avon, suing the corporation, in order to impeach certain sales and mortgages already made by them, and to obtain an injunction to restrain them from selling or mortgaging other parts of the property of the corporation. He also prays for discovery against the corporation and their attorney. A distinction was endeavoured to be drawn in the course of the argument between a municipal and a trading corporation. Now, prima facie, a municipal corporation which is not within the Corporation Act—and that is the position of this corporation—may dispose of all its own property as it pleases; and if a person seeks to restrain such a corporation from so doing, he must establish a case of a trust to the contrary, in which he is himself interested. A trust of that character may be of two kinds: it may be either general or private. For instance, a person might give a sum of money to a corporation, in trust for the children of A. B., to be paid to them when they shall respectively attain the ages of twenty-one years. That is a private trust. Then, again, a person may give a sum of money to a corporation for the benefit of the inhabitants of a town, as for the paving, draining, lighting, or some other improvements of the town. That is a general, or public trust. In the latter case, if you wish to enforce the trust, you must institute a suit in the name of the Attorney-General, and by way way of information, against the corporation; and that suit is one on behalf of all the persons interested in the trust. In the case of private trusts, if all the persons interested are too numerous to be made parties, the practice of this court allows some of them to sue on behalf of themselves and all others in the same interest with them. How, then, does the present case stand with reference to these doctrines? The plaintiff in this case states that he is a private individual, and a member of the corporation which he is suing; but he also shows by his bill that he appears in this suit in a public character; for he says that the interests in respect of which he is suing are common to all the burgesses of the town of Avon, he himself being also a burgess. In support of those positions which he assumes, he sets up, or endeavours to set up, a case of a trust on the part of the defendants, the corporation, for the benefit of, amongst other persons, himself. The documents on which he relies to establish the trust are set out by him in the fourth paragraph of his bill. [The M. R. read that paragraph containing the charters as above stated, and continued.] I am of opinion that these documents, so stated, import no such trust of either kind; no trust either general (or public) or private; none that can be considered sufficient to support the plaintiff's bill. So far as they at all approach a trust—if indeed a trust there be—they import not a private but a public one, in the enforcing of which, as I have said, the Attorney-General is a necessary plaintiff, and the suit for that purpose should be commenced by information. Well, but taking the plaintiff's case as it stands, and coming on, as it does, upon demurrer to the bill, the facts stated by him must, by the ordinary rules of pleading, be taken most strongly against him; and I find that, it being necessary for him to establish a trust, he really alleges something short of what, in fact, he wants. He makes a general allegation of a trust, for the proof of which resort must be had to particular facts. But these particular facts, as they are stated by the plaintiff in his bill, do not, in my opinion, at all establish the conclusion in support of which he adduces them. In the case of Frietas v. Dos Santos, 1 Y. & J. Exch. 574, a very apposite judgment was delivered by the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer. There the general allegations had reference to certain accounts, in support of which the particular facts stated in the plaintiff's bill were set out, but as they were set out they proved all the accounts to be on one side, and the court in that case allowed the demurrer to the bill. This present case appears to me to be identical in principle with that; and so far as regards the demurrer for want of equity, in that respect it must be allowed. But then it was suggested that each member of the corporation had taken an oath not to alienate the corporate property, and that the defendants were now about so to do. In support of the arguments for the injunction founded on that assumption, the case of the Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Cashel was referred to. But that case was very different from the present one. In that Irish case the oath was clearly distinct and unconditional; and the question was, whether an alienation of part of the corporate property to a member of the corporation for an adequate consideration was not contrary to the oath taken by the alienors in their corporate capacity? Lord St. Leonards said that the alienation was contrary to the oath; and observed that the oath there imposed was in lieu of an implied trust, binding upon the consciences of the members of the corporation. But that is very different, as I have said, from this case. The oath there was, that there should be no alienation at all. Here, however, the oath is clearly conditional, and does permit some alienations, for it prescribes that the alienation is not to be prejudicial to the interests of the corporation. [The M. R. read the paragraph of the bill relating to the oath, as above stated, and continued.] But who is to be the judge whether the alienation is or is not prejudicial? Clearly the corporation, who are to exercise the power of alienation. But in addition to all these considerations, the trust here, if as I have said any trust there be, is a public one, and the enforcing of it should have been by or at the suit of the Attorney-General. The case of the Whitstable Company was one of a corporation in the nature of a partnership, whose business it was to divide the profits among the partners to the concern—one of them said he had not received his share of the profits. But that was evidently the case of a private trust, which this court is bound, by all its rules, to administer—bound, that is to say, unless there be a title or remedy for the plaintiff at law. But that case is one quite distinct from the present, in which, as I have more than once observed, if there be a trust at all, it is a public one, and for the due enforcing of which this suit is not properly framed. The plaintiff here has alleged that some part of the corporation property has been sold, and he seeks an account of the moneys arising from such sales, and of the property now vested in the corporation. He also seeks a discovery in aid of that account. I am of opinion that he is not entitled to such discovery, as he is not in this case entitled to the other relief which he prays. Discovery may be obtained without further relief, by a plaintiff in this court, in aid of an action at law, or of proceedings in another court; but if the plaintiff's bill, in addition to discovery, also seeks, as connected with it, any other relief here, and he fails in obtaining such relief, he is not entitled to the discovery. I am of opinion that the demurrer to this bill must be allowed.

READ v. FREEMAN.

Appeal against highway-rate—Application for costs by the respondent under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 27.

The defendant had appealed against a highway-rate, and had entered into the necessary recognisances, pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 60, to pay such costs as should be awarded by the justices at the quarter sessions; the appeal was heard and the rate confirmed, and an entry made to that effect in the minute-book by the clerk of the peace. At the end of this entry was an entry, "costs agreed to be taxed out of court—taxed at 33l. 7s." After the sessions an appointment for the taxation of the costs of the appeal was made by the clerk of the peace, of which the appellants had notice, but did not attend, and the costs were then taxed. Some time previous to this a general order had been made by the quarter sessions that the costs of every appeal should be taxed by the clerk of the peace during the sessions, and be paid by the losing party, unless an order should be made to the contrary. An application was then made by the plaintiff to the quarter sessions, under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 27, to enforce the payment of those costs, and they were asked to issue a distress-warrant, which was objected to by the defendant: Held, that, under the circumstances, the magistrates would be right in granting the application.

This was a case stated pursuant to the stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2.

At a petty sessions holden at Swindon, in the county of Wilts, on the 16th Feb. 1860, before G. Daubeny and four other justices of the peace of Swindon, in the said county of Wilts, William Read, surveyor of highways, of the parish of Swindon aforesaid (hereinafter called the plaintiff), made an application, in pursuance of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 27, to enforce payment by H. E. Freeman, of Swindon aforesaid (hereinafter called the appellant), and W. Woolford, of Swindon aforesaid, of the sum of 33*l.* 7*s.*, being the costs of an appeal by the said appellant to the court of quarter sessions of Wilts against a highway-rate made for the parish of Swindon aforesaid, on which appeal the rate was confirmed, as in the certificate hereinafter mentioned. In pursuance of a summons issued on the information and complaint of the said plaintiff, requiring the attendance of the said appellant and the said W. Woolford, the said appellant appeared at the said petty sessions, but the said W. Woolford did not appear. It was proved that the said appellant and W. Woolford, under sect. 105 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, duly gave notice of appeal against a highway-rate of the parish of Swindon, and duly entered into recognisances with sufficient sureties, before a justice of the peace, pursuant to and in the form required by the above-mentioned section of the said statute of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, to pay such costs as should be awarded by the justices at the general or quarter sessions.

That the said appeal was duly entered at the general quarter sessions of the county of Wilts, hold at Warminster on the 29th June 1858, and was on the application of the appellants respited to the then next sessions for the county of Wilts, to be holden at Marlborough, on the 19th Oct. 1858, when the said appeal was heard and determined, and an entry in the minute-book of the sessions, of which the following is a copy, was at the said sessions made by the clerk of the peace, and which entry was produced to us at the hearing of the said information by J. E. Judd on behalf of the clerk of the peace, and proved to have been so made by the clerk of the peace as aforesaid:—"Townsend and Browne, H. E. Freeman, and W. Woolford (appellants) v. Kinneir.—The highway rate of the parish of Swindon, 9th June 1858. Costs agreed to be taxed out of court. Taxed at 33*l.* 7*s.* 19th Oct. 1858. Rate confirmed, subject to the opinion of the Court of Q. B. on a case to be agreed upon."

The above entry was and is the only entry in the said minute-book made as to the judgment of the court of the result of the appeal at the said quarter sessions, and save as aforesaid there was no entry of judgment in the said appeal.

It was proved that no application was made to the court of quarter sessions, or anything said to or by the court on the subject of the costs of the said appeal. It was proved, that on the 14th April 1859, and after the said sessions, an appointment for the taxation of the costs of the appeal to the court of quarter sessions was made by the said clerk of the peace, and that the appellants had notice of such appointment, but did not attend, and the costs were then taxed at 33*l.* 7*s.*, and that afterwards in June 1859 the Court of Q. B. heard and determined the said case, when the said order of quarter sessions, confirming the said rate, was confirmed by the said Court of Q. B. It also appeared that the payment of the said sum of 33*l.* 7*s.* had been demanded of the appellant; and W. Woolford, by the plaintiff's solicitor, on the 6th Jan. 1860, and that they had not paid the same. It was proved that an order or rule of the said court of quarter sessions was made at the general quarter sessions of the peace held at New Sarum on the 4th April 1843, as follows: "That from and after the 1st Dec. next, the costs of every appeal tried shall be taxed by the clerk of the peace during the same sessions, and be paid by the party against whom the court shall decide such appeal, unless the court shall then make any order to the contrary;" and that such rule or order was in force and had not been annulled at the time of the hearing of the said appeal. A certificate of the clerk of the peace was proved and received, though objected to by the appellants, which certificate had been applied for by the plaintiff, and granted by the clerk of the peace under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 27, and was as follows: "Office of the clerk of the peace for the county of Wilts. In the matter of an appeal, wherein H. E. Freeman and W. Woolford were appellants against the highway-rate of the parish of Swindon. I hereby certify that at a court of general quarter sessions of the peace, holden at Marlborough, in the said county of Wilts, on the 19th Oct. 1858, an appeal by the said H. E. Freeman and W. Woolford against the highway-rate for the parish of Swindon, in the said county of Wilts, bearing date the 9th June then last, came on to be tried, and was then heard and determined. And the said court of general quarter sessions did thereupon confirm the said highway-rate, subject to the opinion of the Court of Q. B. upon a case stated. And I do certify that at the general quarter sessions of the peace, held at New Sarum, in and for the said county, on the 4th April 1843, it was ordered as follows, that is to say, that from and after the 1st Dec. next the costs of every appeal tried shall be taxed by the clerk of the peace during the same sessions, and be paid by the party against whom the court shall decide such appeal, unless the court shall then make any order to the contrary; and that such last-mentioned order has not since been altered or repealed, and is now in full force. And I also certify that, upon the trial of the above appeal of H. E. Freeman and W. Woolford against the highway-rate of Swindon, the court made no order contrary to the said order of the 4th April 1843; and that the respective solicitors for the appellants and respondents then and there agreed that the costs of such appeal should be taxed by the clerk of the peace out of court. And I further certify that the solicitors of the said appellants having objected to attend the taxation of such costs, I did, on the 14th April 1859, attend the respondents' solicitor, and taxed the costs of the respondents at the sum of 33*l.* 7*s.*, which sum I consider fair and reasonable to be paid to them by the appellants for their costs in and about the said appeal. And I do further certify that the said sum for costs has not, nor has any part thereof, been paid to me. Dated 7th Feb. 1860. JOHN SWAYNE, Clerk of the Peace."

It was proved that after the taxation of the said costs the clerk of the peace had added to the entry of the minute of judgment of the court of quarter sessions, on the hearing of the appeal above set forth, the words "Taxed at 33*l.* 7*s.*," which appeared at the foot of such minute. Upon this evidence the said plaintiff W. Read asked for a distress-warrant against the appellant for the said costs, when it was objected and contended, on behalf of the appellant—first, that as the appellant had duly entered into such recognisance as aforesaid, &c., pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and sect. 105, the justices had no jurisdiction to enforce payment of the above-mentioned costs by a distress-warrant; secondly, that no order, judgment, or determination had been made or come to by the court of quarter sessions for the payment of the costs in the matter of the above-mentioned appeal; thirdly, that the justices had no

BRUMFITT v. BREMNER.

jurisdiction, under the circumstances, to issue a distress-warrant for the said costs; fourthly, that it had not been proved to the justices that a valid or sufficient order or judgment had been made or given by the court of quarter sessions for the payment of costs in the matter of the above-mentioned appeal; fifthly, that the certificate signed by the clerk of the peace did not certify or show that the court of quarter sessions had ordered the appellants to pay any costs, or directed to whom such costs should be paid; and that such certificate was not in conformity with sect. 27 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

Whereupon four of the justices adjudged and determined that a distress-warrant should issue to enforce payment of the sum of 33*l.* 7*s.* and 6*d.* costs; and the appellant being dissatisfied with such determination as aforesaid, as being erroneous in point of law, hath, pursuant to sect. 2 of stat. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, duly applied to the justices in writing, within three days after the said determination, to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and grounds of such determination, for the opinion of the Court of C. P.; and the facts above stated are accordingly set forth and stated in such case, and the opinion of the court was requested whether, upon the facts, the justices were right in determining that such distress-warrant should be issued.

Prentice for the appellant.—Sect. 27 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, only applies to cases where no recognisances have been entered into, and therefore does not apply in this case; the main question is, whether sect. 5 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, applies where they have been entered into. In this case no order of payment of costs was made by the quarter sessions; some years since the court of quarter sessions made a general order, that the costs of every appeal should be taxed by the clerk of the peace during the same sessions, unless the court should make any order to the contrary; assuming that they have the power to make such an order, they must indorse every order in the same way; but here they have made an order without saying anything about the costs, but they ought to have done so. No order whatever was made by the quarter sessions that the appellant should pay, but after the sessions are over an entry is made by the clerk to that effect. The costs should not only be taxed at the same sessions, but also adopted; this is the rule laid down in Burn's Justice, tit. "Appeal," 175. He also cited Reg. v. Justices of Merionethshire, 6 Q. B. 163; Ex parte Holloway, 1 Dowl. 26; and as to the order of costs being a judicial act, Reg. v. The Recorder of Cambridge, 2 L. J. 160, M. C.

Phipson for the respondent.—There is nothing in the first objection as to the Act not applying when recognisances are entered into. Then, as to order for payment of costs, and execution issued being valid under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 18, see Reg. v. Huntley, 3 El. & Bl. 172. Then it is said that there has been no order, but the parties agreed as to the taxing of costs; and then there was the general order that, unless an order was made to the contrary, the party losing should pay the costs. Reg. v. Mortlock was also cited, 7 Q. B. 470. [ERLE, C.J. referred to Reg. v. Long, 1 Q. B. 740.]

Prentice in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 23.—ERLE, C.J. now delivered judgment.—Some of the objections on this appeal need only a short answer. The 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 5, empowering the sessions to give costs on all appeals to either party, disposes of the two questions raised by Mr. Prentice, whether the order of the sessions was bad under the 11 & 12 Vict., which statute does not extend to cases where there is, as here, a recognisance, and which statute makes provision in respect of paying costs by the clerk of the peace. So, as to the point that there was no adjudication giving costs expressed orally by the court, the answer is, it was tacitly expressed by a standing order that costs would follow the event unless the court should interfere, which was a rule of practice known to both parties, and it was a rule specifically applied to this case by the officer having the authority of the court making the entry ordering costs, with the knowledge of both parties. As to the remaining objection, the costs were taxed by the clerk of the peace after the end of the sessions. Although the taxation ought by law to be by the court, still the performance of that duty by its officer, if subsequently adopted by the court, has been often recognised as valid. See R-g. v. Mortlock, 7 Q. B. 459, and Schoood v. Mount, 1 Q. B., where it is said a rule requiring taxation by the court by no means prevents the court from directing their officer to tax the costs, and adopting his taxation as their own act, and inserting the amount in the order. But this must be done by the court before the end of the sessions; and a difficulty was raised in this case because the last-mentioned rule of law had not been complied with. The difficulty, however, is got over by an answer to the objection, in the nature of a personal exception to the appellant, because in effect the allowance during the sessions was brought about by the appellant himself consenting to delay, and therefore, as against him, it must be taken to have been properly done. It was on his representation of consent that his opponent altered his position and allowed the delay. There are authorities for giving effect to the consent of the party in this way. In Rex v. Long, 1 Q. B. 746, where the costs were taxed after the end of the sessions without consent, Lord Denman observes: "If the party to be burdened with costs consents, the judgment may perhaps be given nunc pro tunc, though the taxation be out of court; otherwise if there be no consent." And in Reg. v. The Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway Company, 25 L. T. Rep. 65, it appeared that the taxation had been after the end of the sessions by consent, and when the order of sessions was brought up for execution the party who had to consent moved to set aside the order on account of such a taxation after the end of the session. Lord Campbell refused the rule, saying: "The point is not now whether the sessions had jurisdiction to make the order, but whether the appellants are not precluded by their own act from taking the objection;" and the court held that it did. This case is an authority for us to adopt, and on these grounds we are of opinion that this objection fails, and that the appellant cannot take advantage by his attorney disputing that which he had consented to do. We think there was no weight in the objection that the consent was not proved by legal evidence; the clerk certified that there was consent, and as far as appears on the case, the justices were not wrong in acting on it as an undisputed claim. Our judgment will therefore be for the respondent with costs.

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

BRUMFITT (appellant) v. BREMNER (respondent).

County vote—Notice of objection—Entry of objector's name in register after list printed—6 Vict. c. 18, ss. 34, 47 and 49.

By the 47th section of 6 Vict. c. 18, the clerk of the peace is to sign and deliver the books containing the lists of voters, on or before the 30th Nov., to the sheriff of the county; and by sect. 49 such books, so signed and given into the custody of the sheriff, are to be the register of persons entitled to vote.

An objector gave due notice of objection to a person who claimed to have his name retained on the register. When the claim came to be sustained before

BRUMFITT v. BREMNER.

the revising barrister, it appeared, on turning to the bound copy of the register of voters, which was produced from the custody of the sheriff, that a sheet thereof had been pasted into the book after it had been bound, upon which the name of the objector had been inserted, numbered 5638 A, between names of other voters, numbered respectively 5638 and 5639.

On or about the 29th Dec. various copies of the register were sold to persons applying for them, which copies did not contain the name of the objector. The objector having called the attention of the clerk of the peace to the omission of his name, they referred to the revise of last year's register, and found that the name was not initialed by the revising barrister as intended to be erased, but that the barrister having evidently run his pen through the name by mistake, had passed his thumb over the wet ink, and so occasioned the appearance of an erasure, which had misled the clerk of the peace in making out the list. At the time when the objector called attention to the circumstance, the register, though bound and ready for signature and delivery, had not been signed by the clerk of the peace and delivered to the sheriff, its length, and certain difficulties which had arisen in printing, having prevented this being done by the 30th Nov., the time fixed by the statute. The clerk of the peace therefore determined that the name of the objector should be interlined in print, and the sheet containing such interlineation substituted for the sheet in which the objector's name had been omitted, and this was done.

The revising barrister held that such sale of copies of the register by the clerk of the peace was a publication of the register, and an adoption by the said clerk of the peace of the signature printed at the end thereof; that he had no power afterwards to insert the objector's name, or make any alteration in the register, and consequently that the name of the objector was not legally on the register, and the name of the person objected to must be retained:

Held, that the decision of the revising barrister was wrong, and must be reversed; that the list did not become a register until it had been signed by the clerk of the peace and delivered out to the sheriff, and down to that time it was in the power of the clerk of the peace, and his bounden duty, to make that which was to be the list correct:

Held, also, that the provision of the Act, requiring the clerk of the peace to deliver the register on or before the last day of November in the current year to the sheriff, was directory only, and the failure to do so, where arising from unavoidable obstacles, as in the present case, did not avoid the register.

The following case was stated by the revising barrister:—

At a court held by me (one of the barristers appointed to revise the list of voters for the southern division of the county of Lancaster) 1860, for the revision of the said list, William Brumfitt objected to the name of William Birchall being retained in the Ashton-in-Mackerfield list of voters for the southern division of the county of Lancaster.

The notice of objection was as follows:—

"Notice of Objection.

"To Mr. William Birchall, Edge-green-lane, Ashton-in-Mackerfield.

"Take notice, that I object to your name being retained in the Ashton-in-Mackerfield list of voters for the southern division of the county of Lancaster.

"Dated this 18th day of Aug. in the year 1860.

"(Signed) WILLIAM BRUMFITT, of No. 108, Netherland-road north, in the township of Everton (late of No. 26, Devonshire-place), in the township of Everton.

"On the register of voters of the parish of Liverpool."

On turning to the bound copy of the current register of voters, which was produced from the custody of the sheriff, it appeared that the sheet numbered 313 had been pasted into the book after it had been bound, and upon this sheet the name of Wm. Brumfitt was inserted as follows:—

5638 A.	Brumfitt, Wm.	31, Devonshire-place, Everton.	Freehold House.	Peers-court of Mr. Roberts & others tenants.
---------	---------------	--------------------------------	-----------------	--

The number prefixed to the name preceding Brumfitt's was 5638*; to the name succeeding, 5639.

A copy of the sheet numbered 313, showing the interlineation and signed by me, is hereto annexed.

It was proved that on the 12th Dec. 1859 Mr. Burne, of Manchester, applied by letter, including P. O. order for 1*l*, to the deputy clerk of the peace for the county of Lancaster, for two copies of the register of voters for South Lancashire, and that they replied promising that the copies should be sent as soon as they were ready.

That about the 29th Dec. 1859, the deputy clerks of the peace sent to Mr. Burne two copies of the register, which had their names printed on the last sheets thereof respectively thus, "Birchall and Wilson, deputy clerks of the peace." That neither of the copies contained the name of William Brumfitt, the objector, on the 313th sheet. That similar copies of the register were also sold to other people, and amongst the rest to the said William Brumfitt himself.

That on the 13th Jan. 1860 the deputy clerks of the peace wrote as follows to Mr. Burne:—

"Preston, 13th Jan. 1860.

"Sir,—You will perceive by the inclosed sheets of register, that there has been an error in the printing, the name of William Brumfitt having been omitted.

"We shall therefore be obliged by your returning us the sheets paged 313 in the copies we sent you on the 29th ult., and substituting the inclosed for them."

That the attention of the deputy clerks of the peace was first called by the objector himself to the omission of his name from the register of voters so sold, and after the sale thereof. That in consequence of his application to have his name inserted, they looked at the revise of last year's register, and found that the name was not initialed by the revising barrister as intended to be erased, but that the barrister having evidently run his pen through the name by mistake, had immediately passed his thumb over the wet ink, and so occasioned an appearance of erasure which had misled them. That the register, although bound and ready for signature and delivery, had not, at the time of this application by the objector, been signed by the deputy clerks of the peace, and delivered to the sheriff as required by the statute, the length of the register, and difficulties which had arisen in the printing, having prevented their doing so before the 30th Nov., the time fixed by statute. That they therefore determined that the name of the said William Brumfitt should be interlined in print as it now appears on the 313th sheet; and the sheet with such interlineation was substituted for the original sheet in the whole of the registers, and in the bound copy of the register, which was by them signed and delivered to the under-sheriff after such substitution.

It was contended that the sale by the deputy clerks of the peace of copies of the register bearing their signature, although printed in previous to their signature, was an adoption by them of such signature, and that they had no power afterwards to make any alteration in the register, which was from that moment perfectly formed; and that inasmuch as such copies, when sold, did not contain the name of William Brumfitt, his name was not now legally upon the register of voters of the southern division of the county of Lancaster.

BRUMFITT v. BRENNER.

[C. B.]

It was argued by William Brumfitt that I had no jurisdiction in the matter, but must receive the official register as delivered to me by the deputy clerk of the peace, he being the person appointed by the statute of Victoria to deliver the register then in force to the revising barrister; but, if not the register legally in force for the time being, then the register for the previous year in which the name of the said William Brumfitt duly appeared, must be held to be still in force.

I held that such sale by the clerks of the peace of the copies of the register to Mr. Burne and others must be taken as the publication of the register, and as an adoption by them of the signature printed at the ends thereof respectively, and that they had no power afterwards to insert any name, or make any alteration in the register.

I therefore decided that the name of the objector was not legally upon the register of voters for South Lancashire, and declined to receive the notice of objection given by him against the vote of Mr. Birchall, whose name was consequently retained on the list of voters for the township of Ashton.

If my decision was right, the list of voters is to remain as amended by me; and, if wrong, the names of the said William Birchall and the other names hereinafter mentioned are to be removed from the list of voters.

And as the validity of a great number of notices of objection by the appellant affecting the names mentioned in the schedule depend upon the same point of law, and each of which were appealed against; so Brumfitt was named appellant and Brenner respondent on behalf of himself and 1500 other persons.

The name of 1500 others annexed are retained.

Welsby (with him Aspinall) for the appellant.—The decision of the revising barrister was wrong, and the names should have been removed from the register. By 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 34, the clerk of the peace at the opening of the first court for the county shall deliver to the barrister all the lists of voters for the then current year, with the marginal additions as aforesaid, and lists of the persons objected to in the said year, relating to said county, and also one or more printed copies of the register of voters then in force for the said county; and the overseers of every parish or township shall attend the court to be holden for revising the lists relating to their parish or township, and shall deliver to the barrister the original notices of claim and notices of objection, given to them as aforesaid, and the clerk of the peace and overseers shall, if required, answer upon oath all such questions as the barrister may put to them, and produce all documents, papers and writings in their possession touching any matter herein mentioned. Then there is the 47th section, which is material, and that enacts that the list of voters for each county, signed, &c., shall be forthwith transmitted by the revising barrister to the clerk of the peace of the same county, and he shall keep the said lists among the records of the session, and shall forthwith cause the said lists to be copied and printed in a book or books, arranged with the names in each parish or township in strict alphabetical order according to the surnames, and with every polling district in alphabetical order, and with every parish or township within such polling district likewise in the same order, and shall after the last list for each polling district insert a list in like alphabetical order of all persons whose names shall not appear in any of the said lists for such polling district, but who shall in manner hereinafter mentioned have been registered by the revising barrister to vote at the polling place of such last-mentioned district, and shall in the said book prefix to every name "its proper number, beginning the numbers from the first name, and continuing them in a regular series to the last name; provided always that a number as aforesaid shall be prefixed to the name of every person in every such list inserted after the last list for every polling district as aforesaid; and no number, but an asterisk only, shall be prefixed to the name of the same person in the list of the parish or township in which his name originally appeared; and every such book shall be printed and arranged in such manner and form, that the list of voters of and for each parish and township may be conveniently, and completely cut out and detached from all the other lists of voters, so that all the lists for every or any polling place, or the list of every or any single parish or township, may be ready for the purpose of this Act, or for sale; and the said clerk of the peace shall sign and deliver the said book or books on or before the last day of November in the then current year, to the sheriff of the court, to be by him safely kept," &c. Now, in the present case the clerk of the peace complied with these directions of the statute, so far as he might, but as the completion of the printed list was a physical impossibility by the 30th Nov., it was not delivered to the sheriff until on or about the 13th Jan. The 49th section declares that the printed book or books, so signed by the clerk of the peace and given into the custody of the sheriff, shall be the register of persons entitled to vote at any election between the last day of November and the first day of December in the following year, &c.; and with that section must be read the 27th section, which enacts, "if no list be made out or published, the former list is to remain in force." It is submitted that words in the 47th section as to the delivery of the register book to the sheriff on or before the 30th Nov. are directory only and not imperative. If this were not so, the consequences would be that unforeseen and unavoidable delay by the printers, or a mistake such as in this case where the finger of the revising barrister blotted the list, would deprive persons entitled to the franchise of their vote. This could not have been the intention of the Legislature, and therefore this appeal should be allowed.

Monk (Power with him) for the respondent.—Although the votes of no less than 1500 persons depend upon this question, irrespective of that, so important a question as this has not been before the court since the passing of the Reform Bill. If the court looks narrowly at the 47th section, it will be seen that the Legislature have given to the clerk of the peace not the slightest discretion; he may not tamper with or alter the register in the minutest particular. If the court should hold that clerks of the peace may make omissions or alterations in the register, they will hand over the constituencies to men who often are not only attorneys, but parliamentary agents, and generally active political partisans. The numbering in the present case is not perfect and consecutive as the Act requires, for 5638 A is interplaced between 5638 and 5639. The register, it is contended, is a register before delivery to the sheriff, and the mere act of such delivery has nothing to do with its validity. When the clerk of the peace has caused the register to be printed he has made a register, and when he has signed and published it the same is complete. On 13th Nov. appellant applied for a register, and was answered that two copies should be sent as soon as ready, and such copies were eventually sent: (Re Allen, 28 L. J. 256, C.P.) The register was signed about 13th Jan., but it was a register even before signature. A printed signature is as good as a sign manual. Are 1500 voters to be deprived of their right by this accident? The clerk of the peace had done all that the Act requires, except delivering the books to the sheriff, and that does not matter. As to there not having been time enough to print the register before the 30th Nov., there was a clear month, which was more than enough. If, as the appellant contends, this clause is directory only, and not imperative, the clerk of the peace, if, for the purposes of party, he were determined to defeat the object of a register, might resolve to keep and withhold the register, taking any personal consequences that might arise, his object being to promote the interests of his party. If the register is not a register till delivered to the sheriff, then in this case there was no register till the 13th Jan., whereas there ought to have been one on the 1st Dec., so that the statute would not be complied with. If the court entertains any doubt on the question, it should be given in favour of the franchise.

Welsby in reply.—The persons objected to could not have been misled by the state of things here. It has been contended that the register is complete before delivery to the sheriff; at what moment does its completeness date? Is it when the clerk has copied the last name, or when the printer has struck off his first proof? It is contended that it only becomes a register when signed and delivered to the sheriff, and its existence and validity as a register cannot depend upon what has here been contended for: (Davies v. Hopkins, 3 C. B., N.S., 176.)

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the revising barrister in this case was wrong, and that the signed list delivered to the sheriff became the register of this county. The provisions of this Act are made for the purpose of defining with certainty who shall be entitled to vote, and to preclude inquiry at the time when the franchise is to be exercised; and the Act contains a series of provisions—some of them may be essential, some of them may be directory only; and whenever the question may arise, it may be extremely material for the tribunal before whom it is brought to consider whether the requirements of the Act of Parliament can be dispensed with. But it is well known in the law that most of the requirements of the Legislature are to be treated as directory only. I think the intention of the Legislature was to have all the duties performed by the parish officers, and those duties to be performed by the clerk of the peace at the specified times, and all those series of acts are to be performed before the document became the register of the county; there was to be, if I may so say, an internal finish of the series by the clerk of the peace putting his signature to those lists which he had arranged alphabetically and procured to be printed and numbered, with a variety of duties to be performed; it was to have an internal finish on the part of the clerk of the peace by his putting his signature to it, and an external finish by his having delivered it out as the register so completed by him, and delivered out to the public officer, who would have to see to the exercise of the franchise, and, as I consider, what was to be relied on by him at the time when the election should take place. I think that where the party intended to sign, and intended to deliver out—it being found that all parties acted bonâ fide in this instance—that the clerk of the peace intended to reserve to himself the right of signing when it was essential to sign, and the right to deliver when the time arrived for delivering. All those steps are essential circumstances to make a list become a register; and therefore, till the time when those two matters of completion have taken place, this list had not become the register; and down to that time it was in the power of the clerk of the peace—nay, it was the bounden duty of the clerk of the peace—to make that which was to be the list correct, according to the correction of the revising barrister. It should be noticed that some of the ink which the revising barrister intended to use for the purpose of erasing the name on the list before he came to the name of Mr. Brumfitt, had become placed over the name of Mr. Brumfitt, and by mistake Mr. Brumfitt's name, not at the time upon the register, ought to have been kept upon the register by the clerk of the peace; and till that series of acts had arrived at their complete finish the clerk of the peace was doing his duty in correcting the error, and putting in the name. Now, one of the acts which he is called upon to do is to put correct numbers on every name in a numerical series in correcting the list after they have been properly printed in this way, by inserting the name either by transposition of all those numbers, or correction, as near as could be consistently with the Act of Parliament. I think he did his duty in treating the numerical law of the numbers put on the names as directory only, and that the statute was substantially complied with in putting 5638 A after 5638, marking it as inserted in that place. I think that to be one of the requirements properly considered by him to be directory only, and that the register did not become void because before the name of Mr. Brumfitt there was one of the component numbers. I am also of the same opinion in respect to the delivering copies to the sheriff before the 30th Nov. That would not avoid the register. It was well put by Mr. Welsby, that if it was a day too late, if that was essential, the register would be avoided. But I do not think that that can be maintained. I think there is a great deal in Mr. Welsby's argument by way of question, if the register is a register before it has been signed animò signandi, and delivered out with the intention of delivering a complete register, when can it be said it has become a complete register? At the time it is in printer's office, soon after the compositor has set the name up? I think the selling of the copies before it was complete was selling that which the parties believed would be a complete copy of the register, although from intervening events it was not correct, and he gave notice of the mistake made. I consider that the revising barrister was wrong in holding that this had not become the register which was signed by the clerk of the peace and delivered to the sheriff. We have been very much pressed with the consequences of the result of this decision. We are bound to regard what the law is on the subject, and to endeavour as far as possible to shut out from our attention the consequences, further than, if painful results follow, the matter is of course regarded with the greatest anxiety; but the leading aspect of the case we cannot alter, whether one person is disfranchised or a greater number. The rule of law is as I have endeavoured to express it; and in my opinion, therefore, the judgment ought to be for the appellant.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion; and I think that a great deal of light is thrown upon this case by the provisions of the 41st section; because that provides what the barrister is to do, and is particularly to be attended to, because it is quite clear what is meant by the word "signed" in that section, which is afterwards adopted, by reference, in the section in question: "The barrister shall in open court write his initials against the name respectively expunged or inserted, and against any part of the lists in which any mistake shall be corrected or any omission supplied, or any insertion made by him, and shall sign his name to every page in the lists so settled." Now, he is to sign his name in open court. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that he is to sign his name after having written his initials, and the signature and the word "signed" are meant signed in the popular sense; he shall write his name. In this case he, by mistake, began to obliterate the name in question, but put no initials, blotted the ink over it, and hence the mistake arose; and that name was omitted from certain printed documents—I will not call them copies, because they were not copies of the list, and they were not copies of the register—certain printed documents which were on the 29th Dec. sent by post. Now, then, after this mistake had been discovered—and (though it was not apparent in this case) it must have been before the 13th Jan.—the clerk of the peace does what by law he is bound to do, he writes his name at the bottom of the register and delivers the register to the sheriff. That is a complete register, at all events; and then a copy of that complete register is forwarded to the person who had formerly a document which purported to be a copy of the register, but which was not. Now then, the question is (I have hitherto assumed that the list was the register), what was the register? Now the statute, in sect. 49, says that the said printed books so signed as aforesaid by the clerk of the peace or town-clerk respectively, and given in to the custody of the sheriff, shall be the register of the persons entitled to vote; and that ought to be done, no doubt, on or before the last day of November; but here it was not done till afterwards. Now the first question is what is meant by the words "so signed?" The word "signed" occurs again at the end of the 47th section, and with reference to the same signature; "the said clerk of the peace shall sign and deliver the said book or books before the last day of November." It occurs again at the beginning of the same section, "on the said list of voters for each county signed as aforesaid;" that is, by the barrister. It is clear, therefore, having reference to the 41st section, and comparing it with the commencement of the 47th, that the word "signed" is used in the beginning of this very section, the 47th, in the ordinary sense, signed with his own hand. I should further observe, that construction is fortified by the fact that in the 49th section the word "signed" is used in contradistinction to the word "print," because it is "the said printed book or books so signed as aforesaid." It seems to me, though it is not necessary for the decision of this question, it must be admitted that the Act of Parliament intended that the clerk of the peace should do an act which would call his personal attention to the correctness of the document he was about to sign, and that he should sign it according to the ordinary meaning of the word "sign." But, however that may be, there is no register until it is signed in some sense or other, and delivered to the sheriff. The first document which was signed and delivered to the sheriff was a document which was signed and delivered to the sheriff about the 10th or the 11th Jan., and it seems to be the register. With respect to what has been said about these requisitions of the Act of Parliament being "directory," that perhaps is hardly a proper expression to be used; they are more than directory—they are imperative; and if the duty they describe is so obligatory, if a man wilfully neglect it, then undoubtedly he is indictable; and it is not clear that he should not be criminally responsible if he should be guilty of gross negligence; at all events, they are imperative. It is one thing to say that a duty is imperative and obligatory, to be dealt with under the penalty of indictment; it is another thing to say the observance of and a strict and literal compliance with it, is a condition precedent to the validity of a document. I should only repeat what has been referred to by Mr. Welsby and the Lord Chief Justice, if I were to dilate upon the monstrous consequences which would follow if all these minute directions were to be held conditions precedent to the validity of documents. In short, allowing the whole weight to Mr. Monk's objection, that there is an inconvenience in this, that some persons have been misled, there is a choice of inconveniences; there is a much greater inconvenience on the other side, because it would be treated as the true register, and the real register gives no copy of the list. I must say that I entertain no doubt that the decision of the revising barrister should be reversed.

KEATING, J.—I am also clearly of opinion that the revising barrister was in error in his decision upon this occasion. It is admitted, on all hands, that the name of the objector was included in the list signed by the revising barrister; that list is this copied by the clerk of the peace, or those whom he employed, and one or two of those which may be termed new copies is sold. After that sale the clerk of the peace discovers the mistake, and I am clearly of opinion that if, having discovered the mistake, he had delivered to the sheriff a copy of the register without that mistake being corrected, he would have failed in his duty. I am of opinion that, so far from having failed in his duty in correcting the mistake, he was bound to correct it. Now I entirely agree with the observations that have been made by my Lord and my brother Byles with reference to the construction of the 47th and 49th sections, and I think that there would be indeed great confusion if we were not to abide by the terms of sect. 49, and to hold that the list signed by the clerk of the peace, with the intention of signing, and delivered by him to the sheriff, would be a register. Now, Mr. Monk has argued very forcibly, and pointed our attention to the serious results that might occur from the clerk of the peace tampering with the register. In the first place this case finds that all the proceedings were bonâ fide. But I do really think that the observation of Mr. Monk would be equally applicable to the state of things he contended ought to have existed here; because, if the sale of one copy of the register is to preclude the clerk of the peace from correcting the register according to the list signed by the barrister, it seems to me to open the door quite as wide to tampering with the list by the clerk of the peace and the register, and doing that which I conceive to be his duty to do in correcting a mistake in the list signed by the officer. It appears to me, therefore, that the revising barrister was clearly in error, and his decision should be reversed and judgment given for the appellant.

Charity—Scheme—Repairs of old and new church.

A trust had been created in 1705 for the benefit of the parish church of A.

The parish of A., by an Order in Council in 1852, had been divided into two ecclesiastical districts. It was alleged that the chancel had been repaired by the rector, and not out of the trust-funds.

Seemle, that the trust-funds ought not to contribute to the repair of the chancel.

It was sought to apportion the amount of the trust-funds for the benefit of each of the two district churches, rateably

Held, that as the primary object of the charitable gift was the old church, the trustees could not be compelled to make any apportionment. But that, if any surplus remained after paying for the repairs of the old church, it might be applied to the repair of the new church.

This was a summons adjourned from chambers into court, for the purpose of considering a scheme proposed for the administration of a charity founded by Thomas Brailsford in 1705. By deed-poll of that year, Brailsford conveyed certain lands to the rector and four trustees for the use and benefit of the parish church of North Wingfield, in the county of Derby. It appeared that the parish of North Wingfield was, by Order in Council in 1852, divided into two ecclesiastical districts; and in the new district of Clay-cross a church had been built. The questions arising upon the present application were—first, whether the rector, who was one of the trustees of the charity, was entitled to be repaid out of the trust-funds the amount expended by him upon repairing the chancel of North Wingfield church; secondly, whether any apportionment of the funds could be made so as to include the new church and the inhabitants of the new district in the benefit of the trust. Some question was raised as to the terms of the original gift, a document purporting to be a translation of the deed-poll of 1705, and apparently made in 1773, containing the words "to the use of the parish of North Wingfield," omitting the words "or parish church," which were contained, however, in a deed of 1741, reciting the original deed.

Wickens for the Attorney-General.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it was desirable that further evidence should be furnished as to the repair of the chancel, &c. It would be a very strong circumstance against the rector's case if, while standing by as a trustee, the chancel had never been repaired out of the trust-funds, but always at his expense. He must take the words parish, or parish church, contained in the deed of 1741, as being the most correct version of the original gift, and that the parish church was the primary object of the charity. He could not say that it was not for the benefit of the parish that the chancel should be repaired out of the trust-funds, to the relief of the rector, for the means of the rector and his adequate sustentation were of very great importance in the parish, especially to the poor. But as to allowing the money expended in the repairs of the chancel, it was a matter which must depend on what had been the custom heretofore, the burden of showing that the chancel had been repaired out of the funds being thrown upon the rector. If he failed to show it, then the scheme would, in this respect, stand unaltered. With respect to the apportioning the fund between the old and the new district, the trustees could not be compelled to make an apportionment. The primary object of the trust was the benefit of the parish church. The inhabitants of the new district were bound to contribute to the repair of the old church, and to this extent they participated in the benefit of the trust, for they were not only thereby relieved from the burden of the rate, but also, which was perhaps as important, from the attendant agitation. It did not appear at present that there was any surplus, but if there should be any surplus after repairing the old church, it would be desirable to apply it to the repair of the new church, and to this extent also the scheme might be varied.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF SOMERSETSHIRE.

Highway—Nonrepair—Justices—Order to indict—
5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 94, 95.

To give justices jurisdiction to make an order for the repair of a highway, or to indict the parish where the liability to repair is denied, two facts must exist—the road in question must be a highway, and it must be out of repair. Where the liability of a parish to repair a road has been denied, and an indictment preferred under sects. 94, 95 of the Highway Act, and a verdict of not guilty found in favour of the parish, the justices are not bound to direct a second indictment on a fresh information before them under sects. 94 & 95.

Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a rule calling on certain justices of Somersetshire to show cause why they should not make an order for an indictment to be preferred against the inhabitants of East Coker for the non-repair of a highway. It appeared that an information had been laid by John Bennett, pursuant to sect. 94 of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, and that the surveyor of the parish attended the hearing and denied the liability of the parish to repair the road in question. It also appeared that the justices on a previous occasion had directed an indictment to be preferred under sect. 95 against East Coker for the nonrepair of the same road; and that at the trial one question raised was, whether the road was a highway, and that the jury found a general verdict in favour of the parish. The justices on the present occasion refused to direct another indictment to be preferred. It was now contended that it was compulsory on the justices to direct an indictment to be preferred (Reg. v. Arnould, 8 El. & B. 550); that if the verdict for the parish was an answer to the indictment, it might be given in evidence upon the trial of the new indictment; that the statutory alteration in sects. 94 and 95 of the Highway Act was in substitution of the old mode of presentment of a highway when out of repair, which might have been resorted to many times over. [BLACKBURN, J. referred to note in Reg. v. Heanor, 6 Q. B. 748, where it appeared that sect. 95 only applies where the existence of the highway is admitted.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is discretionary with the court to grant this rule, and in the exercise of our discretion we do not think proper to do so. Our refusal to grant a rule does not exclude the applicant from resorting to the common law remedy by indictment. The jury having negatived the fact of the liability of this parish to repair the road by their verdict, there ought not to be a rule granted. The statute only intended an order of justices to be made where the liability of the particular parish to repair came into issue, not where a jury had already determined that question. If that were not so, a parish might be perpetually harassed by fresh indictments on the same ground.

HILL, J.—Sects. 94 and 95 only apply to cases of admitted highways. To give the justices jurisdiction under those sections, there must be, first, a highway; and, secondly, it must be out of repair. The justices are to determine the facts, by sending a competent person to view the same and report thereon, or inspect it themselves. Having satisfied themselves of the facts, then, if the liability to repair is not disputed, they may order the surveyor to repair, but if it is disputed they are to order an indictment to be preferred. But unless these two facts exist they have no jurisdiction to order an indictment to be preferred.

BLACKBURN, J.—The words of the statute do not say that when any person chooses to assert that a road is a highway, the justices are obliged to make the order in question, but only when there is a highway, and it is out of repair, they shall make an order as directed.

Rule refused.

Ex parte WILLIAM THOMPSON.

Habeas corpus—Warrant of commitment—Omitting to state whether imprisonment to be with or without hard labour.

Where by a statute giving justices a power to commit summarily they are empowered to commit the offender to prison for a certain period, with or without hard labour, and in their warrant of commitment nothing is said about hard labour, it is to be taken that they did not mean to give hard labour, and the warrant is not objectionable for omitting to state whether the imprisonment is to be with or without hard labour.

Upon supporting a rule, counsel will not be permitted to argue any points decided upon moving for the rule nisi.

This was a rule for a habeas corpus, to bring up William Thompson, now a prisoner in Preston gaol, Lancashire, upon a summary conviction for an aggravated assault upon a female, under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 1. The only ground upon which the rule

COLLUMPTON v. BRIGHTHELMSTON, ex parte JOHN HOWSE.

said was granted was that the warrant did not state whether or not the prisoner was to have hard labour: (see Ex parte William Thompson, 3 L. T. Rep. N.S. 294.) By the above statute it is enacted, "When any person shall be charged before two justices of the peace . . . with an assault upon any female whatever . . . either upon the complaint of the party aggrieved or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said justices . . . if the assault is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot in their or his opinion be sufficiently punished under the provisions of the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, to proceed to hear and determine in a summary way, and if they shall find the same to be proved, to convict the person accused; and every offender so convicted shall be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding six calendar months," &c.

Kay now showed cause, and contended that the warrant was perfectly good, for, as it said nothing about hard labour, no hard labour could be imposed, and that if hard labour were not intended to be given, it was not necessary to negative it in the warrant. He also referred to the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, the form in schedule I 3, which is applicable to a conviction when the punishment is to be imprisonment, having the words "and there to be kept to hard labour" in brackets, to be inserted only where hard labour forms a part of the judgment.

O'erend, Q.C. (Wheeler with him) was called upon, and he argued that the warrant was bad for uncertainty in not stating whether the defendant was to be imprisoned with hard labour or not. [HILL, J.—By saying nothing about hard labour, the justices have adjudicated that he is not to have hard labour.] The gaoler looks to his warrant, and he does not know what to do. [COCKBURN, C.J.—By the forms in Jervis's Act, where there is to be hard labour, it must be stated. The justices have omitted to say anything about hard labour, and therefore it must be taken that they did not intend to give it.] Then there are other objections which I am entitled to take, as the present rule is general. [HILL, J.—No; by the rules of practice no argument can be heard upon any point decided upon moving for the rule.]

By the COURT, Rule discharged with costs.

COLLUMPTON (appellants) v. BRIGHTHELMSTON (respondents), ex parte JOHN HOWSE.

Poor-law—Expenses of maintenance of a pauper—When not removable—When payment to be enforced.

The expenses of maintaining a pauper after the time limited for giving notice of appeal cannot be recovered from the parish of settlement, unless at the time of making the order of removal it is duly suspended.

Where, therefore, an order of removal was made, and at the expiration of the time for appealing (no notice having been given) the pauper was retained in the relieving parish in consequence of her then pregnancy, and after delivery she was removed, and the expenses of her maintenance demanded:

Held, that these expenses could not be recovered:

Held, also, that sect. 11 of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, applies to an order of justices made for the payment of such expenses, and that an application for them must be made within six calendar months of the time when demanded.

This was a case stated by justices under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. It stated as follows:—

At a petty sessions of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the borough of Brighton, in the county of Sussex, held at the town-hall, Brighton, in and for the said borough, on the 15th Dec. 1859, before us, William Alger, Esq., Arthur Bigge, Esq., and William

Mellet Hollis, Esq., an information was, on the 5th Dec. 1859, laid before the undersigned, Arthur Bigge, by Samuel Thorncroft, assistant overseer of the poor of the parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON, in the borough aforesaid, charging that the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of COLLUMPTON, in the county of Devon, and Henry Hill, assistant overseer of the poor of the same parish, being the parish to which one Elizabeth Hill and her illegitimate child James Hill, poor persons, had been adjudged to belong, had refused, and still did refuse, to pay to the directors and guardians and the assistant overseer of the poor of the parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON aforesaid, the sum of ten pounds, twelve shillings and threepence, being the cost and expenses of the relief and maintenance of such poor persons, under an order of two justices of the peace for the county of Sussex, dated the 6th Oct. 1853, for the removal of the said Elizabeth Hill and her said child from the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON to the said parish of COLLUMPTON, from the time of notice of such order and of the said poor persons having become chargeable to the said parish of COLLUMPTON.

The facts of the case proved before us were as follows:—

That on the 6th Oct. 1853 an order for the removal of Elizabeth Hill and her illegitimate child James Hill from the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON to the said parish of COLLUMPTON was duly made by two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Sussex.

That on the 14th Oct. 1853 a copy of the said order of removal with notice of chargeability and grounds of removal was duly sent by post by the directors and guardians of the poor of the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON to the overseers of the said parish of COLLUMPTON.

That the said Elizabeth Hill was at the time of the said order being made maintained in the workhouse of the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON; that she was pregnant at that time, and was delivered at the said workhouse on the 3rd Jan. 1854; that by reason of such pregnancy and delivery, and the delicate state of her health consequent thereupon, she could not be removed under the said order till the 9th March 1854; that during all that time she continued an inmate of the workhouse of the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON, and that during such time her said child James Hill died.

That on the said 9th March 1854 the said order was executed by the delivery of the said Elizabeth Hill and the infant to which she had given birth after the making of the said order, with a duplicate of the said order and a statement of charges for maintenance, to the assistant overseer of the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON, for the maintenance of the said paupers, but was not then paid, and had not since been paid.

That the said sum of 10*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* had been expended by the said parish of BRIGHTHELMSTON for the maintenance of the said Elizabeth Hill and her said child James Hill and her said infant from the time the copy of the said order of removal and the notice of chargeability and grounds of removal were sent to the overseers of COLLUMPTON aforesaid to the time of the said Elizabeth Hill and infant being removed under the said order; and that the sum of 3*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* was expended more than six years before the said information was laid.

It was objected by the attorney for the defendants,

First, that the information ought to have been laid within six months from the time of the said sum of 10*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* being demanded as required by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, and that this was not a proceeding excepted from the operation of that Act by the 35th section thereof.

Secondly, that the order ought to have been suspended, and notice of such suspension sent to the overseers of Collumpton.

Thirdly, that the moneys expended more than six years before the said information was laid were irrecoverable by reason of the Statute of Limitations.

We decided against the defendant, and made an order for the payment of the 10*l*. 12*s*. 3*d*. and the costs incurred before us; and the grounds of our decision were that we considered this proceeding was by the 35th section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, excepted from the operation of that statute; that the said Elizabeth Hill was not, at the time of making the said order, unable to travel from any cause other than her pregnancy, which did not afford legal grounds for the suspension of the said order; and that the Statute of Limitations was no bar to the recovery of the money expended more than six years previously to the said information being laid as directed by the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 84.

By the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 2, it is enacted, "That in case any poor person shall from henceforth be brought before any justice or justices of the peace for the purpose of being removed from the place where he or she is inhabiting or sojourning by virtue of any order of removal, and it shall appear to the said justice or justices that such poor person is unable to travel by reason of sickness or other infirmity, or that it would be dangerous for him or her so to do, the justice or justices making such order of removal are hereby required and authorised to suspend the execution of the same until they are satisfied that it may safely be executed without danger to any person who is the subject thereof, which suspension shall be indorsed on the said order of removal and signed by such justice or justices."

By sect. 84 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, it is enacted, "That the parish to which any poor person whose settlement shall be in question at the time of granting relief, shall be admitted or finally adjudged to belong, shall be chargeable with and liable to pay the cost and expense of the relief and maintenance of such poor person, and such cost and expense may be recovered against such parish in the like manner as any penalties or forfeitures are by this Act recoverable. . . . Provided always, that no charges or expenses of relief or maintenance shall be recoverable under a suspended order of removal, unless notice of such order of removal, with a copy of the same, and of the examination on which such order was made, shall have been given within ten days of such order being made to the overseers of the poor of the parish to whom such order is directed."

By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, it is enacted, "That in all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information in the Act or Acts of Parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose."

By sect. 35 of the same Act it is enacted, "That nothing in this Act shall extend or be construed to extend to any warrant or order for the removal of any poor person who is or shall become chargeable to any parish, township, or place," &c.

Tomlinson, for the appellants, contended that the order was bad: first, because there was no suspension of the order of removal under the 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 2, as there should have been to have rendered the appellants liable to the cost of maintenance; secondly, that the respondents were out of time in applying to justices for the order for payment, more than six years having elapsed since the demand of payment by them of the appellants.

Denman, for the respondents, argued first, that no order of suspension could have been made at the time the order of removal was made, as the woman was not unable to travel by reason of sickness or other infirmity. pregnancy not being such a sickness or infirmity (Reg. v. Kendal, 28 L. J. 163, M. C.), and that as the suspension could not have been made at the time of the making of the order of removal, it could not have been made afterwards (Reg. v. Llanellchid, 29 L. J. 102, M. C.; 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 84); secondly, that the 11th section of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, does not apply, the 35th section of the same Act exempting from its operation all warrants or orders for the removal of any poor person: (Reg. v. Chedgrave, 20 L. J. 23, M. C.; Reg. v. Chedgrave, 12 Q.B. 206.)

COCKBURN, C. J.—As regards the first question, I am of opinion that the case does not fall within the operation of sect. 84 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76. It is clear that as regards the expense of maintaining the pauper during the twenty-one days after notice of chargeability, the parish of settlement would be bound to reimburse the removing parish. This is provided for by the 84th section of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76. But the statute says nothing as to the expenses of maintenance after the settlement is admitted. Cases may easily occur where supervening sickness might arise after the order of removal is made, but before it is executed, so as to render it dangerous or cruel to execute the order, and this cannot be avoided by a suspension then of the order, which must according to the decisions be made at the same time as the order of removal itself. Unfortunately this is a casus omissus in the statute, and there is no power given to recover the subsequent expenses of maintaining the pauper through sickness after the settlement is decided and the order of removal made and not executed; and it is to be hoped that some member of the Legislature now present will take some steps to remove this very serious defect in the statute. With regard to the point as to the limitation of time, I think that, under the 84th section of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, the removing parish can recover from the parish of settlement the expenses of maintaining the pauper between the service of the notice of chargeability and the expiration of the twenty-one days or longer during which the question of settlement remains undecided. The removing parish may apply for an order for payment of this amount, but the prosecution of such an order must be commenced within six months after the expenses are ascertained and demanded. It is no doubt true that the 35th section of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, exempts all warrants or orders for the removal of poor persons from the operation of the statute, but such an order for payment is not a warrant or order of removal, though it is certainly a consequence of an order of removal. There are costs incidental to the delay in removing the pauper, and it is proper that a parish which consists of individuals in a constant state of change should be promptly made acquainted with the amount of those charges. I think, therefore, the respondents fail on this point also, and that the order must be quashed.

Criminal information—Inciting to enlist as a foreign volunteer.

This court refused to grant a criminal information, at the instance of a private individual, against the proprietor of a newspaper for inserting articles in his paper tending to incite and encourage persons to volunteer to serve in Garibaldi's army.

Bovill, Q.C. (Couch with him), on behalf of George Crawshay, moved for a rule, calling on John Baxter Langley, the proprietor and publisher of the Daily Chronicle and Newcastle Advertiser, and also of a weekly paper published in the same place, to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him. It appeared that Mr. Crawshay had formerly been mayor of Gateshead, and the present application was made in consequence of certain articles which had appeared in Mr. Langley's newspapers, as it was now alleged, inciting and encouraging persons in England to enlist in the army of General Garibaldi, and the publication of which articles it was now contended amounted to a misdemeanor. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Is this a case in which it is competent for a private person to come forward and ask for the interposition of the court? Have you any precedent, Mr. Bovill, for such an application? If this is an offence, it is an offence against the State, and it is for the Attorney-General to interfere; but I never heard of a private person making such an application. BLACKBURN, J.—I certainly never heard of a private individual applying thus in a matter in which he had no private and personal interest. HILL, J.—Cannot you indict? COCKBURN, C.J.—You ask us to sanction a private individual taking up a public question which the Attorney-General has not thought right to interfere in.] This charge was brought before the justices at Newcastle, and they decided not to entertain it, but said the prosecutor had his remedy in the Q. B. I now apply to this court as the highest court of criminal jurisdiction. [BLACKBURN, J.—Assuming Mr. Langley had been guilty of a misdemeanor, and assuming that the justices did wrong in refusing to interfere, is that any reason why we should do so? So far as my memory goes, nothing has ever been done approaching to such a step.] As this is a matter relating to the public, all persons are more or less interested in it. [COCKBURN, C.J.—If anything, it is an offence against the State, and the proper officer to prosecute is the Attorney-General, and if he does not do so it is not for a private individual to come forward.] I may then assume that, even if I were to succeed in making out a case, the court would decline to interfere. [COCKBURN, C.J.—It is such a case, I think, as a private person should not interfere in, and by so doing supersede the authority of the Attorney-General. We must leave you to the ordinary remedy which the law gives you. Mr. Crawshay may, if he please, bring the matter under the notice of her Majesty's law officers, who will decide whether they think it necessary to interfere; all we say is, that we do not grant a criminal information at the instance of a private individual, but he must be left to prefer his bill of indictment, or to such other proceedings as he may be advised.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF ELSWICK.

Poor—Settlement—Apprenticeship—Renting a tenement.

An apprentice used to work and sleep at B. during the week, returning on Saturdays to his father's at G., and sleeping there on the Saturdays and Sundays. On the last day of service, a Wednesday, he left off work at four p.m., at B., and went to see his mistress at N., and then proceeded to G. and slept there that night:

Held, that G. was his place of settlement under the apprenticeship.

A pauper rented a shop and two rooms on the ground floor. They opened into a passage, at the end of which was a front entrance into the street, and a back entrance into the yard. The upper part of the house was occupied by another tenant, who had a right to use the passage and doors, and had a key thereof, and who cleaned a portion of the passage: Held, that the pauper did not gain a settlement by renting a tenement within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

Case stated for the opinion of this court at the Midsummer sessions, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on appeal against an order of removal of a pauper and his wife from the parish of Elswick to the parish of Gateshead.

The facts necessary to elucidate the points decided are as follow:—

The pauper was bound apprentice by indenture to Mrs. Richardson, a plumber and glazier in extensive business in Northumberland, from March 29, 1803, for seven years, and in the course of his employment he used to go to Bedlington on the Monday, remain there during the week at work, sleeping at a place provided by his mistress, and return to his father's at Gateshead on the Saturday, and sleep there on Saturdays and Sundays.

At the close of his apprenticeship he was working at Bedlington, and on the last day (a Wednesday) of it he worked there until four o'clock, and then set off to Newcastle, where he saw his mistress, and then went to Gateshead and slept at his father's house that night.

The appellants contended, upon these facts, that the pauper's settlement by apprenticeship was in Bedlington parish.

They further contended that a settlement was gained in Westgate township, under the following circumstances:—

The plaintiff took a shop and two rooms in Blenheim-street, in the township of Westgate, for one year, at the rent of 12*l.*, and occupied it from Aug. 1851 to Aug. 1852, paying the usual taxes. The house consisted of two stories and a basement. The basement is approached by steps down the area, and has no connection with the shop and rooms on the ground floor, occupied by the pauper. The shop door and the door of the room behind open into a passage running from back to front of the house, at each end of which is a door. The upper floor was let to a tenant who had a right of way along the passage, through the doors, front and back. Each had a key of the outer door, and cleaned a portion of the passage. It was contended that this was a separate and distinct tenement within the meaning of 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

The sessions quashed the order, subject to the opinion of this court.

Davison in support of the order of sessions.—First, the pauper having resided both in Bedlington and Gateshead, for forty days in each place, acquired his settlement in the place where he slept the last night during the apprenticeship, and that was in Bedlington. For the purpose of the apprenticeship, the sleeping on the Tuesday night was the last night. The apprenticeship was put an end to before the Wednesday night. [COCKBURN, C.J.—Did he not continue an apprentice until the following day? Could you have doubted this, if he had continued to work until the usual hour of leaving off on the last day, and then left to sleep at Gateshead?] The mistress having sent him to work at Bedlington, he would have been bound to sleep there during the apprenticeship: (R. v. St. Mary, Canterbury, 2 B. & Ald. 382; R. v. Barnesley, 7 East, 381.) [COCKBURN, C.J.—He continued an apprentice until the following morning. It is quite clear that the settlement was gained in Gateshead.] Secondly, the pauper gained a settlement by renting a tenement in Westgate township. It is submitted that the right of way along the passage is not material, and that the pauper occupied a distinct and separate tenement within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 57: (R. v. Unsworth, 5 A. & E. 261; R. v. Henley-on-Thames, 6 A. & E. 294.) [BLACKBURN, J. cited Parke, B., in Monks v. Dykes, 4 M. & W. 569, as to the meaning of term "dwelling-house."]

Liddell, contra, was stopped by the court.

COCKBURN, C. J.—We are all agreed that there was no such renting of a tenement as would give a settlement under the Act. The authorities establish that one building may be so divided among different tenants with separate entrances for each tenant, as practically to be separate and distinct houses, if the severance is so complete, and the access to each such that the other tenants have no right or enjoyment thereof. That, however, is not the case where they have a common entrance; there the house is but one dwelling-house, occupied by distinct tenants. The case is not within the principle on which R. v. Usworth was decided.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. Patteson, J., in R. v. Woolton, 1 A. & E. 236, said: "I have always thought that the words 'a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building' in these statutes meant separate and distinct as to any other person; that the tenant should not hold part of a house." Now in this case the holding was not separate and distinct as to the entrance, but the tenants enjoyed the entrance in common. And Littledale, J., in R. v. Usworth, observed: "There were in this house three floors, and the access to each was by separate outer doors. I think, therefore, that each was a distinct tenant, and that Waddell occupied a separate and distinct dwelling-house within the meaning of the statute." Here the tenants had not an entrance by distinct outer doors.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The test seems to be, whether the tenants have separate and distinct outer doors. Here they have not.

Order of sessions quashed.

STEELE (appellant) v. HAMILTON (respondent).
Medical Registration Act—Pretending to be a registered surgeon—Evidence.

The respondent was summoned upon an information before the stipendiary magistrate of Liverpool, and a complaint laid by the appellant, secretary of the Liverpool Medical Registration Association, which charged the respondent with having, on the 21st Feb. 1860, wilfully and falsely pretended to be a surgeon and general practitioner or apothecary, or using a name, title, addition, or description implying that he was registered by law as a surgeon, contrary to the form of the statute, whereby he had incurred a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*, under the New Medical Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 40.

On the hearing it was proved that the respondent had given a certificate in the following terms:—"Medical certificate—I hereby certify that I attended William Hayes, late of 110, Mill-street, who died 21st February; cause, enteritis; and I have no reason to attribute his death to poison, violence, or criminal neglect.—Signed, JOHN HAMILTON, Botanic Surgeon, Boston, U.S., and 94, Mill-street, Feb. 22, 1860."

Over the door of the house where the respondent carried on his business was painted, in large legible characters, "J. Hamilton, Surgeon," and in very small letters underneath, "Boston, U.S., not registered in England"; and upon a glass panel of the door was painted, "J. Hamilton, anti-registered surgeon." The word "anti-registered" was written in small letters in scroll-work between the name and the profession, and was illegible except upon close inspection.

The magistrate dismissed the information.

The question for the court was whether, under the circumstances, there was sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction under the 40th section of the Medical Act.

L. Temple.—No doubt the case of Pedgrift v. Chevalier, 2 L.T. Rep. N.S. 360, is against the appellant so far as it applies to this case. Under the 40th section a person may be convicted either for wilfully or falsely pretending to be a surgeon, or for assuming any name or description implying that he is registered under the Act, or that he is recognised by law as a physician, surgeon, &c. [COCKBURN, C.J.—There is no provision that prevents a man from practising as a surgeon; the penalty for so doing is that he is disqualified from recovering his fees and from holding certain offices.] Sect. 37 enacts that no certificate required by any Act from any physician, surgeon, &c., shall be valid unless the person signing the same be registered under the Act. [HILL, J.—Any person present at the death may give such a certificate as the one here: 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, s. 25.] It is very difficult to prove that a man was not in practice before 1815. [HILL, J.—You might prove that he was not forty years of age, or something that would cast on him the onus of proof that he was in practice before 1815.]

Cook Evans for the respondent.

By the COURT.—There is nothing to show that the respondent was not a surgeon. Appeal dismissed.

REG. on the prosecution of WRIGHTSON v. OVERSEERS OF HEMSWORTH.

Poor-rate—Tithe—Composition—Local Inclosure Act—Award.

*An Inclosure Act granted an annual rent of 4*s.* per acre to the rector of the parish in lieu of tithe, and enacted that all allotments and the annual rent to the rector should at all times be rated proportionably with other lands in the parish, and to prevent the settling of such proportions from creating disputes between the rector and parishioners, the rector's rate for ever thereafter should be in such proportion to the rates of the parish as the commissioner should fix as the proportion the rector should pay, considering the nature of a money payment.*

*The commissioner awarded that the rector's proportion should be "one-fourteenth part of the amount of the rate so made by me as aforesaid," which he declared to be 295*l.* upon 4140*l.* 8*s., the rateable value of the lands in the parish:

Held, that such award was bad, not being what the Act directed him to do, and that a rate founded upon it could not be supported.

This was a case from the West Riding sessions for the opinion of this court, on an appeal by the rector of Hemsworth, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, against a poor-rate.

The rector was assessed at 356*l.*, being one-fourteenth part of 4987*l.*, the value of the lands within the parish under the following circumstances:—

In 1803 a local Act was passed, the 43 Geo. 3, for the inclosure of waste lands in the parish of Hemsworth. There had been a previous Inclosure Act.

Sect. 10 requires the commissioner to allot to the rector of the parish a certain portion of the waste lands in lieu of the tithes arising out of the waste lands to be inclosed.

Sect. 11 recites that it is expedient that all the tithes upon the other lands in Hemsworth not directed to be inclosed should be extinguished, and in lieu, compensation awarded to the rector, and then enacts that the annual compensation of 4*s.* shall be paid to the rector for the time being for ever, subject to the average price of wheat, for every acre of land within the parish.

Sect. 17 enacts that, to prevent the settling of such proportions from creating disputes and differences between the rector and his parishioners, the rate to be assessed on the amount of the rents to be given by this Act to the rector in lieu of his tithes for the old inclosure, shall for ever hereafter be in such proportion to the rates to be assessed for the whole of the said parish as the commissioner (who is hereby directed to ascertain the value of the estates within the parish) shall fix as the proportion which, considering the nature of a money payment, the rector ought to pay.

The commissioner in his award directed that the rate to be assessed on the rector, in pursuance of sect. 17, should be one-fourteenth part of the amount of the rate "so made by me as aforesaid." And he found the amount of the rateable value of the lands to be

REG. v. SAYERS AND THACKWELL.

4140l. 8s., and the fourteenth part (295l.) as the rector's proportion.

Recently a fresh valuation of the lands in the parish was made, and it was found that the rateable value had increased to 4987l., and the rector's assessment was increased to 356l., as being the fourteenth part.

The rector appealed to the quarter sessions, but that court confirmed the rate, subject to the opinion of this court.

Campbell Foster in support of the order of sessions.—The 16th section of the Act enacts that the allotments and annual rent granted to the rector by sect. 11 shall at all times be rated proportionably with other lands within the parish. Then sect. 17 enacts, in order to prevent the settling of such proportions from creating disputes between the rector and his parishioners, the rector's rate for ever thereafter should be "in such proportion to the rates" to be assessed for the whole parish as the commissioner shall fix as the proportion which the rector ought to pay, considering the nature of a money payment. Then the commissioner having fixed the proportion at a fourteenth, that is the proportion of all future rates which he is to pay. [BLACKBURN, J.—What is the meaning of the words in the award, "so made by me as aforesaid?"] They may be treated as surplusage, or the award may be considered invalid pro tanto.

Manisty and West for the appellant.—The sessions have assumed that the rector was to be rated at one-fourteenth of the increased value of the lands in the parish. If this construction is correct, it may be ruinous to the rector; e. g., if a railway was to come through the parish, and thereby greatly increase the value of the lands in the parish, and the rector be bound to pay one-fourteenth of that increased value, it might absorb the whole of his income.

The COURT intimated that they were prepared to say that the commissioner's award was invalid upon this subject, and that it would necessarily follow that the rate could not then be sustained. The appellant's object being then gained, it would not be necessary to ascertain the correct construction of the statute.

Manisty.—That will content the appellant.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the award of the commissioner is bad in this respect, and that it does not do that which the Act prescribes. The parties, therefore, must stand on their ordinary legal rights. The Act prescribes that the commissioner shall fix the proportion which the rent given by the Act to the rector is to bear to the general rate of the parish. It is very true that the commissioner is directed to ascertain the value of the real property in the parish, and the purpose in so doing is to enable him to ascertain the proportion of the rector's rate to future rates, regard being had by him to the nature of a money payment in lieu of tithe, being of a more advantageous nature. The Act does not require him to fix a given sum, but only the proportion which the rector's rate is to bear to the future rates. The commissioner is not to determine a fixed sum for all future rates, but a fixed proportion; and when the commissioner ascertained the precise sum, he did not do that which the Act directed him to do, and therefore the award, quoad the rector's rating, is bad. The rate in question, therefore, cannot be supported, and the parties will stand in the same position as if the Act had not passed.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I have had very great doubts whether the argument of the appellant was not well founded, as to the construction to be put upon the Act. I am inclined to think that the words of sect. 17 rather imply that, as the rector stood in a more advantageous position by having a money payment granted to him in lieu of tithe than the rest of the parish, and that all that the commissioner had to do was to ascertain the amount to be paid by the rector to the future rates. However that may be, I agree with the rest of the court that the award is invalid pro tanto.

HILL, J.—If Mr. Manisty's argument were good, the duty of the commissioners would have been very simple, merely to determine a given sum which the rector was to pay for all time thereafter; but the Act does not impose such a duty on the commissioner. The words "considering the nature of a money payment" are a key to the construction of the whole section. The commissioner does not appear to have done the duty imposed on him, and therefore the award, quoad this fact, is void.

BLACKBURN, J.—I think the Legislature intended, as has since been done in the Health of Towns Act, to rate one description of property higher than another, on the ground that it was not just to rate them all alike, and that, considering a money payment was more advantageous than the usual mode of collecting tithe, the commissioner was to determine the proportion the rector was to pay in all future rates, and not having done that, the award is bad. Rate quashed.

REG. v. SAYERS AND THACKWELL (Justices of Gloucester).

Certiorari—Tithe Commutation Amendment Act—23 & 24 Vict. c. 93, s. 28—Notice of application to the justices for delivery of sealed copy apportionment.

The 28th section of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 93, enacts that "whenever any person other than the persons legally entitled to the possession of the same, shall have possession of the sealed copy of any confirmed instrument of apportionment, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace for the county or other jurisdiction within which the lands mentioned in the said apportionment are situate, upon the application of any person interested in the lands or rent-charge, and upon fourteen days' notice in writing of such application to the person or persons in whose custody such copy shall be at the time of such application, to hear and determine such application," &c. : Held, that such notice refers to a notice of an application that has already been made; and where a fourteen days' notice had been given of an intention to apply to the justices, and they heard the application ex parte, and made an order under the above section, this court granted a writ of certiorari to quash the same.

Milward moved for a rule calling on the Rev. Andrew Sayers, clerk, and John Cann Thackwell, Esq., two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Gloucester, to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to bring up a certain order of the said justices dated the 18th Oct. last, whereby it was adjudged and ordered that Edmund Edmonds, who did not appear, should forthwith deliver up to the churchwardens of the parish of Newent, in the county of Gloucester, the sealed copy of the confirmed instrument of apportionment of and for the said parish of Newent, and that the same be deposited by them the said churchwardens in the vestry of the parish church of Newent aforesaid; that a fine of 20s. for each day that the said sealed copy of the said confirmed instrument of apportionment should be retained by the said Edmund Edmonds, contrary to the terms of the said order and adjudication, should be paid by the said E. Edmonds, as the person retaining the same; and that the sum of 8s. costs be forthwith paid by the said E. Edmonds to Mr. Hill, and on nonpayment of the same to be recovered by distress. From the affidavits it appeared that Mr. Edmonds was an attorney practising at Newent, and was the duly appointed receiver of the tithe rentcharge for the said parish payable to the vicar; that on the 27th Sept. last he was served with a notice signed by John Hill, one of the churchwardens of his intention to apply to the justices for the delivery up of the sealed copy of the confirmed instrument of apportionment, and that on the 13th Oct. he delivered the same into the possession of the Rev. Arthur Andrew Onslow, the vicar of the said parish, and that on delivering the same to the said vicar, the said E. Edmonds requested the said vicar to give notice thereof to the said John Hill. The order in question assumed to have been made by the said justices under the authority of the 28th section of the Tithe Commutation Amendment Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 93, which enacts that "Whenever any person other than the persons legally entitled to the possession of the same shall have possession of the sealed copy of any confirmed instrument of apportionment, it shall be lawful for any two justices of the peace for the county or other jurisdiction within which the lands mentioned in the said apportionment are situate, upon the application of any persons interested in the lands or rentcharge, and upon fourteen days' notice in writing of such application to the person or persons in whose custody such copy shall be at the time of such application, to hear and determine such application, and upon hearing such application the said justices may order such copy to be removed from the custody of the person holding the same, and to be deposited in such other custody as the said justices having reference to the security and due preservation of such copy and to the convenience of the parties interested therein may think fit, and may impose a fine not exceeding 20s. for each day that any such copy shall be retained contrary to the terms of such order upon the person so retaining it, and may make such further order concerning the notice to be given of such removal and deposit, and concerning the costs of such application, and the said fine, or of any opposition thereto, as they may think reasonable." No summons had been issued, and the order was made on the ex parte application of Hill, Edmonds not appearing.

Macnamara showed cause in the first instance.—The notice referred to in the section, which was in this case duly given, is substituted for a summons; the same thing has been enacted in the Recovery of Small Tenements Act, and in other Acts. [COCKBURN, C.J.—There the party complained against is not subject to fine.] The Highway Act may also be taken as an illustration. [BLACKBURN, J.—Does not it rather point to a notice of the application having been made after it has been made?] It is a condition precedent, and the question is, upon the facts here stated, have the justices acted in excess of jurisdiction or without jurisdiction. The certiorari having been taken away, no such writ can issue on the merits.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The statute being loose in its expressions, we must pursue the safer course.

BLACKBURN, J.—I take it that it clearly lies with you in the present case to show that the Legislature have dispensed with any preliminary step.

COCKBURN, C.J.—Where there is a serious doubt whether the section points to an application thereafter to be made, or one that has been made, the safer course is to say that it refers to an application that has been made.

HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

Rule absolute to quash the order.

ELLIS (appellant) v. KELLY (respondent).

Medical Practitioners Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90
—Doctor of Medicine pretending to be—Matter of fact for justices to determine—Appeal—Summary Proceedings (Justices) Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The Medical Practitioners Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 40, enacts, that any person who shall wilfully and falsely pretend to be, or take, or use the name or title of (inter alia), Doctor of Medicine, or any name, title, addition, or description, implying that he is registered under that Act, or that he is recognised by law as a physician, practitioner in medicine, &c., shall upon summary conviction pay a sum not exceeding 20l. The respondent had on a brass plate on his gate "Dr. Kelly," called himself and was called "Dr. Kelly." He had a diploma of the University of Erlangen, in Bavaria, which authorised him to practise medicine throughout Germany. His name was on the medical register as "Mem. Royal Coll. of Surgeons, England, 1856, Lic. Soc. Apoth. Lon. 1856," but not as Doctor of Medicine. The respondent was summoned before justices for the penalty under the 40th section, for taking and using the name of Doctor, and title of Doctor of Medicine, not being on the Medical Register as such. They dismissed the complaint. On appeal to this court under the Summary Proceedings of Justices Act:

Held, that the justices acted quite right. The respondent was not guilty of any offence created by the above enactment; and by

Wilde, B., that it was a question of fact for magistrates only to decide, not one of law to be reserved for the opinion of this court, as decided in Ladd v. Gould, 1 L. T. Rep. N.S. 325:

Held, also, that on an appeal against the determination of justices under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, the party in support of the information or complaint is entitled to begin the argument.

The following case was stated by the magistrates of Middlesex for the opinion of this court. John Ellis informant, Hubert Edmond Charles Kelly defendant:—

Middlesex, to wit.—This is an information preferred by John Ellis, of Pinner, Middlesex, gentleman, against Hubert E. C. Kelly, of the same place, surgeon, for having on the 2nd Nov. last, at Pinner, in the said county, wilfully and falsely pretended to be, and did take and use the name or title of a doctor of medicine, thereby implying that he is so registered under the Act 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90.

The defendant having appeared before us the undersigned upon summons, to answer the said information, it was thereupon proved on the part of the said John Ellis as follows:

First, that the said defendant has had for years past and on the day named in the information a brass plate affixed on the outer gate of his residence, on which is "Dr. Kelly." He put in a published copy of the last Medical Register, in which defendant's name appears as follows, "Kelly, Hubert Edmond Charles, Pinner, Middlesex, Mem. Royal Coll. of Surgeons, England, 1856, Lic. Soc. Apoth. Lon. 1856." Has heard him call himself Dr. Kelly; there is no other Dr. Kelly at Pinner but defendant.

For defence a document purporting to be a diploma of the University of Erlangen, in Bavaria, was put in, and in support of its genuineness the following witnesses were called:—

Gustavus Morris Strauss, doctor of philosophy of Berlin, sworn.—That he was acquainted with diplomas of the University of Erlangen. That one of the seals attached to the one produced was that of the Great University, the other the seal of the Medical Faculty. That the diploma permitted the person therein named (H. E. C. Kelly) to practise medicine throughout Germany; believed the signature of one of the professors (Rosshuit) attached to the diploma to be genuine, as he had received a letter from Professor Rosshuit, but had never seen him write or sign his name. On cross-examination stated he did not know the regulations of that university, but at five other universities in Germany personal attendance to study before obtaining a diploma was necessary. Had seen Rosshuit's signature to a letter once. Is employed to translate German works.

[Ex.]

ELLIS v. KELLY.

[Ex.]

Adolph Reinecher, doctor of medicine of Berlin, sworn.—The diploma produced is of the form and shape of those of Erlangen, the seals to it, being pendent, are not like those now used, which are impressed. That formerly diplomas of philosophy of German universities were to be had for money, but not those for medicine. No one who was residing in England could obtain a medical diploma without examination. He had seen diplomas of Erlangen precisely like that produced.

The complainant contended that the diploma put in by the defendant was not legally proved to be authentic and genuine, nor that the person named in it was the defendant, and that the same might have been proved if the defendant had left the document at the registration office, when the council would, through the Dean of Faculty of Erlangen, have ascertained the fact of its being genuine or not; and that if even these facts had been duly proved, the defendant not being registered as qualified by that diploma to practise as an M.D., he did commit the offence charged in this information, by having the title of "doctor" on his brass plate in front of his house: and also that the possession of such foreign diploma did not entitle the defendant to use the title of doctor of medicine in this country without being liable to the penalty imposed by the 40th section of the said Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90.

The defendant, by counsel, urged: First, that, even without the diploma, there was no evidence of the title being used wilfully and with false pretence; secondly, that the mere use of the title could not necessarily imply that he was registered in the words of the information; thirdly, that the diploma and the evidence respecting it was abundant to show that there was no wilful false pretence; that the diploma was conclusive evidence of his being qualified to use the title of M.D. either in this or any foreign country; that there was no evidence of his having practised as an M.D.; that being registered as a surgeon and apothecary, it was not compulsory on him to register as M.D., and that, being possessed of this diploma, he could not be convicted of falsely pretending to be or using the title of M.D. within the provisions of the statute creating the offence.

We, the undersigned justices of the peace for the said county of Middlesex, upon the hearing of the said information, dismissed the same with costs against the said complainant, for the following reasons: That it was proved that the defendant had practised in Pinner as a medical man, assuming the title of doctor of medicine, and that he was not registered in the Medical Register as a doctor of medicine; that the document produced to us as purporting to be a diploma from the University of Erlangen has not been proved; that the possession of that document so far justified the defendant in assuming the title of doctor of medicine that he could not be said to have assumed such title wilfully and falsely within the meaning of the Act (sect. 40 of the Medical Registration Act), but we were of opinion also that the Act does prohibit the use in England of the title of doctor of medicine obtained by virtue of any foreign diploma, unless the same is registered according to the provisions of the Act.

The opinion of the Court of Exchequer is therefore requested: first, whether the Medical Registration Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, prohibits the taking and using of the title of doctor of medicine by any medical man in England, unless the said title be duly registered according to the provisions of the Act; secondly, whether if the court should be of opinion that the Act does prohibit the assuming of such title, the defendant, under the circumstances, can be held to have so done wilfully and falsely within the meaning of the 40th section. If the opinion of the court should be in the negative on either question, then our judgment will be confirmed; but if the opinion of the court should be in the affirmative on both questions, then the case is to be remitted to us for further consideration.

Given under our hands at Edgware, in this county, this 10th July 1860.

EDWD. WM. COX.

GEO. F. HARRIS.

Robinson, for the respondent, in support of the decision of the justices who had dismissed the information, claimed the right to begin.

Codd, for the appellant, claimed the right to begin in support of the conviction. He stated that the practice adopted in the Court of Q. B., as well as in this court, was that the party in support of the conviction began: (The Blackpool Local Board of Health v. Bennett, 4 H. & N. 127; 28 L. J. 203, M. C.) In Gardner v. Whitford, 4 C. B., N. S., 665, the Com. Pleas held, after a conviction, the appellant was entitled to begin.

By the COURT.—The party in support of the information or complaint is entitled to begin.

Codd for the appellant.—The Act prohibits the use of the title of doctor of medicine, and there was no evidence to justify the magistrates in assuming his title from the document produced before them. Sect. 15 of the Medical Act provides that every person possessed of any one or more of the qualifications described in the schedule A to the Act, shall, on payment of a fee, &c., be entitled to be registered on producing to the registrar, &c., the document conferring or evidencing the qualification in respect whereof he seeks to be so registered, &c. Sect. 27 provides that the registers are to be printed and published yearly, and called "The Medical Register," and a copy thereof purporting to be so printed and published shall be evidence in all courts, and before all justices of the peace, &c., and the absence of the name of any person from such copy shall be evidence, until the contrary be made to appear, &c. Sect. 34, that after the 1st Jan. 1859 the words "legally qualified medical practitioner," or "duly qualified medical practitioner," or any words importing a person recognised by law as a medical practitioner or member of the medical profession, when used in any Act of Parliament, shall be construed to mean a person registered under this Act; and sect. 40, that any person who shall wilfully and falsely pretend to be, or take or use the name or title of a physician, doctor of medicine, licentiate in medicine and surgery, bachelor of medicine, surgeon, general practitioner or apothecary, or any name, title, addition, or description, implying that he is registered under this Act, or that he is recognised by law as a physician or surgeon, or licentiate in medicine and surgery, or a practitioner in medicine, or an apothecary, shall, upon a summary conviction for any such offence pay a sum not exceeding 20/. Schedule A contains amongst other things: "Doctor of medicine of any foreign or colonial university or college practising as a physician in the United Kingdom before the 1st Oct. 1858, who shall produce certificates to the satisfaction of the council of his having taken his degree of doctor of medicine after regular examination, or who shall satisfy the council, under sect. 45 of the Act, that there is sufficient reason for admitting him to be registered." The Act therefore prohibits the use of the name of doctor or title of "doctor of medicine," unless the diploma of the person using it be duly registered, which was not the case here; and therefore the question is, whether upon the wording of the Act the fact of having a foreign diploma gives the defendant a colourable right to take the title of a physician. The justices did not think even that diploma proved, and the evidence of its authenticity failed. [POLLOCK, C. B.—We think it was sufficiently proved]. The justices thought not, and so the case states. [POL-

[Ex.]

LOCK, C. B.—When a case is sent for our opinion, we give our judgment according to the right of the matter.] If a person be duly qualified, but not registered, he comes within the 40th section; his non-registration is a violation of it. [POLLOCK, C. B.—It appears that the respondent is registered both as a surgeon and an apothecary.] But not as an M.D., which he professes and represents himself to be; he knows he is not on the register as M.D., and he therefore wilfully and falsely pretends to be what he is not, and comes within the Act. [POLLOCK, C. B.—Suppose a person is a surgeon and a doctor of laws, which might happen, surely he can call himself doctor if he thinks proper to do so. If a man is on the proper medical register, why may he not call himself what he likes in that capacity? The Act of Parliament was passed to prevent persons not being duly qualified to practise surgery imposing upon the public. The defendant is qualified as an M.D. and registered as surgeon and apothecary, and you can only charge him with assuming to be a member of the College of Physicians when he is only, according to the Medical Register Act, in reality a member of the College of Surgeons. There is no pretence for saying that he wilfully and falsely pretended to be a member of the College of Physicians, within the meaning of this Act of Parliament. This charge is virtually here, not that he assumed a title he had no right to, but that he did not cease to use it.] Had he any right to assume the title here of M.D. and use it, without being on the register as an M.D.? The Act says he shall not; if he does, he shall be liable to a penalty. This case is distinguishable from Pedgrift v. Chevallier, 29 L. J. 225, M. C., where the evidence did not appear to be sufficient for a conviction before the justices in the first instance. Erle, C.J. there said: "Unless we can see the essential facts proved necessary to support this conviction we are bound not to confirm it. There is nothing in the case to show that the appellant was not in practice as a surgeon before the Act passed; there is nothing to show that he did not possess a diploma from some one of the learned bodies who are entitled to confer it; there is nothing to show that he was not recognised by law as a surgeon, so far as a person might be entitled to practise the lawful trade of a surgeon, and entitled to enforce his rights; there is nothing to negative his qualification. The only facts are that he called himself a surgeon, and was not registered. I do not think that that is enough, for it cannot be maintained that every person who calls himself a surgeon without being registered is liable to be convicted." Here the evidence given before the justices was sufficient to justify a conviction.

Robinson, contra, for the respondent.—Dr. Kelly has since caused his diploma to be registered; he has a perfect right now therefore to practise as an M.D. (He was stopped from argument by the court.)

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion that the respondent is entitled to our judgment. There can be no doubt that he has been called "Doctor" for many years past, that he assumed the title, and, as the case finds, that he practised as a medical man. It appeared that he had a diploma of a foreign university, which authorised him to use the title of Doctor of Medicine, and practise medicine throughout Germany. His name was upon the Medical Register of this country as a surgeon and apothecary, and having a diploma which authorised him to call himself "Doctor" out of England, why not here? He is most certainly not within the terms of the 40th section of the Act as being a person who wilfully and falsely pretends to the title, and liable to be summarily convicted for the offence. The justices were quite right in dismissing the complaint, and I think this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

BRAMWELL, B.—I am of the same opinion, and it only shows the reasonableness of the rule laid down at the commencement of this case, that the party in support of the information or complaint should begin his argument; the burden of proof is on him, and he it is who should first seek to establish if he can the offence laid. If he does not, there is at once an end of the matter. Now here I am of opinion there is no offence charged to which the respondent is liable. The Medical Practitioners Act contains a prohibition against persons being or pretending to be doctors of medicine, surgeons, apothecaries, or general practitioners, without being first duly qualified and registered as the Act directs. I think sect. 40 was intended as a protection for the public, as it provides, that if any person should wilfully and falsely pretend to be, or take or use the name or title of a physician, doctor of medicine, licentiate in medicine, surgeon, general practitioner, apothecary and so forth, or any name, title, addition, or description implying that he is registered under that Act, or recognised by law as such, shall upon summary conviction pay," &c. The respondent is clearly entitled to be recognised as a surgeon, general practitioner and apothecary. He is on the register as such, and I think the object of the statute was to prevent persons pretending to be duly qualified, and assuming a title to which they were not entitled, when in fact they had no qualification; as if any one wilfully and falsely called himself M.D. when only a member of the College of Surgeons; and I am confirmed in this by sect. 30, which provides that every person registered under this Act) the Medical Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90) who may have obtained any higher degree or qualification other than the qualification in respect of which he may have been registered, shall be entitled to have such higher degree or additional qualification inserted in the register in substitution for, or in addition to, the qualification previously registered, on payment of such fee as the council may appoint." The respondent has a diploma as doctor of medicine of a foreign university, which may be substituted for that which is on the register, or by sect. 15 and schedule A of the Act may, besides the other titles he has registered already, be registered too; he would be then qualified to practise as a physician in England. The case merely states he practised as a medical man. The next thing is, if he has practised as M.D. at all, has he done it wilfully and falsely, contrary to sect. 40 of the Act of Parliament? What is the meaning of the Act? Why, that any person should wilfully and fraudulently pretend to be an M.D., surgeon, apothecary, &c., when in fact he is not. It must be done intentionally if at all, and when he is not entitled to be registered. Well, did the respondent do it here? Clearly he did not. He is on the register as a surgeon and apothecary; and he has also a foreign diploma entitling him to the degree of M.D., and he has put "Dr." on a brass plate on his gate; and because he has not got that diploma registered are we to say that he has pretended to be and use the title of doctor of medicine with an intention on his part to do wrong? I am of opinion that he has not done so within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and that this appeal should be dismissed.

CHANNELL, B.—I am of the same opinion, and think the justices were right in determining that the respondent having the diploma produced before them, could not be said to have assumed the title of doctor of medicine wilfully and falsely within the meaning of the Medical Practitioners Register Act, and I come to that conclusion for the reasons which have been given by my brother Bramwell. [The learned baron then referred to the way in which the case had been stated.]

WILDE, B.—The only question for us to determine is, whether the respondent has wilfully and falsely pretended to be a physician and doctor of medicine within the meaning of this Act of Parliament, when he is not. It appears to me to be a question of fact; the fact being that the respondent has practised as a medical man; that he is on the Medical Register as a surgeon and apothecary; and that having a diploma of the university of Erlangen in Bavaria, which entitles him to use the title of "Dr." and practise medicine throughout Germany, he has put "Dr." before his name on his door-plate. A case has been handed up to me within the last few minutes, of Ladd v. Gould, 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 325, very similar to the present, in which the Court of Q. B. held it was a question of fact for the magistrates to decide, not one of law to be reserved for the opinion of the court, and I think with the Court of Q. B. it is a question of fact; but I concur also with the rest of this court in thinking the magistrates acted rightly in dismissing the complaint upon this occasion, and that the respondent is entitled to our judgment.

Appeal dismissed; judgment for respondent, with costs.

Aggravated assault — 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30 — Charge of rape—Jurisdiction of magistrates—Habeas corpus.

Where an information charged a prisoner with having unlawfully assaulted and abused a woman, and after a discussion between the attorney for the prosecutrix, the attorney for the prisoner, and the justices, it was agreed not to proceed with a charge of rape under that information, but to proceed under the Aggravated Assaults Act, and the only evidence of the assault was that given by the prosecutrix herself, who swore that the prisoner violated her person against her will, and the magistrates thereupon convicted the prisoner of an aggravated assault under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, and sentenced him to six months' imprisonment:

Held (per Pollock, C.B. and Wilde, B.), that an assault with intent to commit any other offence is itself an offence distinct from a common assault. That by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, magistrates have jurisdiction over common assaults only. That where the jurisdiction depends on certain facts being proved or not proved, the decision of the magistrates as to the proof of those facts is conclusive, but that the court will consider the facts so as to determine what was the nature of the charge before the magistrates; and that on the facts of this case the magistrates had exceeded their jurisdiction by convicting on a charge of assault other than a common assault:

Held, contra (per Bramwell and Channell, BB.), that in point of form, a charge of assault only was brought before the magistrates, and that it was not competent for the court to review the evidence on which the decision of the magistrates was founded.

William Thompson was convicted of an aggravated assault upon a woman under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, and committed to Preston gaol for six months.

The information, which had been drawn up by the magistrates' clerk, who was a layman, charged the defendant Thompson with "unlawfully assaulting and abusing the complainant;" and when the attorney for the prosecutrix proceeded to charge the defendant Thompson before the magistrates with having committed a rape, it was objected for the defendant that the information did not charge him with a felony; and after some argument between the attorneys and the justices, it was agreed that the case should be taken under the Aggravated Assault Act. The only evidence of the assault was that given by the prosecutrix herself, who distinctly swore that the defendant had committed a rape upon her.

The commitment stated "That, whereas William Thompson, of Oswaldtwistle, county of Lancaster, to wit, manager of a cotton factory, was duly convicted before two justices of the peace, upon the information and complaint of Susannah Taylor, of Belthorne, in the township of Oswaldtwistle, single woman, for that the said William Thompson, within three calendar months last past, to wit, on the 29th Oct. 1860, at the township of Lower Darwen, in the lower division of the hundred of Blackburn, in the said county of Lancaster, did unlawfully assault and abuse the said Susannah Taylor, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided; and the said justices did find the said assault to be proved, and to be of such an aggravated nature that it could not, in the opinion of the said justices, be sufficiently punished under the provisions of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and the said justices did therefore, in pursuance of the statute passed in the sixteenth year of the reign of her present Majesty, entitled, 'An Act for the better prevention and punishment of aggravated assaults upon women and children, and for preventing delay and expense in the administration of certain parts of the criminal law,' adjudge that the said William Thompson for his said offence should be imprisoned in the house of correction at Preston, in the said county, for the space of six calendar months."

Under these circumstances a rule nisi had been granted calling on the justices to show cause why a habeas corpus should not issue to bring up the body of the said William Thompson, on the ground that the justices had no jurisdiction in the matter.

J. Kaye now showed cause.—It was contended, first, that the conviction was not before the court, but only the commitment, and that being regular and good upon the face of it, being drawn up in accordance with the forms in Jervis's Act, would be a sufficient return to a writ of habeas corpus, and that the court could not, as the conviction was not before them, inquire into the evidence upon which the justices acted. Secondly, the question as to the degree and sufficiency of evidence and the credit due to witnesses is a matter solely within the discretion of the magistrates, and the court will not interfere unless it appear that there was no evidence whatever to support the conviction: (R. v. Bolton, 1 Q. B. 66; Paley on Convictions, 107.) In this case there was clearly sufficient evidence of an assault to support the conviction, and the fact that further evidence was given tending to show that a rape had been committed does not invalidate their decision, as not only were they confined to the offence stated in the information, but it might well be that they were satisfied with the evidence of the assault, but not satisfied with the evidence of the more serious offence. Thirdly, that the word "abuse" in the information did not necessarily mean "ravishing," and that prefixing the word "unlawfully" showed that a misdemeanor was intended. Fourthly, that supposing the information was for a rape, and the evidence only made out an offence included in but not amounting to the felony, the magistrates were justified in convicting for the lesser offence.

Overnd, Q.C. (Wheeler with him) in support of the rule.—The information meant more than a common assault, and the employment of the word "abuse" gave notice to the magistrates of the more serious charge (18 Eliz. c. 7, s. 4), and the evidence of the woman pointed to rape or nothing. No private arrangement between the parties could give the magistrates the right to adjudicate in such a case; they should either have committed the prisoner for trial or have discharged him. Even if they did not consider that the charge of rape was established, it was evidently either an "assault with intent," or at least an indecent assault; and in either case their jurisdiction was ousted:

[Ex.]

Re WILLIAM THOMPSON.

[Ex.]

(14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29.) By 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, justices were empowered to deal summarily with common assaults; and by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, they are authorised to inflict a more severe punishment for aggravated assaults, but that gives them no power to deal with charges of rape, assault with intent, nor with indecent assaults. If the word "abuse" took the case beyond an aggravated assault, their summary jurisdiction was at once ousted: (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17.)

Curr. adv. vult.

Nov. 26.—POLLOCK, C.B.—In this case an application was made the other day by Mr. Overend for a writ of habeas corpus. Cause was shown, and Mr. Overend and Mr. Wheeler were heard in support of the rule. The court being equally divided the rule will be discharged; but it is right, perhaps, shortly to state the grounds on which it appears to me that the writ ought to have issued. It appears that the conviction and commitment were under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, by which magistrates are empowered, if they think an assault to be of an aggravated character, to extend the imprisonment that may be inflicted under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, from three months, which that statute empowers, to six months, which the magistrates may award under the 16 & 17 Vict. The objection to the conviction and the warrant founded upon it was this, that the magistrates have exceeded their jurisdiction; and it appears that their jurisdiction is founded upon this: by the 9 Geo. 4, if complaint be made of a common assault (the statute does not say an assault merely, but it says a common assault), if complaint be made of a common assault, the magistrates have a right to deal with it, and to award to the party found guilty of a common assault any term of imprisonment not exceeding three months. It may be material to consider, what is the meaning of the expression "common assault." It appears to me that it means an assault not accompanied by any circumstances that give to the assault the distinct character of an offence recognised by the law as something more than an assault. I certainly cannot understand that expression to mean anything else. The assault may be accompanied with a violent killing, and then it would be manslaughter or murder; an assault may be accompanied with violation of the person of a woman against her will, and then it would be a rape; it may be accompanied with circumstances that leave no doubt of an intention to commit a rape, it would then be an assault with intent to commit a rape; it may be accompanied with circumstances that show that there was an intention to kill, and an assault with intent to commit a rape is only a misdemeanor, it is not a felony; but an assault with intent to kill is to this hour a capital felony. It may be an assault for some other purposes, which it is not necessary to repeat here now. Thus it may either be a capital felony, or a felony, or nothing but a misdemeanor; but, in my judgment, an assault with intent to commit a rape is as distinct an offence from a common assault as murder is distinct from rape. They both are distinct from an ordinary assault, or an assault for a purpose not amounting to felony, but yet going beyond a common assault, and the circumstance of that being an assault (as a common circumstance in all these cases) does not identify the two crimes so as to make them more or less of the same class of offence. That is an assault with something beyond; but still, having taken that away from the assault, in my judgment there is as much distinction in point of law between a common assault and an assault with intent to commit a rape as there is between larceny and perjury, and I do not think that it was ever intended that they should be confounded together. Well, then, the statute of the 9 Geo. 4, having taken means to limit the authority of the magistrates to inquire into a common assault, in my judgment this authority is not extended by the 16 & 17

Vict., which, although it does not repeat the expression "common assault," and speaks merely of an assault, but of a more aggravated character, refers back to the power of punishment under the 9 Geo. 4, and says, if the assault is of so aggravated a nature that the magistrates think the powers of the 9 Geo. 4 not sufficient, they shall not be limited to three months, but may award imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour. It appears to me that, under these provisions of the Legislature, the magistrates have no authority except to inquire into a charge of common assault; that when that charge is made for any other aggravated assault distinguished by the law and marked out for a different mode of punishment, they ought to hold their hand and send the case for trial at the sessions, if the sessions be competent to inquire into the offence, or at the assizes, if the offence be of such a nature that it ought to go there. Then the question that I have to put to myself, in point of fact, with reference to these proceedings is this, What was the charge made before the magistrates? If it was a charge of common assault, they have jurisdiction; if it was a charge for an assault of a different character, they had no jurisdiction. The case of Rez v. Bolton is a very able summary of the law upon this subject, and it points out with remarkable precision, in my judgment, the occasions on which the questions of jurisdiction must be left entirely to the magistrates. There are cases where the jurisdiction depends upon certain facts being proved or not proved. Where that is the case, if the magistrates have dealt with the fact as being proved, and have exercised a jurisdiction upon that footing, no court can inquire into their authority. Their decision upon the fact is conclusive with reference to any question of appeal, or application to any court whatever. But when the nature of the charge is undoubted, and it turns out that the charge is not a charge which gives them jurisdiction, then it appears to me neither Rez v. Bolton nor any other authority prevents the Superior Courts in Westminster-hall from entertaining the matter and looking at the evidence. What was the charge that was really made on the present occasion? The information states that the charge is for assaulting and abusing a certain woman. The complaint is, upon the face of the information, something more than a mere assaulting. The very expression (for the information was in writing) appears to me to import assaulting and something more; but when one hears the evidence, it seems to me that every possible doubt must be removed, and I think the Court of Q.B., before whom this matter was brought, and who did not grant a rule to show cause upon this part of the case, were not in the position in which we are; for we have had, in addition to the rule to show cause, affidavits filed on the part of those who support the conviction and the warrant, and who resist the rule for the habeas corpus; we have a statement made distinctly of all that took place before the magistrates, and there the information being for an assault, and clearly something more, called abusing, it appears to me that the moment the complainant had to give her evidence, she forthwith detailed a complete case of absolute violation of her person against her will. It appears to me that, without entering into any very nice inquiry as to what is the meaning of the word "abuse," there are very strong grounds for thinking that the word "abuse" as applied to a woman—and I am not aware that in any case it has been used except with reference to sexual intercourse; certainly it has in more than one Act of Parliament had that meaning applied to it—that the term "abuse" apparently always imports something of that nature. Well then, we have those facts; the information is for assaulting and abusing, and the evidence has disclosed on the part of the complainant a statement of facts that constitute a complete violation of her person against her will. Can any one say that that was a charge of a common assault? I think it was not. If there was no charge of a common assault made—if there was no evidence of a common assault, that is, merely a common assault—in my opinion the magistrates had no jurisdiction. It, however, may be suggested that that is a decision of the magistrates in point of fact and conclusive with us, which I admit it to be where the mere question of truth or falsehood of the facts is to determine the matter; and it may be said, "Oh, they believed the woman as to the mere assault, but disbelieved every other part of her story, and they disbelieved it was either an actual rape, or an attempt to commit it." But it appears to me that would only be trifling with what I think it is our duty to take care of, namely, that the magistrates do not exceed their jurisdiction, and exercise a power of sending one of her Majesty's subjects for six months to prison, and possibly with hard labour (though hard labour was not given in this case), the effect of which would be to put an end to all further inquiry about the rape, which, after the judgment of the magistrates, you would have no right to deal with. They cannot in substance pardon it by treating it as a common assault and disbelieve the woman. In my judgment, therefore, their duty was to have sent the case to be tried at the assizes, and to have held their hands with reference to any supposed jurisdiction of their own. I own that it appears to me that I should be ascribing to the magistrates a course of investigation which I cannot bring myself to believe to be the truth. It appears to me that the moment it came out that the charge of assault was accompanied by this charge of rape, it was the duty of the magistrates instantly to say, "No consent of the defendant will give us jurisdiction; we have no right to deal with that matter at all. We will stay our hands and the party must take his trial at the assizes." Instead of that, the magistrates appear to have sentenced the party to six months' imprisonment—they certainly did not give hard labour, though if they had believed the woman it was difficult to say that they ought not to have done so; but it is a very unintelligible proceeding to say that they believed the woman so far as to the assault, and they utterly disbelieved her with respect to the rape, or any attempt at rape. And therefore, as they cut it all down to a mere common assault, they had jurisdiction to deal with that under the statute. I own, with the profoundest respect for my brethren who do not entertain the same opinion as myself, I cannot help thinking that it borders on trifling with our duty to apply the decision in the case of Rex v. Bolton to such a state of things. I cannot bring my mind to believe that the magistrates acted under any such notion of their duty or their rights. I cannot believe that they acted as they did because they believed the woman as to the assault, and disbelieved her as to the rape. If they disbelieved so material a matter, and they thought she was swearing falsely, I think they would have dismissed the matter altogether, and not have sent the man without a trial by a jury to an imprisonment for six months. Thinking therefore, as I do, that there was no charge of a common assault—that the charge was really of a distinct, substantive and different offence, namely, a charge of rape, or at least an assault with intent to commit a rape, both of which are entirely distinct from the charge of assault, and thinking that the magistrates had no right when that charge was made to give themselves jurisdiction by believing a part of the case and disbelieving the remainder—in my opinion the writ of habeas corpus ought to go; at all events, we ought to have the man here, and have it fully argued before us whether that conviction and the warrant of commitment can be sustained in law.

BRAMWELL, B.—I regret that my opinion should be adverse to that of my Lord, because I would rather this court should be agreed; but I think this rule should be discharged. A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Kaye that the conviction was not before the court, which I advert to only to show that it has not been passed over, and it is not to be supposed that we take it to be ill-founded; but the matter having been discussed upon the other point, and I being prepared to express an opinion upon it favourable to Mr. Kaye, it is not necessary, as far as I am concerned, to entertain that preliminary objection, or to determine whether it is well founded or not, and it is not to be supposed that we say it is not. Now, assuming that the documents before us are sufficient upon the face of them to warrant the detention of the prisoner, inasmuch as he would upon their being returned have to be remanded, unless he could show a want of jurisdiction, the question whether this rule should be made absolute seems to me to be a question of whether or not it is shown that the magistrates had jurisdiction. As my Lord has put it—and I go entirely along with my Lord in his reasoning, for the purpose of showing what the jurisdiction of the magistrates was—I think they had no power to convict this man in the way they have done, except upon the charge of an offence of which they have convicted him. That seems to be a truism; but the reason I make the remark in that way is, that, though no doubt cases may occur where a particular charge being brought against a man, and it turning out he is not guilty on that charge, the magistrates have not jurisdiction to entertain the one of which he is guilty, yet it not being necessary, as it was not necessary in this case, that there should be an information in writing, the magistrates, no doubt, instead of going through the form of solemnly dismissing the first charge, and asking the parties to go into a new charge, and make their statements over again, may say, "The offence is not proved, we dismiss it, and such another charge is preferred, and we convict on that;" that is possible; but in point of form they ought to dismiss any charge brought before them if not well founded, and separately entertain another. In this case the question, to my mind, is, whether a charge was brought before them of an assault? Because, if it was competent for them, and they were bound to hear it, to entertain and determine it; and if they did determine it, and it was made out, it seems to me that we have no power to investigate the propriety of their proceedings. Therefore, to my mind, the question is whether a charge was brought before them of a character of which they could convict the defendant? And I go along with my Lord in his reasoning, that if it had been a charge of rape they ought not to have convicted him of this offence, and ought to have dismissed the charge. So also I am inclined to think, if it had been a charge of any of the assaults which my Lord has referred to, which are not common assaults, they ought to have dismissed the charge. Again I say, therefore, the question to my mind is, whether the charge was a charge of the offence of which they have convicted him? and I think it was. The written complaint was, that the prisoner had assaulted and abused the female who made the complaint. I confess, to my mind, the word "abuse" has no meaning; it is not a word of art, it is not a technical word, except in a different sense to that which has generally been imputed to it in popular language; it may mean either to call names or abuse by words; perhaps, correctly speaking, it means any private misuse in office, or a man abusing his powers; and other instances might be shown. It is also very possible that magistrates may abuse their power when cases of this description are brought before them—that is, misuse it. The only way in which I find it used as a term of art is in a way which, to my mind, shows it does not mean ravish; because I find it used in a statute in this way:—The 16th section of 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, says: "Whereas on trials for the crimes of rape and the carnally abusing girls under the respective ages herein mentioned;" that is to say, on charges of rape and on charges which are not charges of rape, but "carnally abusing" young females. There, to my mind, the word abuse is manifestly used as different from the word rape: it may include rape no doubt, or it may not; yet the statutes, particularly the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 16, enact "That if any one shall unlawfully carnally know and abuse," that is unlawfully carnally abuse, whether with or without consent, there may be an abusing, although no rape. To my mind, therefore, this word, without the proper concomitants "did carnally know," and "unlawfully and carnally," really has no meaning at all. If I take it to have any meaning, I should say it had the meaning which at first sight one would suppose it indicated, that the female was under age; and, in point of fact, with reference to this particular woman, it seems to me to be meaningless. But then the only expression used is, "the defendant did unlawfully assault her," together with words which may or may not mean he did something else, but which in my mind have no definite meaning. I think, therefore, that upon the written information before the magistrates there was nothing to preclude their entertaining a charge of common assault, though they would have been precluded if it had been said he feloniously assaulted with intent or attempted to commit a rape, or any of the other offences that are not common assaults. Well, that being the written information, and that being the written charge, was there anything else to show that the magistrates believed there was any ambiguity about it, and that the charge was one of rape? I refer to the charge, independently of the evidence, for a reason that will appear presently. Now, the only other statement of any charge we have had before us is the charge in the opening of the prosecutrix's attorney, who undoubtedly began by saying he made a charge of rape, and on that an objection was taken by the opposite party, "You cannot go into that, because the written charge which we are called upon here to investigate is not a charge of rape." But the affidavit of the prosecutrix's attorney says: "I agreed to this; and I think it was agreed to, and we went into a charge of a common assault;" which my brother Channell said, as I thought very properly, in the course of the argument, is the charitable construction; not that at the end of the evidence the justices did what they ought not to do, and agreed to suppress the charge of rape and go into another which they had proper jurisdiction to go into; but that they agreed to take the charge of common assault under the belief that the objection of the prosecutrix's attorney was well founded. I think this is not only a charitable way of looking at it; but I think a more correct verbal construction of the affidavit, because the attorney says not only "do not go into the charge of rape," but he says, "go into a charge of assault, if you please." I cannot say I object in point of law, that the justices could not do that; for, though the objection was founded on ignorance, the justices acted on it, and after the objection of the prosecutrix's attorney to the charge of rape the charge preferred was of common assault, and not a charge of any of the statutory assaults to which my Lord has referred, as to which I confess I agree that if there had been such a charge it would have been wrong for the magistrates to convict of the offence, and they ought, at all events, specifically to have dismissed it if they did not think it well founded, and then entertain the new one to be brought before them of a common assault. However, by this process of reasoning, I have brought myself to the opinion that the charge made before the magistrates is a charge of an assault, and one which they were competent under the statute to entertain. That being so, to my mind there is an end of the case; because, if they were competent to entertain it, it matters not that it was not supported by evidence on which they ought to have acted; it matters not that there was abundant evidence on which they ought to have come to an opinion that an offence had been committed over which they had no jurisdiction. Although I think it is incompetent to us to look into the evidence, and to say in what way they ought to deal with it, I cannot help subscribing to a considerable extent to a remark my Lord has made, that it was in some way trifling with what we may call the real merits of the case; because one cannot fail to perceive that, though we cannot, in my judgment, review their proceedings, they ought to have come to a different conclusion. It is possible in point of law, though I do not suppose it was so in point of fact, that they may have discredited that a rape was committed, and may have found that nothing but an aggravated common assault was committed. It was asked in the course of the argument how it was possible, if the woman's statement could be to any extent believed, there could be an assault of this description, unless with an attempt to commit a rape, or unless it was some other than a common assault? My answer is this: I take it to be perfectly possible, in point of fact, that a man might violently lay hold of a woman and insist on kissing her; that would subject him to the consequences either of an attempt to ravish, an assault with intent to actually rape, or an aggravated assault; and on her resisting he might strike her; that would be an assault, and it is possible in point of fact, that such an assault given in evidence may have satisfied the magistrates that a common assault of an aggravated character was committed, but no statutable assault, no felony was committed or proved. Now, the question is, whether we have jurisdiction to look into it; and on that matter I entertain some doubt, the impression on my mind being, that if they had the charge before them, on which they convicted, whether there was or was not evidence of that charge is a matter which they must determine. They determined there was sufficient evidence for a conviction, and the impression upon my mind is, that we cannot review what they have done. Accordingly, on that ground, I think there was no want of jurisdiction shown, and if the prisoner were brought up he would have to be remanded. I think the rule ought not to be made absolute, because I cannot see that there would be a more solemn discussion upon the return after the expense of bringing the man up than there has been upon the present occasion. I may say that another thing that influences me is this, that if my opinion is not well founded, it is a satisfaction to know that a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction has unanimously expressed an opinion, and I think not an ill-founded one, with respect to the decision of this particular matter. For fear I should be misunderstood—for fear it should be supposed I think the magistrates did right in point of fact—I wish to make this observation. I am not going to censure them—I dare say they thought they were warranted in doing what they did in point of law and expediency; but in my opinion they were wrong. I think they were clearly so. One of the effects of what they have done is to pardon this man, for I believe no further proceedings could be taken against him for the rape.

POLLOCK, C. B.—In my opinion, in point of law, that is so. The statute expressly says no action shall be brought, and no further proceedings of any sort taken in respect of that assault.

BRAMWELL, B.—But be that as it may—whether it has that effect or not, or whether this man can still be tried for the offence of rape, is not the question before us to-day. It is utterly impossible that they can have credited the case of the prosecutrix without thinking that a rape, or an indecent assault, or an attempt to commit a rape, had been committed—it is utterly impossible they could have done so; because, when one comes to examine into the evidence, the cross-examination of the prosecutrix was not for the purpose of showing that one of the ingredients of rape had not taken place, and that there was not an assault of such a character as to support the statement that penetration had taken place—that there had not been an attempt to commit a rape, or an indecent assault—but the cross-examination was solely directed to show that the thing was done with her consent. I should conceive upon the evidence the only doubt the magistrates had, or ought to have had, was not whether the offence she stated had not been committed in the other particulars, but whether she was a consenting party to what took place or not. If that was so, when they came to decide the case, the first thing they ought to have made up their minds to was, is the defence a true one—or the case a true one? If the case on the part of the prosecutrix is a true one, namely, that she did not consent, they were evidently bound to commit him for trial on the grave charge to which she had sworn, or, at all events, for one of the statutory assaults, if they had any reason for doubting that penetration had taken place. If on the other hand they believed the case of the defendant, that what was done was with the consent of the woman, it is obvious they ought not to have convicted him in the way they have done. The only question really raised by the parties is, whether what took place was with or without the consent of the prosecutrix. And, in my opinion, all they ought to have done, and what in point of law is all they could do, was to determine that question in their own minds; and if they came to a conclusion that it was with her consent, they ought to have dismissed the summons; if it was not, then they ought to have sent him for trial for the offence with which he was charged. That appears to my mind plain. I really cannot understand that there is any doubt about it. I cannot refrain from saying that it is an inexpedient thing that magistrates should take on themselves, from any notion of expediency or otherwise, to say, We will not commit this man for trial for the offence sworn to against him, because he may be guilty of another, or perhaps it may go off on this, that, or the other; or to save expense, or what not. What they ought to do, without reference to the consequences, is to adjudicate on the evidence before them, and if that satisfies them that the offence charged is committed, and no other, they ought to convict, as they must have done in this case; if they are satisfied a different offence is committed, they ought not to have convicted him at all. Although therefore, I am of opinion that the charge was such that they could convict of the offence of which they have convicted, and we cannot reverse what they have done, I also agree with my Lord—I repeat, in order that there may be no mistake about it—that it was clear from this evidence that they ought not in point of fact to have come to the conclusion they have done, but they ought to have disposed of the summons or sent the man for trial. We cannot, however, interfere with their proceedings, and this being my opinion, I think this rule should be discharged.

[Ex.]

Re WILLIAM THOMPSON.

CHANNELL, B.—I concur in the expression of regret that has fallen from the rest of the court, that there should be a difference of opinion upon this subject, particularly as the liberty of the subject is concerned. After having given the case the best consideration I am able, I concur in the view which my brother Bramwell has just stated, and I think that no rule should be drawn up in the nature of a rule absolute. It seems to me the question is not as put by the Lord Chief Baron and my brother Bramwell, whether the magistrates acted wisely or discreetly; that is not at all the question. As that is not the question, I would rather not upon that point express any opinion. The question is, whether the magistrates had jurisdiction or not; if they had jurisdiction, I think we ought not to interfere, and say they have come to an erroneous conclusion. Now I agree as to the necessity of inquiring into the facts in some cases in order to ascertain whether the jurisdiction exists or not; but in this case all the facts are proved which give jurisdiction. But it is said, in course of proving those facts something else came out in the course of the evidence which destroys the jurisdiction. I do not think the magistrates are bound to credit the evidence of witnesses to the full extent; they were at liberty to believe or disbelieve part of the evidence, and if adopting the rest of the evidence the case was left within their jurisdiction, they had a right to exercise that jurisdiction. And this case differs from Rex v. Bolton, in which the complainant had himself done something which in terms destroyed the jurisdiction of the magistrates. The magistrates who convicted under the particular statute found the fact to be as admitted, and by admitting the case to be true it took away the jurisdiction. The question then is, what is the jurisdiction that arises under this statute? The information is laid under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, and the objection is not that the magistrates have not found in terms that there was such an aggravation of the assault that it could not be sufficiently punished under the 9 Geo. 4, but that they found the complaint stated in the information to be true, and it is said the complaint stated upon the information is one that took away the jurisdiction of the magistrates. The complaint is that "William Thompson did unlawfully-assault and abuse one Susannah Taylor." I think the word unlawfully may be connected with the assault and go to negative any assault of a felonious character. By the use of the word abuse it is said that the jurisdiction of the statute given by the 16 & 17 Vict. is taken away. I confess I cannot come to that conclusion. I am called upon to put, if I can, a construction on the word "abuse." It may be surplusage, or it may mean something. I do not think it can be reasonably treated in the sense that opprobrious epithets were used, and that the assault committed was the more aggravated because it was so accompanied. I think it must be treated as meaning some abuse of the person, which abuse of the person does not amount to more than this—there may have been an assault and some indecency committed with regard to the person of the complainant. I own I am unable to come to the conclusion that the assault is not an aggravated assault within the meaning of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, because it is also an indecent assault; it may be the indecency may be the very aggravation connected with the assault which gave the magistrates jurisdiction, and yet stop short of any statutory charge. If this had been a charge of rape, I agree with the rest of the court that the jurisdiction is entirely gone; but when I say I do so agree, I do not put this case on the ground of any agreement to give the magistrates jurisdiction. I utterly repudiate that; at the same time I think, on reading the affidavit, that was not the agreement come to. The affidavit is drawn up in a very loose way, and the information was framed in a very loose way. It appears to me that the practitioner who framed the information and the affidavit did not rightly understand what he was about. I understand the true meaning of the affidavit to be, that an objection was taken that the magistrates had no jurisdiction—that it was a charge of rape, and that was acquiesced in. The prosecutor went on then only intending to prefer a charge not commensurate with the charge in the information. The 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, gives the magistrates jurisdiction in cases of an assault,

[Ex.]

Re WILLIAM THOMPSON.

if it shall appear to be such an aggravated assault that it cannot be properly punished under the 9 Geo. 4. The words are "an assault;" that is the only expression in this statute. In the 9 Geo. 4 there are the words "common" assault used; but there is no such word "common" in this. What is to give the magistrates jurisdiction? Is it that the assault is an assault of an aggravated character? In my opinion the aggravation may consist of indecency, stopping far short of anything like an intent to abuse the person in the sense in which the term is understood. For these reasons it appears to me, if I am to consider the question of jurisdiction only, there is nothing in the materials brought before us that can enable us to say the magistrates have acted illegally and have exceeded their jurisdiction. I distrust my own opinion, as being in opposition to my Lord Chief Baron and my brother Wilde; but my brother Bramwell concurs in it, and I may add that it is some consolation that, though the matter was not fully argued in the Q. B., I find the judges in that court refused the application for a rule nisi.

WILDE, B.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute; and I may say I entirely agree with every word that has fallen from the Lord Chief Baron, and if it were not a case of considerable importance in its several bearings, I do not know that I should add anything to what has fallen from him; but seeing that the court is divided in opinion, and seeing the question raised here is one which could not be otherwise than of very general interest, I propose to add a little to what has been already said. Now, the prisoner Wm. Thompson has been convicted before two justices sitting in petty sessions of an aggravated assault, and sentenced to six calendar months' imprisonment. The question is, whether under the circumstances the magistrates had jurisdiction to deal with him in that manner. The first question that arises is, what is their jurisdiction under the Act of Parliament under which alone they had power to deal with this matter, by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and the subsequent statute of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30? Now, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, enumerates a variety of assaults differing from what may be called common assaults. It enumerates assaults with intent to commit felony; assaults on police officers or revenue officers, and any person acting in aid of officers; assaults with intent to resist capture, or any assault committed in pursuance of a conspiracy. It contains assaults of a peculiar character, for which the court before whom it is tried, if they think fit, may award an imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months. I merely mention that for the purpose of pointing out that what the statute recognised in point of law was what may be called an assault of an aggravated character, which was subject to imprisonment of a more than ordinary character; but no power is given to two magistrates sitting in petty sessions to deal with an intent to commit a felony. And, having mentioned these assaults, the statute goes on in a section further to say this, "And whereas it is expedient that the summary power of punishing persons guilty of common assaults and batteries should be provided under the limitations hereafter contained." It then goes on to confine to justices in petty sessions the power of dealing with common assaults and batteries. And sect. 29 says, in so many words, in case the justices shall find the assault to have been accompanied by any attempt to commit a felony, then they are not to have the jurisdiction given before. Nothing can be plainer than that, under this Act of Parliament, justices sitting in petty sessions have power to determine summarily cases of common assault and batteries; it is not competent for them to determine assaults of a different description. Now the jurisdiction has been altered by the statute that follows, the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, and it says, where any person shall be charged before two justices of the peace sitting in petty sessions with an assault on any female whatever or a male child, and it shall be of such an aggravated nature that it cannot be sufficiently punished under the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, then they are to have the power, instead of imprisoning for three months, which the 9 Geo. 4 imposes, to imprison for six months. Now I cannot read the section as meaning anything more than this, that where a question arises which would be within the jurisdiction under the 9 Geo. 4—that is to say, where a person is charged before two justices in petty sessions for having committed an assault, and it turns out that the assault, though a common assault, was accompanied with such details of cruelty and violence as not to be sufficiently punished, under the 9 Geo. 4, by three months' imprisonment—they are to have the power to imprison him for six months; and this Act is the Act commonly called the Wife Beating Act, which was introduced in consequence of aggravated assaults of violence and cruelty that were found to exist. Though the statute gives jurisdiction, it is a jurisdiction given to deal with common assaults only, as I read it, and to increase the punishment if the common assault is accompanied by circumstances of an aggravated character. Now that being so, the next point that arises is, what was the matter that was brought before the magistrates on the occasion in question? First, there is the information; and then there is the fact that Re v. Bolton, decided in the Q. B., expressly recognises the principle that in order that the Superior Courts may judge whether the magistrates have jurisdiction, they may deal with the facts of the matter on affidavit. Now, as to the information. The charge is of an assault and abuse; and I am certainly not prepared to say that the word "abuse" must generally have meant a charge of violation. If it turned only on the question of the meaning of the information, I should have very serious doubts about the matter, and I should not, as at present advised, be prepared to come to the opinion that it necessarily meant rape. I think it is capable of the meaning that the Lord Chief Baron has pointed out. Wherever it has been used in the statutes it has had reference to sexual connection, and nothing else. But then there is a great deal more than the mere charge in the information. I consider the case of Re v. Bolton entitles us to look into the facts and the evidence that has been brought before us; and the magistrates have with great propriety, on the affidavits in answer to this rule, brought the general matter before us. We are now no longer at all in the dark as to how it was and of what it was this man was convicted. It appears to me, without going into the evidence, as my Lord Chief Baron has disposed of that—it appears, when the evidence was laid before the magistrates, there really was evidence of a rape or nothing at all. The assault complained of was preceded by some gross language, which pointed at nothing else than an attempt to violate the person of the complainant; the assault which followed had no connection with anything except an attempt of that character. There was no beating, no violence beyond the violence that belonged to an attempt of the character I have described. That was the nature of the evidence. Now what is the duty of the magistrates? I do not at all mean to deny that, though there may be evidence, and even strong evidence, of one species of offence over which the magistrates have no jurisdiction, still that the magistrates are entitled, if they please, to disbelieve the evidence, and come to a bonâ fide conclusion that a less offence is committed, namely, that with which they are charged to deal by the statute of Geo. 4. I do not think it is competent for the Superior Courts to examine such a decision; the common sense of the matter is, they are to consider the facts, and deal with the case; and if the court were satisfied that the magistrates had ignored, in point of fact, the fact of rape, and the intent to commit a rape, and bonâ fide came to the conclusion that all that had happened was a common assault, I should then be of opinion that they had done perfectly right, and that there is no ground whatever for this rule. But it is precisely because I am satisfied that that is not the case, that I think the rule ought to be made absolute. I ground myself in this opinion on the evidence, and after hearing the opinions of my brothers Bramwell and Channell, I agree in the view the Lord Chief Baron has come to. In the opinion of anybody who reads the evidence, it clearly shows a charge of rape. But I do not ground myself on that alone. I look to the affidavit the prosecutrix's attorney has made in this case, and in the affidavit we find a perfect solution to my mind of the matter—showing how the man has been convicted of a common assault, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment, when the woman who is said to have been assaulted has received no violence whatever. It appears an objection was made, when the case came on, that the magistrates had not power to deal with it, it being one of rape; and the attorney says: "After some argument between the attorneys and the justices before mentioned, it was agreed that the case should be taken under the Aggravated Assaults Act." Now I cannot shut my eyes, when such a statement is put to me, to the conclusion that all parties are agreed to deal with this as an aggravated assault. The charge being one of an attempt to commit a rape, they then determined to deal with it as an aggravated assault, withdrew it from the proper jurisdiction, and turned it into a common assault of an aggravated nature. Coming as I do to that conclusion, I think clearly the magistrates had no jurisdiction, and cannot give themselves jurisdiction, by voluntarily shutting their eyes to one part of the charge and adapting it to a charge of some other offence; they cannot give themselves jurisdiction by the prisoner being charged with a less offence. Consent does not give jurisdiction; therefore, I say it is impossible to come to the conclusion that the magistrates have bonâ fide found upon the evidence that it was a common assault and nothing else. The charge being of the nature I have stated, from the passage I have read, it appears that they purposely ignored the rest of the charge, for the purpose of bringing it into their jurisdiction. That seems to me a matter they had no right to do. The man ought to have been tried by a jury for the real offence with which he was charged. I may say, in conclusion, it seems to me, if this practice were to be allowed, there is not an offence against the person, of any description however serious, even up to the crime of murder, that might not be dealt with in the same way before magistrates by withdrawing from the proper tribunal the consideration of the real crime, in order to deal with the supposed crime. That would be a grave evil, and makes it the more necessary that in cases of this sort I should express the reasons by which I have been led to concur with the Lord Chief Baron, the case being heard at great length, that the rule should be made absolute.

The Court being equally divided, the Rule was discharged.(a)

(a) The court being equally divided, this cannot be considered a settled question, and should it again arise, it should be taken before another court. Probably a majority of readers will be inclined to agree with the views of Bramwell and Channell, B.B., that the charge, as it was laid, and ultimately heard and determined, was not of rape, but of assault. The transaction was thus:—An information for an assault was laid; it was then turned into a charge of rape, and that not being, in the opinion of the justices, sustained, the original charge of assault was adjudicated upon, and conviction followed. This may not have been done with all the forms; but such was the substance of the proceeding, and the form of doing it was not in question upon the present

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF SUSSEX.

Re AN APPEAL BETWEEN THE PARISH OFFICERS OF COLEMORE (appellants) AND THE PARISH OFFICERS OF FUNTINGTON (respondents).

Poor-law—Appeal—Notice and grounds of appeal—Entering and respiting—Mandamus.

An appellant against an order of removal is entitled under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, to fourteen days after receiving the depositions, within which to serve his notice of grounds of appeal, and if at the expiration of such fourteen days there are not fourteen clear days (as provided for by sect. 81 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76) for giving his grounds of appeal, though by the practice of the sessions there is time sufficient for giving full notice of appeal, he is not bound to try at such sessions, but must enter and respite his appeal, which appeal the sessions are bound to receive accordingly.

On the 1st Sept. the appellants received a copy of an order of removal. On the 17th they applied for a copy of the depositions, which they received on the 19th. On the 1st Oct. they gave notice that at the next sessions they would commence and enter their appeal (only eight days' notice of appeal being required), but they served no grounds of appeal. On the 15th the sessions took place, at which the appellants applied to enter and respite their appeal, which was refused:

Held, that the sessions were bound to have received and respited the appeal.

This was a rule calling upon the justices of Sussex, and also the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Funtington, to show cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding such justices to receive and enter continuances, and hear the appeal of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Colemore against an order of removal.

It appeared that on the 1st Sept. last an order of removal was received by the parish officers of Colemore from the parish officers of Funtington. On the 17th application was made for a copy of the depositions. These were sent, and received on the 19th of the same month. On the 1st Oct. the parish officers of Colemore sent notice to the parish officers of Funtington that at the ensuing quarter sessions they would commence and enter an appeal against the said order of removal. The quarter sessions commenced on the 16th of the same month of October. No grounds of appeal had been delivered. By the rules of the Sussex sessions eight days' notice of appeal are required. At the sessions the appellants applied to enter and respite their appeal, but this was resisted by the respondents, who urged that the appellants had time and ought to have delivered their grounds of appeal. The sessions being of this opinion, refused to permit the appeal to be entered.

By sect. 88 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, it is enacted that "the overseers or guardians of the parish appealing against such order, or any three or more of such guardians, shall with such notice, or fourteen days at least before the first day of the sessions at which such appeal is intended to be tried, send or deliver to the overseers of the respondent parish a statement in writing under their hands of the grounds of such appeal." By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, it is enacted that "no appeal shall be allowed against any order of motion. At all events, the information on which the whole proceeding was founded, was for an assault only, and surely that could not have been dismissed merely because the complaint at the hearing aggravated it into a rape.

removal if notice of such appeal be not given, as required by law, within the space of twenty-one days after the notice of chargeability and statement of the grounds of removal shall have been sent by the overseers or guardians of the removing parish to the overseers or guardians of the parish to which such order shall be directed, unless within such period of twenty-one days a copy of the depositions shall have been applied for as aforesaid by the last-mentioned overseers or guardians, in which case a further period of fourteen days after the sending of such copy shall be allowed for the giving of such notice of appeal," &c.

J. J. Johnson showed cause, and contended that as the appellants had time for giving full notice of appeal, and did in fact give it, they were bound to have gone to trial, having had also full time for giving fourteen days' notice of the grounds of appeal; that the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, which gives the appellants fourteen days within which to give notice of appeal, does not apply to the giving of the grounds of appeal, the time for giving which should be calculated from the time when the grounds of removal were served, which, in the present case, would have given them from the 19th Sept. He also contended that upon a proper construction of sect. 81 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, the service of the grounds of appeal would be good if served with the notice of appeal, though this latter might, by the rules of the sessions, be less than fourteen days: (R. v. Skircoats, 28 L. J. 284, M. C.; R. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 27 L. J. 269, M. C.)

Manisty, Q.C. and T. W. Saunders contended that the appellants had a right to have their appeal entered and respited; that the fourteen days' notice of grounds of appeal mentioned in sect. 81 of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, means fourteen days at all events, irrespective of what may be the required length of notice of appeal (R. v. The Justices of Suffolk, 4 Ad. & Ell. 319; R. v. Draughton, 8 L. J. 92, M. C.); and that the additional fourteen days given by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9, for giving notice of appeal after the reception of the depositions, apply as well to the giving of the grounds of appeal, the only object of such additional time being to enable the appellants to ascertain and decide upon whether it is advisable to appeal or not; and that the rule, as to be gathered from the cases, and particularly from Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 1 Ell. Bl. & Ell. 713; 27 L. J. 269, M. C., is, that if at the expiration of such fourteen days there is time to give full notice of appeal, but not full notice of the grounds of appeal, the appellants are only bound to go to the next sessions to enter and respite the appeal.

CROMPTON, J.—I feel that I am bound, by the authorities cited of R. The Justices of Suffolk and R. v. Draughton, to decide that the grounds of appeal must be delivered at least fourteen days before the first day of the sessions. It has been contended that it is sufficient if the statement of the grounds of appeal is given at the same time as the notice of appeal, and that this is the proper construction of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 81; but to decide so would be to overrule the authorities; and as effective notice was not given, I think the appellants were entitled to have had their appeal entered and respited. The rule therefore must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

REG. v. JOSEPH TIMMINS.

Abduction—Taking away an unmarried girl out of her father's possession—9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 20.

Upon the trial of an indictment under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 20, for taking an unmarried girl under sixteen out of the possession of her father, and against his will, it was proved that the prisoner (with whom the girl had previously stayed out for a night) met her by arrangement, and stayed with her away from her father's house for three days, sleeping with her at night; that he took her away without the father's consent in order to gratify his passions, and then allow her to return home, but not with a view of keeping her away from her home permanently:

Held, that the evidence justified a conviction under the above enactment.

Case stated for the opinion of this court by the Common Serjeant of the city of London:—

The prisoner was indicted at the September sessions 1860, holden for the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, under the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 20, "for that he, on the 19th Aug. 1860, at the parish of All Saints Poplar, did take and cause to be taken one Ann Butler, an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen years, to wit, of the age of fourteen years and five months, out of the possession and against the will of Isaac Butler her father, he the said Isaac Butler then and there having the lawful care and charge of her, against the form of the statute, &c. and against the peace," &c.

The statute enacts "that if any person shall unlawfully take, or cause to be taken, any unmarried girl being under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, every such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour."

It was proved on the trial that on the 17th Aug. the prisoner, who is a married man living with his wife, asked the girl Ann Butler if she would mind going out with him on the Sunday, to which she answered "No." He was previously well known to her, and she had on a former occasion stayed out and slept with him for a whole night away from her home.

On Sunday the 19th Aug., in fulfilment of her engagement, she went and met the prisoner near Poplar Church. They went to London together, and spent three days in visiting places of public entertainment, sleeping together at night, and on Wednesday morning, the 22nd Aug., on getting up, the prisoner said to her, "I'll go to work, and you go home." They then separated, and the girl went home.

The father of the girl swore that his daughter was absent without his knowledge and against his will.

In answer to questions which I left to them, the jury found that the father did not consent, and that the prisoner knew he did not consent, that the prisoner took the girl away from him in order to gratify his passions, and then allowed her to return home, but not with a view of keeping her away from her home permanently. Upon this finding I postponed the judgment, in order to have the opinion of the court on the case, and the question for the opinion of the court is, whether, on the facts so found, any offence has been committed under the statute.

The prisoner being unable to procure bail, remains in custody. THOMAS CHAMBERS, Common Serjeant.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Sleight for the prosecution.—It is submitted that the conviction was proper. The 20th section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, is to be read in connection with sects. 19 and 21. Sect. 19 provides for a person, from motives of lucre, taking away, or detaining any woman against her will, with intent to marry or defile her, or to cause her to be married or defiled by any other person. And sect. 21 provides for the leading, taking away, decoying, or enticing away or detaining any child under the age of ten years, with intent to deprive the parents or lawful guardians of such child of the possession of such child, or to steal any article about the person of the child. In sect. 20 the unlawfully taking away any unmarried girl under sixteen years of age, out of the possession and against the will of her parents, is made an offence, and the intent is immaterial. [CROMPTON, J.—Suppose a person takes a girl away from her parent's possession for the purpose of educating her in another religion, does that come within the 20th section? Or if a man make a sign to a girl in her father's cottage, and she comes out and goes away with him for a short time, would that be within the section? Is it not a question of degree?] Under some circumstances the cases put would fall within the meaning of sect. 20, which was passed to protect the sacred rights of parents over unmarried girls under sixteen. Any act by which all care and control on the part of the father is determined is sufficient, according to the judgment in Reg. v. Manktelow, 6 Cox. Crim. Cas. 143; 22 L. J. 115, M. C. In Reg. v. Meadows, 1 Car. & Kir. 399, where one girl persuaded another under sixteen to leave her home and accompany her to London, it was held not to be a case within the section, otherwise any two school girls playing truant in company might have been indicted respectively each for abducting the other. [CROMPTON, J.—In Reg. v. Manktelow the parties went away without any intention of returning.] That was so. If the taking away severs the possession of the parents, that is all the statute seems to contemplate. If the girl was sixteen years old all but one day, and a party takes her out of the possession of her parents, the statute would certainly apply. [BRAMWELL, B.—What is the meaning of "possession of the father?"] Where the act is to sever the possession, so that he no longer has the care and control of his daughter, and is against the will of the father, it falls within the section. It may be that each case must be judged by its own facts, and, if so, here it is submitted the evidence was sufficient to bring the case within the enactment.

C. CAS. R.]

REG. v. JAMES TONGUE.

ERLE, C.J.—We are of opinion that this conviction ought to be affirmed. The statute was passed for the protection of the parental right and for preventing unmarried girls from being taken out of the possession of their parents against their will. It enacts that if any person shall unlawfully take, or cause to be taken, any unmarried girl being under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It is clear law that any deception or forwardness on the part of the girl in such cases will not prevent the person taking her away from being guilty of the offence created by this enactment. The difficulty in the construction of the statute is, what is meant by taking a girl out of the possession of her father? The taking a girl away might be consistent with the possession of the father, if the girl goes away with the party, intending to return in a short time; but where a person takes a girl away from the possession of the father, and keeps her away against his will for such a length of time as in this case, keeping her away from her home for three nights, and cohabiting with her during that time, we think that the evidence justified the jury in finding that the prisoner took the girl out of the possession of the father and against his will within the meaning of the statute. The prisoner took the girl away from under her father's roof, and placed her in a situation quite inconsistent with the existence of the relation of father and daughter. Our judgment in this case is, that there was evidence which justified the conviction—which we consider to be the point submitted to us—although the prisoner did not intend to keep her away from her home permanently, but when his lust was gratified to cast her from him. We limit our judgment to the facts in this particular case. It may be that a state of facts might arise upon which the offence would be complete in law when the girl passed the threshold of her father's house, as when she is taken away with the intention of keeping her away permanently. We do not mean to say that a person would be liable to a conviction under this section if it should appear that the taking was intended to be of a temporary nature only, or for the purpose of taking a girl and placing her in some situation not inconsistent with the relation of father and child. It is sufficient for us to say that there was evidence in this case which justified the conviction.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Conviction affirmed.

REG. v. JAMES TONGUE.

Embezzlement—Clerk or servant—Secretary of money-club—Swing on note of club in his own name—Duty—7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47.

The prisoner, the secretary of a money-club, was directed by the club to sue upon a joint promissory note, the property of the club, or get better security, and the note was handed to him by W., the treasurer, who was not a member of the club, and who at the same time desired that his name should not be used in the legal proceedings. The prisoner indorsed W.'s name on the note, employed an attorney, who issued a writ, and in consequence of the action money was paid to the prisoner by one of the joint makers, which the prisoner fraudulently withheld from the club and appropriated.

The duties of the prisoner, according to the rules of the club, were duties cognate to that of receiving money for the club, but that duty was not expressly named in the rules:

Held (Crompton, J. dubitante), that the prisoner had received the money as servant for the use of the club, and that he was properly convicted of embezzlement:

Held, also (affirming Spencer's case, Russ. & Ry. 299), that the employment to receive money on this occasion was sufficient to constitute an employment within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 45, though receiving money was not the prisoner's usual employment, and it was the only instance in which he was so employed.

Case reserved by the Recorder of Birmingham for the consideration of the Court of Criminal Appeal:—

At a court of general quarter sessions, held at Birmingham, on the 11th Jan. 1860, James Tongue was charged before me, as appears by the indictment hereto annexed, with embezzlement.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

The jury found their verdict against the prisoner.

The facts were these:—The prisoner was secretary to a money-club, held at the house of Joseph Whiles, Johnson's Head Inn, Birmingham. The rules of the club, which were printed, and a copy given to each member, were (as far as they are material to the present case) as follows:—

Rule 2. That payment of one night's instalment shall constitute any person a member, approved of by this society, who may subscribe for one or more shares. Club-night to mean every alternate Monday.

Rule 9. Two of the members shall act as stewards for one quarter, in rotation, as their names appear on the books.

Rule 10. Three members shall be appointed for one quarter to make inquiries as to the sufficiency of the securities proposed, who shall make their report on the following club night. That the said committee shall be exempt from standing as stewards in rotation.

Rule 12. It shall be the duty of the secretary, when any important business requires it, or the society thinks proper, to summon by circular all the members to a special meeting.

Rule 17. That Mr. Tongue (the prisoner) be appointed secretary to this society, who shall receive for his services a fair remuneration, to be decided by the members, and shall be exempt from paying the refreshment money. He shall make the promissory notes on demand, and shall always be one of the committee. Should he not attend or send a proper person to act for him, he shall forfeit 1s. 6d.

Rule 21. Mr. J. Whiles shall act as trustee, during the pleasure of the society, who shall sign all orders upon the treasurer for payments. All cheques or orders upon the treasurer to be countersigned by the secretary.

Rule 14. All moneys belonging to this society shall be lodged in the district bank, and the proprietor of the house be deputy-treasurer (during the club's pleasure), to take all moneys amounting to ten pounds and upwards to the said bank to be deposited by him thus:—"No. 4. Fifty pounds; society held at Mr. J. Whiles, Johnson's Head Inn, Edmund-street." The bank-book to be laid before the society each club-night.

Rule 23. No alteration shall be made to these articles unless notice thereof be given according to article 12, and such alteration be approved of by a majority of the members then present.

The practice of the club was for the stewards to receive the payments of members, and to pay over such moneys to the deputy-treasurer, J. Whiles, and for Whiles to retain in his hands all the moneys and securities belonging to the club, the notes being pasted in the book called the bond-book, which remained in the custody of Whiles.

In the month of April 1857 a promissory note was made by one Brough as principal, and by Starkey and Adcock as co-sureties, for the sum of 50*l.*, payable to the order of J. Whiles, which said note, the property of the club, was by order of the club taken out of the bond-book and handed to the prisoner by Whiles.

In consequence of doubts as to the solvency of the makers of the note in question, the prisoner was directed by the club then in meeting assembled to sue upon the note so handed to him by Whiles, or to get better security for the money which had been advanced upon it.

At the time when the note was handed to the prisoner, Whiles desired that his name should not be made use of in any legal proceedings.

After receiving the note the prisoner indorsed it with the name of Whiles, and employed an attorney, who issued a writ against the makers of the note, at the suit of the prisoner.

In consequence of the action so brought Adcock, one of the joint makers of the note, paid to the prisoner two several sums of 30*l.* and 10*l.*, the moneys charged in the indictment.

Henry Jenkins and the other parties mentioned in the indictment, except Whiles, were members of the club. Whiles was not a member.

The prisoner, on several occasions after the receipt of the moneys in question, denied such receipt, and alleged in answer to inquiries made, that he had not received the money on the note, but had obtained a better security from Brough.

It was proved that the prisoner had received these several moneys. The prisoner, after the receipt of the moneys in question, returned the note to Whiles as unpaid, and the note was repasted in the bond-book.

I put the following questions to the jury:—

1. Did the prisoner receive the moneys in question?
2. Ought he to have paid them over to the club?
3. Did he withhold them from the club fraudulently?

The jury specially found each of such questions against the prisoner, and also found him guilty generally.

The court having grave doubts of the validity of a conviction on the evidence above set forth, respited judgment and discharged the prisoner upon bail.

The questions are—

1. Was the prisoner clerk or servant within the meaning of the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47? or, was he a person employed for the purpose of receiving the money in question? or was he a person employed in the capacity of a clerk or servant?

2. Was the money in question received by the prisoner by virtue of his employment or in his capacity of clerk or servant?

3. Was the money in question received by the prisoner for or in the name, or on the account of his master or masters? M. D. HILL, Recorder.

Gibbons for the prisoner.—The conviction was wrong. On the face of the note it appears that it was indorsed to the prisoner, and the legal effect of the indorsement was to pass the property in the note to the prisoner. And this the club intended to do, so as to enable him to sue upon it. He could only sue upon the note as attorney or as the holder. Not being qualified to sue as attorney, he could sue only as principal and holder of the note. As holder, he was legally the owner, and clothed with all the legal accessories to ownership. The club had divested themselves of all legal proprietorship in the note, and only retained an equitable right to it, which a court of law can take no notice of. In respect of the note and suing upon it, the prisoner was not the servant of the club within the meaning of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 47. He was the only person who could have taken money out of court, or controlled the action, or entered satisfaction on the roll. [HILL, J.—Was not Whiles' indorsement necessary to make him owner? The prisoner wrote Whiles' name upon the note.] There was a delivery of the note to him by Whiles, and that must be taken to have been for the purpose of passing the property in the note to him. If he had indorsed Whiles' name fraudulently, it would have been a forgery. It is not disputed that the prisoner had the authority of Whiles to sue upon it. Then, having employed an attorney to bring the action, the prisoner became liable for the costs, and that gave him a property in the note till the costs were paid. If the prisoner had given a release in the action, instead of receiving the money, he could not have been made liable in any way: (Reg. v. Harris, 1 Den. C. C. 344.) The most that the prisoner did was to make an improper use of his position as secretary.

O'Brien for the prosecution.—It is an assumption not warranted in law, that the property in the note passed to the prisoner when it was handed over to him. The prisoner was the servant of the club; he was appointed by a rule of the club and received a salary. Hall's case, 1 Moo. C. C. 474, shows that the prisoner as secretary held the note as the servant of the club. The club and the prisoner stood and acted in the relation of master and servant in this transaction. The club directed him to sue upon the note, or get better security, and when they asked him about the receipt, the prisoner denied the receipt of the money, and said that he had got better security. If the note had been indorsed with the authority of the club in order that the note might be sued on, it would still have been the property of the club, and he would have held it as their servant. If it was indorsed without their authority, the prisoner could not by that fraudulent indorsement acquire any property in the note. The prisoner had no right to employ an attorney to sue for himself, but only for the club. The note was in his possession as servant of the club, and that was the possession of the club, and no property passed to him in the note.

Gibbons in reply.

ERLE, C. J.—I am of opinion that the conviction ought to be affirmed. The first question is, whether the prisoner received the money in the character of a clerk or servant. He was secretary to the club, and hired at a salary; and his duties are stated with some detail in the case sent to us. It does not appear to be one of his specified duties to receive money; but he had several duties to perform cognate to the receiving of money, viz., to make applications for interest or instalments due, and for better security or part payment. If the ordinary duties of a person in the employ of another are proximately connected with the receiving of money, the receipt of money for his employer, and appropriation of it to his own use, would make him liable to the charge of embezzlement. It was so laid down in Spencer's case, Russ. & Ry. 299. And it is sufficient if there was a specific employment to receive money on one occasion only. The case seems to me, therefore, to fall within the statute as far as the prisoner's employment as a servant is concerned. Then was he within the statute as far as relates to the receipt of the money? Had he a right to the repayment of the loan, and to hold the money as collateral security for the costs? If this had been a mere loan, and the prisoner had been sent to apply for the money, or for better security, I think there would have been no doubt that the receipt would have been for the use of the club. The strength of Mr. Gibbons' argument was, that the prisoner had a cause of action on the promissory note. Now what passed between the club and the secretary had not the effect of passing the absolute property in the note to him as against the club; that gave only a limited authority, i.e. to sue upon it. As between him and the club, there is nothing to show that they authorised him to receive the money, and become the absolute owner of the note; and I take the finding of the jury to have affirmed the question put to us, "Was the money received by the prisoner for or in the name, or on the account, of his master or masters?" The jury have found that the prisoner had no lien on the money in the capacity of plaintiff, or as making himself liable for the costs of the action. The conduct of the prisoner is clear; he was acting fraudulently, for when asked about it he declared on several occasions that he had not received the money on the note.

ATTENBOROUGH v. PAGE.

CROMPTON, J.—I must own that I am in the same position as the recorder who has sent this case to us, in entertaining some doubt as to the conviction. The prisoner must be made out to be in the capacity of a clerk or servant. In the present case it is not contended that by his general employment he was authorised to receive money. The cases have gone to a considerable length on this point, and it has been held that if a prisoner received money as a clerk or servant on one particular occasion, that would do. My brother Erle has, I think, used the right expression, that the receipt of the money must be upon a duty cognate to his general duties. My doubt is, whether the money was received by virtue of any of the duties for which the prisoner was employed. There being a discussion about the payment of the note, it was handed over to the prisoner, and Whiles desired that his name should not be made use of in any legal proceedings upon it. The prisoner then indorsed the note with the name of Whiles. It would be too much to say that by indorsing Whiles' name he was guilty of forgery; and I think that here we ought to take the note as properly indorsed to the prisoner. The prisoner then employed an attorney to sue for him upon the note. My doubt is whether he was a clerk, or servant, or agent when he was suing in his own name upon the note. Can we consider him as the mere machinery used by the club? The transaction was one per se, and not of every-day occurrence, and the law of embezzlement is not to be extended to cases not cognate to the general employment as clerk or servant. This one particular circumstance of suing on the note makes it desirable to throw that duty on the prisoner which he accepted. I also have some doubt whether the prisoner can be said to have received the money for the use of the club. Being the party in the suit, I should have thought that he received it for himself, to hand over the balance after deducting the costs of the action.

BRAMWELL, B.—I think the conviction should be affirmed. The first point is, whether the prisoner received this money as a clerk or servant, or by virtue of an employment in the nature of a clerk or servant. Suppose a man hired for a definite service as clerk or servant, and employed to receive rent, it is extremely improbable that he received as clerk or servant. If in this case there was any finding or evidence of a definite set of duties, of which the one in question was not one, I should share the doubt of my brother Crompton. But I doubt, under the circumstances, whether that can be conceded to be so. The prisoner was appointed secretary to the club, and I do not find anywhere any specification of his duties. The office of secretary may comprise many miscellaneous duties. I see nothing inconsistent with his duties when he was told by the club to receive the money as their servant. I think that there was evidence that he was so employed, and that that fact is concluded by the finding of the jury. I cannot think that he received the money for himself, or that the law proceedings make any difference. The bringing of the action was mere machinery to obtain the money, and the money when received was on account of his employers. He sued that he might receive the money for his masters, and if he made himself liable for any costs, of which I see no evidence at all, he had no right to employ the attorney and incur them. I therefore think that the prisoner was made out to be the servant of the prosecutors, and that he received the money for them, and that he must be held to have embezzled it.

CHANNELL, B.—I also think that the conviction must be affirmed. Did the prisoner stand in the relation of clerk or secretary to the club? It may be that the office of secretary does not necessarily carry with it the duty of receiving money for the club; but here it is found that the prisoner was employed by the club to sue upon the note, or get better security; and Spencer's case is an authority to show that a duty to receive money in a single instance is sufficient. The suit was mere machinery for obtaining the money for the club.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion.

ATTENBOROUGH v. PAGE.

Church-rate.

A vestry was held for the purpose of making a church-rate. An estimate was produced; objections were made to some of the items, which were rejected by a majority of the ratepayers present. A poll was demanded, and taken on the following day, when there appeared to be 117 votes for the rate and twenty-five against it.

The payment, however, was resisted by the appellant on the ground that the rate was made on the assessment for the poor-rate, which was not a just and equal rate. Proof of inequality of rating having been produced, it was Held, that a church-rate acquired no validity by being made according to the assessments for the poor-rates, and that the rate in question being upon the evidence unequal, it was bad and could not be enforced.

Dr. Deane, Q.C. and Dr. Spinks for the appellant.

Dr. Twiss, Q.C. and Dr. Swaley for the respondent.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the head note and judgment.

(a) It is not, therefore, now necessary to prove that the prisoner received the money in his usual employment.

REG. v. GOSSE AND CARTER.

[Q. B.]

Dr. LUSHINGTON.—A church-rate acquired no validity by being in conformity with the poor-rate. The statute which directs the mode in which a poor-rate shall be made is silent as to a church-rate. A poor-rate being laid upon nearly the same properties as a church-rate, and almost always for a much larger amount, the acquiescence of a parish in such a poor-rate furnished presumptive evidence that the rate had been justly and equitably made, and consequently that a church-rate made on the same basis was a just and equal assessment. A poor-rate may be illegal and void by the provisions of the statute, and yet a church-rate made on the same assessment may be valid. This requires some explanation. The statute enacts that a poor-rate shall be made according to the full rateable value, and declares that if not so made such poor-rates shall be null and void. There is no statute to govern church-rates. If a church-rate be just and equal, as upon a moiety of the rental throughout the parish, it would be valid, though a poor-rate so made would be by the statute invalid. Acquiescence in a poor-rate furnishes a presumption in favour of a church-rate made on the same basis, and so it does also for another reason, because the presumption is that the law has been complied with, and the law requires an equal assessment; but the presumption may be rebutted by evidence. A statute is not, as we all know, always obeyed, and in the case of poor-rates very often violated. It is averred that the assessment is unequal and unjust. If the assessment be substantially unequal, it must be unjust and illegal. That is the issue the court has to try. I have used the expression "substantially unjust" because perfect equality is utterly unattainable, and the law requires no such impossibility. If there is a substantial inequality, it matters not what the cause of such inequality may be—whether the omission of property that ought to be rated, or the underrating some and overrating others. The court is bound to express its opinion upon the validity of the rate, and it cannot pronounce a rate to be valid which from any cause is substantially unequal. The issue is not whether Mr. Attenborough is correctly rated with regard to the annual value of the property he occupies, but whether also the other parishioners are adequately rated. (He then reviewed the pleadings, and the evidence adduced on both sides, as to the value of the properties on which the rate was made.) The oral testimony was very conflicting, and it was by the documentary evidence alone that he could be guided in his decision. The poor-rate assessment on the basis of which the church-rate of 1857 was made, appeared to have been made about twelve or eighteen years before that time, and modified according to the altered value of the properties assessed. It was admitted that in 1859 a poor-rate was made, and a church-rate was made unanimously on the basis of that assessment. He then, after contrasting the value of the properties as assessed for the church-rate in 1857 and in 1859, said the rates so greatly differed that it would be absurd to suppose that the difference altogether arose from anything that took place between those years. It clearly appeared from a comparison of the two assessments that the assessment of 1859 had not only altered the ratings of 1857, but had also altered them in widely different proportions; hence it followed that the assessment of 1859 being based on the poor-rate, and confirmed, and therefore being just and equal, it was impossible that the assessment of 1857 could have been correct. The question remaining is, whether the assessment of 1857 is so unequal as to be substantially unjust, and void the rate. It is a question of degree. This question cannot depend upon the merely nominal amount of difference to any individual, for that would be to make the validity of a church-rate depend upon whether the rate was large or small—whether the parishioner was a large or small occupier. It is manifest that the justice of a rate cannot depend on such considerations. The errors must be substantial, and, if substantial, then justice points out imperatively the course which must be taken. As to the state of the law, I may observe that the Legislature has afforded every facility for the poor-rate being made upon an equitable principle. The statute directs upon what basis and according to what rules poor-rates shall be made. The most ample opportunity is given to persons overrated to obtain redress, and the means of collecting the rates are certain and speedy. Church-rates have existed from time immemorial, but the circumstances of the country have changed, and since the 53 Geo. 3, as to the collection of the rates where the validity is not disputed, not one statute has been passed facilitating the making a rate, allowing a just opportunity to individuals to complain and obtain redress for overrating, or affording any remedy for any just demand, save the cumbrous and obsolete proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Court. It is my opinion that, if church-rates are to be maintained, the means ought to be afforded of doing justice. There ought to be a rule on which the assessment should be founded, means to collect that assessment, and an expeditious and cheap mode of recovering the rate. In this case I am compelled to say that I cannot pronounce for the rate, as it is founded on an erroneous and unequal basis, not consistent with justice: but I do not consider this a case in which I can give costs. Judgment accordingly.

REG. v. GOSSE AND CARTER (Justices of Surrey).

Certiorari—Nuisances Removal Act 1855—18 & 19

Vict. c. 121, ss. 7, 22—Order of justices for payment of expenses for works out of highway-rate.

The power given to justices by sect. 7 of the Nuisances Removal Act 1855, to make orders for the payment of expenses incurred by the local authority in executing the Act is not to be resorted to until the means given by the 22nd section of the Act for defraying expenses for structural works have been exhausted. The 39th section of the Act, taking away the writ of certiorari, is not applicable when the justices have acted without jurisdiction, and contrary to the Act.

Girth showed cause against a rule for a certiorari to bring up an order of Mr. Gosse and Mr. Carter, two of the justices of Surrey, in the Epsom division, made on the 16th May last, directing the surveyor of highways of Ewell to pay over 50*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* out of the highway-rates to the local board constituted at Ewell under the Nuisances Removal Act 1855, for England, for sewerage and structural works done by such board, and which they claimed under the 7th section of the said Act to have paid them out of the highway-rates.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that he was a landowner and ratepayer of the parish of Ewell, in the county of Surrey. A committee in the parish was constituted in 1856 or 1857 under the Nuisances Removal Act for England 1855, of which James Josh. Blake was chairman, and soon after they commenced to make a large drain or sewer. These works were done by order of the chairman of the committee, without any magistrates' order or any order of two justices directing payment thereof, and no assessment had been made on the houses of parties benefited by the drain. The committee had expended on this work between 500*l.* and 600*l.* Such drain only benefited the proprietors whose lands adjoined the same, and did not benefit the applicant. The chairman of the Nuisances Committee had given orders to Mr. Harde, one of the surveyors of highways, and who was also one of the committee, to pay a sum of 502*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* on account of the structural works, and Mr. Hards had paid, at various times, the said sum out of the money in his hands collected from the highway-rates. The said surveyor had attended before the justices of Surrey to pass the accounts of the surveyor of highways or waywardens, and on the 11th April last the applicant, Mr. Hobman, attended as a ratepayer, and objected to the passing of such accounts. On that occasion Mr. Hards stated that about 300*l.* had been expended on highway and about 500*l.* on sanitary improvements, ordered by the said Nuisances Removal Committee, but it appeared that there had been no order of justices. And it further appeared that the said sum had been discharged out of the highway-rates without any order of justices, and the justices struck out of the surveyors' accounts the said sum of 502*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.*

On the 16th May Mr. Blake, the chairman of the Nuisances Removal Committee, applied to the magistrates then present for an order on the surveyor of highways, and this order was then made. The first question to be considered is, whether this is such a charge as the committee have power to impose; and if that be so, then it is said that there was a means provided for payment which was to be exhausted before the highway-rate could be resorted to. The Nuisances Removal Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 7, provides for the defraying expenses of executing the Act; and the question is, whether it was intended that the highway-rate should be resorted to till other means were exhausted. The committee was duly appointed, and the surveyor of highways constituted one of the committee; and they in truth have everything in their own control, and there was no necessity to go to the justices to make this order, in which case it will be merely useless, which is no ground for quashing it; the only object of making the highway overseer one of the committee is to give the overseers a command over money required for contemplated improvements. The question is, whether the benefit derived is a public benefit or not. [COCKBURN, C. J.—A person contributing to the highway-rate may receive no benefit from the sewerage.] The question of its being a general or a special charge is for the committee; the justices made this order on the application of the committee, and they are the proper persons to inquire whether the order was proper, and if so, they had power to make it. If their order is merely ministerial, they are bound to make it for any amount for which it is asked. The writ of certiorari is taken away by the 39th section.

Badeley contra.—An order of this sort cannot legally be made by the justices when no resort has been had to the fund primarily provided by the Act of Parliament. The principle of the Act is this, that persons creating nuisances shall pay for their removal; and where considerable structural works are carried out, the persons benefited thereby are to be assessed to contribute to the expense of such works. The 22nd section provides how the means of payment are to be obtained for such works, and to such means the committee is bound first to resort; and it is the duty of the justices, before making such an order as this, first to ascertain that the primary means pointed out by the Act have been exhausted. The section referred to limits the rate to be made to 1*s.* in the pound; and only when that is exhausted can the highway-rate be resorted to. (He was stopped by the court.)

COCKBURN, C. J.—I think it is clear, looking at these affidavits, that this improvement was within the 22nd section of the Act, and that it follows that the fund pointed out by that section is the one primarily liable to meet the expenditure. It is not necessary to say whether the highway-rate is to be resorted to as an auxiliary rate; it is enough to say that the primary fund is liable. Then it is said that the 39th section takes away our jurisdiction; but I do not think that objection can avail. That section says that no order shall be quashed or set aside for want of form, nor shall any order or other proceeding done in relation to the execution of the Act be removed by certiorari; but that only relates to matters as to which justices have jurisdiction. Here it cannot be said that the justices have power to make an order directly contrary to the Act of Parliament, and therefore this order cannot be a proceeding within the 39th section. I think the order is bad, and that the rule should be absolute.

HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

Rule absolute for certiorari to issue; order to be quashed on the return thereof. (a)

LEGG (appellant) v. PARDOE (respondent).

Appeal from justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43—Game Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32—Trespass in pursuit of game—Claim of title ousting jurisdiction.

Where an information was laid against defendant for trespassing in pursuit of game, contrary to 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, and the defendant set up a right to shoot, but offered no evidence in support of his claim, the justices dismissed the information, on the ground that a question of right was thus raised, on which they had no power to adjudicate. On appeal under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43:

Held, that, as the justices believed there was a bonâ fide question of title in question, they came to a proper conclusion.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the court, under the 2nd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. At a petty sessions holden at Bridport, in and for the division of Bridport, in the county of Dorset, on the 26th Sept. 1859, before three justices of the peace in and for the said county, an information preferred by John Legg, hereinafter called the respondent, under sect. 30 of the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, charging "for that he the said respondent, on the 12th Sept. then inst., at Hook, in the said county, did commit a trespass by entering and being in the daytime on land in the occupation of the said appellant in search or pursuit of game or rabbits, contrary to the statute in that case made and provided," was heard and determined by the said justices, and upon such hearing they dismissed the information.

At the hearing of the aforesaid information, it was proved on the part of the informant, the appellant in this appeal, that he resided at Hook, in the said county, that he rented a field called Ragg's-close, parcel of the manor of Hook, with other lands there, of M. James Mintern; that the game and rabbits on such lands were not in any way reserved, and that his landlord, who himself was a lessee of the said lands, gave him a right over the same; that no one had any right to enter or be on any such lands in search or pursuit of game or rabbits without his (the appellant's) leave; that on the 12th Sept. last the respondent did enter and was on Ragg's-close for that purpose, without the leave of the appellant. On the part of the defendant, the respondent in this appeal, it was not denied that he was on Ragg's-close for the purpose aforesaid, but evidence was given that he was there by permission of the Rev. Paulet Mildmay Compton, who stated he had made a parol arrangement with Lord Sandwich for the

(a) It is important to note the decision incidentally made in this case, that certiorari is still a remedy, where justices have acted without jurisdiction. It had been much questioned whether it was not entirely taken away by sect. 39.

shooting at Hook, and that he therefore claimed the right. Not the least evidence was offered to show that Lord Sandwich had any right or claim to the shooting over the lands in the appellant's occupation, or that the landlord, Mr. Mintern, could not give the game and rabbits to the appellant. No evidence was given that the respondent had any game certificate or other licence to sport.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent, that the justices had no right to adjudicate on the charge, for that the respondent acted under a supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, and that the act not being wilful and malicious, their jurisdiction was ousted under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 24. The justices being of opinion that the respondent in committing the said trespass on the said close did so in pursuance of the permission of the said P. M. Compton, who he believed was entitled to the right of sporting thereon, gave their determination against the appellant in the manner beforementioned, conceiving that there was a question of right between the parties, which they, as justices, had no power to adjudicate on. The questions of law arising out of the above statement therefore were the following: First, were the justices empowered in law, and ought they to have convicted the respondent in respect of the said trespass? Secondly, was their jurisdiction taken away, and were they empowered to make the order against the appellant dismissing the information; or were there no circumstances or evidence before them depriving them of their right to adjudicate, and ought they to have exercised jurisdiction and to have convicted the respondent?

Kingdon for the appellant.—The justices have decided erroneously upon the points reserved by the case. The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, recites that "after the commencement of this Act, game will become an article which may be legally bought and sold, and it is therefore just and reasonable to provide some more summary means than now by law exist, for protecting the same from trespassers," &c. It is then enacted that "if any person whatsoever shall commit any trespass by entering or being in the daytime upon any land in search or pursuit of game, &c., such person shall, on conviction thereof, before a justice of the peace, forfeit and pay such sum of money not exceeding 2*l.*, as to the justice shall seem meet, together with the costs of conviction. Provided always, that any person charged with such trespass shall be at liberty to prove by way of defence any matter which could have been a defence to an action at law for such trespass," &c. The general rule that where property or title is in question the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to hear and determine in a summary manner is ousted, does not apply in the present case. The Act empowers the justices to decide the whole matter. [ERLE, C.J.—The point was considered in Reg. v. Cridland, 7 E. & B. 853.] The question is, whether a claim of title is sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justices. In the case mentioned Erle, J. says: "I strongly incline to the opinion that the true meaning of the statute is, that the justices ought to try whether the defendant entertained an honest belief that he had a title; and if he had such belief he ought not to be convicted; I think that in a criminal statute trespass means an intended trespass." (He referred to Morden v. Porter, 7 C. B., N.S., 641.) The principle, however, is laid down in Calcraft v. Gibbs, 5 Term Rep. 19. That was an action for penalties under game laws, for shooting and having no right; and courts have always held that questions of title could not then be entered into. Kenyon, C. J. saying, that where a party has even a colourable title only to a manor, a penal action is not a mode of proceeding by which they will investigate it. "But here nothing of the sort is even pretended; for it is admitted on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiff was the lord of the manor. . . . But it has been said that the servant acted bonâ fide, and therefore had not incurred the penalty of the statute. The servant, indeed, chose to trust to what his master told him on the subject; but as the master had no right, or even colour of title, it is no justification to the servant." The Act of Will. 4 is no doubt directed against ordinary poachers; and here the party is not such a person. It appears from the case, however, that the magistrates came to their determination on the proviso of the 24th section of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30 (the Malicious Injuries Act): "Provided always that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party trespassing acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, nor to any trespass not being wilful and malicious, committed in hunting, fishing, or in the pursuit of game, but that every such trespass shall be punishable in the same manner as before the passing of this Act." The information not being laid under that statute, but under the late Act of Will. 4, it was manifestly an error to decide under the Act of Geo. 4. The next question is, was there any claim of title, supposing that to be sufficient, to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrates? It is submitted there was not. The case states that the respondent was shooting by permission of the Rev. P. M. Compton, who stated in evidence that he had made a parl arrangement with Lord Sandwich, but no proof was offered that Lord Sandwich had any right whatever. If this is a sufficient claim of title, any poacher may come forward with a like story. It is not enough to state before the justices, "I have a title;" but the justices must see that there is at least a colourable title. Reg. v. Burnaby, 2 Ld. Raym. 900, cited by Erle, J. in Cridland's case, confirms this view. Holt, C.J. agreed that without doubt, if the defendant had but a colour of title, the justices had no jurisdiction in the cause. [BYLES, J.—Do you contend that under the 30th section it is not a crime? WILLIAMS, J.—The 6th section says that the party is liable to an action for trespass by him committed in search or pursuit of game.] The 46th section allows civil actions, where no criminal proceedings have been taken under the provisions of the Act. The 37th and 38th sections contains provisions in regard to penalties. The 12th section makes the tenant liable to a penalty for killing the game, where the right is in the landlord. [WILLIAMS, J.—Suppose the tenant is ignorant of the clause in his lease forbidding the killing of game; how then?] It is submitted that the rule still holds good. Then the party summoned under this Act is bound to show a defence which would have been a good defence to an action at law for the trespass, except that the leave and licence of the occupiers shall not be a defence where the right is in the landlord. The object of this Act is to enable the justices to hear and decide the whole question, as appears from the recital of the 30th section. This is made clearer by the 35th section, which shows who are not included within the Act. [BYLES, J.—Suppose one shooting accidentally allows shot to go over a neighbour's property?] Even then the party would be liable, as may be inferred from Reg. v. Pratt, 4 E. & B. 860. But even if it had been shown that Lord Sandwich had a title, it would be no answer, as the 11th section provides that the party authorised to shoot shall have a game certificate; and here no evidence was given of such a certificate, which the 42nd section shows it was the duty of the defendant to prove, and not of the prosecutor to deny. As to innocence of intention, he referred to Reg. v. Woodrow, 15 M. & W. 404. [ERLE, C.J.—I have always thought that in proceedings under the excise laws, no innocence of intention avails. BYLES, J. cited Hearne v. Garton, 28 L. J., M. C., where dangerous goods had been sent by railway, with-

Karslake for the respondent—It is contended on the other side that the justices were bound to enter into the question of respondent's title to shoot, by virtue of the provisions in the 30th section of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, although it is admitted that in all other cases the allegation of a bonâ fide right is sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of magistrates. Here the respondent believed he had a right to shoot. [ERLE, C.J.—Mere belief of a right where there is no foundation of one, will not do. Mr. Compton no doubt thought he had a right, when there was not the shadow of a right.] The justices heard the reference to Lord Sandwich, whom they might know to be the lord of the manor. Campbell, C.J., in Reg. v. Cridland, says: "Though no evidence of title was actually offered, it was quite clear that a bonâ fide claim of title was set up, and when such a claim is set up, it seems to me that justices have no longer jurisdiction to proceed to a summary conviction." [ERLE, C.J.—There it was known, and no evidence was necessary.] The question is, whether there is a bonâ fide claim of title, and that depends on the evidence of the clergyman, who stated that he had made a parol arrangement with Lord Sandwich for the right of shooting. The respondent, therefore, having obtained the permission of Mr. Compton to shoot, had an honest belief that he had the right to shoot accordingly. To show that the ordinary rule as to colour of title ousting jurisdiction does not apply, reference is made to the words of the 30th section of the Act under which the information is laid, that any person "shall be at liberty to prove, by way of defence, any matter which would have been a defence to an action at law for such trespass, save and except," &c. But this proviso is disposed of in the judgment of Reg. v. Cridland. Coleridge, J. says that "it may be that a defendant might, by virtue of this provision, compel justices to try a question of title; but it by no means follows that justices, of their own inclination and against the will of a defendant, may determine on his title to estates. If they are not so compelled the ordinary rule must prevail." Next, this is a criminal proceeding: (Cattel v. Ireson, 1 El. B. & El. 91: 27 L. J. 167, M. C.) It lies on the other side to show guilty knowledge. The case of Reg. v. Pratt has been mentioned, and it is noticed in the judgment of Morden v. Porter. It is, no doubt, true that the statement by the defendant in that case, as to his ignorance of the law, usually gives no excuse; but here a bonâ fide claim is set up. And it is submitted that a claim of title has been made sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justices. [ERLE, C.J.—The notion that imprisonment and hard labour may possibly ensue on disobedience to a statute, has often caused that statute to be held a criminal one, but I am not disposed to assent to it entirely.]

Kingdon in reply.—Before this statute there was no statute against trespassing in pursuit of game in the daytime. The 7 & 8 Vict. c. 30, s. 24, punishes malicious trespass, but it contains a provision as to the party trespassing acting under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, and also as to a trespass in pursuit of game, which is to be dealt with as was formerly the practice. Then comes the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, which, in the 30th section, recites that it is just and reasonable to provide some more summary means than now by law exist. This Act abolishes a distinction that formerly existed; the later Act makes it a trespass simpliciter, and it need not be malicious. The justices carefully avoid saying that the defendant had a right, for they state that he set up a right from a person who was only supposed to have authority to grant the right. It is for the other side to show that the jurisdiction is ousted.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 22.—ERLE, C.J. delivered the judgment of the court.—As we understand the statement of facts in this case, the justices dismissed the summons because, in their judgment, the question of title was raised bonâ fide, and because, under the words of the 30th section of the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, the point was not for their determination, conceiving that there was a question of right between the parties which they had no power to adjudicate on, on this ground we affirm their decision. If the question of title was bonâ fide raised, they took the right course in dismissing the complaint according to Reg. v. Cridland, 7 E. & B.; and Morden v. Porter, 7 C.B., N.S. The facts tending to raise the question of title are extremely scanty, and the case would have been more satisfactory if some further evidence of the title supposed to be in question had been given, so as to ascertain whether Lord Sandwich claimed in respect of the land, or of the manor, or of any other right, and whether there was a colour for the claim; still, it is a matter which the justices had to determine, and we cannot say they were wrong. If the justices wished to raise the question whether the defendant ought to have been discharged because he believed he had a right to enter on the land, and so had no intention to trespass, we have not so understood the case.

BRADSHAW v. VAUGHTON.

A certificate given under 9 Geo. 4, c. 3, ss. 27, 28, upon the withdrawal of a charge by the complainant, is a bar to an action.

The plaintiff having been assaulted by the defendant, laid an information before a magistrate, who granted a summons and fixed the hearing of the complaint for a certain day; before, however, the day arrived, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that he should withdraw the charge. On the day appointed for the hearing the defendant appeared before the magistrate and claimed a certificate under the Act, which was given:

Held, that this certificate was a bar to an action afterwards brought for the assault.

This was an action tried on the 11th Aug. last, at the County Court of Shropshire, Madeley, brought by the plaintiff, who was a minor, and who sought to recover damages for an assault alleged to have been committed upon him by the defendant on the 13th June last.

Two defences were relied upon: first, a justification on the facts; and, secondly, a certificate of magistrates of dismissal under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, ss. 27, 28. In support of the second ground of defence the following facts were proved on the part of the defendant:—

"On the 18th June last the plaintiff went before a magistrate for the county of Salop, and on oath preferred an information against the defendant, of which the following is a copy. (Here the information is set out.)

The summons was accordingly issued by the magistrate to the defendant, requiring him to appear at the

(a) The question whether, in any particular instance the claim of title ousts jurisdiction is extremely difficult for justices to determine, and this case does not help them out of the difficulty. It does not suffice that such a claim be set up, the justices must be satisfied that it is offered bonâ fide, though they are not to inquire if it be a good claim, for that would be to try the title itself. The question they should ask themselves is this: "Is the claim of title raised bonâ fide, or only as a pretence to escape our jurisdiction?" And this they may try by inquiring into the nature of the claim, for the purpose of satisfying themselves if it has a real foundation. But they should not go beyond this. If satisfied that a claim really exists, they are bound to dismiss the complaint public office, at Shiffnal, on the 5th July last, to answer the information and summons served on him on the 20th June, and on the 3rd July a notice was served on the defendant, of which the following is a copy:—

"To Mr. Thomas Vaughton.

"I hereby give you notice, that the summons issued against you on the complaint of Charles Bradshaw is withdrawn, and that you need not attend at the petty sessions to be held at Shiffnal, on Friday the 6th of July 1860. Dated, &c.

"THOMAS BRADSHAW, the father and next friend of Charles Bradshaw."

Charles Bradshaw was a boy of ten years of age, and his father acted for him in the matter.

Notwithstanding this notice, the defendant attended the petty sessions in obedience to the summons with his attorney, and requested the plaintiff might be called to support his complaint.

The plaintiff was called, but did not appear in person or by attorney.

The defendant's attorney then requested the magistrates to grant the defendant a certificate of dismissal, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, ss. 27, 28, on the ground that the offence had not been proved; stating that he believed it was the intention of the plaintiff to bring an action against the defendant for the assault. The magistrates objected to grant a certificate of dismissal on that ground, as the case had not been heard; but, at the earnest request of the defendant's attorney, granted the following certificate stating the facts, to enable the defendant to raise the question as to the effect of such certificate, if it should become necessary for him to do so:—

"County of Salop, to wit.—Be it remembered that on the 18th day of June 1860 complaint was made before J. L., one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county of Salop, by Charles Bradshaw, of the parish of Albrighton, in the county of Salop, for that, on the 13th day of June 1860, at the parish of Boninghall, in the county of Salop, Thomas Vaughton, of Little Whiston, gentleman, did unlawfully assault, beat and ill-treat the said C. B., and the said justice thereon issued his summons to the said T. V., requiring him to appear before such two or more of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Salop as should be present at the petty sessions to be held at the public office in Shiffnal, in the said county, on Friday, the 6th day of July 1860 to answer the said complaint, and the said summons so issued by the said justice was duly served on the said T. V. on the 20th day of June last, requiring him to appear on the day last above mentioned to answer such complaint. And whereas, after the issuing and service of the said summons, to wit, on the 3rd day of July 1860, T. B., the father of the above-named C. B., did cause a notice to be served upon Thomas Vaughton, of which the following is a copy:—[Here the notice as given above is set out.]

"And now at this day, to wit, on the 6th day of July 1860, the said Thomas Vaughton appeared before us, the undersigned justices present at the said petty sessions; but the said C. B., although duly called, did not appear, whereupon the said T. V. claimed to have the said complaint dismissed, and we do therefore dismiss the same. (Signed) "U. C.
"G. W."

No notice was given by the defendant to the plaintiff of his intention to attend the petty sessions and apply for a certificate, nor was any application made by the plaintiff to the magistrate to withdraw the summons, but notice was given by the plaintiff to the magistrates' clerk to the said petty sessions that he had withdrawn the summons and given notice to the defendant to that effect.

In charging the jury the judge told them that, in his opinion, as a matter of law, the certificate above set out, and relied on by the defendant, was no bar to the action; and that if they thought that the plaintiff had, upon the facts furnished as to the assault, made out a case to their satisfaction for damages, they ought to give him such fair and reasonable damages as they thought fit.

The jury found a verdict for 25*l.* and the defendant gave notice of appeal.

The question, therefore, for the opinion of the court is, whether or not the said certificate operated as a bar to the plaintiff's right of action by virtue of the statute.

Cwr. ads. vult.

Nov. 20.—ERLE, C.J. now delivered judgment.—In this case, which was argued yesterday by Mr. Scotland, the material facts of this appeal are, that the plaintiff laid an information for an assault under the statute of Geo. 4, and took out a summons requiring defendant to attend before the justices at petty sessions, which was served on him; the plaintiff afterwards, and before the day of hearing, by his agent, gave notice to the defendant not to attend, and to the magistrates' clerk that he should not attend; that on the day, the defendant attended and claimed to have the information dismissed, and a certificate of dismissal granted, although the plaintiff was absent; the magistrates granted the certificate showing these facts, and the question is, whether it bars this action for the same assault? The statute authorises the magistrates to give a certificate, if on the hearing they deem the charge not proved; and at first it seemed difficult to say that they had heard the matter at all. But we were pressed with the case of Tunncliffe v. Tedd, 5 C. B. 553, where this court lays down, as principles, that the information is the commencement of a criminal proceeding analogous to an indictment, and the summons is the act of the magistrates on the behalf of the public; that the party who begins the criminal information cannot withdraw from it leaving it pending; but, on the contrary, that the party charged has the right to force it on to a conclusion; and that if at the time for concluding the case the informant offers no evidence in support of the charge, it ought to be dismissed, and such dismissal is the result. In that case the informant attended at the return of the summons, and when it was called on the defendant pleaded not guilty, and was ready with his witnesses; and then the informant said he should withdraw from the case and bring an action; and thereupon the magistrates chose to certify. In the argument of the case it is said that the hearing begins when the plea is pleaded and issue is joined; and we have had to consider whether we could distinguish the present case on the ground that the informant did not attend, though a formal plea was not taken, and so no issue joined. After consideration, it seems to us the principles of the judgment above mentioned do not authorise us to rely on this distinction. It was held that the informant cannot withdraw, and the defendant has a right to a decision, and that if the informant says he withdraws, the case is heard, and the information dismissed, and the power to certify is given, if the magistrates, in their discretion, choose to grant it. Here, although the informant was not present to express orally he withdrew, his writing was to that effect; and if he absent himself with an intention of withdrawal, his act ought to leave to the defendant all the rights which arise on any withdrawing of the charge. In Rex v. Stamper, a case under the Bastardy Act then in force, it was decided that an application duly entered with the clerk of the court, entitled the putative father, when the case was called on, to claim a dismissal, and that such a dismissal was a hearing entitling him to costs, although the applicant did not attend to support the application; and a certificate was granted. We feel bound by these cases to hold that it barred the action, and our judgment is therefore for the appellant.

Judgment for the appellant. (a)

Attorney for the respondent, Smallwood.

Friday, Nov. 9.

HARRIS (appellant) v. JENNS (respondent).

Lord's Day Observance Act—11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, ss. 1 and 4—"Fermented or distilled liquors"—Made wines.

A retailer of British or made wines, compounded of sweets and alcohol, is liable to conviction under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, for selling such articles to others than bona fide travellers, during the hours of morning service on Sunday.

By stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 1, no licensed victualler or person licensed to sell beer by retail, to be drunk either on or off the premises, or "other person," shall open his house for the sale of wine, beer, "or other fermented liquors," or sell the same, on Sunday, before half-past twelve p.m., except for refreshment for travellers. By sect. 4, no person shall open any house or place of public resort for the sale of fermented or distilled liquors, or sell therein such liquors, before half-past twelve p.m., except as refreshment for travellers.

The appellant, who is a retailer of made or British wines, sold to respondent, not being then a traveller, on Sunday, at 11.30 a.m., a half-pint of made wine, called "port wine, which contained one ounce of alcohol in four ounces of the mixture, and which a professional chemist, who was examined, declared to be a fermented liquor." The magistrates convicted him under the statute, and inflicted a penalty, holding that, whether he was within the 1st section or not, he was clearly within the 4th section:

Held, that the conviction was right, the words "other person" in the 4th section comprehending all persons other than those specified in the first section.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 79, does not repeal the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, as appears to have been held by two of the judges in Reg. v. Whiteley, 3 H. & N. 143. Per Byles, J.: There is some mistake in the report of that law.

This was a case stated by way of appeal from the decision of magistrates, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, for the opinion of this court.

By stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, s. 1, "No licensed victualler or person licensed to sell beer by retail to be drunk on the premises, or not to be drunk on the premises, or other person, shall open his house for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or other fermented or distilled liquors, or sell the same, on Sunday, before half-past twelve p.m., except for refreshment for travellers."

(a) It had been long a matter of doubt in magistrates' courts whether a certificate of dismissal could be claimed, although the charge had not been heard, some magistrates refusing, and some granting it. This case has settled the question in the affirmative; and it does this by establishing a principle which may be of much wider application, and which therefore it would be as well for magistrates to bear in mind, viz., that the information is the commencement of a proceeding in the nature of an indictment, which, once laid, the complainant cannot withdraw, and the party charged has consequently a right to a formal acquittal, and the consequences of an acquittal both in costs and certificate.

By sect. 4, "No person shall open any house or place of public resort for the sale of fermented or distilled liquors, or sell therein such liquors, before the hour of half-past twelve p.m., except as refreshment for travellers."

On Saturday, 28th April, the appellant Cleopas Harris was charged before us the undersigned justices of the peace for the borough of Birmingham, with having, on Sunday the 15th April, before half-past twelve p.m., to wit, at half-past eleven a.m., unlawfully sold to one George Jenns (the respondent) a certain quantity of fermented liquor, to wit, one half-pint of "made wine," in a certain house and place of public resort, situate, &c., the said George Jenns not being then a traveller, &c.

The evidence was, that on the day and at the hour named in the summons the said George Jenns was at the shop of the appellant, who is a retailer of made or British wines, that he asked appellant, who was serving customers in the shop, for half a pint of port wine, and that he thereupon received from him, and paid for, the liquor produced before us; that there were above twenty persons in the shop when he went there, that the shop was open, and people going in and coming out.

The liquor was analysed by a professional chemist, who stated that he had by distillation extracted from four ounces of it nearly one ounce of alcoholic spirit, and that he therefore considered it a fermented liquor; that it would doubtless be possible to compound a mixture of sugar and water, and colouring and other matters, which, with the addition of alcohol, should resemble in taste and appearance the liquid produced, and yet not have in itself undergone fermentation, and that the alcohol which had been added might again be extracted by distillation, but that in his opinion the liquid which had been sold as wine was a fermented liquor.

It was contended on the part of the appellant, first, that he did not come within the meaning of either the 1st or 4th sections of the above recited Act; and secondly, that there was not sufficient evidence that the liquor sold by him was really wine or a fermented liquor.

We are of opinion, that even supposing he did not come within the description of an "other person" within the 1st section, he clearly was within the words and meaning of the 4th section, and as to the second objection, we found as a fact, in doing which we considered ourselves justified by the scientific evidence produced, as well as by the representation of the appellant himself at the time of sale, that the liquor was wine, and therefore a fermented liquor, and we convicted him of the offence charged, and inflicted a penalty accordingly, whereupon the appellant being dissatisfied with our determination, has applied to us to state and sign a case for the opinion of the Court of C. P.

Phipson for the appellant.—The question raised before the magistrates lies in a narrow compass: it was, whether a seller of made wines by retail is liable to be convicted for selling half a pint of made wine called "port wine" at half-past eleven o'clock on Sunday morning; and this depends on the question, whether such liquor is a fermented or distilled liquor within the meaning of the statute. It is submitted that the words "no person" in the statute apply to licensed victuallers only. The appellant then is not within the 1st section of the Act, because he is not a licensed victualler. The magistrates held, that whether he is or is not within that section, he is within the 4th section, and therefore convicted him. It is true that a chemist who made analysis of the liquor, found more than half an ounce of alcohol in it, and swore it was a "fermented liquor;" nevertheless, as it is compounded of alcohol and sweets, it is contended that it is not a fermented liquor. [EARL,

C. B.]

REG. v. GUELDER.

[C. CAR R.]

C.J.—It appears to have contained one-fourth of alcohol; it must therefore have been very strong, for sherry has but one-seventh of alcohol. BYLES, J.—Your client insists it is made wine only.] Yea. [ERLE, C.J.—An expert and skilled chemist stated that it was fermented liquor, and appellant being present said nothing.] The statute was only intended to apply to exciseable liquors. [ERLE, C.J.—The main object of the statute was to enforce the observance of the Lord's day; and whether appellant was within the 1st section or not is immaterial, for he was clearly within the 4th section.] Yes; but I shall show that was wrong, and that the words "no person" apply only to licensed victuallers and persons licensed to sell fermented or distilled liquors. There is a doubt whether this statute is in force at all. Bramwell, B. has expressed an opinion that the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 79, repeals the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, under which this conviction was made: (Reg. v. Whiteley, 3 H. & N. 143.) [ERLE, C.J.—Construing it by the context, it is impossible the learned baron can have meant to say what he is reported to have said. It was an oral, not a written judgment.] I think there is some mistake as to what the learned baron meant; but, as he is reported to have said that the later repealed the earlier statute, I thought it my duty to mention it. The only statute now in force is the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the magistrates decided right. The statute prohibits persons having an excise licence, and persons having a beer licence, and other persons, selling fermented liquors during the hours of morning service. This party is found by the magistrates to have sold fermented liquors during morning service, namely, port wine, which was proved before them to be a fermented liquor, containing a quantity of alcohol; it was therefore a strongly operative liquor towards producing intoxication, and he sold it during divine service. Then is he a person other than those licensed? He says the statute only intended to comprise other persons having licences. I am also clear that the Legislature did not, as I conceive, intend to limit the very wide enactment that all other persons besides those having licences shall not sell. I see no sign that they intended so to limit it, and therefore I am of opinion that the appellant was properly convicted.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The words "other person" comprehend all the rest of the world except those that are mentioned in the preceding section. The expression is universal, and therefore with that exception, the persons not falling within the exception fall within the general enactment. There is another reason. It is clear on his own showing this mixture was either fermented or distilled, and a scientific witness is called to prove that in his judgment it is not distilled, but fermented; that was a question for them. With respect to the statute being repealed, I think it right to say, our attention having been called to the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 79, and the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 118, it seems there must have been some misreport of the decision of those learned judges; but nothing has been brought before the court to show that there is any other legislation now in course of operation, with respect to the profanation of the Sabbath during morning service, except the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, the other two referring to a totally different matter.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the conviction was right.

Judgment for respondent.(a)

(a) It should be observed that, according to the opinion of the C. B., the recent statute does not repeal the earlier one, as was supposed to be decided by Reg. v. Whiteley. It would be as well to make a note of this in the text-book used by the clerk or justice.

REG. v. GUELDER.

Embezzlement—Assistant overseer—Sums received for rates—Fraudulently obtaining overseers' vouchers—Sums properly entered in the assistant overseer's books.

It was the assistant overseer's duty to collect the rates, and upon receipt to pay them into a bank to the account of the overseers, and then to obtain the overseers' receipts for sums so paid to their account; it was his duty also to enter the rates, when received by him, in a book. At the audit the accounts so entered by him were contrasted with the receipts given to him by the overseers. Just previous to an audit, the assistant overseer fraudulently obtained from the overseers receipts for sums by stating that he had paid them into the bank to the overseers' account, when in truth he had not, having previously misappropriated them. He produced the receipts to the auditor, and deceived him as to his having handed the moneys over to the overseers:

Held, that he was properly convicted of embezzlement, and that the fact of entering the sums when received in his book did not alter the character of the offence.

Case reserved for the opinion of this court by Wilde, B., at the last assizes for the county of York:—

Charles Guelder was tried before me, and found guilty on two counts charging him with embezzlement.

For the purposes of this case the conviction of Charles Guelder is to be deemed and taken to be a good conviction, unless the facts about to be stated do not in law constitute the crime of embezzlement.

The prisoner was assistant overseer of the township of Bradfield, and such servant as stated in the indictment.

It was the prisoner's duty, as such servant, to collect the rates from the ratepayers of the township.

The course was, for the prisoner, on receiving any rates, to pay them into a neighbouring bank to the account of the overseers, and then to obtain from the overseers, or one of them, a receipt in a printed form signed by such overseer for such sum so paid to their account.

The prisoner also kept a book in which it was his duty to enter from time to time the various sums received by him.

At the audit, which took place half-yearly, the accounts thus entered as received by the prisoner were contrasted with the receipts given to him by the overseers.

He charged himself by the book, and discharged himself again by the overseers' receipts.

The above being the course of business, the prisoner in the month of May in the present year, on the day of _____, and just previous to the audit for the half-year, went to two of the overseers, and obtained from them several receipts for various sums stated in the indictment.

He obtained these receipts fraudulently by stating that he had paid the said sums into the bank to the overseers' account, which in truth he had not. He had, in fact, previously appropriated the said sums to his own purposes, and he obtained the receipts with the view of deceiving the auditor as to his having handed the moneys over to the overseers. He produced the receipts at the audit, and was successful.

But he had duly and properly entered the said sums when received in the aforesaid book, and had thus openly charged himself with the receipt of them.

It was contended that having thus charged himself with the receipt of the money he could not be guilty of embezzlement.

Q. B.]

LOOME v. BAILEY.

[Q. B.]

The prisoner was convicted and sentenced, but I reserved for the consideration of this court the following question: could the prisoner, on the above facts, be lawfully convicted of the crime of embezzlement.

JAMES WILDE.

No counsel appeared to argue this case on the prisoner's behalf.

Went, for the prosecution, was stopped by the court.

ERLE, C.J.—I am of opinion that this conviction ought to be affirmed. It is perfectly clear that the money was embezzled; and that the offence was committed with one of the ordinary concomitants of fraud, fraudulent accounting. The question submitted to us is, whether the prisoner is entitled to be acquitted because he made a true and correct entry of the sums when received in his book. I think not, for those entries may probably have been made with forethought and a view to this defence. I therefore see no reason for doubting the propriety of this conviction.

CROMPTON, J.—I am of the same opinion. The crime of embezzlement was complete when the prisoner appropriated the money. What took place afterwards could not alter the character of the offence. His entering in the book the sums he had received after the embezzlement had taken place could not purge the prisoner's guilt in any way.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Conviction affirmed.(a)

LOOME (appellant) v. BAILEY (respondent).

Game—Dealer selling live game within the prohibited season—1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4.

The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, "if any person licensed to deal in game shall buy or sell, or knowingly have in his house, shop, &c. any bird of game after the expiration of ten days from the respective days on which it shall become unlawful to kill or take such birds of game," applies to live as well as dead game.

Case stated by Mr. Bingham, a metropolitan stipendiary justice, on a refusal to convict:—

"John Bailey, of No. 113, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, in the county of Middlesex, was summoned before me, for that he on the 29th day of March 1860, being then and there licensed to deal in game according to the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 19, did then and there unlawfully sell certain birds of game, to wit three pheasants, on the day last aforesaid, being after the expiration of ten days from the 1st of February 1860, contrary to the form of the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, whereby and by force of the statute the said John Bailey hath forfeited a sum not exceeding 3*l.* for the said offence.

"It was proved that on the 26th day of March 1860, the defendant was a person licensed to deal in game under the provisions of the Act 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 19; and that the witness in the case called at the shop of the defendant and asked to purchase some live pheasants; that the defendant asked the witness if he required wild pheasants, and that upon his replying 'yes,' the defendant said he should have to send to Norfolk for them, and the witness must call on the Thursday following, the 29th of March. That the witness went to the shop of the defendant on the 29th (Thursday) of March, and again saw the defendant, who gave him the pheasants, which he said were wild, and thereupon the witness paid the defendant 2*l.* 5*s.*, taking away the birds.

"Upon these facts the counsel for the defendant submitted that sect. 4 of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, did not apply to live birds of game; that it contemplated birds of game which were dead only. I was of opinion that sect. 4 of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, did only apply to birds of game which were dead, and dismissed the summons."

Hawkins (Orridge with him).—The only question is, whether or not a person licensed to deal in game may, after the time limited by the Act of Parliament for killing game, sell, in the way of his trade, live pheasants? The 3rd section of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, enacts that, "if any person whatsoever shall kill, or take any game, or use any dog, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for the purpose of killing or taking any game on a Sunday or Christmas-day, such person shall, on conviction thereof before two justices of the peace," pay a specified penalty; and "if any person whatsoever shall kill or take any partridge between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of September in any year, or any pheasant between the 1st day of February and the 1st day of October in any year, he shall pay a penalty on conviction." The 17th and 18th sections authorise the justices to grant licences; and persons who have obtained a licence may purchase game from other persons licensed to kill it. The section on which the case depends is the 4th: "If any person licensed to deal in game by virtue of this Act, as hereinafter mentioned, shall buy or sell, or knowingly have in his house, shop, stall, or possession, or control any bird of game after the expiration of ten days (one inclusive and the other exclusive) from the respective days in each year on which it shall become unlawful to kill or take such birds of game respectively as aforesaid, or shall knowingly have in his house, possession, or control any bird of game (except birds of game kept in a mew or breeding-place) after the expiration of forty days (one inclusive and the other exclusive) from the respective days in each year on which it shall become unlawful to kill or take such birds of game respectively as aforesaid, every such person shall on conviction" pay a penalty specified by the Act. The conviction sought to be obtained in this case was founded upon the first part of the section, and, when the effect of that section is considered, the case comes precisely within the mischief contemplated by the Legislature, because the defendant was clearly licensed to deal in game. The 26th March was clearly beyond the ten days, and there was no doubt of the fact that the defendant, being licensed to deal in game, after the expiration of the ten days allowed by the Act did sell three wild pheasants, which, according to the evidence, he sent to Norfolk for. Without reference to any authority upon the subject as to whether the Act of Parliament related to live pheasants or not, according to the ordinary construction of the words of the Act itself, a "bird of game" would include a live as well as a dead pheasant. Suppose, before the recent statute, an indictment had been framed for "stealing one tame pheasant," that would have been construed to mean a live tame pheasant. In Archbold on Criminal Proceedings there were several cases supporting that proposition with reference to the stealing of ducks. It is clear that the object of the Legislature was not only to prevent the killing and destruction of game during the periods limited by the Act, but also to prevent the disturbance of birds of game in their wild state during the period when they ought to be left alone for breed-

(a) The fact that the prisoner had duly entered in his account the money he had embezzled has been hitherto held to entitle him to an acquittal, and many unquestionable thieves thus escaped. The Court of Appeal has now decided in accordance with common sense, that the question is not whether the receipt was acknowledged, but whether the money was fraudulently appropriated by the prisoner. But an accounting may be fairly urged as an argument to support the probability of a mistake rather than a fraud.

LOOME v. BAILEY.

ing purposes; and the mischief contemplated by the Act would hardly be provided for if the court were to hold that "birds of game" were to be limited to dead birds. If so, that would be to open the door to the most extensive robberies upon those who had preserves in the various counties, and would be a great encouragement to poachers; and it might then be contended that if a man took a bird of game alive, he would be entitled to escape by saying, "I have killed it." The meaning of the section is made still more clear by reference to that part of it which relates to the buying and selling, or knowingly having in possession or control, birds of game by licensed dealers. What is there in the Act of Parliament to limit the meaning of the words "bird of game?" Clearly nothing. In Rex v. Marsh, 2 B. & C. 720, where an information was laid under the statute of the 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 2, against a carrier for having game in his possession, he was held to be brought within the statute, which made it an offence to be possessed of game "unless sent by a qualified person," and there the general term used was "game."

HILL, J.—Applying both to live and dead game?

Hawkins.—He was fined for every head of game. Also, in Helps v. Glenister, 8 Barn. & C. 553, there was a conviction under the 28 Geo. 3, which prohibited the buying of pheasants in all cases. It was held that live pheasants came within the meaning of the term "pheasants" used in the Act. As to the case of Porritt v. Baker, relied upon by the defendant, that really decided nothing upon the point before the court.

BLACKBURN, J.—In Porritt v. Baker the decision was merely this: that, there being a sale before the limited period, a subsequent delivery was not legal.

Hawkins.—The contract was made during the limited lawful period. If the Act applies only to dead game, and if a person may have in his possession or control birds of game alive within the limited period, the consequence will be that a dealer, supposing it should happen that on the 31st Aug. in any year he has in his possession 500 live partridges, which he says he does not feel called upon to account for, may, on the 1st Sept., kill them; and the effect beyond all doubt would be this, that it would hold out an encouragement to poachers to net as much as they could before the 1st Sept., and put them in the hands of a licensed dealer to feed; and then any person could say to the dealer on the 31st Aug., "The Act applies only to dead and not to live birds. I have 500 partridges; if you purchase them you can kill them to-morrow, and escape the penalty." However, if the Act were to be construed as the defendant contends it ought to be, this consequence would follow, that though a person not licensed to deal in game might not have in his possession any birds except those kept in a mew or breeding place, a person licensed to deal in game might have live birds whether kept in a mew or breeding place or not.

Lush (J. J. Powell with him).—It cannot be contended that this case was not within the literal meaning of the words of the 4th section. The question is whether, looking at the object and intention of the Act, the words of the section are not to have a limited meaning, so as to be confined to dead game. And for this purpose it is necessary to consider the spirit of the Act, by reference to the decisions upon previous Game Acts, which throw some light upon the matter. In Simpson v. Unwin, 3 B. & Ald. 134, under the 2 Geo. 3, c. 19, which statute enacted "that no person shall, under any pretence whatsoever, have in his possession or control, or take, kill, destroy, sell, buy, or have in his possession any partridge between the 12th of February and the 1st of September," and if he did he was to be liable to a penalty. The defendant had a partridge on the 9th Feb. that was killed before the 1st, and the court held in that case he might keep the bird until it was fit for food. It is not the literal meaning alone that is to be taken, but the intention of the Legislature is to be considered. In the case of Bridger v. Richardson, 2 M. & S. 568, under the statute 3 Jac. 1 (a case relating to the taking of the spawn of fish), it was decided that the taking for destruction was alone prohibited by the statute. The object of the game laws was undoubtedly to prohibit the taking with intent to destroy, and so to preserve game. The meaning of "taking" is, taking with intent to destroy. If you put the other construction upon it, you will prevent a landowner taking his own pheasants.

BLACKBURN, J.—In close time; and I think that was the object of the Act. I think it was expressly intended to do that.

Lush.—That is the very question. Many landowners may desire to increase their breed, or to change their breed.

WIGHTMAN, J.—They may do all this in season.

Lush.—Not during the time of their being killed. The 3rd section would import a taking for the purpose of destruction.

WIGHTMAN, J.—They may be taken in a net for a very different purpose.

BLACKBURN, J.—The language is very superfluous in that case, if the "taking" only applies to taking in order to kill. The man who would take would kill, and you would catch him under the first words.

Lush.—No; a man may take on a Sunday, and kill on the Monday. The association of the words "take" or "kill" in the Act of Parliament shows that that meaning is to be given—taking for the purpose of killing. The using of a gun, a dog, or a net, would point to the purpose of destruction. The word "take" is necessary to cover a transaction of this kind. If any person used "any dog for the purpose of killing game on a Sunday," that would be within the clause.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I doubt whether the Legislature meant the Act to apply to the case of a man catching his game by his own hand.

Lush.—They do not contemplate the destruction of game, but the taking for the purpose of destruction. If the 4th section of the Act meant that no person licensed to deal in game shall buy or sell any bird of game after the expiration of ten days, it would be undoubtedly incompetent for any landowner who wanted to improve and increase his breed of pheasants to employ the agency of a licensed dealer in game.

HILL, J.—According to Parke, B.'s judgment in the case of Porritt v. Baker, a licensed dealer might supply live game, provided he caused them to be delivered out of a mew or breeding-place, and upon a contract made during the season.

Lush.—His Lordship expressed an opinion that a licensed dealer, if he had them in his possession, might sell them afterwards.

WIGHTMAN, J.—He seems to consider they should be out of a mew.

Lush.—In his judgment, he says, "a dealer may contract to deliver at any time" birds which he has obtained "during the season."

BLACKBURN, J.—That expression is against you. He has carefully put it, that he may, "during the season, make a contract to deliver out of a mew." That is not expressly a decision that you cannot make a contract after the season. It is not an authority for you.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Do not the words "out of a mew or breeding-place" militate against your view of the statute? What effect do you give to those words "except birds of game kept in a mew?" Surely that contemplates the sale of live birds.

Lush.—That belongs to the second branch of the section, and applies to persons who are not dealers in game.

Q. B.]

Ex parte LIEUTENANT ALLEN.

[Q. B.]

BLACKBURN, J.—By the 4th section a dealer is prohibited having in his possession or control any bird of game after the expiration of ten days from the day on which it is lawful, &c. Then as to an unauthorised person, it is "except birds of game kept in a mew or breeding-place." I confess I should have thought the meaning was this—that inasmuch as licensed dealers were so extremely likely to encourage poaching, we say positively, between certain days mentioned in this Act, a licensed dealer shall not have a bird of game under any pretence, alive or dead, but an unlicensed person may have a bird in a mew or breeding-place.

LUSH.—The words of the statute need not have a literal meaning put upon them, but the spirit of the Act must be looked at.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I certainly entertain no doubt upon this question. It appears to me only to turn on the meaning to be given to the words "bird of game." Now, that is to have the same meaning throughout the whole of the section; and whatever doubt there may have been thrown on the question, that exception in the middle of the section, "except birds of game kept in a mew or breeding-place," can be only applicable to live birds; and it shows that the Legislature, in this section, contemplated both live and dead birds. On that short ground it appears to me that no reasonable doubt can exist in this case. And with respect to the case in the Ex. (Porritt v. Baker), I do not see that it amounts to any decision on the point now before us.

HILL, J.—I am of the same opinion.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The case must go back, to be reheard upon the evidence. (a)

Ex parte LIEUTENANT ALLEN.

Court-martial—Offence of a civil nature—Place of imprisonment abroad—Changing same—Mutiny Act—Articles of war—20 & 21 Vict. c. 13.

The Mutiny Act 1857, s. 38, enacts, that the place of imprisonment of persons under sentence of general courts-martial shall be appointed by the officer commanding the district. Sect. 40, that every governor, gaoler, &c. of any gaol in any part of her Majesty's dominions shall receive into his custody any military offender under sentence by a court-martial upon an order in writing from the officer commanding the corps to which the offender belongs. Sect. 41 authorises the officer commanding the district to change the place of imprisonment.

A lieutenant in her Majesty's service was convicted of manslaughter by a court-martial in India, and sentenced to four years' imprisonment, and ordered by the officer commanding the corps to be imprisoned in a place in India, and he afterwards ordered A.'s removal to England to undergo the remainder of his imprisonment. When in England A. was subsequently lodged in the Queen's Prison under a warrant from the Horse Guards, signed by the Adjutant-General:

Held, that the keeper of the Queen's Prison was not justified in detaining A. under that warrant, and that he was entitled to his discharge.

Rule nisi calling upon the governor of the Queen's Prison to show cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue to bring up the body of William Henry Craven Allen, a lieutenant in the 82nd Foot, in order to his discharge, upon the ground that he was detained in illegal custody under the sentence of a court-martial.

The main facts of the case had been laid before the court in the applicant's affidavit, and it had been agreed on both sides that the argument should be taken upon the present rule, and if the judgment of the court should be that his custody was illegal, Lieutenant Allen should be at once discharged.

On the 28th Feb. 1859 Lieutenant Allen was tried by court-martial at Shahjehanpore, more than 120 miles from Fort William, for the wilful murder of one Bidassee. The court-martial acquitted him of the crime of murder, but found him guilty of manslaughter, and sentenced him to four years' imprisonment, without hard labour. The sentence was confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief, who appointed Agra Fort as the place of his imprisonment. He was accordingly confined at Agra till the 20th Nov. 1859, when he was removed to Fort William, at Calcutta, whence he was brought to England, and arrived on the 20th June last. He was at first taken to Chatham, and on the 28th June to the prison at Milbank, where he was treated as a convict, and subjected to penal servitude. Remonstrances were made, and he was sent from Milbank to Weedon, a prison which was used for the custody of common soldiers, and there treated as a common soldier.

On the 16th July he was removed to Newgate, and on the 24th July to the Queen's Prison, where he was now being treated as a person whose sentence was one of imprisonment only. He was there detained under an order signed on the 28th July 1860, by the Adjutant-General, in execution of the sentence pronounced by the court-martial in India.

The Solicitor-General and Welsby showed cause.—The only question now was, whether Lieutenant Allen, being in custody in the Queen's Prison under a sentence of court-martial, was in lawful custody. The offence with which Lieutenant Allen was charged was a non-military offence and one committed against the ordinary criminal law of the country; but, owing to the distance at which his regiment was stationed from Calcutta, it was necessary to have recourse to the provision which had been made by the 131st of the Articles of War for the trial of offences committed by officers and common soldiers by court-martial. Those articles were made by her Majesty, under the authority of the Mutiny Act of 1857 (20 Vict. c. 13, s. 1); and it was by a court-martial so constituted that Lieutenant Allen was convicted and sentenced to four years' imprisonment. It was said that there was no power to imprison him beyond the Indian territories; but he (the Solicitor-General) contended that on a writ of habeas corpus the court would not consider the propriety of the place of punishment, but only whether he was under a penal sentence and in legal custody. The 38th section of the Mutiny Act of 1857 enacted, "That the place of imprisonment under the sentences of general courts-martial shall be appointed by the officer commanding the district, garrison, island, or colony, and under the sentence of any other court-martial, shall be appointed by the officer confirming the proceedings of such court-martial, and in default of such appointment, then the place of imprisonment should be appointed by the officer commanding the regiment or corps to which the offender belongs or is attached." Under that section the Fort of Agra was appointed as the place of Lieutenant Allen's imprisonment, but there was nothing to show that that was to be the sole place. It might be impossible that he could be imprisoned there. The 40th section enacts that "every governor, provost-marshal, gaoler, or keeper of any public prison, or of any gaol or house of correction in any part of her Majesty's dominions, shall receive into his custody any military offender under sentence of imprisonment by a court-

(a) As a consequence of this decision, a game dealer must not buy, keep, or sell live game, except during the shooting season. It was notoriously the practice with many of them to buy a lot of live game and kill them on the evening before the proper day, so that the birds might appear in the shop window at the earliest period in the morning, before any birds could possibly have been shot and sent to them from the country.

martial, upon delivering to him an order in writing in that behalf from the officer commanding the regiment or corps to which the offender belongs or is attached, which order shall specify the period of imprisonment which the offender is to undergo, and the day and hour of the day on which he is to be released," &c. [HILL, J.—Under what statute is Lieutenant Allen now in custody in England?] It ought to be shown on the other side that the custody is unlawful.

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is stated, on the part of Lieut. Allen, that he is in illegal custody when it is shown that he is not in the custody pointed out by the Act. Where it is said that he shall be confined in such a place, the words "and in no other" must be implied. The sentence was that he should be imprisoned at Agra, and he is now found in prison in England. His Lordship asked whether Lord Clyde, who had given the order for the imprisonment at Agra, had given the order for his removal.

The Solicitor-General said he was unable to state that he had done so. The only statement on the subject was contained in the letter of the officer to Lieut. Allen, saying that "instructions had been received" to remove him to this country,

HILL, J.—It is very important to know whether those instructions had been given by Lord Clyde, and referred to the 41st section, which enacted that "in the case of a prisoner undergoing imprisonment in any public prison other than the military prison set apart by the authority under this Act, or in any gaol or house of correction in any part of her Majesty's dominions, it shall be lawful for the officer who confirmed the proceedings of the court, or for the officer commanding the district, garrison, island, or colony, to give, as often as occasion may arise, an order in writing directing that the prisoner be discharged, or be delivered over to military custody, whether for the purpose of being removed to some other prison or place, there to undergo the remainder or any part of his sentence, or for the purpose of being brought before a court-martial as a witness, or for trial."

COCKBURN, C. J.—Power was given to Lord Clyde by that section to change the place of imprisonment, and it was very important to know whether he had done so.

Welsby on the same side.—The designation of the place of confinement is no part of the sentence of the court. That is a mere direction, and is independent of the sentence. This is the sentence of a competent court. The order of Lord Clyde is the order of an independent officer: (The Canadian Prisoners case, 5 M. & W. 32.)

See, Serjt. (J. Brown with him) was stopped by the court.

COCKBURN, C. J.—Upon this state of facts I entertain no doubt that the imprisonment in England is illegal, and that Lieutenant Allen is entitled to his discharge. The court may regret that, in the case of a serious offence of which he has been found guilty, a mistake should have occurred in carrying out the sentence passed upon him, so as to entitle him to be liberated before the sentence has been completed. It is, however, the duty of the court to see whether the imprisonment is justifiable in point of law, and the conclusion to which we have come is that it was not. He was tried for an offence cognisable only by a civil tribunal, except by virtue of the Mutiny Act, and the Articles of War incorporated with it. But the powers given by the Mutiny Act to a court-martial to try civil offences are limited. The Act does not confer on the court-martial power to declare where the sentence shall be carried into effect; and after a court-martial has found the accused guilty it is for the officer commanding the district to appoint the place of his imprisonment. In this case the commanding officer appointed Agra; but it is now found that the prisoner, instead of undergoing his imprisonment in accordance with his sentence, is in prison in this country. That is not in accordance with the sentence passed by the judges, by authority of the Act of Parliament. The court has therefore to inquire whether the change in the place of imprisonment has been made by a person authorised to do it under any Act of Parliament. The only power under the Mutiny Act and Articles of War to change his place of imprisonment is given by the 41st section, which enables the commanding officer, the officer appointed by the 38th section to appoint the place of his imprisonment, by order in writing, to change it. In the present case there is nothing to show that Lord Clyde, who appointed the place of his imprisonment at Agra, has done anything under the 41st section to change the place of his imprisonment; and therefore, his sentence being that he should be imprisoned at Agra, and being in prison in this country, the court thinks he is entitled to be discharged. If before to-morrow the Solicitor-General upon inquiry shall be led to entertain that there is a reasonable belief that there was any order in existence to change the place of his imprisonment, the court will pause before ordering the discharge of the prisoner, and will give an opportunity for the parties before the court being heard, otherwise the prisoner will be discharged.

HILL and BLACKBURN, JJ. concurred.

On the following day the Solicitor-General produced an affidavit which made it probable that Lord Clyde had ordered Lieutenant Allen to be removed to England to undergo the remainder of his sentence, but the warrant to the keeper of the Queen's prison was upon an order issued from the Horse Guards, signed by the Adjutant-General.

See, Serjt. (J. Brown with him) was then called upon to support the rule.—This offence does not fall within sect. 41. He was tried by a court-martial for an offence not of a military character, at a place within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bengal. There is no authority for trying him for this offence by a court martial. Then, Lord Clyde having once exercised his discretion and ordered the imprisonment to be at Agra, he had no power change it. The statute applies only to military prisons, and to persons in custody for military offences. The fort of Agra is not a public prison within the meaning of the Act. Sects. 40 and 41 of the Mutiny Act were referred to, and sect. 147 of the Articles of War.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think, assuming all the facts now suggested on the new affidavit, that the result would be that this rule must be made absolute. It is not necessary to determine the preliminary question whether this case falls within sect. 41. Even if it does, it is clear that the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, and, as the case stands, there is no legal warrant by which the keeper of the Queen's Prison can hold Lieut. Allen. Sects. 40 and 41 seem somewhat at variance. The one section makes the order of the officer commanding the regiment to which the offender belongs necessary as a condition to the gaoler's receiving a prisoner into custody, and the other makes the order of the officer commanding the district necessary as the condition of the offender's being taken from one gaol to another. Even then it might be a question whether the order of the officer commanding the regiment was not necessary. However that may be, there was no order in writing under which the keeper of the Queen's Prison was authorised to receive Lieut. Allen. All that Lord Clyde did in the first instance was to order the defendant to be imprisoned at Agra, and I will assume that he afterwards made an order directing him to be sent to this country; but is there any order to the keeper of the Queen's Prison from Lord Clyde, or the officer commanding the regiment to which Lieut. Allen belonged? That omission seems to have been attempted to be supplied by an order of the Adjutant-General as representing the Commander-in-Chief. It follows, therefore, that the custody in the Queen's Prison is unlawful, because there is no proper warrant. In the Canadian Prisoners case, the prisoners were liable to be tried for high treason, and the court, therefore, would not set them free.

HILL, J.—The only order of Lord Clyde is for the purpose of the offender being removed to England, there to undergo the remainder of his sentence. The prisoner being found in England in the custody of the keeper of the Queen's Prison, what is the authority under which he remains there? The only warrant is from the Horse Guards. There is nothing in the Act which authorises such an order, and there is therefore no legal warrant.

BLACKBURN, J. — In the Canadian Prisoners case there was nothing to prevent the prisoners from being tried for high treason in this country, and for that reason they were not discharged, and the court was authorised to detain them for that purpose by the common law. Here Lieutenant Allen has been tried and imprisoned at Agra, and he was sent to England to undergo the remainder of his sentence, and he is detained in the Queen's Prison. That is not a detention at common law; it is necessary to show some statutable authority authorising his detention there. For the reasons already stated, I am of opinion that the case is not brought within any statutable provision. Rule absolute.

Friday, Nov. 23.

Ex parte BARFORD.

Parent and child—Father's right to custody—Child under sixteen—Habeas corpus.

A father, if there be no disqualifying cause, has a right to the custody of a female child up to the age of sixteen, although she be unwilling to live under his care and control.

In this case the court had granted writs of habeas corpus directed to John Howse and Rachel Hopkins to bring up the body of Charlotte Barford, a young lady aged fifteen years, in order to her being delivered up to her father, who obtained the writs. The young lady was this day produced on return to the writs, and the question was then raised as to whether she was of an age to exercise a discretion as to whether she would return home to her father, or whether the father had not an absolute right to have his child delivered up to him by the order of the court.

Sleigh, on the part of the father, moved that the young lady now in court should be delivered up to her father, and read an affidavit in which the father stated all the circumstances under which his daughter had been withdrawn from his roof, and taken to London by Howse, and sent about to various places after the writ of habeas corpus was granted. The affidavit concluded with a statement that the applicant had always treated his daughter with the greatest kindness, and that his object was to save his daughter from the improper hands and society into which she had fallen.

D. Seymour said he had not had an opportunity of answering the affidavit; and as to the motion made that the girl should be delivered up, he submitted she was quite of age to speak for herself.

COCKBURN, C.J. then directed that the girl should be taken into his private room, and said the counsel on both sides might accompany her if they wished.

The parties then all withdrew, and were absent from the court for some time. Upon their lordship's return, COCKBURN, C.J. said he wished to hear counsel upon the question of law, whether the father was entitled to have the child delivered up to him.

Sleigh then referred to the repealed statute, 4 & 5 Phill. & M. c. 8, which enacted that "Nobody shall take away any maid or woman child unmarried, being within the age of sixteen years, out of or from the possession, custody, or governance, and against the will of the father of such maid or woman child, or of such persons to whom the father of such maid or woman child by his last will and testament, or by any other act in his lifetime, hath or shall appoint, assign, bequeath, give, or grant the order, keeping, education, and governance of such maid or woman child." That statute was in substance re-enacted by the 20th section of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, now in force, which enacted that, "If any person shall unlawfully take, or cause to be taken, any unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen, out of the possession, and against the will of the father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and, being convicted thereof, shall be liable to suffer such punishment, by fine or imprisonment, or both, as the court shall award." The learned counsel contended that this statute assumed and recognised the right of the father to have the custody of his daughter up to sixteen years of age; but he went further, and contended that, under the 12 Car. 2, c. 24, the father had the right to the custody of his children until they were of the full age of twenty-one years. The words of the statute were, "That where any person hath or shall have any child or children under the age of twenty-one years, and not married at the time of his death, it shall and may be lawful to and for the father of such child, or children, whether born at the time of the decease of the father or at that time en ventre de sa mere, or whether such father be within the age of twenty-one years or of full age, by his deed executed in his lifetime, or by his last will and testament in writing, in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, to dispose of the custody and tuition of such child or children for and during such time as he or they shall respectively remain under the age of twenty-one years, or any lesser time, to any person or persons in possession, or remainder, other than Popish recusants," &c. He also referred to the case of R. v. Greenhill, 4 Ad. & Ell. 624.)

COCKBURN, C.J. said the difficulty was in fixing the age at which the child was too young to exercise a choice.

HILL, J. said the law was now settled that, though the girl was a consenting party, and left her father of her own free will, she had no mind or will of her own that could infringe on her father's parental right. His Lordship referred to the case of Reg. v. Mantelowe.

COCKBURN, C.J. said the court had examined the person herself, and she had had every opportunity of explaining; but the result of the examination was that she could not suggest any misconduct on the part of her father which would justify her in leaving his house.

HILL, J. said the question was, whether, if the girl chose to set her father's authority at defiance, she could do so?

Seymour said he appeared for Howse, and also for Miss Hopkins, and that, if he had the opportunity, he thought he could answer the father's affidavit, and show that his was not the proper custody.

COCKBURN, C.J. said that ought to have been done on the return to the writ, and he should be very reluctant to give an opportunity of stating in an affidavit charges which the girl herself when examined had not preferred.

Seymour referred to the authorities, and contended that the girl was old enough to exercise her choice, and that the court would not control her.

BLACKBURN, J. referred to Rutcliffe's case, 3 Co. 39 a, and Fraser's note thereon.

COCKBURN, C.J. also referred to the recent case of Reg. v. Timmins, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 337, and, after consulting with the other judges, said no case had been made out on the part of those who resisted the application to the court that the child should be delivered up to the care of her father. It was for them to show that, though entitled in point of law to the custody of the child, the father ought not, in regard to the interests of the child, to have that custody. The question was, therefore, a simple question of law, whether the father was entitled to the custody of the child, she being fifteen years of age, when that daughter, without any adequate or justifying cause, desired to withdraw herself from his parental care and control, for, unhappily, it was not to be disguised that the unfortunate girl was, he feared, influenced by evil counsels and evil examples, and was desirous, without adequate motive, to withdraw herself from the care and affectionate control of her father, and cast herself on those by whom she was likely to be misled to, perhaps, her eventual destruction, and if the court could save her from what her folly would lead her into, they would rejoice. The cases go to this length, that, though the father is entitled to the custody of his child up to twenty-one years of age, the courts will not interfere summarily, by writ of habeas corpus, to withdraw the child from the custody in which she happens to be, if the child has arrived at the age of discretion at which she can exercise a choice. The question is, what was the age at which the child attained that discretion? He (Cockburn, C.J.) wholly repudiated, as fraught with the most dangerous consequences, the doctrine that mental intellectual precocity would give it the right, if the child had not arrived at the age of discretion which the law recognised, for that very precocity might be the thing of all others to lead a young girl into misery and danger. The court must lay down a general rule as to the age when the minor might be left to freedom of choice. The Legislature had thrown light on this subject, by which the court might be safely guided. The age of sixteen had been pointed out as the age up to which the consent of a female child should not justify her withdrawal from the father's roof without its being considered a misdemeanor. We may therefore safely act upon the rule that the age of sixteen is that up to which a female child ought to be subject to parental control. Up to that period no encouragement was afforded by the law, any more than by public opinion, to induce a young woman to withdraw herself from the parental control. In the present case there was nothing to justify that withdrawal, and the result was, that the court would order that the girl be delivered up to her father. His Lordship would also add, that if the persons who had done their best to baffle the exertions of this court had been indicted under the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, no one could doubt that they would have been liable to be convicted of the offence. How, then, could the court allow the girl to remain in their custody? The order, therefore, would be that she should be restored to her father; but his Lordship warned the parties to take care for the future, lest they should bring themselves within the law. His Lordship concluded by observing that the court had not come to this conclusion without great consideration, nor without consulting with the judges of the other courts, all of whom were unanimous in opinion with the judges of this court.

The rest of the COURT concurred.

Joint-stock company—19 & 20 Vict. c. 47—20 & 21 Vict. c. 14.

Members of a corporation aggregate having a perpetual succession and a common seal, under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts 1856 and 1857, with power to hold lands, are not entitled to vote at elections in respect of the shares they hold in the company.

The claimant was a shareholder in a joint-stock company, incorporated under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14, having power to hold lands, and holding a freehold mill and premises, and had 40s. a-year in respect of shares arising out of the said freehold premises:

Held, that he was not entitled to vote, for that, as a shareholder, he had no freehold estate, legal or equitable, in the land held by the company; but only a right to participate in the profits made by the company.

Case.—At a court held at Otley, in the West Riding of the county of York, before me, one of the revising barristers for the said riding, Thomas Brown claimed to vote in respect of certain freehold mill and premises situate in the township of Yeadon, in the polling district of Otley aforesaid, in the said riding, in the following form:—

Name	Abode.	Nature of Qualification, &c.	Where Situate, &c.
Brown, Thomas	West Hall, Yeadon.	Share in Freehold mill and tenements.	Albert Mill.

The freehold premises in respect of which the said Thomas Brown claimed to vote were the property of a joint-stock company incorporated under the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts 1856 and 1857.

The claimant was a shareholder in the said company, and had forty shillings a year in respect of his shares arising out of the said freehold premises.

On the part of the respondent it was contended, that members of a corporation aggregate, or of any association of persons incorporated, having a perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold lands under the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Acts 1856 and 1857, are necessarily incapacitated from voting at elections, and that the name of the said Thomas Brown must therefore be expunged.

Being of the same opinion I disallowed the claim, and the said James Edward Norris, who appeared on behalf of the objector, consented to be named respondent in this appeal.

West for the appellant.—Two questions arise in this case: the first is, whether members of a corporation aggregate have a right to vote in respect of the corporation property; secondly, if so, have shareholders in the present case such an interest in the realty held by the corporation as to give them a right to vote. I contend for the affirmative on both points. The statutes referred to in the case are the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 14 (the Joint-Stock Companies Acts). Sect. 7 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, provides the form of memorandum of association, and sect. 13 shows the effect of registration, and provides that, upon the memorandum of association being registered, the registrar is to certify that the company is incorporated, and, in case of a limited company, that the company is limited. The subscribers of the memorandum, together with such other persons as may from time to time become shareholders, shall thereupon become a body corporate, by the name, &c., having a perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold lands, but with such pecuniary liability as is thereafter mentioned. It is not denied that the general proposition is that which has been acted upon by the revising barrister in the present case, but here it is not applicable. At common law there was a general right of the freeholder to vote, and such rights must be maintained unless taken away by express enactment of the Legislature. The foundation of the decision of the revising barrister is to be found, no doubt, in three resolutions in the House of Commons in 1624: (House of Com. Jour. 398.) But it will not be denied that these have been in some instances departed from, as, for example, in the case of corporations sole, such as rectors, or parsons and vicars: (Dalton on Law of Sheriff; Middlesex Election case, 2 Peckwell, 113.) There have been decisions of the House of Commons, but none of this court, on such a question as this. It is laid down in Rogers on Elections, 136, that corporations sole vote. The author proceeds to say, "It is difficult to understand the principle upon which individuals who are members of corporations aggregate are disabled from voting in respect of the interest they possess as members of a corporate body:" (Elliott, 16, 17 and 18.) But though there has been no case where a decision has been given on this point, there are cases where the question has been discussed. Reg. v. Robson, 1 K. & G. 141, will be cited as an authority in their favour by the other side, but in reality it is not so, for the ground of the decision there was that the Fellows had not a 40s. holding between them: (Heath v. Haynes, 1 K. & G. 99; Simpson v. Wilkinson, 14 L. J. 49, C. P.; Baxter v. Brown, 7 M. & G. 198.) This case is not distinguishable from what that case would have been if the company had been registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The resolutions of the House of Commons have been much shaken and damaged, and the third absolutely negatived, by subsequent Acts of Parliament and subsequent decisions. For this reason the appeal should be allowed.

Mainly, Q.C. for the respondent.—It has been conceded by my learned friend that the general proposition is against him, and he has not succeeded in showing that the case does not come within it. The court is here called on to depart from first principles, which it will not do. It is contended that the separate entity of the shareholders is merged in the body corporate which they became, with all the incidents thereto belonging. In Grant on Corporations, pp. 53-45, are admirably collected and clearly stated all the characteristics and incidents of bodies corporate: "A corporation is in fact an abstraction of law, having no existence or power of action but what the law gives it," &c. Also "a corporation is something of an abstract nature, having a metaphysical existence only, and therefore not tangible, visible, or the object of the senses." The shareholders of a joint-stock company are not directly interested in the land it may hold, they are only interested in the property by enjoyment of the profits. They have no individual seisin divided or undivided. There is no resulting trust—there is no conveyance, and the shares in it pass by simple transfer. Look at railway companies which hold land, and see what inconvenience it would lead to if the court should hold that a right to vote was incident to the holding of shares; you must in such event ascertain the value which the shareholder held in the land occupied by the company in each county; the complication and difficulty would be immense and insuperable. Sect. 15 of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, enacts that shares in registered companies "shall be personal estate, and not of the nature of real estate." In Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268, Ex. Eq., the court held that real property held for the purposes of a trading company is in equity to be deemed of the nature of personal estate, although the company is a corporation. On that case we rely. The shareholders of a public company are a vast shifting mass, and have no interest in the property beyond the enjoyment of its profits; and if the court should hold otherwise, the consequence would be to create vast inconvenience. The judgment of the court should therefore be for the respondent.

West in reply.—My learned friend has laid down no first principle which will deprive the shareholders of their right to vote. As to the inconvenience anticipated in working out the law if shareholders should be held entitled to vote, that cannot arise, for the shareholder must be possessed of his right on the 31st Jan. in the year for which he claims. Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 26.—KEATING, J.—In this case Thomas Bulmer claimed to vote for the West Riding of the county of York, in respect of a qualification described as a share in a freehold mill and tenement. The revising barrister found that it was a share in a joint-stock company incorporated under the Joint-Stock Companies Acts 1856 and 1857, and paying 40s. a-year in respect of his share arising out of a share in respect of certain freehold premises. It was objected that the shares in a company incorporated under the provisions of the Joint-Stock Companies Act did not confer on the holder the right to vote in respect of the land of the corporation, and the revising barrister decided against the claim. We think he was right. The Joint-Stock Companies Act of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 13, provides that on incorporation of a company being certified by the registrar, the shareholders shall be a body corporate by a name described in the memorandum of association, having a perpetual succession and common seal, with power to hold land, but with such peculiar liability on the part of the shareholders as is hereinafter mentioned; and by the 15th section it is enacted that the shares so issued shall be personal estate, and not be in the nature of real estate, it being thus provided that the land shall be held by the corporation, and the shares shall be personal property, and not in the nature of real property. We are of opinion that a shareholder, as such, can have no freehold estate, legal or equitable, in land so held by the corporation; it is rather confined to his proportionate share of the profits of the company. This opinion, which seems to us so entirely consistent with the legal constitution of the corporation, as to the distinction between a corporate body and its individual members, is fully sustained by the authorities on the subject. In Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & C. 294, it was clearly laid down that in a joint-stock company, incorporated by Act of Parliament, the shareholders are entitled to no direct interest in the land held by the corporation; but no part of the realty is held in trust for them, and all that they are entitled to is, that the property held by the corporation shall create profits in which they have a right to participate, according to the number of their shares. This case was recognised, and the principle of this decision acted upon, in the case Hilton v. Giraud, 1 De G. & Sm. 187, and has never been dissented from in any of the subsequent cases. The decision under the Mortmain Acts also proceeds on similar principles. See the case of Sparling v. Parker, 9 Beav. 450; and Walker v. Milne, 11 Beav. 518. In Myers v. Perigal, 11 C. B. 90, this court held that shares in a banking company where the real estate vested in trustees, and the shareholders were entitled to profits only, were not within the Mortmain Act; and that decision was acted upon by Lord St. Leonards and reported in 2 De G. M. & G. 599. In Watson v. Spratley, 10 Exch. 222, a question arose whether shares in a mine conducted by a joint-stock company on the cost-book principle were an interest in land, and although the court were divided as to whether the opinion of the jury should have been taken on the facts of the case, yet all the judges agreed that the distinction above referred to as between the corporation and its members, and a joint-stock company incorporated by Act of Parliament, with respect to land held by the corporation, was well established. We were pressed during the argument by the case of Baxter v. Brown, 7 M. & G. 198, where partnership property, including land, was conveyed to the use of trustees, and the deed of partnership provided that they should stand seised and possessed thereof, and interested therein, on trust for the benefit of themselves and their partners in the joint concern, as part of the partnership, and the joint stock-in-trade. There can be little doubt that the partners who are not trustees, would still take an interest in the land; but it was insisted that as it was by the same deed provided that the property including land should be deemed and considered as in the nature of personal estate, and not real estate—that the partners had not such an interest as entitled them to vote under any of the statutes which conferred the right upon them. This court held that they were so entitled, notwithstanding the clause in the partnership deed above referred to, which, as a voluntary agreement under a partnership inter se, might regulate the mode of enjoyment, but could not change the nature and quality of the estate. The Lord Chief Justice, in giving judgment, carefully distinguishes that case from one in which a corporation is established by Act of Parliament, that the shares shall be considered personalty, and not in the nature of real estate. In that latter case there can be no real interest in the several shareholders so as to entitle them to vote. The resolution of the House of Commons in 1624, cited in argument before us, cannot confer on the party the right of voting conferred by the statute; but in this case it appears, so far as it is applied to a corporation aggregate, to be a sound principle of law, and the fact that members of such corporation have not been in the habit of voting in respect of land held by a corporate body is strong to show that the opinion we express is that which has been long entertained. The judgment, therefore, will be affirmed.

Judgment for respondent.

ACLAND (appellant) v. LEWIS (respondent).

County vote—Qualification—Corporation aggregate.

This was likewise a consolidated appeal. It came before the court from the decision of the revising barrister for the eastern division of the county of Kent. All that is material of the case is given in the judgment, and as the decision followed that of the case reported above, it is needless to state the facts and arguments.

G. Deane argued for the appellant, Macnamara for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

KEATING, J.—This was a consolidated appeal against the decision of the revising barrister for the eastern division of the county of Kent. It appears that one Thomas Acland, with a number of other persons, a list of whom was handed to the court, claimed to have their names added to the list of voters as members of a corporation called the company of Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable, in the county of Kent. The revising barrister disallowed the claim so made, and we think he was right in so doing. The corporation, of which the claimants were members, was created by an Act of the 33 Geo. 3, c. 42, which, after reciting that a certain company called the Whitstable Company of Dredgers, had, from time out of mind, held and carried on, under certain regulations, a certain oyster fishery as tenants of the lords of the manor, on payment of the rent, and that it was desirable that the company should be allowed to purchase the whole of the said manor, but that they were disabled from so doing on account of the debts, whether they were a corporation in law, or whether they were under the Statute of Mortmain, proceeded to enact, that the corporation should be incorporated by the name of the Company of Free Fishers and Dredgers of Whitstable, in the county of Kent, with perpetual succession under the common seal, and the corporation should exercise all the powers of the old company, and have power to purchase, take and enjoy the manors and royalty when purchased, and the power, when purchased, to sell and mortgage the same, and under certain regulations to borrow money, to be secured by bond under the common seal of the corporation. In pursuance of the powers thus given, part of the said manor and royalty was, soon after the passing of the Act, purchased by and duly conveyed to, the corporation, their successors and assigns, to the only proper use and behoof of the corporation, their successors and assigns. That appears to us to be clearly the effect of the Act of Parliament, and the conveyance in pursuance thereof was to vest the property in the corporation, and the members individually had no seisin legally or equitably of the land so held, nor of any freehold interest, so as to enable them to vote under the Act of Henry VI., or any of the more recent statutes. The legal estate was undoubtedly in the corporation, and although the profits realised by the corporation were divisible among the members rateably, yet it appears to us, looking at the Act of Parliament, and the finding of the revising barrister, that the right of the individual members was confined to a share in the profits when ascertained by a deduction of the expenses, and did not extend to a legal or equitable interest in the land itself. The case, therefore, comes within the principle of the division in Bulmer v. Norris, and the authorities there cited, and therefore the decision of the revising barrister will be confirmed. Judgment for respondent.

ALEXANDER v. WORMAN.

Building society—Surveyor—Payment out of funds—10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 21.

The plaintiff was the surveyor of a building society, the object of which was to advance money to its members to enable them to buy or build houses, but not itself to buy nor build. By one of the rules of the society, the surveyor was to look only to the funds of the society for his compensation. By resolutions at general meetings, at which the defendant, as one of the directors, was present, the plaintiff was directed to prepare plans, &c., for houses which the society was building, the compensation being a percentage upon the outlay. Upon the society becoming insolvent, the plaintiff sued the defendant, as one of the directors, for this percentage:

Held (Bramwell, B. dissentiente), that the plaintiff was bound by the rules of the society to seek his compensation from the funds of the society solely.

This was a case tried at Croydon, before Blackburn J., at the summer assizes 1859. The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

At the trial the learned judge directed a nonsuit, with leave to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict. The plaintiff accordingly obtained a rule nisi.

Hawkins, Q.C. (Lefevre with him) now showed cause.

Larry, Serjt. (Laxton with him) supported the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 6 —MARTIN, B.—In this case I am sorry to say there is a difference of opinion between the judges. The Lord Chief Baron, my brother Channell and myself, are of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged, and my brother Bramwell is of opinion that it should be made absolute. I will read my own judgment, in which the Lord Chief Baron and my brother Channell concur, because the facts are there stated. The plaintiff in this case was the surveyor to a building society. He was an officer named in the rules, and by one of them his compensation was to be paid out of the funds of the society. The object of the society was to advance money to its members to enable them to buy or build houses. The directors, of whom the defendant was one, leased a piece of land upon which they proposed to build. At one of the regular meetings of the society, the plaintiff was directed to prepare plans, &c., and a resolution was entered in a book of the society to this effect. At another meeting a resolution was made and duly entered that the compensation to the plaintiff should be 3*l*. per cent. on the outlay, for which percentage the action was brought. The plaintiff made the plans and superintended the building for some time, but ultimately the society became insolvent. The plaintiff made several applications for payment, but always to the secretary, and until the society was broken up he made no demand upon the defendant or any other of the directors that they should pay him out of their own funds. By a section in one of the Acts of Parliament regulating such societies, the surveyor is to be deemed to have notice of the rules. These being the circumstances of the case, the Lord Chief Baron, my brother Channell and myself think this rule ought to be discharged. The question is much more one of fact than of law; and the reasons for our judgment are these. We think the onus of proof in this, as in every other case for work and labour, is upon the plaintiff, and that he is bound to satisfy the jury, either, first, that the defendant contracted to pay, by which we mean that he understood that he himself, or that he in conjunction with the other directors, was to pay the plaintiff for his labour, and such a contract might have been proved in an infinite variety of ways; but we think it clear upon the evidence in this case that the defendant thought he was dealing with an officer of the society, and not with a surveyor whom he was to pay out of his own private funds, either solely or in conjunction with others. By the rule the surveyor was to be paid out of the funds of the society, and although the building of houses was not within the object of the society as stated in the rules, it seems to us that both the plaintiff and the defendant and his co-directors acted as if it was; and in our opinion the plaintiff failed to prove that the defendant contracted to pay him in the sense above mentioned. But, secondly, we quite agree that if the defendant had so conducted himself as reasonably to create in the plaintiff's mind the belief that he was to be paid by the defendant for his labour—it is quite immaterial whether the defendant himself understood that he was to pay. To create a liability of the kind, however, it is of the very essence of it to establish that the plaintiff himself understood and believed that he was to be paid by the defendant. But the evidence satisfies us that he had no such belief, and that until the society was broken up he looked to the funds of the society for payment and not to the defendant or his co-directors at all. We think it a mistake to suppose that in societies of this kind the surveyor or secretary, or the officer, do work and labour upon the same terms as professional men of their class ordinarily do. They generally have a much greater interest in these societies than the directors, and in the great majority of cases are the individuals who get them up, and at whose request the directors consent to accept the office, and take upon themselves the liabilities and duties of their situation; and it is to us very clear that such officers discharge duties and perform services with the understanding on all hands that they are to be remunerated out of the funds, and that if the funds fail the officer must remain unpaid.

BRAMWELL, B.—There are, it appears to me, three questions in this case. First, did the plaintiff enter into any contract; secondly, if he did, was it with the defendant? thirdly, if so, what was it? Now, the plaintiff is an architect; he was ordered to do work in the way of his profession, and he did it; presumably, therefore, he is to be paid for it, which involves the existence of some contract with some one.

But it is said, "No; he trusted the society which was interested in the work (a building society), or their funds." But I know no way in which a society, not a corporation, and not having an officer to be sued for it, can be got at or sued, nor how its funds can be reached, except by a contract with one or two individuals, upon which the individual or individuals is or are absolutely or contingently liable. Now this society is not a corporation, and has no public officer. There is no pretence for saying that an action can be maintained under sect. 21 of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, which obviously relates to the property of the society, and not to contracts which its members may think fit to enter into. Of course it was competent for the plaintiff to agree to do this work gratis, or without any legal claim to remuneration; but I see no evidence that he did so, and that will be the result, and would be the result whatever might be the state of the funds of the society, if he can in no event maintain an action against an individual. It is a mistake to say the defendant is not liable because he did not intend to be so. The question is, what his conduct reasonably gave the plaintiff to understand; and I see nothing to prevent the plaintiff entertaining an ordinary and very reasonable belief that if he was ordered to do work in the way of his profession, and did it, he was to be paid for it. On the contrary the evidence is express that he was, nor is it material that the reports and bills are addressed to the building society. Sending in a bill to a rifle corps would not show that the creditor had performed the impossibility of trusting a non-existing legal abstraction. Then, if the plaintiff made some contract with some one or more persons, was the defendant the person or one of the persons he contracted with? It is obvious he was. Whatever would point to any member of the society as being liable would point to the defendant. He was a member of the society. He was a director, and he gave the order, and had a personal interest under his covenants as lessee of the land in the doing of the work. If any reason can be given to show that he was not a contracting party, it can be given with at least equal strength to show no one else was. It is to my mind a demonstration that some contract was made, and made with the defendant, by which in some way, in some event, absolutely or conditionally, the plaintiff could enforce a reward for the work he had performed. It remains to consider what that contract was. Prima facie, it is the ordinary one, namely, that the work done, he should be paid for it the agreed price, or a quantum meruit; and it is for the defendant to show that it is not so here. The defendant then relies on the following matters. As I have mentioned, this was a building society; the defendant a director; as such he gave the order. The plaintiff was appointed surveyor, and accepted the office. By the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 8, which by the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, regulates these societies, all officers are deemed to have notice of the rules of the society, and by one of the rules the surveyor is to be paid out of the funds. Then there being no funds, the plaintiff is not to be paid. Now I think the first answer to this is that given by my brother Parry, namely, that this rule is a rule not affecting the surveyor, but a rule of the members authorising such an application of the funds. However, it may be otherwise. But there is another answer. This work was not done by the plaintiff as surveyor; not done by him as an officer of the society. The society had no authority to build; that is clear, and has been decided. The surveyor's business is that which his name indicates; he is to survey those buildings which are to be the security of the society, a work which is wholly different from that of an architect, making drawings, plans, elevations and specifications. It could not be done by him as their officer, if they could not as a society do that on which they employed him. Therefore the rule does not apply.

to this work. The ordering of it was ultra vires, and if the plaintiff sought to enforce a claim on the society, or funds of the society, supposing by some contrivance he could do so, he might be met by this objection. But it is said, he must be taken to do this work on the same terms as he worked as surveyor, and if he had actual notice of the rule that might be; but he had not. The statute only means that he shall be deemed, as such officer, to have notice; and it seems to me that to hold he is bound by the rule would be to hold that he had supplied bricks for the building. I cannot but think, therefore, that this is the common case of work ordered by the defendant of the plaintiff in the way of his profession, and done by him, and that, therefore, he is entitled to be paid for it. In fact, it is the case of Braithwaite v. Skofield, 9 B. & C. 401, only stronger. It is true that case was before the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, but what difference does that statute make? it neither gives a right nor takes one away. The opinions expressed in Burton v. Tunnahill, 5 E. & Bl. 797, are to the same effect. I think, therefore, the rule should be made absolute.

Rule discharged.

V. C. WOOD'S COURT.

Reported by W. H. BENNET, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 7, 9 and 23.

HOLDEN v. WEEKES.

Incumbent of living—Glebe lands—Right to open for mines and minerals—Consent by patron and ordinary—Necessity of.

By an agreement in writing, not under seal, between the patron and incumbent of a living, to open beds of gypsum and alabaster under the glebe lands, it was provided that one-third of the net proceeds should be laid out in buildings upon the glebe as should be mutually agreed upon; the other two-thirds to be received by the rector for his own use.

This agreement had been acted upon for ten years. It had not, however, been directly sanctioned by the ordinary, the bishop.

On bill filed by the owner of the living to restrain the rector from further committing waste on the glebe, and for an account of past workings:

Held, that the owner was not entitled to the account:

Held, also, that inquiries would be directed by the court to ascertain what would be the necessary steps to be taken to enable the incumbent to carry on the workings, and for a proper appropriation of the proceeds.

This was a bill filed by the owner of the advowson and patron of the rectory of Ashton-upon-Trent, in Derbyshire, to restrain the defendant, the rector and his sub-lessee, from working mines of gypsum and alabaster under the glebe lands of the rectory, and to set aside as null and void an agreement of the 25th March 1851 purporting to convey a licence to the defendant the rector to work such mines, on the ground of its not having been sanctioned by the patron the bishop, and on other grounds.

The agreement in question, after reciting that it had been agreed between the parties that the mines should be opened by the rector, contained a provision that one-third of the sale of the produce was to be laid out and invested by the rector towards the erection of necessary buildings upon the glebe land, and subject to such outlay any surplus was to be applied as the rector and patron should mutually agree upon, or be invested, and the interest thereof paid to the rector for his own benefit. The remaining two-thirds were to be received by the defendant the rector, so long as he continued such, for his own absolute use and benefit.

It was alleged by the bill that the agreement had been signed by the plaintiff at the instance and on the representations of the defendant, and with his having had the opportunity of obtaining legal advice upon its provisions.

It, however, appeared by the defendant's answer that this was not so, as a case had been laid before Dr. Addams, who had averred that such an agreement was legal, with the concurrence of the patron of the living. It was also stated that the Bishop of Litchfield, as patron, was applied to, and that a reply was received from him to the effect that he should leave the matter to be arranged between the parties themselves.

This agreement had been acted upon by the parties from its date (nearly ten years) up to May 1860, and the plaintiff having been then advised that the concurrence and consent of the ordinary or of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners was necessary, now sought by his bill to set the agreement aside, and for an account of the profits which had accrued from the sale of the produce of the mines during the agreement.
